The vicar hearing thereof, aſſembleth vnto him as manie men as he could make and haue, & came to this companie when this fire ſhould be kindled, and was ſo hot and earneſt againſt their attempts, that he would in no wiſe ſuffer ſo lewd an act and wicked a thing to be doone. For (ſaith he) doo you what you can by policie, force, or dint of ſword to take the citie, I will ioine with you, and doo my beſt: but to burne a citie which ſhall be hurtfull to all men and good to no man, I will neuer conſent therevnto, but will here ſtand with all my power againſt you. And ſo ſtout he was in this matter, that he ſtopped them from their further enterpriſing of ſo wicked a fact. But to the matter. The execution of this man was committed to Barnard Duffeld, who being nothing ſlacke to follow his commiſſion, cauſed a paire of gallowes to be made, and to be ſet vp vpon the top of the tower of the ſaid vicars pariſh church of S. Thomas: and all things being readie and the ſtage perfected for this tragedie, the vicar was brought to the place, and by a rope about his middle drawne vp to the top of the tower: and there in chains hanged in his popiſh apparell, and had a holie water bucket and ſprinkle, a ſacring bell, a paire of beads, & ſuch other like popiſh traſh hanged about him, and there he with the ſame about him remained a long time. He made a verie ſmall or no confeſſion, but verie patientlie tooke his death; he had béene a good member in his common-wealth, had not the wéeds ouergrowne the good corne, and his foule vices ouercommed his vertues.

The vicar of ſaint Thomas letteth and will not conſent to the burning of the citie.

The vicar is hanged in chaines vpon the top of the tower with his popiſh traſh and ornaments about him.

The lord priuie ſeale remaining ſtill in Exceſter was continuallie occupied in ſetting things in order, he was verie ſeuere and ſharpe againſt ſuch offendors as were chiefe and principall ringleders of this rebellion: but to the common ſort who were led and carried, and who did humble themſelues, he was pitifull and mercifull, and did daulie pardon infinite numbers. And his lordſhip thinking verelie that all things were now quieted, & the rebels pacified, ſuddenlie newes were brought vnto him that there aſſembled at Sampford Courtneie, both Deuonſhire-men and Corniſhmen, and who were fullie bent to mainteine their quarrell and abide the battell. Theſe newes ſo troubled and tickled my lord, that all buſineſſe ſet apart, he commandeth forthwith the trumpet to be ſounded, and the drumme to be ſtriken vp, and all his armie to be forthwith muſtered: which was then the greater, by reaſon of the Welſhmen and gentlemen of the countrie and of the commoners, who vpon ſubmiſſion had obteined pardon, and increaſed to the number of eight or ten thouſand men, and forthwith he marcheth towards Sampford Courtneie, where ſir William Herbert requeſted to haue the fore-ward for that daie, which was granted him.

The rebels aſſembled at Sampford Courtneie.

And being come thither, albeit the great companie of ſo manie good ſouldiers and well appointed might haue diſmaied them, being nothing nor in order, nor in companie, nor in experience, to be compared vnto the others: yet they were at a point they would not yéeld to no perſuaſions, nor did, but moſt manfullie did abide the fight: and neuer gaue ouer, vntill that both in the towne and in the field they were all for the moſt taken or ſlaine. At which time one ap Owen a Welſh gentleman, more boldlie than aduiſedlie giuing the aduenture to enter the rampier at the townes end, was there ſlaine by the rebels, and after carried backe to Exon, where after the maner of wars he was honorablie buried in the bodie of ſaint Peters church, few of the kings ſide beſides him then ſlaine: and ſo of a traitorous beginning they made a ſhamefull ending. Neuertheleſſe manie eſcaped and they fled towards Summerſetſhire: after whom was ſent ſir Peter Carew, and ſir Hugh Paulet then knight marſhall: with a great companie attending vpon them, and followed them as far as to King Weſton in the countie of Summerſet: where they ouertooke them and ouerthrew them, and alſo tooke ons Coffin a gentleman their capteine priſoner and brought him vnto Exceſter.

The rebels ouerthrowne at Sampford Courtneie.

Sir Peter Carew purſueth the rebels which fled to King weſton.

The lord Ruſſell himſelfe minding to make all things ſure, taketh his iorneie, and marcheth into Cornewall; and following his former courſe, cauſeth execution to be doone vpon a great manie, and eſpeciallie vpon the chéefe belwedders and ringleaders: but the chéefe and principall capteins he kept as priſoners, and brought them with him to Exceſter. And when this lord had ſet all things in good order, he returned to Exceſter, & remained there for a time; but after departed towards London, where he was receiued with great ioy and thanks: and being come before the king, he forgat not to commend vnto his maieſtie the good ſeruice of this citie in this rebellion, which (as is before ſaid) was liberallie rewarded and conſidered. After his departure, and according to his order and appointment, the chéefe capteins and principall heads of this rebellion, whome he left in priſon in the kings goale at Exceſter, were caried to London and commanded to the tower, and in their due time were afterwards executed to death, namelie Humfreie Arundell eſquier, Wineſlade eſquier, John Berrie and Coffin gentlemen, and Holmes yeoman; which Coffin and Holmes were ſeruants to ſir John Arundell knight. Of the number of them who were ſlaine, there is no certeintie knowne, but manie more be found lacke then numbred: howbeit it was accounted by ſuch as continued in the whole ſeruice of this commotion to be about foure thouſand men. But what number was of the contrarie ſide diſpatched, nothing is reported, albeit it be well knowne that they eſcaped not ſcotfrée, and eſpeciallie the Burgonians, who were abhorred of the one partie, and nothing fauoured of the other. Thus much concerning the deſcription of the citie, and of the ſundrie inuaſions and aſſaults againſt the ſame, and eſpeciallie of the laſt rebellion or commotion in the yeare of our Lord 1549, wherein much more might be ſpoken, but this may ſuffice for this matter. And for as much as the cathedrall church of this citie, called by the name of S. Peters, is a parcell of the citie, and compaſſed within the wals of the ſame, though in reſpect of certeine priuileges diſtinct from the iuriſdiction thereof; I thought it good to ſubnect hereunto the deſcription of the ſaid church, and of the antiquitie of the ſame.

The antiquitie, foundation, and building of the cathedrall church of ſaint Peters in Exceſter.

AFter that corrupt religion and ſuperſtition was crept and receiued into the church, and the people become deuout therein, then began the erecting of religious houſes and monaſteries in euerie countrie. And as this was vniuerſall throughout all chriſtendome vnder the gouernement of the Romane biſhop: ſo alſo was it generallie doone throughout all England, in which generalitie this citie was of a particularitie; for in this citie from time to time as opportunitie ſerued ſundrie religious houſes and monaſteries were erected and builded, of which there were thrée within the ſite, circuit, and place now called the cloſe of S. Peters, and which in time accrued and were vnited into one. The firſt was a houſe for women called moniales or nuns, which is now the deanes houſe or Kalendar haie. The other was a houſe of monks, ſuppoſed to be builded by king Ethelred, the third ſonne to king Ethelwolph, and theſe two were vnited by biſhop Leofricus vnto the cathedrall church. The third was a houſe for monks of the order of S. Benet, which was builded and founded by king Athelſtane, about the yeare of our Lord 932: and this is that part of the cathedrall church now called the ladie chappell. For the ſaid king, hauing driuen out of this citie the Britons then dwelling therein, and minding to make a full conqueſt both of them and of this their countrie which they then inhabited, did ſo fiercelie follow and purſue them euen into Cornewall, that in the end he conquered them, and had the victorie. After which he returned to this citie, and here ſtaieng and ſoiourning for a time, did reedifie the citie, incompaſſed it with a ſtone wall, and founded the cathedrall church, which he then appointed for a monaſterie for monks of S. Benets order. For ſo is it written: Hanc vrbem rex Adelſtanus primus in poteſtatem Anglorum, effugatis Britonibus redactam turribus muniuit, & muro ex quadratis lapidibus cinxit, ac antiquitùs vocatam Munketon nunc Exeſter vocari voluit: ac ibi ſedens manſum quoddam dedit ad fundandum monaſterium pro monachis Deo & ſancto Petro famulantibus. Beſides the charges which he was at the building of the ſaid church, he gaue alſo lands and reuenues vnto them ſufficient for maintenance and liuelihoods, whereof Morkeſhull and Treaſurors béere are parcell, and which now are appendant and apperteining to the treaſuror of the cathedrall church.

After the time of king Athelſtane, the Danes with great hoſtilitie and crueltie hauing ouerrun this whole land, they alſo came to this citie, and in ſpoiling the ſame, did alſo ranſacke and ſpoile the ſaid church, whoſe continuall inuaſions the monks being not able to indure, fled and forſooke their houſe and home, and ſought places of better ſafetie. By which means this monaſterie for ſundrie yeares was left deſtituted, vntill the time of king Edgar; who on a time made a progreſſe into theſe weſt parts, to viſit his father in law Odogarus then earle of Deuon, and founder of the abbeie of Tauiſtoke, whoſe daughter he had married. And being come to this citie, did here reſt and ſtaie himſelfe, where when he ſaw the diſtreſſed ſtate of the ſaid church, & pitieng the ſame, cauſed ſearch and inquirie to be made of the monks which were ſcattered and yet left: and when he had gotten them togither, he reſtored them vnto their houſe and liuelihoods, and appointed Sidemannus who was afterwards biſhop of this dioceſſe to be abbat of the ſame. And from thensforth they continued togither (though ſometimes in troubles) vntill that king Swanus or Sweno the Dane, with a mightie and a huge armie came to this citie, beſieged, tooke, ſpoiled, and deſtroied it with ſword and fier. Howbeit not long after it was reſtored againe by king Cahutus or Canutus, who being aduertiſed of the great cruelties which his father Sweno had doone to the ſaid monaſterie, did at the requeſt of Athelredus one of his dukes, make reſtitution vnto Athelwoldus then abbat of all their lands, liuings and priuileges: as doth appeare by his charter dated in the yeare of our Lord 1019.

Sidemannus abbat of this church, and after biſhop of this dioceſſe.

K. Canutus reſtoreth both lands & priuileges to the church.

After this, about thirtie yeares, king Edward the Confeſſor came to this citie, and he by the aduiſe and at the motion of Leofricus biſhop of Crediton, and who ſometimes was lord chancellor of England vnder the ſaid king, and one of his priuie councell, partlie for the better ſafetie of the biſhop and his ſucceſſors, who lieng and hauing their houſes in the countrie, were ſubiect to manie and ſundrie perils, and partlie to prouide a more conuenient place for the monks, did remoue the biſhops ſée from Crediton, and remoued the monks vnto Weſtminſter: and he the king in his owne perſon, togither with quéene Edith his wife, did inſtall the ſaid Leofricus in poſſeſſion of this his new church and ſée. The biſhop thus remoued from the old, and placed in the new ſée and church, doth endow the ſame with all thoſe lands and liuelihoods which he had of the gift of the ſaid king, and which before did apperteine to his former church, and to reduce and make his ſanctuarie to his mind, pulleth downe the two monaſteries néere adioining, the one being of monks and the other of nuns, and addeth and vniteth them vnto his owne church, and hauing brought all things to effect according to his mind, deuiſeth and maketh lawes, orders, and ordinances for the good gouernment of his church and cleargie.

The biſhops ſée remoued from Crediton to Exon.

Leofricus the firſt biſhop of Exceſter.

After the death of Leofricus, all his ſucceſſors for the moſt part procure the augmentation and increaſe of this their new erected ſée and church, ſome in liuelihoods, ſome in liberties and priuileges, ſome in buildings, and ſome in one thing, and ſome in another. William Wareweſt the third biſhop of this church, who had ſometimes béene chapleine to the Conqueror, and to his two ſonnes William and Henrie, was in ſuch fauor and good liking with the Conqueror, that at his requeſt he gaue vnto him and to this his church, Plimpton, Brampton, and S. Stephans in Exceſter, which gift his ſaid ſonnes being kings of England did ratifie and confirme. And then the ſaid biſhop, hauing the ordering and diſtributing thereof, giueth Plimpton to the regular monkes there, for whom he had founded and builded a monaſterie, and wherein he himſelfe ſhortlie after leauing and yéelding vp his biſhoprike, became and was a monke. Brampton was reſerued to the church, and which afterwards was annexed to the deanerie. And S. Stephans with the fée to the ſame apperteining, he reſerued to himſelfe and to his ſucceſſors, & whereby they are barons and lords of the parlement. This biſhop in the yeare of our Lord 1112, firſt began to inlarge his cathedrall, and laid the foundation of that part, which is now the chore or quier: for before that time it was no bigger than that, which ſince and now is called the ladie chapell. After him William Brewer the biſhop made and eſtabliſhed in the yeare of our Lord 1235, a deane and a chapter of foure and twentie prebendaries: and for the deane (whome he appointed, and whoſe name was Serlo) and for his ſucceſſors, he gaue and impropriated Brampton and Coliton Rawleigh, and for the prebendaries he purchaſed lands, alloting and aſſigning to euerie of them Pro pane & ſale the like portion of foure pounds.

Peter Quiuell the biſhop finding the chancell of his church to be fullie builded and ended, beginneth to found and build the lower part or the bodie of his church, in the yeare of our Lord 1284, from the chancell of his church vnto the weſt end of the ſaid church. This man firſt appointed a chanter and a ſubdeane to be in his church. To the one of them he impropriated Paineton and Chudleie, and to the other the perſonage of Egloſchaile in Cornewall. After him Iohn Grandiſſon, in the yeare of our Lord 1340, did increaſe the length of the bodie of the church from the funt weſtwards, as alſo vaulted the roofe of the whole church, and did fullie end and finiſh the ſame. And albeit from the time of king Athelſtane the firſt founder in the yeare of our Lord 932, vntill the date of the death of this biſhop Grandiſſon, which was in the yeare 1369, there were about 437 yeares diſtant, and in the meane time this church was continued in building by ſundrie perſons: yet it is ſo decentlie and vniformelie compacted, as though it had béene builded at one verie time and inſtant.

After this, about the yeare of our Lord 1400, and in the time of biſhop Stofford, the cloiſter was added to the church, and builded at the moſt part of the charges of the deane and chapiter. And not long after Edmund Lacie biſhop began to build the chapiter houſe, which being not ended in his time, his next ſucceſſor George Neuill, in the yeare of our Lord 1456, did fullie end and abſolue the ſame: and which is a verie faire, beautifull, and a ſumptuous worke. And thus much concerning the antiquitie, foundation, and building of this cathedrall church. Thus far Iohn Hooker.

Common rebellion.

About the ſame time that this rebellion (whereto all the foreſaid diſcourſe tendeth) began in the weſt, the like diſordered hurles were attempted in Oxfordſhire, and Buckinghamſhire: but they were ſpéedilie appeaſed by the lord Greie of Wilton, who comming downe that waie to ioine with the lord priuie ſeale, chaſed the rebels to their houſes, of whome two hundred were taken, and a dozzen of the ringleaders to him deliuered, whereof certeine afterwards were executed. Moreouer, in diuerſe other parts of the realme, namelie in the ſouth and eaſt parts, did the people (as before ye haue heard) aſſemble themſelues in rebellious maner, committing manie foule diſorders: but yet by good policie and holeſome perſuaſions they were appeaſed, except in Norffolke, where after there was a rumour ſpred, that the commons in Kent had throwne downe the diches and hedges, wherewith certeine paſture grounds were incloſed, and had laid the ſame open. Diuerſe ſeditious perſons and buſie fellowes began to complaine that the like had not béene doone in Norffolke, and ceaſed not to practiſe how to raiſe the people to an open rebellion; meaning not onelie to laie open parkes and incloſures, but to attempt other reformations, as they termed them, to the great danger of ouerthrowing the whole ſtate of the common-wealth.

Norffolke.

They chieflie declared a ſpitefull rancor and hatered conceiued againſt gentlemen, whome they maliciouſlie accuſed of inordinat couetouſneſſe, pride, rapine, extortion, and oppreſſion, practiſed againſt their tenants and other, for the which they accounted them worthie of all puniſhment. Herevpon diuerſe of them, namelie the inhabitants of Atilborough, and other of their neighbors, conceiuing no ſmall diſpleaſure, for that one Gréene of Wilbie had taken in a parcell of the common paſture, as was ſuppoſed, belonging to the towne of Atilborough, and adioining to the common paſture of Harſham, riotouſlie aſſembled togither, and threw downe certeine new diches made by the ſaid Gréene, to incloſe in the ſaid parcell of commons.

The beginning of the rebellion in Norffolke.

This was doone before Midſummer, and ſo it reſted till the firſt of Iulie, at which time there ſhould be a publike plaie kept at Wimondham, a towne diſtant from Norwich ſix miles, which plaie had béene accuſtomed yearelie to be kept in that towne, continuing for the ſpace of one night and one daie at the leaſt. Wherevpon the wicked contriuers of this vnhappie rebellion, tooke occaſion by the aſſembling of ſuch numbers of people as reſorted thither to ſée that plaie, to enter further into their wicked enterpriſe: and vpon conference had, they immediatlie aſſembled at Morleis a mile from Wimondham, & there they caſt downe certeine diches of maiſter Hubbords on the tueſdaie, and that night they repaired to Wimondham againe, where they practiſed the like feats. But as yet they tooke no mans goods by violence.

A conference to further the rebellion in méeting at a publike plaie.

Herevpon one Iohn Flowerdew of Hetherſet gentleman, finding himſelfe grieued with the caſting downe of ſome diches, came vnto ſome of the rebels, and gaue to them fortie pence to caſt downe the fenſes of an incloſure belonging to Robert Ket, aliàs Knight, a tanner of Wimondham (which paſture lieth néere to the faire Wounge at Wimondham aforſaid) which they did. And that night conſulting togither, the next morning they tooke their iourneie to Hetherſet, by the procurement of the ſaid Robert Ket, in reuenge of the diſpleaſure which he had conceiued againſt the ſaid Flowerdew, and ſet them in hand to plucke vp and caſt downe hedges and diches, wherewith certeine paſture grounds belonging to the ſaid Flowerdew were incloſed.

Iohn Flowerdew.

Robert Ket.

Ket choſen to be capteine of the rebels.

Here was ſomwhat adoo. For maiſter Flowerdew did what he could to haue cauſed them to deſiſt from that attempt, in ſomuch that manie ſharpe words paſſed betwixt Ket and the ſaid maiſter Flowerdew. But Ket being a man hardie and forward to anie deſperat attempt that ſhould be taken in hand, was ſtreight entered into ſuch eſtimation with the commons thus aſſembled togither in rebellious wiſe, that his will was accompliſhed: and ſo thoſe hedges and diches belonging to the paſture grounds of maiſter Flowerdew were throwne downe and made plaine. Herevpon was Ket choſen to be their capteine and ringleader, who being reſolued to ſet all on ſix and ſeuen, willed them to be of good comfort, and to follow him in defenſe of their common libertie, being readie in the common-welths cauſe to hazard both life and goods.

Herewith they paſſed the water betwixt Cringelford and Eiton, and comming to Bowthorpe, caſt downe certeine hedges and diches in that place, and their number being now greatlie increaſed, they incamped there that night. Here ſir Edmund Windam knight, being high ſhiriffe of Norffolke and Suffolke, came and proclamed them rebels, commanding them to depart in the kings maieſties name. With which proclamation they were greatlie offended, and attempted to haue got him into their hands: but he being well horſſed, valiantlie brake through them that had compaſſed him in: howbeit he eſcaped from them and got into Norwich, being not paſt a mile off. The ſame night there came a great number of lewd people vnto them, as well out of the citie of Norwich as out of the countrie, with weapon, armour, and artillerie.

The citizens of Norwich.

Thomas Cod.

The daie before that Ket came to this place, a great number of the meaner ſort of the citizens of Norwich had throwne downe a quickſet hedge, and filled vp the diches, wherewith the foreſaid commons were on the one ſide incloſed, to kéepe in the cattell of the citizens that had the ſame going before their common neatherd: and ſo that fenſe which by good and prouident aduiſe of their forefathers, had béene raiſed and made for the common profit of the whole citie, was thus by a ſort of lewd perſons defaced and caſt downe at that preſent. And ſcarſe had they throwne downe the dich in the vpper end of this paſture, but that a companie of euill diſpoſed perſons ſtale out of the citie, and got them to Kets campe. The maior of the citie named Thomas Cod aduertiſed hereof, doubting what might follow of this miſchiefous begun rebellion, thought good to trie if he might perſuade the rebels to giue ouer their traitorous enterpriſes: and therfore taking certeine of the aldermen with him, he went to Kets campe, vſing what perſuaſions he could to reduce them vnto their dutifull obedience, & to depart home to their houſes. But his trauell was in vaine, and therefore returned backe to the citie without hope to doo anie good with that vnrulie rout.

The rebels requeſt licence to paſſe thorough Norwich.

After whoſe departure, they conſidering in what danger they ſtood to be ſurpriſed, if they ſhould ſcatter abroad in ſuch ſort as till then they had doone, ſéeking to waſt and ſpoile the countrie about them, without kéeping togither in anie warlike order, thought it ſtood moſt with their ſuertie to draw into one place, and to fortifie the ſame for their further ſtrength. Vpon this reſolution they determined to go with all ſpéed vnto Mouſehold, a place as they tooke it méet for their purpoſe, and therefore ſent to the maior of Norwich, requeſting him of licence to paſſe through the citie, bicauſe it was their néereſt waie, promiſing not to offer anie iniurie or violence to anie perſon, but quietlie to march through the citie vnto their place appointed. But the maior did not onlie denie them paſſage, but alſo with ſharpe and bitter ſpeach reprouing their rebellious doings, told them what ſhould follow thereof, if they gaue not ouer in time from further procéeding in ſuch wicked attempts.

Sir Roger Woodhouſe.

Mount Surrie.

Mouſehold.

The next daie being thurſdaie, ſir Roger Woodhouſe with ſeuen or eight of his houſhold ſeruants, came to them, bringing with him two carts laden with béere, and one cart laden with other vittels: for a recompenſe whereof he was ſtripped out of his apparell, had his horſſes taken from him, and whatſoeuer elſe he had, the rebels accounting the ſame a good preie, he himſelfe was cruellie tugged and caſt into a dich of one Mores of nether Arleham by Heileſdonbridge; where the ſame daie the rebels, being diſappointed of their purpoſe to paſſe through Norwich, found meanes to paſſe, and comming to maiger Corbets houſe of Sprowſton, intended to haue burnt the ſame houſe. But yet being perſuaded to ſpare it from fire, they ſpoiled his goods, defaced a douehouſe of his, which had béene a chappell, and afterwards got them to Mouſehold, and comming to S. Leonards hill, on which the erle of Surrie had built a ſtatelie houſe called mount Surrie, they inkennelled themſelues there on the ſame hill; and in the woods adioining that lie on the weſt and the ſouth ſide of the ſame hill, as the commons or paſture called Mouſehold heath lieth on the eaſt ſide, which conteineth foure or fiue miles in length, & thrée or foure in bredth.

Riſing chaſe.

Watton.

They put ſir Roger Woodhouſe, and other priſoners whom they had caught, in ſtreict ward within the foreſaid houſe of mount Surrie, on the which they ſeized, and ſpoiled whatſoeuer they found within it. In the meane time, the maior of Norwich taking aduiſe with his brethren the aldermen, what was beſt to doo in this caſe, whether preſentlie to iſſue forth, and diſtreſſe the rebels now in the beginning, leaſt time might giue them meane to increaſe their power: or rather to ſtaie till they had aduertiſed the councell of the whole matter. In the end they agréed that this laſt aduiſe was moſt ſureſt, and ſo they diſpatched a poſt with all ſpéed to the court. Beſide this great campe (as they termed it) at Mouſehold, there was a leſſer at Riſing chaſe neare to Lin: but the rebels there, by the good diligence and circumſpect policie of the iuſtices and gentlemen of thoſe parts, were ſpéedilie repreſſed, and driuen from thence. Notwithſtanding afterwards they aſſembled togither at Watton, & there remained about a fortnight, ſtopping alſo the paſſage at Thetford and Brandon ferrie, within nine miles of the ſaid Watton: and at length came and ioined themſelues with theſe other at Mouſehold, by appointment of their generall capteine (as they tooke him) the foreſaid Robert Ket.

Moreouer, there came flocking from Suffolke and other parts, a great multitude of lewd diſpoſed perſons, raiſed by firing of beacons, and ringing of bels. Alſo a number of raſcals & naughtie lewd perſons ſtale out of the citie of Norwich, and went to campe. And thus being got togither in great multitudes, they added one wickedneſſe to another, as hauing no ſtaie of themſelues after their downefall, nor holding them content with the committing of one villanous treſpaſſe and horrible tranſgreſſion, according vnto the poets words to the like purpoſe:

Quiſnam hominum eſt, quem tu contentum videris vno
Flagitio?———

Counterfeit religion.

Now to cloke their malicious purpoſe with a counterfeit ſhew of holineſſe, they cauſed one Coniers vicar of ſaint Martins in Norwich to ſaie ſeruice morning and euening, to praie to God for proſperous ſpéed in that their vngodlie enterpriſe. Moreouer they went about to ioine to their cauſe diuerſe honeſt men, and right commendable for religion, doctrine, vertue, and innocencie of life; amongſt whome were Robert Watſon a preacher, Thomas Cod maior of Norwich, and Thomas Alderich of Mangréene hall. Theſe thrée, although ſore againſt their willes, were conſtreined to be preſent with them in all matters of counſell, and to take vpon them (as aſſociats with capteine Ket) the adminiſtration and order of euerie thing: which happened well for manie. For when either Ket himſelfe, or anie other of the capteins, through ſetting on of the outragious multitude, purpoſed anie miſchéefe (as often it came to paſſe) in one place or other, through their graue aduiſe, and approued induſtrie, their furie was ſundrie times ſtaied and calmed. Although Ket bent to all vngratiouſnes, would diuerſe times grant forth commiſſions, abuſing now and then the names of honeſt men thereby, appointing his vnthriftie mates to fetch in vittels to furniſh their campe withall. The tenor of one of the which commiſſions here inſueth.

The forme of a warrant granted out by the rebels to take vp vittels.

WE the kings friends & deputies, doo grant licence to all men, to prouide and bring into the campe at Mouſehold, all maner of cattell, and prouiſion of vittels, in what place ſoeuer they may find the ſame: ſo that no violence or iniurie bee doone to any honeſt or poore man. Commanding all perſons as they tender the kings honor and roiall maieſtie, and the releefe of the common welth, to be obedient to vs the gouernors, and to thoſe whoſe names inſue.

Signed Robert Ket.

Then followed in order a long liſt of names, for the number of the gouernors was great, as they that beſide the cheefe capteins had choſen out of euerie hundred two, and there were ſix and twentie hundreds. By vertue of ſuch commiſſions, manie that were of good worſhip and credit in the countrie, whom the rebels in their rage had condemned, were fetched from their houſes, and other places where they might be found, and being brought to the campe, were committed to priſon. Alſo the ditches and hedges, wherewith the commons abrode in the countrie were incloſed, were throwne downe, & manie were warned and called foorth from ſundrie parts, to come and take part with them in theſe tumultuous vprores. And all theſe things were doone, the maior, maiſter Watſon, and maiſter Aldrich not onelie holding their peace and winking thereat, but alſo ſometime after a maner giuing their conſent to the ſame. For to haue reſiſted them had béene but follie, and the waie to haue put themſelues in danger of deſtruction, and their countrie too.

Gentlemen impriſoned.

The honeſt citizens of Norwich in this meane while remained in great perplexitie, hearing nothing from the king nor his councell. They therefore being vncerteine what to doo, abode in the citie, till they might vnderſtand what order it ſhould pleaſe the king to take for the quieting of theſe troubles. The cauſe why the councell was thus ſlacke in prouiding remedie againſt the Norffolke rebels, was: for that they were buſie in quieting the troubles in the inner part of the realme about London, and other places (as before ye haue heard) by meanes whereof the power of theſe Norffolke rebels ſtill increaſed, ſo that there were aſſembled togither into Kets campe, to the number of ſixtéene thouſand vngratious vnthrifts, who by the aduiſe of their capteins fortified themſelues, and made prouiſion of artillerie, powder and other abiliments, which they fetched out of ſhips, gentlemens houſes, and other places where any was to be found, and withall ſpoiled the countrie of all the cattell, riches and coine, on which they might laie hands.

The number of the rebels.

But bicauſe manie (as in ſuch caſe is euer ſeene) did prouide for themſelues, and hid that which they got, laieng it vp for their owne ſtore, and brought it not foorth to further the common cauſe; Ket and the other gouernors (for ſo would they be called) thought to prouide a remedie, and by common conſent it was decreed, that a place ſhould be appointed, where iudgements might bée exerciſed, as in a iudiciall hall. Wherevpon they found out a great old oke, where the ſaid Ket, and the other gouernors or deputies might ſit and place themſelues, to heare and determine ſuch quarelling matters as came in queſtion. Afore whom ſometime would aſſemble a great number of the rebels, and exhibit complaints of ſuch diſorders, as now and then were practiſed among them; and there they would take order for the redreſſing of ſuch wrongs and iniuries as were appointed, ſo that ſuch gréedie vagabounds as were readie to ſpoile more than ſéemed to ſtand with the pleaſure of the ſaid gouernors, and further than their commiſſions would beare, were committed to priſon. This oke they named the trée of reformation.

Rebels and théeues can not kéepe togither without miniſtration of iuſtice.

The trée of reformation.

The maior, maiſter Aldrich and others, whome they had receiued into the number of their gouernours, would oftentimes go vp into this trée, and make diuerſe pithie orations to perſuade the outragious multitude to giue ouer their riotous rapines and ſpoilings. There were alſo certeine diuines which did vſe all waies poſſible to withdraw them from their wicked attempts, and to reduce them to peace and quietneſſe, although this was not doone without danger of their liues. Neuertheleſſe, theſe in the daie time vſed to preach in the churches, and in the night to watch with armour vpon their backes, leauing nothing vndoone that might ſéeme to apperteine vnto the dutie of godlie and vertuous diuines, or faithfull and obedient ſubiects. Among theſe was doctor Matthew Parker, afterward archbiſhop of Canturburie, whoſe wiſdome, faithfulneſſe, and integritie was moſt apparant.

Doctor Parker.

He comming on a daie into the campe with his brother Thomas Parker, that was after maior of Norwich, found them before the trée at common praier, the foreremembred Coniers vicar of ſaint Martins in Norwich ſaieng the Letanie. Wherevpon doctor Parker thinking the time to ſerue for his purpoſe, went vp into the trée, where he made a ſermon, diuiding it into thrée ſeuerall parts. In the firſt he exhorted them to vſe with moderation thoſe vittels which they had prouided & brought into their campe, and not riotouſlie nor lauiſhlie to waſt and conſume them. In the ſecond he aduiſed them in no wiſe to ſéeke reuenge of priuat diſpleaſures, and not to chaine or kéepe in irons thoſe perſons whom they held in ward, nor to take anie mans life from him. Laſtlie, he wiſhed that they ſhould haue regard to themſelues, & leaue off their raſh begun enterpriſe, giuing eare to ſuch heralds or other meſſengers as came from the king, and to ſhew ſuch honour vnto his maieſtie now in his yong and tender yeares, as they might inioy him hereafter being growne vp in vertue, to their great ioy, comfort, and gladneſſe. As he was handling this matter, with manie good and effectuall reaſons, hauing the auditorie attentiue to his words, one lewd fellow among the reſt cried out and ſaid; How long ſhall we ſuffer this hireling doctor, who being waged by gentlemen, is come hither with his tong, which is ſold and tied to ſerue their appetite? But for all his prating words, let vs bridle them, and bring them vnder the orders of our law.

He preached to the rebels.

The rebels threaten doctor Parker.

Then began the multitude to ſtir and make a noiſe, threatening the preacher, ſome of them ſaieng; It were well, that for his faire told tale we ſhould bring him downe with a miſcheefe, with arrowes and iauelings. This ſpeech brought doctor Parker in no ſmall feare, and the more, for that he heard a noiſe and clattering of weapons vnder him, ſo that he looked for preſent death among them. But herein he was deceiued: for there was not a man that ſtood next him within the compaſſe of the trée, would him anie harme. And immediatlie the foreſaid vicar of

Doctor Parker conuaieth himſelfe from among the rebels.

S. Martins that executed the office of the miniſter, began with helpe of ſome ſingingmen that were preſent, the canticle Te Deum, wherewith the vnrulie multitude ſeemed partlie to quiet themſelues. Which occaſion doctor Parker perceiuing to ſerue his turne, thought not longer to tarie amongſt them, but quietlie got him downe from the trée, and with his brother made haſt towards the citie. But before he came to Pockthorp gate, there were of the rebels that came to him, and began to queſtion with him about his licence, whereby he was authoriſed to preach: but he perceiuing that there was no reaſon to be conceiued of them, ſlipt his waies, and left his brother to argue the matter with them.

The policie of doctor Parker to beguile the rebels.

Yet the next daie he entring into ſaint Clements church, tooke occaſion to expound ſomewhat out of one of the leſſons that was read that daie, concerning theſe wicked hurliburlies; manie of the rebels comming about him, but not interrupting him a whit, hearing the end of his exhortation, although they ſeemed greatlie therewith offended. But as he came out of the church, they followed him, and told him that (as they vnderſtood) he had thrée or foure able geldings to ſerue the king: and therefore charged him that after dinner they might be readie for them to occupie. But doctor Parker made them no great anſwer, but calling to him his horſekéeper, commanded him to placke off the ſhooes from ſome of his geldings, and to pare their hooues vnto the quicke; and that he ſhould annoint the other with neruall, as if they had béene lamed with trauell. The rebels perceiuing this, when they ſaw the ſame geldings had forth as it had béene to paſture, made no further buſineſſe. Wherevpon doctor Parker ſhortlie after, feining as if he went abroad to walke two miles off from the citie, at Crinkleford bridge found his horſes readie as he had appointed, with his ſeruants, and mounting vp, tooke his iourneie towards Cambridge, with as much ſpéed as was poſſible, eſcaping thither out of all danger, although by the waie they met with and ſaw diuerſe of the rebels plaieng their parts in their wonted outragious maner. Thus did doctor Parker eſcape the hands of the wicked rebels, who deſpiſing his wholeſome admonitions, did afterwards by Gods iuſt iudgement proue his words to be moſt true.

The falſifieng of the kings commiſſions.

The hauocke which the rebels made.

The outragious dealing againſt gentlemen.

But in the meane time proceeding from one miſchiefe to another, after they had practiſed to ſpoile the gentlemen of the countrie of their goods, they began to attach their bodies, and by force to bring them into their campe: ſo that ſuch as eſcaped their hands, were glad to flée, and hide themſelues in woods and caues, where they might beſt kéepe themſelues out of their aduerſaries reach and intended dangers. But to ſpeake of all the horrible practiſes by theſe vngratious people exerciſed, it would be too long a proceſſe. What ſhifts they found to cloake their doings, and that euen vnder the kings authoritie, it is wonderfull. For whereas there were certeine commiſſions directed vnto diuerſe gentlemen in the countrie, to take order for the appeaſing of theſe tumults; they getting the ſame into their hands, tooke vpon them the authoritie committed to the gentlemen, vnto whome the ſame commiſſions were ſent; and taking off the ſeales from the other, faſtened the ſame vnto their counterfeit writings. To conclude, they grew to ſuch vnmeaſurable diſorder, that they would not in manie things obeie neither their generall capteine, nor anie of their gouernors, but ran headlong into all kind of miſchiefe, & made ſuch ſpoile of vittels which they brought out of the countrie adioining vnto their campe, that within few daies they conſumed (beſide a great number of béeſes) twentie thouſand muttons, alſo ſwans, géeſe, hens, capons, ducks, & other foules ſo manie as they might laie hands vpon. And furthermore, they ſpared not to breake into parks, and kill what déere they could. Such hauocke they made of all that came in their waie, and ſuch number of ſhéepe ſpeciallie they brought into their campe, that a good fat weather was ſold for a groat. The woods, groues, and trées that were deſtroied I paſſe ouer, and make no mention thereof. Herewith, what crueltie was ſhewed by them in fettering and manacing ſuch gentlemen as they caught, and committed to priſon for ſome miſliking they had conceiued of them, it was a miſerable caſe to behold. Some there were whom they brought forth, as it had béene to iudgement before the trée of reformation, there to be tried afore the gouernors, as if they had béene guiltie of ſome heinous and gréeuous crime. And when it was aſked of the commons, what ſhould be doone with thoſe priſoners, they would crie with one voice; Hang them, hang them. And when they were aſked why they gaue ſo ſharpe iudgement of thoſe whome they neuer knew, they would roundlie anſwer, that other cried the ſame crie; and therefore they ment to giue their aſſent with other, although they could yéeld no reaſon, but that they were gentlemen, & therefore not worthie to liue.

Sir Edmund Kneuets ſeruice.

Whileſt the rebels thus raged abroad in the countrie at Hengham eleuen miles from Norwich, ſir Edmund Knenet knight, with a ſmall companie of his owne meniall ſeruants, ſet vpon the nightwatch of the rebels that were placed there, & brake through, ouerthrowing diuerſe of them: and hauing ſome of his owne men alſo vnhorſſed by the rebels, and in danger to be hewen in péeces among them, yet he recouered them, & eſcaped their hands through great manhood. After which good nights ſeruice, as they would haue it eſtéemed, they repaired to their great capteine Ket, to ſhew their hurts receiued, & to complaine of their griefes. It was talked among them, that they would go to ſir Edmund Kneuets houſe called Buckenham caſtell, to aſſault it, and to fetch him out of it by force. But it was doubted of ſome, leaſt it were too ſtrong for them; and other feared ſharpe ſtripes, if they ſhould attempt that exploit, being at the leaſt twelue miles from their maine campe: and ſo that enterpriſe went not forward, the moſt part thinking it beſt to ſléepe in whole ſkins.

Leonard Southerton,

There was at London the ſame time a citizen of Norwich, one Leonard Southerton fled from thence for feare of his life, whome the councell ſent for, to come to ſpeake with them: and being aſked what he knew touching the ſtate of the rebels, he declared to them from point to point the maner of all their outragious procéedings: but yet that as he vnderſtood, there were manie among them that would laie aſide their armour, if they might be aſſured of the kings pardon: and therefore if it would pleaſe the king to ſet foorth a proclamation, that all ſuch as would depart from the campe and be quiet, ſhould haue their pardon for all that was paſt, he doubted not but that thoſe routs ſhould be diſperſed. His aduiſe was allowed, and therevpon was an herald ſent with all ſpéed in companie with the ſaid Southerton vnto Norwich; & comming into the campe the laſt of Iulie, and ſtanding before the trée of reformation, apparelled in his cote of armes, pronounced there before all the multitude, with lowd voice, a frée pardon to all that would depart to their homes, and laieng aſide their armour, giue ouer their traitorous begun enterpriſe.

Pardon proclamed by an herald at armes.

After he had made an end of his proclamation, in maner all the multitude cried, God ſaue the king. And manie of them falling downe vpon their knées, could not forbeare with teares guſhing from their eies, but commend the kings great and vnſpeakable mercie thus freelie offered vnto them, which vndoubtedlie they had at that time all of them receiued, if the wicked ſpeech of ſome of the raſcall ſort, and namelie the traitorous perſuaſions of that wicked caitife Ket himſelfe, had not ſtaied them from their dutifull inclinations. But after that Ket had with lowd voice before declared, that kings & princes were accuſtomed to grant pardons to ſuch as are offendors, and not to others; he truſted that he néeded not anie pardon, ſith he had doone nothing but that belonged to the dutie of a true ſubiect: and herewith he beſought them not to forſake him, but to remember his promiſe, ſith he was readie to ſpend his life in the quarell. The herald herevpon called him traitor, and commanded John Petibone the ſwordbearer of Norwich to attach him for treaſon. Then began a great hurlie burlie among the multitude, ſo that the herald, perceiuing they began to ſhrinke from their former purpoſe of receiuing the kings pardon, departed from them with theſe words; All ye that be the kings friends, come awaie with me. The maior & maiſter Alderich, with a great number of other gentlemen & honeſt yeomen that were readie to obeie the kings commandement, followed him.

The citizens fauouring the rebels.

The maior being thus returned to the citie, cauſed the gates to be ſhut, and ſuch gentlemen as had béen committed to priſon within the caſtell, or other places in the citie, he cauſed to be ſet at libertie, & with their aduiſe tooke order how the rebelles might be kept out. But as he was buſie about ſuch matters, certeine of the citizens that fauored the rebelles had receiued a great multitude of them into the citie, which did put the citizens in ſuch feare, that it was thought the moſt ſuretie for the gentlemen that had béene now releaſed out of priſon, to be ſhut vp againe, leaſt the rebelles finding them abroad, ſhould haue murthered them. Yet after this, when the rebels were departed out of the citie againe, the maior & aldermen fell in hand to rampire vp the gates, to plant ordinance, and to make all neceſſarie prouiſion that for them was poſſible.

At length they fell to ſhooting off their artillerie as well from the citie as from the campe, dooing their beſt to annoie ech other. But when the rebelles ſaw that they did little hurt to the citie with their great ordinance lieng vpon the hill, they remoued the ſame downe to the foot of the ſame hill, and from thenſe began to beat the walles. Notwithſtanding, ſhortlie after they made ſute for a truce to indure for a time, that they might paſſe to and fro through the citie, to fetch in vittels, whereof ſome want began to pinch them in the campe. The maior and aldermen flatlie denied their requeſt, proteſting that they would not permit anie traitors to haue paſſage through their citie.

The rebels ſore kindled in wrath with this anſwer, and deniall of their ſute, came running downe from the hill, and aſſaulting the gates, were beaten off with ſhot of arrowes and other weapons. And yet ſuch rage appéered among the rebels, that the boies and yoong lads ſhewed themſelues ſo deſperat in gathering vp the arrowes, that when they ſaw and felt the ſame ſticking in ſome part of their bodies, they would plucke them foorth, and deliuered them to their bow-men, that they might beſtow the ſame again at the citizens. In all this broile (a thing noteworthie) the ſeditious ſort minding nothing more than the compaſſing of their purpoſe, had as little ſtaie of themſelues in this their outrage, as a bull at the ſight of a cow, or a ſtoned horſſe at the view of a mare; according vnto the old saieng of the poet:

Non facile eſt taurum viſa retinere iuuenca,
Fortis equus viſa ſemper adhinnit equa.

In the meane time, whileſt they were thus buſie vpon one ſide of the citie, an alarum roſe at the defendants backes, crieng that the rebels were entred the citie on the contrarie ſide: and ſo euerie man ſhrinking awaie, and running thither to repell the enimie there, that part was left void of defendants where the firſt aſſault began. Whereof the rebels being aduiſed, ruſhed into the riuer that runneth before biſhops gate, got to the gates, and breaking them open, entred without anie great reſiſtance. For all the citizens were withdrawne to their houſes and other places, where they hoped beſt to hide themſelues from the furie of their enimies.

The rebels conueie artillerie and munition out of the citie to their campe.

The rebels hauing thus entred the citie by force, conueied all the guns and artillerie, with other furniture of warre out of the citie into their campe. The herald that was yet abiding in the citie, to ſée if the rebels would before the daie prefixed for their pardons, being not yet expired, giue ouer their enterpriſe, came with the maior into the market place, and in the hearing of a great multitude of people that were come foorth and ſtood about him, he eftſoones gaue commandement in the kings name, that they ſhould laie armes aſide, and get them home to their houſes: which to ſo manie as did, he pronounced a generall pardon, and to the reſt extreme puniſhment by death.

The heralds proclamation in Norwich.

The rebels that ſtood by and heard him, when he had once made an end of his proclamation, bade him get him thenſe with a miſchiefe: for it was not his faire offers, nor his ſwéet flattering words that ſhould beguile them, ſith they made no account of ſuch manner of mercie, that vnder a colour of pardon, ſhould cut off all their ſafetie and hope of preſeruation. The herald perceiuing how obſtinatelie they were bent, and ſet on all miſchiefe, and that it was vnpoſſible to bring them from their outragious treaſon, either through feare of puniſhment or hope of pardon, departed; without hauing brought that to paſſe for which he was ſent. Immediatlie after his departure, the rebels ſought for Leonard Southerton, purpoſing to haue apprehended him, and committed him to priſon, for accompanieng the herald thitherwards. But he hauing knowledge of their meaning, hid himſelfe from them.

The traitorous refuſall of the rebels to accept the kings pardon.

After this, there were by Kets commandement apprehended diuerſe perſons, as the maior, Robert Watſon, William Rogers, John Homerſton, William Brampton, and manie others, which were brought out of the citie, and committed to priſon in mount Surrie. Ket perceiuing well that he muſt either now obteine a bloodie victorie by force againſt his countrie, or elſe to taſt ſuch an end as his vngratious attempts did well deſerue, got togither ſo manie wicked perſons as he might procure to come vnto him from ech ſide, with great rewards and faire promiſes: ſo that it was a ſtrange matter to conſider what a multitude of vnthrifts and raſcalles came to him vpon the ſudden.

Priſoners committed to ward in mount Surrie.

Kets power increaſeth.

The citizens of Norwich were ſore diſpleaſed, that their maior (being an honeſt man, and one greatlie beloued among them) ſhould be impriſoned, and ſo remaine in danger of life among the rebels: for they threatned him ſore, & ieſting at his name, would ſaie one to another; Let vs all come togither to morrow, for we ſhall ſée a * cods hed ſold in the campe for a penie. Whereupon the citizens fearing leaſt through the malice and rage of the rebels, their maior might chance to be made awaie among them, procured maiſter Thomas Alderich (whoſe authoritie was great among them) to be a meane for his deliuerance: who comming to Ket with ſharpe and bitter words reproued him for his cruell dealing, by impriſoning ſo honeſt a man as the maior was, and withall commanded him to releaſe him: which either for ſhame, or rather through feare of a guiltie conſcience that pricked him, he cauſed incontinentlie to be doone: who therevpon might now and then go and come at his pleaſure to and fro the citie. But bicauſe he could not ſtill remaine in the citie, but was conſtreined to continue for the moſt part in the campe, he appointed Auguſtine Steward to be his deputie, who with the aſſiſtance of Henrie Bacon, and Iohn Atkinſon ſhiriffes, gouerned the citie right orderlie, and kept the moſt part of the citizens in due obeiſance.

Auguſtine Steward.

The councell aduertiſed now vpon the heralds returne, that there was no waie to reduce theſe Norffolke rebels vnto quiet otherwiſe than by force, appointed the marqueſſe of Northampton with fifteene hundred horſſemen to go downe vnto Norwich to ſubdue thoſe ſtubborne traitors that ſo vndutifullie refuſed the kings mercifull pardon, freelie offered by his officer at armes, and others. There went with the lord marqueſſe diuerſe honorable and worſhipfull perſonages, as the lord Sheffeld, the lord Wentworth, ſir Anthonie Dennie, ſir Henrie Parker, ſir Richard Southwell, ſir Rafe Sadler, ſir Iohn Clere, ſir Rafe Rowlet, ſir Richard Lee, ſir Iohn Gates, ſir Thomas Paſton, ſir Henrie Bedingfield, ſir Iohn Suliard, ſir William Walgraue, ſir Iohn Cuts, ſir Thomas Cornewallis knights, togither with a great manie of other knights, eſquiers and gentlemen, and a ſmall band of Italians, vnder the leading of a capteine named Malateſta.

The lord marqueſſe of Northampton ſent into Norffolke to repreſſe the rebels.

Norwich ſummoned.

The lord marqueſſe being approched within a mile of Norwich, ſent ſir Gilbert Dethicke knight, now Garter, then Norrie, king at armes, vnto the citie, to ſummon them within to yeeld it into his hands, or vpon refuſall to proclame warre againſt them. Herevpon Auguſtine Steward the maiors deputie ſent to the maior that was in the campe with Ket, aduertiſing him what meſſage he had receiued from the marqueſſe. The maior ſent word againe, that nothing was more greeuous vnto him, than to ſee into what miſerie the citie and countrie about were brought by the rage of theſe commotions; and declaring in what caſe he ſtood, being kept by force among the rebels, wheras otherwiſe he would (according to his dutie) haue come to his honor. But as for the citie, he had committed the gouernance vnto Auguſtine Steward, who ſhould be readie to ſurrender it into his lordſhips hands: and that if Ket would giue him leaue, he would come himſelfe to his honor, ſubmitting all things wholie to his lordſhips order and diſpoſition.

This meſſage being brought backe by the ſaid Norrie, Auguſtine Steward the maiors deputie with the ſhiriffs, and a great number of the citizens, came to the lord marqueſſes campe, and deliuered vp the ſword to his lordſhip, declaring how the maior himſelfe would gladlie haue come, if he could haue got from the rebels: and that although a great rowt of the lewd citizens were partakers with the rebelles, yet a number of the ſubſtantiall & honeſt citizens would neuer conſent to their wicked doings, but were readie to receiue his lordſhip into their citie. The lord marqueſſe giuing good words to the citizens, and willing them to be of good comfort, ſith he truſted to appeaſe theſe troubles verie ſhortlie, deliuered the ſword vnto ſir Richard Southwell, who bare it before the lord marqueſſe as he paſſed forth towards the citie, entring the ſame by ſaint Stephans gate. And incontinentlie was proclamation made that they ſhould all reſort into the market place, where they conſulted togither how they might beſt defend the citie againſt the enimies, and to repreſſe their furie. Herevpon was order giuen for the placing of watch and ward about the gates and the wals, as might ſeeme expedient. The lord marqueſſe ſupped that night and lodged in the maiors deputies houſe; but his lordſhip as well as other kept their armour on their backs all that night, for doubt of ſome ſudden aſſault to be made againſt the citie by the rebels. Here it chanced that the ſtrangers, either by appointment or otherwiſe, went forth, and offered ſkirmiſh to the rebels vpon Magdalen hill.

Sir Richard Southwell.

The ſtrãgers offer ſkirmiſh to the rebels.

The rebels came forth with their horſſemen: but it ſeemed that they were better practiſed to fetch in booties, than to make their manage or careire, and therefore not able to match the ſtrangers, which being perceiued of their fellowes that were footmen, they put forth their archers before their horſſemen, and ſuch numbers herewith came ſwarming forth of their campe, meaning to compaſſe in thoſe ſtrangers, that they perceiuing the maner and purpoſe of the enimies, caſt themſelues in a ring, and retired backe into the citie againe. But they left one of their companie behind them, a gentleman that was an Italian, who more valiantlie than warlie ventured too farre among the enimies, and through euill hap being ouerthrowne beſide his horſſe, he was inuironed about with a great multitude of thoſe rebels, that tooke him priſoner, and like vile wretches ſpoiling him of his armor and apparell, hanged him ouer the wals of mount Surrie. Which act well ſhewed what courteſie might be looked for at ſuch cruell traitors hands, that would thus vnmercifullie put ſuch a gentleman and worthie ſouldior to death: for whoſe ranſome, if they would haue demanded it, they might haue had no ſmall portion of monie to haue ſatiſfied their greedie minds. But it ſeemed that their beaſtlie crueltie had bereft them the remembrance of all honeſt conſideration and dutifull humanitie.

An Italian hanged by the rebels.

The marqueſſe of Northampton cauſing (as before yee haue heard) diligent watch to be kept vpon the walles, and at the gates, appointed the ſame to be viſited right often, that through negligence no miſhap ſhould follow. Moreouer, beſides the watch at the gates and walles, the reſidue of the ſoldiors making a mightie huge fire in the market place, ſo as all the ſtreets were full of light, they remained there all that night in their armour, readie vpon anie occaſion to reſiſt the enimies if they ſhould make anie attempt. Sir Edward Warner marſhall of the field gaue the watch-word, ſir Thomas Paſton, ſir Iohn Clere, ſir William Walgraue, ſir Thomas Cornwallis, and ſir Henrie Bedingfield were appointed to the defenſe of other parts of the citie. And now when euerie thing was thought to be ſafelie prouided for, and that the lord marqueſſe and other were laid to take their reſt, the rebels about the middeſt of the night began to ſhoot off their great artillerie towards the citie, ſo thicke as was poſſible: but the bullets paſſed ouer their heads that were lodged in the citie, without dooing anie great hurt at all.

Sir Edward Warner.

The lord marqueſſe, by reaſon of the often alarums that were giuen, whileſt the enimies thus ceaſed not to rage with continuall ſhot of ordinance, was called vp by the marſhall ſir Edward Warner; and comming into the market place, accompanied with the nobles and gentlemen of the armie, fell in councell with them, how to foreſee that the citie in ſuch danger might be ſafelie defended againſt the enimies with ſuch ſmall power as he had there with him. It was therefore determined, that all the gates which were on the contrarie part of the towne from the rebels campe, and likewiſe the ruinous places of the walles ſhould be rampired vp, that if the enimies ſhould chance to giue an aſſault to the citie, they might more eaſilie be repelled.

But as theſe things were in dooing, and almoſt brought to end, in a manner all the whole multitude of the rebelles came out of their cabins, running downe in moſt furious maner to the citie, and with great ſhouts and yelling cries went about to ſet fire on the gates, to clime ouer the walles, to paſſe the riuer, and to enter the citie at ſuch places where the walles were through age decaied and ruinous. The ſoldiors that were there with the lord marqueſſe, did ſhew their vttermoſt indeuor to beat backe the enimies. This fight in moſt cruell wiſe continued for the ſpace of thrée houres without ceaſing, the rebels forcing themſelues to the vttermoſt of their powers to enter perforce vpon them, and they within the citie ſhewed no leſſe courage to repell them backe. The hardie manhood of diuerſe knights, and other men of worſhip was here right apparant. It was ſtrange to ſée the deſperat boldneſſe of the rebelles, that when they were thruſt through the bodies or thighs, and ſome of them hough-ſinewed, would yet ſéeke reuenge in ſtriking at their aduerſaries, when their hands were ſcarſe able to hold vp their weapon; thinking themſelues ſomewhat ſatiſfied if the humor of their enuie and deadlie ſpite might be fed but with a drop of their aduerſaries bloud; with ſuch a malignant ſpirit (tending wholie to vengeance) theſe deſperat rebels were poſſeſſed, according to the poets ſpéech in the like ſenſe and meaning:

The deſperatneſſe of rebelles.

Iuuenal. ſat. 13.

Inuidioſa dabit minimus ſolatia ſanguis.

But ſuch was the valiancie of the gentlemen and ſoldiers, which were there with the lord marqueſſe, that in the end the enimies which were alreadie entered the citie, were beaten out againe, and driuen backe to their accuſtomed kennell holes with loſſe of thrée hundred of their numbers. They within the towne hauing thus repelled the enimies, & accounting themſelues in more ſafetie than before, for the reſt of the night that yet remained, which was not much, they gaue themſelues to refreſh their wearied bodies with ſome ſléepe. The next daie, the lord marqueſſe was informed by ſome of the citizens, that there were no ſmall number in Kets campe that would gladlie come from him, if they might be ſure of their pardon; and that at Pockethorpe gate there were foure or fiue thouſand, that wiſhed for nothing more than for pardon: and that if the ſame were offered them, there were no doubt (as they beléeued) but that they would ſubmit themſelues to the kings mercie.

The rebels beaten backe.

The marqueſſe was glad to vnderſtand ſo much, & incontinentlie diſpatched Norreie king at armes, with a trumpetter, to aſſure them on the kings behalfe, that they ſhould be pardoned for all offenſes paſt, and that had béene committed in time of this rebellion, if they would laie armes aſide. Norreie and the trumpet comming to the gate, found not a man there: but the trumpetter ſounding his trumpet, there came running downe from the hill a great multitude of their people, & amongſt other as chiefe, one Flotman, whome Norreie commanded to ſtaie. Wherevpon the ſaid Flotman aſked him what was the matter, and wherefore he had called them togither by ſound of trumpet? Go thy waies (ſaid he) & tell thy companie from my lord marqueſſe of Northhampton, the kings maieſties lieutenant, that he commandeth them to ceaſſe from committing anie further outrage; and if they will (ſaith he) obeie his commandement, all that is paſt, ſhall be forgiuen and pardoned.

Flotman.

Pardon offered to the rebels.

Flotman hauing heard Norreies declaration, as he was an outragious and buſie fellow, preſumptuouſlie made anſwer, that he cared not a pins point for my lord marqueſſe, and withall, like a rebellious traitor, railed vpon his lordſhip, and mainteined, that he and the reſt of the rebels were earneſt defendors of the kings roiall maieſtie, and that they had taken weapon in hand not againſt the king, but in his defenſe, as in time it ſhould appeare, as they that ſought nothing but to mainteine his maieſties roiall eſtate, the libertie of their countrie, and the ſafetie of their commonwealth, &c. To conclude, he vtterlie refuſed the kings pardon, and told Norreie certeinelie, that they would either reſtore the common-wealth from decaie, into the which it was fallen, being oppreſſed thorough the couetouſneſſe and tyrannie of the gentlemen; either elſe would they like men die in the quarrell.

Flotmans preſumptuous and traitorous allegations.

Scarſelie had he made an end of his tale, when ſuddenlie a fearefull alarum was raiſed throughout the citie: for whileſt Flotman was thus in talke with the king of armes at Pockethorpe gate, the rebels in great rage entring the citie by the hoſpitall, went about to bring all things to deſtruction: but being incountered néere to the biſhops palace, by the lord marqueſſe his men, there inſued a bloudie conflict betwixt them, which continued long with great fierceneſſe and eger reuenge on both parts. There died about ſeuen ſcore of the rebels, and of the ſoldiers that ſerued againſt them ſome number, beſide a great multitude that were hurt and wounded on both parts. But the pitifull ſlaughter of the lord Sheffeld, who hauing more regard to his honor than ſafetie of life, deſirous to ſhew ſome proofe of his noble valiancie, entering amongſt the enimies, as he fought right hardilie, though not ſo warlie as had béene expedient, fell into a dich as he was about to turne his horſſe: & herewith being compaſſed about with a number of thoſe horrible traitors, was ſlaine amongeſt them: although he both declared what he was, and offered largelie to the vilans, if they would haue ſaued his life. But the more noble he ſhewed himſelfe to be, the more were they kindled in outragious furie againſt him. And as he pulled off his head péece, that it might appeare what he was, a butcherlie knaue named Fulks, who by occupation was both a carpenter & a butcher, ſlat him in the head with a club, and ſo moſt wretchedlie killed him. A lamentable caſe, that ſo noble a yong gentleman, indued with ſo manie commendable qualities, as were to be wiſhed in a man of his calling, ſhould thus miſerablie end his daies by the hands of ſo vile a vilan.

The rebels enter the citie.

The lord Sheffeld wofullie ſlaine.

Diuerſe other gentlemen and worthie ſoldiers came to the like end among thoſe outragious rebels, and amongſt other, Robert Wolnaſton, that was appointed to kéepe the doore of Chriſts church, was killed by the ſame Fulks, who tooke him for ſir Edmund Kneuet, againſt whome the rebels bare great malice, for that he ſought to annoie them ſo farre as by anie meanes he might, as partlie ye haue heard. But the ſlaughter of that noble man the lord Sheffeld, ſore diſcouraged the reſidue of the ſoldiers that were come with the lord marqueſſe. And on the other part, the rebels were aduanced thereby, in greater hope to preuaile againſt them, and therevpon preaſſed forward with ſuch hardineſſe, that they cauſed the lord marqueſſe and his people to giue place, and to forſake the citie, euerie man making the beſt ſhift he could to ſaue himſelfe. But yet diuerſe gentlemen of good account and worſhip remaining behind, and abiding the brunt, were taken priſoners, as ſir Thomas Cornewallis, and others, whome the rebels afterwards kept in ſtreict durance, vntill the daie came of their ouerthrow by the kings power, vnder the conduction of the earle of Warwike.

Alexander Neuill.

The lord marqueſſe and the reſidue that eſcaped, made the beſt ſhift they could to get out of danger; and at length, he and the moſt part of them that went forth with him, came to London. The rebels hauing thus repelled the lord marqueſſe & his power, ſet fire on the citie, whereby manie faire buildings were conſumed and burnt. It happened yet well the ſame time, that there fell great abundance of raine, the which holpe in part to quench the rage of the fire. Neuertheles, all the houſes on either ſide of Holmes ſtreet, and the hoſpitall of the poore; alſo Biſhops gate, Pockthorpe gate, Magdalene gate, and Beareſtreet gate, with manie other houſes in other parts of the citie, were burned, and fowlie defaced with fire. The citizens were brought into ſuch extreame miſerie, that they knew not which waie to turne them. Some there were that fled out of the citie, taking with them their gold and ſiluer, and ſuch ſhort ware as they might conueie awaie with them, abandoning wife and children, to reſt at the mercie of the rebels. Other hid their goods in wels, priuies, and other ſuch ſecret places out of the waie.

The rebels entering into the houſes of ſuch as were knowne to be wealthie men, ſpoiled and bare awaie all that might be found of anie value. But to ſpeake of all the cruell parts which they plaied, it would be tedious to expreſſe the ſame, their dooings were ſo wicked and outragious. There was ſhooting, howling, and wringing among them, weeping, and crieng out of women and children. To be ſhort, the ſtate of the citie at that preſent was moſt miſerable. The maiors deputie kept himſelfe cloſe in his houſe, and might behold all this miſchiefe and deſtruction of the citie, but durſt not come abroad, nor go about to ſtaie them: at length, a great multitude of the rebels that were come downe frõ their campe, entering by ſaint Auguſtines gate, came ſtraight to his houſe, and ſtroue to breake open the doores: but when they could not eaſilie bring their purpoſe to paſſe that waie forth, they began to fire the houſe. Wherevpon for feare to be burned within his owne lodging, he ſet open the doores, and in came thoſe vnmanerlie ghests, tooke him, plucked his gowne beſide his backe, called him traitor, and threatened to kill him, if he would not tell them where the lord marqueſſe of Northampton had hidden himſelfe.

The miſerable eſtate of Norwich.

The aldermans deputie roughlie handled to tell where the lord marqueſſe had hidden himſelfe.

And when he had told them that vndoubtedlie he and all his companie were gone, they were in a great rage, and with terrible noiſe and rumbling they ſought euerie corner of the houſe for him, and taking what they found, they departed. But yet manie of them afterwards partlie pacified for a peece of monie, and other things which they receiued of the maior, and partlie reprooued for the wrongfull robberies by ſome that were in credit among them, they brought againe ſuch packs and fardels as they had truſſed vp togither, and threw them into the ſhops of thoſe houſes, out of the which they had taken the ſame before: but yet there were diuers of the citizens that were ſpoiled of all that they had by thoſe rebels, that entered their houſes vnder a colour to ſeeke for the marqueſſe of Northamptons men. Namelie, the houſes of thoſe citizens that were fled, were ſpoiled and ranſacked moſt miſerablie, for they reputed and called them traitors and enimies to their king and countrie, that thus had forſaken their houſes and dwellings in time of ſuch neceſſitie: yet manie of the citizens bringing forth bread, beere, and other vittels vnto the rebels to refreſh them with, ſomewhat calmed their furious rage, and ſo eſcaped their violent hands, although no ſmall number were ſo fleeſed (as before yee haue heard) that they haue liued the worſe for it all the daies of their life ſince that time.

Releefe miniſtred to the rebels for feare of force.

But now the rebels hauing thus got poſſeſſion of the citie, & chaſed awaie the kings people, they tooke order to haue the gates kept hourelie with watch and ward of the citizens themſelues, threatning them with moſt ſhamefull death, if they omitted the ſame. Theſe vnrulie perſons were ſo farre ſtept into all kind of beaſtlie outrage, that when it rained, they would kenell vp themſelues in the churches, abuſing the place appointed for the ſeruice and worſhiping of the almightie God, in moſt prophane and wicked manner, and neither praier nor yet threats of men or women that aduiſed them to modeſtie could take place. The kings maieſtie aduertiſed therefore, that there was no waie to tame their diueliſh and traitorous outrage, but by force: with the aduiſe of his councell cauſed a power to be put in a readineſſe, as well of his owne ſubiects as of ſtrangers, namelie lancequenets, which were come to ſerue his maieſtie againſt the Scots.

But now it was thought expedient to vſe their ſeruice againſt theſe rebels, whoſe power and deſperate boldneſſe was ſo farre increaſed, that without a maine armie, guided by ſome generall of great experience, and noble conduct, it would be hard and right dangerous to ſubdue them: wherein violence and force was to be vſed, ſith they had ſhewed themſelues in an extremitie of ſtubbornneſſe, like buls that by baiting are to be tamed, or like ſtifnecked ſtalions which with bit & bridle muſt be managed; as one ſaith:

Aſper equus duris contunditur ora lupatis.

Heerevpon that noble cheefteine and valiant erle of Warwike, latelie before appointed to haue gone againſt the Scots and Frenchmen into Scotland, was called backe, and commanded to take vpon him the conduction of this armie againſt the Norfolke rebels: for ſuch was the opinion then conceiued of that honorable earle, for the high manhood, valiant proweſſe, and great experience in all warlike enterpriſes, ſufficientlie tried, and knowne to reſt in him, that either they might be vanquiſhed and ouercome by him, or by none other.

The earle of Warwike appointed to go againſt the Norfolke rebels.

Capteine Ket and his rebellious armie, hauing ſome aduertiſement by rumors ſpred, of this preparation and comming of an armie againſt them; they were not ſlacke to make themſelues ſtrong and readie to abide all the hazard that fortune of warre might bring. The earle of Warwike then, after that his men and prouiſions were readie, did ſet forward, and came vnto Cambridge, where the lord marqueſſe of Northampton and other met his lordſhip. Heere alſo diuerſe citizens of Norwich came to him, and falling downe vpon their knees before him, beſought him to be good lord vnto them; and withall declared their miſerable ſtate, great greefe and ſorrow, which they had conceiued for the wretched deſtruction of their countrie: beſeeching him to haue pitie vpon them. And if in ſuch extremitie of things as had happened vnto their citie, they had through feare or ignorance committed anie thing contrarie to their dutifull allegiance, that it might pleaſe his honor to pardon them their offenſes in ſuch behalfe, ſith if anie thing were amiſſe on their parts, the ſame came to paſſe ſore againſt their wils, and to their extreame greefe and ſorrow.

The earle of warwike commeth to Cambridge.

The earle of Warwike told them, that he knew indeed in what danger they had beene among thoſe vnrulie ribalds; and as for anie offenſe which they had committed, he knew not: for in leauing their citie ſith matters were growne to ſuch extremitie, they were to be borne with, but in one thing they had ouerſhot themſelues: for that in the beginning they had not ſought to repreſſe thoſe tumults, ſith if they had put themſelues in defenſe of their countrie, to reſiſt the rebels at the firſt, ſuch miſchiefs as were now growne, might eaſilie haue beene auoided. But neuertheleſſe, vpon this their humble ſubmiſſion, he granted them all the kings mercifull pardon, and commanding them to prouide themſelues of armour and weapon, appointed them to march foorth with the armie, wearing certeine laces or ribons about their necks for a difference, that they might be knowne from others. There were in this armie vnder the earle of Warwike diuerſe men of honor and great worſhip, as lords, knights, eſquiers, and gentlemen in great numbers. Firſt the lord marqueſſe of Northampton, and ſundrie of them that had béene with him before, deſirous to be reuenged of his late repulſe, the lords Willoughbie, Powes and Braie, Ambroſe Dudleie, ſonne to the ſaid earle, and at this preſent worthilie adorned with the title (which his father then bare) of earle of Warwike, and his brother lord Robert Dudleie now erle of Leiceſter; alſo Henrie Willoughbie eſquier, ſir Thomas Creſham, ſir Marmaduke conſtable, William Deuereux ſonne to the lord Ferrers of Chartleie, ſir Edmund Kneuet, ſir Thomas Palmer, ſir Andrew Flammocke, and diuerſe other knights, eſquiers, and gentlemen: all which plaid their parts as time and occaſion was miniſtred vnto them to giue triall of their manhood.

who ſerued vnder the erle of warwike.

The earle of Warwike, and ſuch as were come with him to Cambridge, marched directlie from thence towards Norwich, and came vnto Wimondham the two and twentith of Auguſt, where and by the waie the moſt part of all the gentlemen of Norffolke that were at libertie, came vnto him. The next daie betimes he ſhewed himſelfe vpon the plaine, betwixt the citie of Norwich and Eiton wood, and lodged that night at Intwood, an houſe belonging to ſir Thomas Creſham knight, a two miles diſtant from Norwich. Héere they reſted that daie and night following, not once putting off their armour, but remaining ſtill in a readineſſe, if the enimies ſhould haue made anie ſudden inuaſion againſt them. The earle of Warwike in the meane time ſent the afore remembred king of armes Norreie, to ſummon the citie, either to open the gates that he might quietlie enter; or elſe to looke for warre at his hands that would then aſſaie to win it by force, and ſuch reward as rebels (that wilfullie withſtand their ſoueraigne) ought to receiue.

Norwich ſummoned.

When Ket vnderſtood that the herald was come to the gates, he appointed the maiors deputie Auguſtine Steward, and Robert Rug, two of the chéefeſt citizens, to go to him and to know his errand. They paſſing foorth at a poſterne, and hearing his meſſage, made anſwer, that they were the miſerableſt men that were then liuing, as they themſelues beléeued, ſith that hauing ſuffered ſuch calamities as they could not but tremble at in calling to remembrance, they could not now haue libertie to declare the loiall dutie which they bare & ought to beare to the kings highneſſe: ſo that they accompted themſelues moſt vnfortunate, ſith their hap was to liue in that ſeaſon, in which they muſt either ieopard loſſe of life, or the eſtimation of their good name, although they truſted the kings maieſtie would be gratious lord vnto them, ſith they had giuen no conſent vnto ſuch wicked rebellion as was thus raiſed againſt his highneſſe, but with loſſe of goods and perill of life ſo farre as in them laie, had doone what they could to kéepe the citizens in good order and dutifull obedience.

what anſwer was made to the herald by the citizens of Norwich, whom Ket aſſigned therevnto.

One thing more they would humblie deſire of my lord of Warwike, that whereas there was no ſmall number of Kets armie in the citie without armour or weapon, and as it ſhould ſéeme irkeſome and wearie of that which had béene alreadie doone, it might pleaſe him once againe to vouchſafe to offer them the kings pardon, and if he ſhould thus doo, they had great hope that the rebels would gladlie accept it, and ſo the matter might be pacified without more bloudſhed. Norreie returned to the earle of Warwike, and declared what anſwer he had receiued. The earle deſirous of nothing more than to haue the matter thus taken vp, as well for other conſiderations, as for feare leaſt the gentlemen remaining priſoners with the rebels, ſhould be vnmercifullie murthered by their kéepers, if they came to the vttermoſt triall of battell, he reſolued to prooue if it would thus come to paſſe. And héerevpon was Norreie with a trumpet ſent to offer them a generall pardon, who being entered the citie, met about fortie of the rebels on horſſebacke, riding two and two togither verie pleaſant and merrie, and ſo paſſing from S. Stephans gate vnto Biſhops gate, the trumpetter ſounded his trumpet, and with that, a great multitude of the rebels came thronging downe togither from the hill: to whome the horſmen ſpéedilie riding, commanded that they ſhould diuide themſelues, and ſtand in order vpon either ſide the waie. And as Norreie and the trumpetter, with two of the chéefe citizens entred betwixt them, they were receiued with great noiſe and clamour, for euerie of them putting off their hats or caps, cried; God ſaue king Edward, God ſaue king Edward.

Norreie king of armes ſent to offer the rebels their pardon.

Norreie and the two citizens, highlie commending them herein, requeſted them to kéepe their place and order wherein they ſtood for a while: and then Norreie paſſing foorth about two hundred and fiftie paſes, came to the top of the hill, and putting on his coate armour, ſtaied a while (for Ket was not yet come) and at length began to declare vnto them in what maner diuers times ſince firſt they had taken armes in hand, the kings maieſtie by ſundrie perſons, as well heralds as other, had ſought to reduce them from their vnlawfull and rebellious tumults, vnto their former dutie and obedience; and yet neuertheleſſe, they had ſhewed themſelues wilfull and ſtubborne, in refuſing his mercifull pardon fréelie offered vnto them, and deſpiſed the meſſengers which his grace had ſent vnto them to pronounce the ſame. He willed them therefore to call themſelues now at length to remembrance, and to behold the ſtate of the common-wealth, which they ſo often to no purpoſe had ſtill in their mouths, and neuertheleſſe by them miſerablie defaced, & brought in danger of vtter ruine and decaie.

Norreie the herald maketh a long diſcourſe to the rebels, for the reducing of them to good order.

And herewith diſcourſing at large of the horrible, wicked, and heinous murthers, riots, burnings, and other crimes by them committed, he willed them to conſider into what ſea of miſchéefes they had throwne themſelues, and what puniſhment they ought to looke for as due to them for the ſame; ſith as well the wrath of God as the kings armie was hanging ouer their heads, and readie at hand, which they were not able to reſiſt. For his grace had reſolued no longer to ſuffer ſo great and preſumptuous a miſchéefe as this, to be foſtered in the middle of his realme: and therefore had appointed the right honourable earle of Warwike, a man of noble fame and approoued valiancie, to be his generall lieutenant of that his roiall armie, to perſecute them with fire and ſword; and not to leaue off, till he had vtterlie diſperſed and ſcattered that wicked and abhominable aſſemblie. And yet ſuch was the excéeding greatneſſe of the kings bountifull mercie and clemencie, that he that was by him appointed to be a reuenger of their heinous treaſons committed againſt his maieſtie, if they continued in their obſtinate wilfulneſſe, ſhould be alſo the interpretor and miniſter of his gratious and frée pardon, to ſo manie as would accept it. Which vnleſſe they now imbraſed, the ſaid earle had made a ſolemne vow, that they ſhould neuer haue it offered to them againe; but that he would perſecute them till he had puniſhed ſhed the whole multitude according vnto their iuſt deſerts.

How the rebels were affected after the heralds diſcourſe was ended.

Manie that heard him, hauing due conſideration of their miſerable eſtate, were touched with ſome remorſe of conſcience, fearing at length to taſt the reuenge of ſuch horrible crimes as they had béene partakers of with others in committing the ſame. But the morepart finding themſelues highlie offended with his words, began to iangle (as they had doone before vnto other that had béene ſent to offer them pardon) that he was not the kings herald, but ſome one made out by the gentlemen in ſuch a gate coate, patched togither of veſtments and church-ſtuffe, being ſent onelie to deceiue them, in offering them pardon, which would proue nought elſe but halters; and therefore it were well doone, to thruſt an arrow into him, or to hang him vp. Although other ſéemed dutifullie to reuerence him, and diuerſe that had ſerued in Scotland and at Bullongne, remembring that they had ſéene him there and knew him, told and perſuaded their fellowes, that he was the kings herald indéed. Wherevpon they became more mild, and offered him no further iniurie: but yet they could not be perſuaded that this pardon tended to anie other end, but to bring them to deſtruction; and that in ſtéed of pardon, there was prepared for them nought elſe but a barrell full of halters.

The herald is grudged at & miſtruſted of ſome, &c.

Such lewd ſpéech was amongſt them, ſauouring altogither of malicious miſtruſt, and moſt wilfull treaſon. Norreie neuertheleſſe departing from thenſe, accompanied with Ket, came to another place, where he made the like proclamation: for the multitude was ſuch that he could not be heard of them all in one place. Héere, before he had made an end of his tale, there was a vile boie (as ſome write) that turned vp his bare taile to him, with words as vnſéemelie as his geſture was filthie: with which ſpitefull reproch thus ſhewed towards the kings maieſties officer at armes, one (which in companie of ſome other that were come ouer the water to view things) being greatlie offended, with an harquebuſe ſhot ſtroke that vngratious lad through the bodie a little aboue the reins.

Alexander Neuill.

The iuſt reward of a rakehell boie.

Which when ſome of the rebels had ſéene, a dozen of their horſſemen came gallopping out of the wood, crieng; We are betraied fréends, we are betraied, if you looke not about you: do you not ſée how our fellowes are ſlaine with guns before our faces? What may we hope if we diſarme our ſelues, that are thus vſed being armed? This herald goeth about nothing elſe, but to bring vs within danger of ſome ambuſh, that the gentlemen may kill and beate vs all downe at their pleaſure. Héerevpon they all ſhranke awaie, and fled, as they had béene out of their wits: yet did their great capteine Robert Ket accompanie Norreie, meaning (as hath béene ſaid) to haue gone to the earle of Warwike himſelfe, to haue talked with him: but as he was almoſt at the foot of the hill, there came running after him a great multitude of the rebels, crieng to him, and aſking him whither he went; We are readie (ſaid they) to take ſuch part as you doo, be it neuer ſo bad: and if he would go anie further, they would (as they ſaid) ſuerlie follow him.

Ket meant to haue talked with the earle of Warwike.

Norreie then perceiuing ſuch numbers of people following them, deſired Ket to ſtaie them: who returning backe to them, they were incontinentlie appeaſed, and ſo they all returned with him backe to their campe. When the earle of Warwike vnderſtood that they were thus altogither ſet on miſchéefe, and neither with praier, proffer of pardon, threatening of puniſhment, nor other meanes they could be reduced to quietneſſe, he determined to proceed againſt them by force. And héerevpon bringing his armie vnto ſaint Stephans gate, which the rebels ſtopped vp, with the letting downe of the portculice, he commanded thoſe that had charge of the artillerie, to plant the ſame againſt the gate, and with batterie to breake it open.

S. Stephans gate.

As theſe things were in hand, he vnderſtood by Auguſtine Steward the maiors deputie, that there was an other gate on the contrarie ſide of the citie, called the Braſen gate, which the rebels had rammed vp, but yet not ſo, but that it might be eaſilie broken open. Herewith were the pioners called, and commanded to breake open that gate alſo: which being doone, the ſoldiers entered by the ſame into the citie, and ſlue diuerſe of thoſe rebels that ſtood readie to defend and reſiſt their entrie. In the meane time had the gunners alſo broken in ſunder with their ſhot the portculice, and néere hand the one halfe of the other gate, by the which the marques of Northampton, and capteine Drurie, alias Poignard (that being ſent from London met my lord of Warwike by the waie) entered with their bands, and droue backe the rebels with ſlaughter, that were readie there to reſiſt them.

The Braſen gate.

Moreouer, the maiors deputie cauſed Weſtwike gate to be ſet open: at the which the earle of Warwike himſelfe entring with all his armie, and finding in manner no reſiſtance, came to the market place. Here were taken a thréeſcore of the rebels, the which according to the order of martiall law were incontinentlie executed, according to the qualitie of their offenſe, confeſſing (no doubt) in conſcience, that their puniſhment was proportioned to their treſpaſſe, and that in dieng the death (were the ſame neuer ſo extreame & dreedfull) they had but their deſert; and therefore might well ſaie with the poet:

Supplicia & ſcelerum pœnas expendimus omnes.

Virgil.

Shortlie after, the carriages belonging to the armie were brought into the citie by the ſame gate, and paſſing through the citie, by negligence & want of order giuen to them that attended on the ſame cariage, they kept on forward till they were got out at Biſhops gate towards Mouſehold. Whereof the rebels being aduiſed, they came downe, & ſetting vpon the carters, and other that attended on the cariages, put them to flight, and droue awaie the carts laden with artillerie, powder, and other munition, bringing the ſame into their campe, & greatlie reioiſing thereof, bicauſe they had no great ſtore of ſuch things among them: but yet capteine Drurie with his band comming in good time to the reſcue, recouered ſome of the carts from the enimies, not without ſome ſlaughter on either ſide. Moreouer, the enimies as yet being not fullie driuen out of the citie, placed themſelues in croſſe ſtréets, & were readie to aſſaile the ſoldiers as they ſaw their aduantage, part of them ſtanding at S. Michaels, part at S. Stephans, and part at S. Peters, and ſome of them alſo ſtood in Wimers ſtréet.

Here they aſſailing ſuch as vnaduiſedlie were entered within their danger, they ſlue diuerſe, and among other thrée or foure gentlemen, before they could be ſuccoured from anie part. The erle of Warwike aduertiſed hereof, paſſed forth with all his forces to remoue the enimie, and comming to S. Andrew in Iohns ſtréet, was receiued with a ſharpe ſtorme of arrowes: but capteine Drurie his harquebuſiers galled them ſo with their ſhot, that they were glad to giue place, and ſo fled amaine. There were ſlaine a hundred and thirtie, and diuerſe of them ſhrinking aſide into churchyards and other places vnder the walles, were taken and executed. All the reſt got them vp to their campe at Mouſehold, and ſo the citie was rid of them for that time. Then did the erle of Warwike take order for the ſafe keeping of the citie, appointing watch and ward to be kept on the walles, and in euerie ſtreet. Alſo that all the gates ſhould be rammed vp, except one or two that ſtood towards the enimies, at the which were planted certeine peeces of the great artillerie.

But the rebels vnderſtanding that the earle of Warwike wanted powder and other things apperteining to the vſe of the great ordinance, and withall perceiuing that the Welſhmen which were appointed to the gard of the ſaid great peeces of artillerie were no great number, and therefore not able to reſiſt anie great force that ſhould come againſt them, they came downe the hill vpon the ſudden as it were wholie togither in moſt outragious maner. And withall one Miles that was a verie perfect gunner, and maruellous ſkilfull in the feat of ſhooting of great artillerie, and at that time remaining among the rebels, ſhot off a peece; and ſlue one of the kings principall gunners, that was attending vpon thoſe peeces of artillerie, which ſtood thus before the gate. Whom when the rebels perceiued thus to be ſlaine, they made forward with more courage, and gaue ſuch a deſperate onſet vpon them that garded the ſaid artillerie, that their ſmall number, being not able to withſtand their aduerſaries great and huge multitude preſſing in ſuch furious rage vpon them, that they were conſtreined to flee backe, and to leaue the artillerie for a preie vnto the enimies, who ſeizing vpon the ſame, conueied them awaie with certeine carts laden with all manner of munition for wars vp to their campe: a matter (as was thought) of no ſmall importance, ſith the enimies thereby were furniſhed now with ſuch things, whereof before they ſtood moſt in need, and now hauing ſtore thereof, they ſpared not liberallie to beſtow it againſt the citie, beating downe not onlie the higheſt top of Biſhops gate, but alſo a great part of the wals on that ſide.

The rebels take certeine peeces of artillerie from the earle of Warwike.

Capteine Drurie.

And here trulie the good ſeruice of capteine Drurie is not to be forgotten, who now as earſt being readie to reuenge this iniurie, following vpon the enimies, put them to flight, and recouered much of that which they had taken from the earls ſouldiers. The earle of Warwike after this cut off the entries at the gates, and rampired them vp, placed at the bridges and turnings of the waies and ſtreets diuers bands of ſoldiers to keepe the paſſages, brake downe the White friers bridge, and at Biſhops gate he appointed the lord Willoughbie with a great number of ſoldiers to defend that part, & in this ſort he made prouiſion to defend the citie from the rebels, if they ſhould attempt to make anie ſurpriſe vpon the ſudden.

The next daie yet they paſſing ouer the riuer, ſet fire on certeine houſes at Conneſſorth, burning the more part of all the houſes of two pariſhes: and ſo great was the rage of the fire, that catching hold vpon an houſe wherein the merchants of Norwich vſe to laie vp ſuch wares and merchandize as they conueie to their citie from Yermouth, the ſame houſe with great ſtore of wheat and other riches was miſerablie conſumed and defaced. Thus whileſt euerie thing ſeemed to chance and fall out in fauour of the rebels, there were ſome in the earle of Warwiks armie, that deſpairing of the whole ſucceſſe of their iournie, came to the earle of Warwike, and began to perſuade with him, that ſith the citie was large, and their companies ſmall (for in deed the whole appointed numbers as yet were not come, neither of ſtrangers nor Engliſhmen) it was vnpoſſible to defend it againſt ſuch an huge multitude as were aſſembled togither in Kets campe, and therefore beſought him to regard his owne ſafetie, to leaue the citie, and not to hazard all vpon ſuch an vncerteine maine chance.

Councell giuen to the erle of warwike to abandon the citie.

The erles anſwere.

The earle of Warwike as he was of a noble and inuincible courage, valiant, hardie, and not able to abide anie ſpot of reproch, whereby to loſe the leaſt peece of honour that might be, made this anſwer: Whie (ſaith he) and doo your harts faile you ſo ſoone? Or are you ſo mad withall, to thinke that ſo long as anie life reſteth in me, that I will conſent to ſuch diſhonour? Should I leaue the citie, heaping vp to my ſelfe and likewiſe to you ſuch ſhame and reproofe as worthilie might be reputed an infamie to vs for euer? I will rather ſuffer whatſoeuer either fire or ſword can worke againſt me. Theſe words being vttered with ſuch a courage as was maruellous to conſider, he drew out his ſword. Which other of the honorable and worſhipfull that were then preſent likewiſe did, whome he commanded that each one ſhould kiſſe others ſword, according to an ancient cuſtome vſed amongſt men of war in time of great danger: and herewith they made a ſolemne vow, binding it with a ſolemne oth, that they ſhould not depart from thence, till they had either vanquiſhed the enimies, or loſt their liues in manfull fight for defenſe of the kings honour.

Whileſt theſe things were in dooing, the rebels brake into the citie on that ſide, where was no ſuſpicion of their entring at all; but being come almoſt to the bridges, they were incountered by the ſoldiers, beaten backe, and chaſed out by the ſame waie they came. The next daie being the ſix and twentith of Auguſt, there came to the earle 1400 lancequenets. The rebels notwithſtanding that ſuch reinforcement of the earles power might haue ſomewhat diſcouraged them, yet truſting altogither to certeine vaine propheſies, which they had among them, and ſet out in verſes by ſuch wiſards as were there with them in the campe, they had conceiued ſuch a vaine hope of proſperous ſucceſſe in their buſineſſe, that they little eſteemed anie power that might come againſt them. Among other of thoſe ſame verſes, theſe were two:

Lancequenets come to the earle of Warwike.

The rebels truſt in vaine propheſies.

The countrie gnuffes, Hob, Dick, and Hick, with clubs and clowted ſhoone,
Shall fill vp Duſsin dale with bloud of ſlaughtered bodies ſoone.

The rebels remoue.

Upon hope therefore of this and other vaine propheſies, the rebels through the diuels procurement, that had nouriſhed and pricked them forward all this while in their wicked proceedings, determined to remoue thither, to the end that they might with more ſpeed make an end of the matter, before they ſhould be driuen to diſperſe themſelues by famine. For the earle of Warwike had taken order to haue the paſſages ſtopped, in ſuch wiſe as no vittels could eaſilie be conueied to their campe, the want whereof began alreadie to pinch them. Hereupon ſetting fire on their cabins, which they had raiſed and built here and there of timber and buſhes (the ſmoke whereof couered all the grounds about them) they came downe with their enſignes into the vallie called Duſſin dale, where with all ſpeed that might be they intrenched themſelues about, and raiſing a rampire of a good height, ſet ſtakes alſo round about them, to keepe off the horſſemen.

The earle of Warwike goeth foorth to giue the enimies battell.

The earle of Warwike perceiuing their doings, the next daie being the ſeuen and twentith of Auguſt with all his horſſemen, and the Almans with capteine Druries band, iſſued foorth of the citie, marching ſtreight towards the enimies. Yet before he approched in ſight of them, he ſent ſir Edmund Kneuet & ſir Thomas Palmer knights, with others, to vnderſtand of them, whether now at length they would ſubmit themſelues, & receiue the kings pardon; which if they would doo, he offred to grant it freelie to all the whole multitude, one or two of them onelie excepted:

Pardon offred.

ted: but they with generall voices refuſing it, the earle fell in hand to incourage his people vnto the battell, and hauing appointed as well the horſſemen as footmen in what order they ſhould giue the charge, they paſſed forward in approching the enimies. The rebels beholding them thus to come forward, put themſelues in order of battell, in ſuch manner, that all the gentlemen which had beene taken priſoners, and were kept in irons for ſtarting awaie, were placed in the fore ranke of their battell, coupled two and two togither, to the end they might be killed by their owne friends that came to ſeeke their deliuerance: but yet as God would haue it, the moſt part of them were ſaued. Miles the maiſter gunner among the rebels, leuieng a peece of ordinance, ſhot it off, and ſtroke him that caried the kings ſtandard in the thigh, and the horſſe through the ſhoulder.

The earle of Warwike and others ſore grieued therewith, cauſed a whole volie of artillerie to be ſhot off at the rebels: and herewith capteine Drurie with his owne band, & the Almans or lanceknights, whether ye liſt to call them, on foot, getting neere to the enimies, hailſed them with their harquebut ſhot ſo ſharplie, and thruſt forward vpon them with their pikes ſo ſtronglie, that they brake them in ſunder. The gentlemen, who (as we haue ſaid) were placed in the fore ranke, found meanes (as good hap was) to ſhrinke aſide, and eſcaped the danger for the more part, although ſome indeed were ſlaine by the Almans, and other that knew not what they were. The light horſſemen of the kings part herewith gaue in amongſt them ſo roundlie, that the rebels not able to abide their valiant charge, were eaſilie put to flight, and with the foremoſt their grand capteine Robert Ket gallopped awaie ſo faſt as his horſſe would beare him. The horſſemen following in chaſe, ſlue them downe on heapes, euer ſtill as they ouertooke them; ſo that the chaſe continuing for the ſpace of three or foure miles, there were ſlaine to the number of three thouſand fiue hundred at the leaſt: beſide a great multitude that were wounded as they fled here and there ech waie foorth, as ſeemed beſt to ſerue their turne for their moſt ſpeedie eſcape out of danger. Yet one part of them that had not beene aſſailed at the firſt onſet, ſeeing ſuch ſlaughter made of their fellowes, kept their ground by their ordinance, and ſhranke not: determining as men deſperatlie bent, not to die vnreuenged, but to fight it out to the laſt man.

The number of the rebels ſlaine.

They were ſo incloſed with their carts, carriages, trenches (which they had caſt) and ſtakes pitched in the ground to keepe off the force of horſſemen, that it would haue beene ſomewhat dangerous to haue aſſailed them within their ſtrength. But ſure they were that now they could not eſcape, ſeeing no ſmall part of their whole numbers were cut off and diſtreſſed, and they inuironed on ech ſide, without hope of ſuccour or releefe of vittels, which in the end muſt needs haue forced them to come foorth of their incloſure to their vndoubted ouerthrow and deſtruction. The earle of Warwike yet pitieng their caſe, and loth that the king ſhould looſe ſo manie ſtout mens bodies as were there amongſt them, which might doo his maieſtie and their countrie good ſeruice, if they could be reclamed from this their deſperat follie vnto due obedience, ſent Norreie vnto them, offering them pardon of life if they would throw downe their weapons and yeeld: if not, he threatened that there ſhould not a man of them eſcape the deſerued puniſhment. Their anſwer was, that if they might be aſſured to haue their liues ſaued, they could be contented to yeeld: but they could haue no truſt that promiſe ſhould be kept with them. For notwithſtanding all ſuch faire offers of pardon, they tooke it that there was nothing meant but a ſubtill practiſe, to bring them into the hands of their aduerſaries the gentlemen, that had prepared a barrell of ropes and halters, with which they purpoſed to truſſe them vp: and therefore they would rather die like men, than to be ſtrangled at the wils and pleaſures of their mortall enimies.

Pardon eſt- ones offered.

The earle of Warwike right ſorie to ſee ſuch deſperat minds among them, ſent to the citie, and cauſed the moſt part of the footmen which he had left there to defend the ſame, to come foorth now in battell arraie, that they might helpe to diſtreſſe thoſe wilfull rebels that thus obſtinatelie refuſed the kings pardon. And hauing brought as well them as the Almans and the horſſemen in order of battell againe, and readie now to ſet vpon the rebels, he eftſoones ſent vnto them to know that if he ſhould come himſelfe and giue his word, that they ſhould haue their pardon, whether they would receiue it or not. Herevnto they anſwered, that they had ſuch confidence in his honor, that if he would ſo doo, they would giue credit thereto, and ſubmit themſelues to the kings mercie. Incontinentlie herevpon he went vnto them, and commanded Norreie to read the kings pardon freelie granted to all that would yeeld. Which being read, euerie man threw downe his weapon, and with one whole and entier voice cried; God ſaue king Edward, God ſaue king Edward. And thus thorough the prudent policie, and fauourable mercie of the erle of Warwike, a great number of thoſe offendors were preſerued from the gates of death, into the which they were readie to enter.

Pardon once againe offered.

They yeeld to the earle of Warwike.

Thus were the Norffolke rebels ſubdued by the high proweſſe, wiſedome, and policie of the valiant earle of Warwike, and other the nobles, gentlemen, & faithfull ſubiects there in the kings armie: but not without loſſe of diuers perſonages of great worſhip, beſide other of the meaner ſort, namelie maſter Henrie Willoughbie eſquier, a man ſo well beloued in his countrie for his liberalitie in houſekeeping, great courteſie, vpright dealing, aſſured ſtedfaſtnes in friendſhip, & modeſt ſtaiedneſſe in behauiour, that the countries where his liuings late lament the loſſe of ſo worthie a gentleman euen to this daie. There died alſo maſter Lucie eſquier, maſter Forſter eſquier, and maſter Throckmorton of Northamptonſhire, gentlemen of no ſmall credit and worſhip in their countries. The battell being thus ended, all the ſpoile gotten in the field was giuen to the ſoldiers, who ſold the moſt part thereof openlie in the market place of Norwich. The next daie the earle of Warwike was aduertiſed that Ket, being crept into a barne, was taken by two ſeruants of one maſter Riches of Swanington, and brought to the houſe of the ſame Riches. Herevpon were twentie horſſemen ſent thither to fetch him, who brought him to Norwich. The ſame daie examinations were taken of them that were the principall beginners and ſetters foorth of this vnhappie rebellion, and diuerſe being found giltie were hanged, and nine of the chiefeſt procurers of all the miſchiefe (Robert Ket and his brother William onelie excepted) were hanged vpon the oke of reformation, Miles the gunner & two of their prophets being three of that number.

Gentlemen ſlaine in this rebellion.

Execution.

Some others of them were drawne, hanged, and quartered, & their heads and quarters ſet vp in publike places for a terror to others. But yet the earle of Warwike ſpared manie, where ſome would gladlie haue perſuaded him, that there might haue beene a great number more executed. But his lordſhip perceiuing them importunate in that vncharitable ſute, told them (as it were in fauour of life of thoſe ſillie wretches, whoſe miſerable caſe he ſeemed to pitie) that meaſure muſt be vſed in all things, & in puniſhing ing of men by death (ſaith he) we ought alwaies to beware that we paſſe not the ſame. I know well that ſuch wicked doings deſerue no ſmall reuenge, and that the offendors are worthie to be moſt ſharplie chaſtiſed. But how farre yet ſhall we go? Shall we not at length ſhew ſome mercie? Is there no place for pardon? What ſhall we then doo? Shall we hold the plough our ſelues; plaie the carters and labour the ground with our owne hands. Theſe and ſuch like words taſting altogither of mercie and compaſſion in that noble earle, did quench the cruell deſire of reuenge in them that were altogither kindled in wrath and wiſhed nothing more than to ſée the whole multitude executed: but now moued with the earles wiſe and mercifull anſwer to their rigorous ſute, they became more mild and mercifull towards the miſerable creatures.

The earle of Warwike ſheweth mercie.

This alſo is not to be forgotten, that when information was giuen againſt ſome of the rebels, for that they had béene buſie fellowes, & great dooers in time of thoſe vprores, ſo as it was thought of ſome, that it ſtood with good reaſon to haue them puniſhed by death, when the earle of Warwike vnderſtood by credible report of Norreie king at armes, that vpon the offer of the kings pardon, they were the firſt that threw downe their weapons, and ſubmitted themſelues to the kings mercie, the earle would not in anie wiſe conſent that they ſhould die, but proteſted frankelie that he would kéepe promiſe with them, and that he would be as good to them as his word: and ſo they had their liues ſaued. The ſame daie was order giuen by the earle that the bodies of them that were ſlaine in the field ſhould be buried. On the morrow being the nine and twentith of Auguſt, the earle of Warwike, with the nobles and gentlemen of the armie, and others in great numbers, both men and women, went to ſaint Peters church, and there gaue praiſes and thanks to God for the victorie obteined. And this doone, he with all the armie departed out of the citie, and returned homewards with high commendation of citizens & others, that acknowledged the ſaid earle to be the defendor of their liues, and recouerer of their wiues, children, houſes, and liuings.

The ſlaine carcaſes buried.

It was afterwards ordeined, that vpon the ſame daie in the which the rebels were thus ſubdued, the citizens yearelie ſhould repaire to their churches, and there to heare ſeruice, and to haue a ſermon abroade, to the which they ſhould come togither, to giue thanks to God for their deliuerance as that daie, and this is obſerued till theſe our times. Robert Ket and his brother William Ket were brought vp to London, where they were committed to the tower, and ſhortlie after arreigned of their treaſon and found guiltie, were brought to the tower againe, where they continued till the nine and twentith of Nouember, on which daie they were deliuered to ſir Edmund Windham high ſhiriffe of Norffolke and Suffolke, to be conueied downe into Norffolke, where Robert Ket was hanged in chains vpon the top of Norwich caſtell: and William Ket his brother on the top of Windmondham ſtéeple, in which towne they had both dwelled, and conſpired with others to go forward with their wicked rebellion.

The two Kets executed.

This William Ket (as was thought) had béene ſure of his pardon, if he had not plaied the traitorous hypocrite: for vpon his ſubmiſſion at the firſt to my lord marqueſſe of Northampton, at his comming downe to ſuppreſſe this rebellion, he was ſent to his brother to perſuade him and the reſt to yéeld, and receiue the kings pardon: but he (like a diſſembling wretch, although he promiſed to my lord to doo what he could in that behalfe) vpon his comming to his brother into the rebels campe, & beholding the great multitude that were there about him, he did not onelie not diſſuade him and them from their traitorous rebellion, but incouraged them to perſiſt and continue in their dooings, declaring what a ſmall number of ſouldiers the marqueſſe brought with him, nothing able to reſiſt ſuch a puiſſance as was there aſſembled. So that if it had not béene thorough the wicked perſuaſion of him, and ſome others at that time, not onelie Robert Ket himſelfe, but alſo all the multitude beſide, would haue ſubmitted themſelues, and receiued the kings pardon, to the preſeruation of manie a good mans life that after died in the quarrell.

William Ket a diſſembling traitor.

But now to returne ſomewhat backe to the dooings in Scotland. In the meane while that ſuch hurls were in hand here in England, ye ſhall vnderſtand that in the beginning of this ſummer, the king by aduiſe of his councell ſent foorth a nauie by ſea towards Scotland, the which arriuing in the Forth, and comming before Lieth, ſaluted the towne with cannon ſhot, & remaining there ten or twelue daies, tooke in the meane time the Ile of Inſketh, leauing therein foure enſignes of Engliſhmen, and one of Italians, with certeine pioners to fortifie the place. But the Frenchmen (as in the Scotiſh hiſtorie yée ſhall find more at large) after the departure of the Engliſh nauie, recouered that Ile againe out of the Engliſhmens poſſeſſion (after they had kept it ſixtéene daies) with the ſlaughter of capteine Cotton their generall, capteine Applebie, & one Iaſper that was capteine of the Italians, beſide others. After the recouering of this Ile, monſieur be Deſſe returned into France, leauing his charge to monſieur de Thermes latelie before there arriued: who after the departure of the ſaid Deſſe, with a campe volant did what he could to ſtop the Engliſhmen within Hadington from vittels. But notwithſtanding the earle of Rutland being lieutenant of the north, did not onlie vittell it, but put the French armie in danger of an ouerthrow, as it was thought muſt néeds haue followed, if they had not with more ſpéed than is vſed in a common march ſlipt awaie, after they perceiued the Engliſh armie ſo neare at their elbowes.

Moreouer, beſide theſe inordinate vprores and inſurrections aboue mentioned, about the latter end of the ſaid moneth of Iulie, in the ſame yeare, which was 1549, an other like ſturre or commotion began at Semer in the northriding of Yorkeſhire, and continued in the eaſtriding of the ſame, and there ended. The principall dooers and raiſers vp whereof, was one William Ombler of Eaſtheſlerton yeoman, and Thomas Dale pariſh clearke of Semer, with one Stéeuenſon of Semer, neighbour to Dale and nephue to Ombler, which Stéeuenſon was a meane or meſſenger betwéene the ſaid Ombler and Dale, being before not acquainted togither, and dwelling ſeuen miles one from the other: who at laſt by the trauell of the ſaid Stéeuenſon, and their owne euill diſpoſitions, inclined to vngratiouſneſſe and miſchiefe, knowing before one the others mind by ſecret conference, were brought to talke togither on ſaint Iames daie, Anno 1549.

M. Fox. In other rebellion & tumult begun in Yorkeſhire.

The chiefe ſtirrers of the rebellion.

The cauſes mouing them to raiſe this rebellion, were theſe. Firſt & principallie their traitorous harts grudging at the kings moſt godlie procéedings, in aduancing and reforming the true honour of God and his religion. An other cauſe alſo was, for truſting to a blind and a fantaſticall propheſie, wherwith they were ſeduced, thinking the ſame propheſie ſhuld ſhortlie come to paſſe, by hearing the rebellions of Norffolke, of Deuonſhire, and other places. The tenour of which propheſie and purpoſe togither of the traitors was, that there ſhould no king reigne in England, the noblemen and gentlemen to be deſtroied, and the realme to be ruled by foure gouernours,

The cauſes mouing the Yorkeſhiremen to rebellion.

A blind propheſie among the northern men.

nours, to be elected and appointed by the commons, holding a parlement in commotion, to begin at the ſouth and north ſeas of England, ſuppoſing that this rebellion in the north, and the other of the Deuonſhire men in the weſt, méeting (as they intended) at one place, to be the meane how to compaſſe this their traitorous diueliſh deuiſe. And therfore laieng their ſtudies togither, how to find out more companie to ioine with them in that deteſtable purpoſe, and to ſet forward the ſturre, this deuiſe they framed: to ſturre in two places, the one diſtant ſeuen miles from the other, and at the firſt ruſh to kill and deſtroie ſuch gentlemen and men of ſubſtance about them, as were fauourers of the kings procéedings, or which would reſiſt them.

The deuiſe of the rebels how to compaſſe their purpoſe.

But firſt of all for the more ſpéedie raiſing of men, they deuiſed to burne beacons, & thereby to bring the people togither, as though it were to defend the ſeacoaſts: and hauing the ignorant people aſſembled, then to powre out their poiſon, firſt beginning with the rudeſt and pooreſt ſort, ſuch as they thought were pricked with pouertie, and were vnwilling to labor, and therefore the more readie to follow the ſpoile of rich mens goods, blowing into their heads that Gods ſeruice was laid aſide, and new inuentions neither good nor godlie put in place, and ſo féeding them with faire promiſes, to reduce into the church againe their old ignorance and idolatrie, thought by that means ſooneſt to allure them to rage and run with them in this commotion. And furthermore, to the intent they would giue the more terror to the gentlemen at the firſt riſing, leaſt they ſhould be reſiſted, they deuiſed that ſome ſhould be murthered in churches, ſome in their houſes, ſome in ſeruing the king in commiſſion, and other as they might be caught, and to picke quarels at them by alteration of ſeruice on the holie daies: and thus was the platforme caſt of their deuiſe, according as afterward by their confeſſion at their examinations was teſtified, and remaineth in true record.

The deuiſe of the rebels that they might be feared.

Thus they being togither agréed, Ombler and Dale, with others, by their ſecret appointment, ſo laboured the matter in the pariſh of Semer, Wintringham, and the townes about, that they were infected with the poiſon of this confederacie, in ſuch ſort that it was eaſie to vnderſtand wherevnto they would incline, if a commotion were begun, the accompliſhment whereof did ſhortlie follow. For although by the words of one drunken fellow of that conſpiracie named Caluerd, at the alehouſe in Wintringham, ſome ſuſpicion of that rebellion began to be ſmelled before by the lord preſident and gentlemen of thoſe parties, and ſo preuented in that place where the rebels thought to begin: yet they gaue not ouer ſo, but drew to another place at Semer by the ſeacoaſt, and there by night rode to the beacon at Staxton, and ſet it on fire, and ſo gathering togither a rude rout of raſcals out of the townes neare about, being on a ſturre, Ombler, Thomas Dale, Barton, and Robert Dale, haſted forthwith with the rebels to maiſter Whites houſe to take him: who notwithſtanding being on horſſebacke, minding to haue eſcaped their hands, Dale, Ombler, and the reſt of the rebels tooke him, and Clopton his wiues brother, one Sauage a merchant of Yorke, and one Berrie ſeruant to ſir Walter Mildmaie. Which foure without cauſe or quarell, ſauing to fulfill their ſeditious propheſie in ſome part, and to giue a terror to other gentlemen, they cruellie murthered, after they had caried them one mile from Semer towards the Wold, and there after they had ſtripped them of their clothes & purſes, left them naked behind them in the plaine fields for crowes to féed on: vntill Whites wife and Sauages wife, then at Semer, cauſed them to bée buried.

The rebels increaſe their number & rebellious band.

Long it were and tedious to recite what reuell theſe rebels kept in their raging madneſſe, who ranging about the countrie from towne to towne, to inlarge their vngratious and rebellious band, taking thoſe with force which were not willing to go, & leauing in no towne where they came anie man aboue the age of ſixtéene yeares, ſo increaſed this number, that in ſhort time they had gathered thrée thouſand to fauour their wicked attempts, and had like to haue gathered more, had not the Lords goodneſſe through prudent circumſpection of ſome interrupted the courſe of their furious beginning. For firſt came the kings gratious and frée pardon, diſcharging & pardoning all them and the reſt of the rebels, of all treaſons, murthers, felonies, & other offenſes doone to his maieſtie before the one & twentith of Auguſt, 1549. Which pardon although Ombler contemptuouſlie reading, perſiſted ſtill in his wilfull obſtinacie, diſſuaded alſo the reſt from the humble accepting of the kings ſo louing & liberall pardon: yet notwithſtanding with ſome it did good, who of likelihood ſubmitted themſelues, aſſuredlie belieuing if they perſeuered in their enterpriſe, there was no way with them but one, namelie deſerued death, wherewith there was no diſpenſing after the contempt of the princes pardon and refuſall of his mercie; ſo that in this heauie caſe they might verie well complaine and ſaie:

The kings pardon offred, receiued, refuſed.

Funditus occidimus, nec habet fortuna regreſſum. Virgil.

To make ſhort, it was not long after this, but Ombler as he was riding from towne to towne, twelue miles from Hummanbie, to charge all the coneſtables and inhabitans where he came, in the kings name to reſort to Hummanbie: by the waie he was eſpied, and by the circumſpect diligence of Iohn Word the yoonger, Iames Aſlabeie, Raſe Twinge, and Thomas Coneſtable gentlemen, hée was had in chaſe, and at laſt by them apprehended, and brought in the night in ſure cuſtodie vnto the citie of Yorke, to anſwer vnto his demerits. After whome within ſhort time, Thomas Dale, Henrie Barton, the firſt chiefteins and ringleaders of the former commotion, with Iohn Dale, Robert Wright, William Pecocke, Weatherell, and Edmund Buttrie, buſie ſtirrers in this ſedition, as they trauelled from place to place, to draw people to their faction, were likewiſe apprehended, committed to ward, lawfullie conuicted, and laſtlie executed at Yorke the one and twentith of September, in the yere of our Lord 1549. Ex actis iudicij publici a regiſtro exceptis & notatis.

Whileſt theſe wicked commotions and tumults through the rage of the vndiſcréet commons were thus raiſed in ſundrie parts of the realme, to the great hinderance of the common-wealth, loſſe and danger of euerie good and true ſubiect, ſundrie wholſome and godlie exhortations were publiſhed, to aduertiſe them of their dutie, and to laie before them their heinous offenſes; with the ſequele of the miſchiefs that neceſſarilie followed thereof, the which if they ſhould conſider togither, with the puniſhment that hanged ouer their heads, they might eaſilie be brought to repent their lewd begun enterpriſes, and ſubmit themſelues to the kings mercie. Among other of thoſe admonitions, one was penned and ſet forth by ſir Iohn Chéeke, which I haue thought good here to inſert, as a neceſſarie diſcourſe for euerie good Engliſh ſubiect. Wherein, to a reader of iudgement and capacitie, ſuch learning and wiſedome, with a true loiall ſubiects heart bewraieth it ſelfe to haue béene ſetled in that gentleman; as the verie reading of this treatiſe is able to turne a rebellious mind to méekeneſſe: if reaſon be not altogither led alwaie captiue by luſt.

The true ſubiect to the rebell.

AMong ſo manie and notable benefits, wherewith God hath alreadie and plentifullie indued vs, there is nothing more beneficiall, than that we haue by his grace kept vs quiet from rebellion at this time. For we ſee ſuch miſeries hang ouer the whole ſtate of the common-wealth, through the great miſorder of your ſedition, that it maketh vs much to reioiſe, that we haue beene neither partners of your doings, nor conſpirers of your counſels. For euen as the Lacedemonians for the auoiding of drunkenneſſe did cauſe their ſons to behold their ſeruants when they were drunke, that by beholding their beaſtlineſſe, they might auoid the like vice: euen ſo hath God like a mercifull father ſtaied vs from your wickedneſſe, that by beholding the filth of your fault, we might iuſtlie for offenſe abhorre you like rebels, whome elſe by nature we loue like Engliſhmen. And ſo for our ſelues, we haue great cauſe to thanke God, by whoſe religion and holie word dailie taught vs, we learne not onelie to feare him trulie, but alſo to obeie our king faithfullie, and to ſerue in our owne vocation like ſubiects honeſtlie. And as for you, we haue ſurelie iuſt cauſe to lament you as brethren, and yet iuſter cauſe to riſe againſt you as enimies, and moſt iuſt cauſe to ouerthrow you as rebels.

What the Lacedemonians did to make their ſons deteſt drunkenneſſe.

For what hurt could be doone either to vs priuatlie, or to the whole common-wealth generallie, that is now with miſchiefe ſo brought in by you, that euen as we ſee now the flame of your rage, ſo ſhall we neceſſarilie be conſumed hereafter with the miſerie of the ſame. Wherefore conſider your ſelues with ſome light of vnderſtanding, and marke this greeuous and horrible fault, which ye haue thus vilelie committed, how heinous it muſt needs appeare to you, if ye will reaſonablie conſider that which for my duties ſake, and my whole countries cauſe, I will at this preſent declare vnto you. Ye which be bound by Gods word not to obeie for feare like men-pleaſers, but for conſcience ſake like chriſtians, haue contrarie to Gods holie will, whoſe offenſe is euerlaſting death, and contrarie to the godlie order of quietneſſe, ſet out to vs in the kings maieſties lawes, the breach whereof is not vnknowne to you, taken in hand vncalled of God, vnſent by men, vnfit by reaſon, to caſt awaie your bounden duties of obedience, and to put on you againſt the magiſtrats, Gods office committed to the magiſtrats, for the reformation of your pretenſed iniuries. In the which dooing ye haue firſt faulted grieuouſlie againſt God, next offended vnnaturallie our ſoueraigne lord, thirdlie troubled miſerablie the whole common-wealth, vndoone cruellie manie an honeſt man, and brought in an vtter miſerie both to vs the kings ſubiects, and to your ſelues being falſe rebels. And yet ye pretend that partlie for Gods cauſe, and partlie for the common-wealths ſake, ye doo ariſe, when as your ſelues cannot denie; but ye that ſeeke in word Gods cauſe, doo breake in deed Gods commandements; and ye that ſeeke the common-wealth, haue deſtroied the common-wealth: and ſo ye marre that ye would make, & breake that ye would amend, becauſe ye neither ſeeke anie thing rightlie, nor would amend anie thing orderlie.

Rebellion a verie greeuous and horrible offenſe againſt God, the prince, and the ſtate.

He that faulteth, faulteth againſt Gods ordinance, who hath forbidden all faults, and therefore ought againe to be puniſhed by Gods ordinance, who is the reformer of faults. For he ſaith, Leaue the puniſhment to me, and I will reuenge them. But the magiſtrate is the ordinance of God, appointed by him with the ſword of puniſhment to looke ſtreightlie to all euill dooers. And therefore that that is doone by the magiſtrate, is doone by the ordinance of God, whome the ſcripture oftentimes dooth call God, becauſe he hath the execution of Gods office. How then doo you take in hand to reforme? Be ye kings? By what authoritie? Or by what occaſion? Be ye the kings officers? By what commiſſion? Be ye called of God? By what tokens declare ye that? Gods word teacheth vs, that no man ſhould take in hand anie office, but he that is called of God like Aaron. What Moſes I praie you called you? What Gods miniſter bad you riſe?

Ye riſe for religion. What religion taught you that? If ye were offered perſecution for religion, ye ought to flie: ſo Chriſt teacheth you; and yet you intend to fight. If ye would ſtand in the truth, ye ought to ſuffer like martyrs, and you would ſleie like tyrants. Thus for religion you keepe no religion, and neither will follow the counſell of Chriſt, nor the conſtancie of martyrs. Why riſe ye for religion? Haue ye anie thing contrarie to Gods booke? Yea, haue ye not all things agreeable to Gods word? But the new is different from the old, and therefore ye will haue the old. If ye meaſure the old by truth, ye haue the oldeſt; if ye meaſure the old by fanſie, then it is hard: becauſe mens fanſies change, to giue that is old. Ye will haue the old ſtill. Will ye haue anie older than that as Chriſt left, & his apoſtles taught, & the firſt church after Chriſt did vſe? Ye will haue that the chanons doo eſtabliſh. Why that is a great deale yoonger than that ye haue, of later time, and newlier inuented. Yet that is it that ye deſire. Why then ye deſire not the oldeſt. And doo you preferre the biſhops of Rome afore Chriſt, mens inuentions afore Gods law, the newer ſort of worſhip before the older? Ye ſeeke no religion, ye be deceiued, ye ſeeke traditions. They that teach you, blind you, that ſo inſtruct you, deceiue you. If ye ſeeke what the old doctors ſaie, yet looke what Chriſt the oldeſt of all ſaith. For he ſaith; Before Abraham was made I am. If ye ſeeke the trueſt way, he is the verie truth; if ye ſeeke the readieſt waie, he is the verie waie; if ye ſeeke euerlaſting life, he is the verie life. What religion would ye haue other now, than his religion?

You would haue the bibles in againe. It is no maruell, your blind guides would leade you blind ſtill. Why, be ye howlets and backs, that ye cannot looke on the light? Chriſt ſaith to euerie one, Search ye the ſcriptures, for they beare witneſſe of Chriſt. You ſaie, Pull in the ſcriptures, for we will haue no knowledge of Chriſt. The apoſtles of Chriſt will vs to be ſo readie, that we maie be able to giue euerie man an account of our faith. Ye will vs not once to read the ſcriptures, for feare of knowing of our faith. Saint Paul praieth that euerie man may increaſe in knowledge: ye deſire that our knowledge might decaie againe. A true religion ye ſeeke belike, and worthie to be ſought for. For without the ſword indeed nothing can helpe it, neither Chriſt, nor truth, nor age can mainteine it. But why ſhould ye not like that which Gods word eſtabliſheth, the primitiue church hath authoriſed, the greateſt learned men of this realme haue drawen, the whole conſent of the parlement hath confirmed, the kings maieſtie hath ſet forth? Is it not trulie ſet out? Can ye deuiſe anie truer than Chriſtes apoſtles vſed? Ye thinke it is not learnedlie doone. Dare ye commons take vpon you more learning, than the choſen biſhops and clearks of this realme haue? Thinke ye follie in it? Ye were wont to iudge your parlement wiſeſt, & now will ye ſuddenlie excell them in wiſdome?

dome? Or can ye thinke it lacketh authoritie, which the king, the parlement, the learned, the wiſe haue iuſtlie approued? Learne, learne, to know this one point of religion, that God will be worſhipped as he hath preſcribed, and not as we haue deuiſed; and that his will is wholie in his ſcriptures, which be full of Gods ſpirit, and profitable to teach the truth, to reproue lies, to amend faults, to bring one vp in righteouſneſſe, that he that is a Gods man may be perfect & readie to all good works. What can be more required to ſerue God withall? And thus much for religion, rebels.

A principall point of religion for rebels ſpeciallie to learne.

The other rable of Norffolke rebelles, ye pretend a common-wealth. How amend ye it? By killing of gentlemen, by ſpoiling of gentlemen, by impriſoning of gentlemen? A maruellous tanned common-wealth. Whie ſhould ye thus hate them? For their riches or for their rule? Rule they neuer tooke ſo much in hand as ye doo now. They neuer reſiſted the king, neuer withſtood his councell, be faithfull at this daie when ye be faithleſſe, not onelie to the king, whoſe ſubiects ye be, but alſo to your lords whoſe tenants ye be. Is this your true duetie, in ſome of homage, in moſt of fealtie, in all of allegiance; to leaue your duties, go backe from your promiſes, fall from your faith, and contrarie to law and truth to make vnlawfull aſſemblies, vngodlie companies, wicked and deteſtable campes, to diſobeie your betters, and to obeie your tanners, to change your obedience from a king to a Ket, to ſubmit your ſelues to traitors, and breake your faith to your true king and lords? They rule but by law, if otherwiſe, the law, the councell, the king taketh awaie their rule. Ye haue orderlie ſought no redreſſe, but ye haue in time found it. In countries ſome muſt rule, ſome muſt obeie, euerie man maie not beare like ſtroke: for euerie man is not like wiſe. And they that haue ſéene moſt, and be beſt able to beare it, and of iuſt dealing beſide, be moſt fit to rule. It is an other matter to vnderſtand a mans owne gréefe, and to know the common-wealths ſore; and therfore not they that know their owne caſe, as euerie man doth, but they that vnderſtand the common-welths ſtate, ought to haue in countries the preferment of ruling. If ye felt the paine that is ioined with gouernance, as ye ſée and like the honor, ye would not hurt others to rule them, but rather take great paine to be ruled of them. If ye had rule of the kings maieſtie committed vnto you, it were well doone ye had ruled the gentlemen: but now ye haue it not, and cannot beare their rule, it is to thinke the kings maieſtie fooliſh and vniuſt, that hath giuen certeine rule to them. And ſéeing by the ſcripture, ye ought not to ſpeake euill of anie magiſtrate of the people, why doo ye not onelie ſpeake euill of them whome the kings maieſtie hath put in office, but alſo iudge euill of the king himſelfe, and thus ſeditiouſlie in field ſtand with your ſwords drawen againſt him?

The rebelles of Norffolke pretended the common-wealth the cauſe of their riſing.

Whie all muſt not looke to beare like rule.

Magiſtrates are to be hono- both in ech and ers.

If riches offend you, becauſe yée wiſh the like, then thinke that to be no common-wealth, but enuie to the common-wealth. Enuie it is to appaire an other mans eſtate, without the amendment of your owne. And to haue no gentlemen, bicauſe ye be none your ſelues, is to bring downe an eſtate, and to mend none. Would ye haue all alike rich? That is the ouerthrow of labour, and vtter decay of worke in this realme. For who will labour more, if when he hath gotten more, the idle ſhall by luſt without right take what him luſt from him, vnder pretenſe of equalitie with him. This is the bringing in of idleneſſe, which deſtroieth the common-wealth; and not the amendment of labour, that mainteineth the common-wealth. If there ſhould be ſuch equalitie, then ye take awaie all hope from yours to come to anie better eſtate than you now leaue them. And as manie meane mens children doo come honeſtlie vp, and are great ſuccour to all their ſtocke: ſo ſhould none be hereafter holpen by you, but bicauſe ye ſéeke equalitie, whereby all can not be rich. Ye would that (belike) whereby euerie man ſhould be poore; and thinke beſide that riches and inheritance be Gods prouidence, and giuen to whome of his wiſdome he thinketh good: to the honeſt for the increaſe of their godlineſſe, to the wicked for the heaping vp of their damnation, to the ſimple for a recompenſe of other lackes, to the wiſe for the greater ſetting out of Gods goodneſſe. Whie will your wiſdome now ſtop Gods wiſdome, and prouide by your lawes, that God ſhall not inrich them, whome he hath by prouidence appointed as him liketh? God hath made the poore, & hath made them to be poore that he might ſhew his might, and ſet them aloft when he liſteth for ſuch cauſe as to him ſéemeth, & plucke downe the rich to this ſtate of pouertie by his power, as he diſpoſeth to order them. Whie doo not we then being poore beare it wiſelie, rather than by luſt ſéeke riches vniuſtlie, and ſhew our ſelues content with Gods ordinance, which we muſt either willinglie obeie, and then we be wiſe, or elſe we muſt vnprofitablie ſtriue withall, and then we be mad?

To haue all degrées alike, & no inequalitie how inconuenient.

Riches and inheritance from whom, to whom, and to what end giuen.

But what meane yée by this equalitie in the common-wealth? If one be wiſer than an other, will ye baniſh him, becauſe yée intend an equalitie of all things? If one be ſtronger than another, will yée ſlaie him, bicauſe ye ſéeke an equalitie of all things? If one be well fauourder than an other, will yée puniſh him, becauſe yée looke for an equalitie of all things? If one haue better vtterance than another, will ye pull out his toong to ſaue your equalitie? And if one be richer than an other, will ye ſpoile him to mainteine an equalitie? If one be elder than an other, will ye kill him for this equalities ſake? How iniurious are ye to God himſelfe, who intendeth to beſtow his gifts as he himſelfe liſteth: and ye ſéeke by wicked inſurrections to make him giue them commonlie alike to all men as your vaine fanſie liketh? Whie would ye haue an equalitie in riches & in other gifts of God? There is no meane ſought. Either by ambition ye ſéeke lordlineſſe much vnfit for you; or by couetouſneſſe ye be vnſatiable, a thing likelie inough in ye; or elſe by follie ye be not content with your eſtate, a fanſie to be plucked out of you.

The vnconſcionable wiſhing of equalitie how hurtfull.

But if we being wearie of pouertie would ſéeke to inrich our ſelues, we ſhould go a farre other waie to worke than this, and ſo ſhould we rightlie come to our deſire. Dooth not S. Peter teach vs afore God a right waie to honour, to riches, to all neceſſarie and profitable things for vs? He ſaith, Humble your ſelues that God might exalt you, and caſt all your care on him, for he careth for you. He teacheth the waie to all good things at Gods hand, is to be humble, and you exalt your ſelues. Ye ſéeke things after ſuch a ſort, as if the ſeruant ſhould anger his maſter, when he ſéeketh to haue a good turne of him. Ye would haue riches (I thinke) at Gods hand who giueth all riches, and yet ye take the waie cleane contrarie to riches. Know ye not that he that exalteth himſelfe, God will throw him downe? How can ye get it then by thus ſetting out your ſelues? Ye ſhuld ſubmit ye by humilitie one to another, and ye ſet vp your ſelues by arrogancie aboue the magiſtrates. Sée herein how much ye offend God. Remember ye not that if ye come nigh to God, he will come nigh vnto you? If then ye go from God, he will go from you. Dooth not the pſalme ſaie, He is holie with the holie, and with the wicked man he is froward? Euen as he is ordered of men, he will order them againe. If ye would follow his will, and obeie his commandements, ye ſhould eat the fruits of the earth, ſaith the prophet; if not, the ſword ſhall deuour you. Ye might haue eaten the fruits of this ſeaſonable yéere, if ye had not by diſobedience rebelled againſt God. Now not onelie ye can not eat that which your ſelues did firſt ſowe by labour, and now deſtroie by ſedition; but alſo if the kings maieſties ſword came not againſt you, as iuſt policie requireth, yet the iuſt vengeance of God would light among you, as his word promiſeth, and your cruell wickedneſſe deſerueth.

The act of rebellion aggrauated, & prooued moſt wicked and horrible.

For whatſoeuer the cauſes be that haue moued your wild affections herin, as they be vniuſt cauſes, & increaſe your faults much, the thing it ſelfe, the riſing I meane, muſt néeds be wicked and horrible before God, and the vſurping of authoritie, and taking in hand of rule, which is the ſitting in Gods ſeat of iuſtice, and a proud climing vp into Gods high throne, muſt néeds be not onelie curſed newlie by him, but alſo hath béene often puniſhed afore of him. And that which is doone to Gods officer, God accounteth it doone to him. For they deſpiſe not the miniſter, as he ſaith himſelfe, but they deſpiſe him: and that preſumption of chalenging Gods ſeat, doth ſhew you to haue bin Lucifers, and ſheweth vs that God will puniſh you like Lucifers. Wherfore rightlie looke, as ye dulie haue deſerued, either for great vengeance for your abhominable tranſgreſſion, or elſe earneſtlie repent, with vnfeined minds, your wicked doings; and either with example of death be content to dehort other, or elſe by faithfulneſſe of obedience declare how great a ſeruice it is to God, to obeie your magiſtrats faithfullie, and to ſerue in ſubiection trulie.

An exhortation to rebels.

Diſobedience to the prince is a moſt abhominable ſinne, and that we are bound by dutie to obeie.

Well, if ye had not thus grieuouſlie offended God, whome ye ought to worſhip, what can ye reaſonablie thinke it, to be no fault againſt the king, whom ye ought to reuerence? Ye be bound by Gods word to obeie your king, and is it no breach of dutie to withſtand your king? If the ſeruant be bound to obeie his maiſter in the familie, is not the ſubiect bound to ſerue the king in his realme? The child is bound to the priuat father, and be we not all bound to the common-wealths father? If we ought to be ſubiect to the king for Gods cauſe, ought we not then I praie you to be faithfullie ſubiect to the king? If we ought dutifullie to ſhew all obedience to heathen kings, ſhall we not willinglie and trulie be ſubiect to chriſtian kings? If one ought to ſubmit himſelfe by humilitie to another, ought we not all by dutie to be ſubiect to our king? If the members of our naturall bodie all follow the head, ſhall not the members of the politicall bodie all obeie the king? If good maners be content to giue place the lower to the higher, ſhall not religion teach vs alwaie to giue place to the higheſt? If true ſubiects will die gladlie in the kings ſeruice, ſhould not all ſubiects thinke it dutie to obeie the king with iuſt ſeruice. But you haue not onelie diſobeied like ill ſubiects, but alſo taken ſtoutlie rule vpon you like wicked magiſtrates.

Ye haue béene called to obedience by counſell of priuat men, by the aduiſe of the kings maieſties councell, by the kings maieſties frée pardon. But what counſell taketh place, where ſturdineſſe is law and churliſh anſwers be counted wiſdome? Who can perſuade where treaſon is aboue reaſon, and might ruleth right, and it is had for lawfull whatſoeuer is luſtfull, and commotioners are better than commiſſioners, and common wo is named common-wealth? Haue ye not broken his lawes, diſobeied his councell, rebelled againſt him? And what is the common-wealth worth, when the law which is indifferent for all men, ſhall be wilfullie and ſpitefullie broken of head-ſtrong men, that ſéeke againſt lawes to order lawes; that thoſe may take place, not what conſent of wiſe men hath appointed, but what the luſt of rebels hath determined? What vnthriftineſſe is in ill ſeruants, wickednes in vnnaturall children, ſturdineſſe in vnrulie ſubiects, crueltie in fierce enimies, wildnes in beaſtlie minds, pride in diſdainfull harts; that floweth now in you, which haue fled from houſed conſpiracies, to incamped robberies, and are better contented to ſuffer famine, cold, trauell, to glut your luſts, than to liue in quietneſſe to ſaue the common-wealth, and thinke more libertie in wilfulneſſe, than wiſedome in dutifulneſſe, and ſo run headlong not to the miſchiefe of other, but to the deſtruction of your ſelues, and vndoo by follie that ye intend by miſchiefe, neither ſéeing how to remedie that ye iudge faultie, nor willing to ſaue your ſelues from miſerie: which ſtifneckedneſſe cannot doo, but honeſtie of obedience muſt frame.

A notable and rhetoricall clauſe, and to the purpoſe.

The rebels fullie fraught with moſt villanous qualities, &c.

The kings councell of greateſt authoritie, and why; yet are they diſobeied: note.

If authoritie would ſerue vnder a king, the councell haue greateſt authoritie; if wiſedome and grauitie might take place, they be of moſt experience; if knowledge of the common-wealth could helpe, they muſt by daillie conference of matters vnderſtand it beſt: yet neither the authoritie that the kings maieſtie hath giuen them, nor the grauitie which you know to be in them, nor the knowledge which with great trauell they haue gotten, can moue you either to kéepe you in the dutie ye ought to doo, or to auoid the great diſorder wherin ye be. For where diſobedience is thought ſtoutneſſe, and ſullennes is counted manhood, and ſtomaching is courage, and prating is iudged wiſedome, and the eluiſheſt is moſt méet to rule; how can other iuſt authoritie be obeied, or ſad counſell be followed, or good knowledge of matters be heard, or commandements of counſellors be conſidered? And how is the king obeied, whoſe wiſeſt be withſtanded, the diſobedienteſt obeied, the high in authoritie not weied, the vnſkilfulleſt made chiefe capteins, to the nobleſt moſt hurt intended, the braggingeſt braller to be moſt ſafe? And euen as the viler parts of the bodie would contend in knowledge & gouernement with the fiue wits: ſo doo the lower parts of the common-wealth enterpriſe as high a matter, to ſtriue againſt their dutie of obedience to the councell.

The action of rebellion prooued by reaſon to be moſt heinous, intollerable, and diueliſh.

But what talke I of diſobedience ſo quietlie? Haue not ſuch mad rages run in your heads, that forſaking and burſting the quietneſſe of the common peace, ye haue heinouſlie and traitorouſlie incamped your ſelues in field, and there like a bile in a bodie, naie like a ſinke in a towne, haue gathered togither all the naſtie vagabonds and idle loiterers to beare armour againſt him, whome all godlie and good ſubiects will liue and die withall. If it be a fault when two fight togither, and the kings peace broken, and puniſhment to be ſought therefore; can it be but an outragious and a deteſtable miſchiefe, when ſo manie rebels in number, malicious in mind, miſchiefous in enterpriſe, fight not among themſelues, but againſt all the kings true and obedient ſubiects; and ſéeke to prooue whether rebellion may beat downe honeſtie, and wickedneſſe may ouercome truth or no? If it be treaſon to ſpeake heinouſlie of the kings maieſtie, who is not hurt thereby, and the infamie returneth to the ſpeaker againe; what kind of outragious & horrible treaſon is it, to aſſemble in campe an armie againſt him, and ſo not onelie intend an ouerthrow to him, and alſo to his common-wealth; but alſo to caſt him into an infamie, through all outward and ſtrange nations, and perſuade them that he is hated of his people, whome he can not rule; and that they be no better than vilans, which will not with good orders be ruled?

No death cruell enough for rebels and traitors.

A deſperat malecontents behauiour.

What death can be deuiſed cruell enough for thoſe rebels, who with trouble ſeeke death, and can not quench the thirſt of their rebellion, but with the bloud of true ſubiects; and hate the kings mercifull pardon, when they miſerablie haue tranſgreſſed, and in ſuch an outrage of miſchiefe will not by ſtubborneſſe acknowledge themſelues to haue faulted, but intend to broile the common-wealth with the flame of their treaſon, and as much as lieth in them not onelie to annoie themſelues, but to deſtroie all others? He that is miſcontented with things that happen, and bicauſe he cannot beare the miſerie of them, renteth his heare, and teareth his ſkin, & mangleth his face, which eaſeth not his ſorrow, but increaſeth his miſerie; maie he not be iuſtlie called mad and fantaſticall, and worthie whoſe wiſedome ſhould be ſuſpected? And what ſhall we ſaie of them, who being in the common-wealth, feeling a ſore greeuous vnto them, and eaſie to haue beene amended, ſought not the remedie, but haue increaſed the greefe, and like frantike beaſts raging againſt their head, doo teare and deface as much as lieth in them his whole authoritie in gouernement, and violentlie take to themſelues that rule vpon them, which he by policie hath granted vnto other?

Rebels and traitors worſe then brute beaſts.

And who weieng well the heauineſſe of the fault, maie not iuſtlie ſaie and hold them to be worſe herein than any kind of brute beaſts? For we ſee that the ſheepe will obeie the ſhepheard, and the neat be ruled by the neatheard, and the horſſe will know his keeper, and the dog will be in aw of his maiſter, and euerie one of them feed there, and of that, as his keeper and ruler dooth appoint him, & goeth from thence, and that, as he is forbidden by his ruler. And yet we haue not heard of, that anie heard or companie of theſe haue riſen againſt their heardman or gouernour, but be alwaies contented not onelie to obeie them, but alſo to ſuffer them to take profit of them. And we ſee furthermore, that all heards, & all ſorts, be more egre in fierceneſſe againſt all kind of ſtrangers, than they be againſt their owne rulers, & will eaſilier offend him who hath not hurt them, than touch their ruler who ſeeketh profit on them.

The application of the former compariſons implieng obedience.

But ye that ought to be gouerned by your magiſtrates, as the heards by the heardman, and ought to be like ſheepe to your king, who ought to be like a ſheepheard vnto you, euen in the time when your profit was ſought, and better redreſſe was intended, than your vpſtirs and vnquietneſſe could obteine, haue beyond the crueltie of all beaſts fowlie riſen againſt your ruler, and ſhewed your ſelues worthie to be ordered like beaſts, who in kind of obedience will fall from the ſtate of men. A dog ſtoopeth when he is beaten of his maiſter, not for lacke of ſtomach, but for naturall obedience: you being not ſtriken of your head but fauoured, not kept downe but ſuccoured and remedied by law, haue violentlie againſt law not onelie barked like beaſts, but alſo bitten like helhounds. What? Is the miſchiefe of ſedition either not knowne vnto you, or not feared? Haue not examples aforetimes both told the end of rebels, and the wickedneſſe of rebellion it ſelfe? But as for old examples, let them paſſe for a while, as things well to be conſidered. But at this preſent one thing more to be [illegible].

The preſumptuous & arrogant vſurped rule of the rebels noted to the impeachment of princelie prerogatiue.

Looke vpon your ſelues, after ye haue wickedlie ſtept into this horrible kind of treaſon, doo ye not ſee how manie bottomleſſe whirlepooles of miſchiefe yee be guilt withall, and what lothſome kinds of rebellion ye be faine to wade through? Ye haue ſent out in the kings name, againſt the kings will, precepts of all kinds, & without commandement commanded his ſubiects, and vnrulilie haue ruled where yee liſted to command, thinking your owne fanſies the kings commandements, and rebels luſts in things to be right gouernement of things, not looking what ſhould follow by reaſon, but what your ſelues follow by affection. And is it not a dangerous and a cruell kind of treaſon, to giue out precepts to the kings people? There can be no iuſt execution of lawes, reformation of faults, giuing out of commandements, but from the king. For in the king onelie is the right herof, & the authoritie of him deriued by his appointment to his miniſters. Ye hauing no authoritie of the king, but taking it of your ſelues, what thinke ye your ſelues to be? Miniſters ye be none, except ye be the diuels miniſters, for he is the author of ſedition.

The rebels outragious and intollerable demeanor deſcried.

Their diſobedience notorious.

The rebels offend againſt the law of iuſtice & equitie.

The former matter vehementlie vrged.

The kings maieſtie intendeth to mainteine peace, and to oppreſſe warre; ye ſtirre vp vprores of people, hurliburlies of vagabonds, routs of robbers. Is this anie part of the kings miniſterie? If a vagabond would doo what he luſt, and call himſelfe your ſeruant, and execute ſuch offices of truſt, whether yee would or no, as yee haue committed vnto another mans credit, what would euerie one of you ſaie or doo herein? Would ye ſuffer it? Ye wander out of houſes, ye make euerie daie new matters as it pleaſeth you, ye take in hand the execution of thoſe things, God by his word forbidding the ſame, which God hath put the magiſtrates in truſt withall. What can ye ſaie to this? Is it ſufferable thinke ye? If ye told a priuat meſſage in another mans name, can it be but a falſe lie I praie you? And to tell a feined meſſage to the common-wealth, and that from the king, can it be honeſt thinke ye? To command is more than to ſpeake: what is it then to command ſo traitorous a lie? This then which is in word a deceitfull lie, and in deed a traitorous fact, noiſome to the common-wealth, vnhonourable to the king, miſchiefous in you, how can ye otherwiſe iudge of it, but to be an vnheard of and notable diſobedience to the king: and therefore by notable example to be puniſhed, and not with gentleneſſe of pardon to be forgiuen? Ye haue robbed euerie honeſt houſe, and ſpoiled them vniuſtlie, and pitiouſlie wronged poore men being no offendors, to their vtter vndooing, and yet ye thinke ye haue not broken the kings lawes. The kings maieſties law and his commandement is, that euerie man ſhould ſafelie keepe his owne, and vſe it reaſonablie to an honeſt gaine of his liuing: ye violentlie take and carie awaie from men without cauſe, all things whereby they ſhould mainteine, not onelie themſelues, but alſo their familie, & leaue them ſo naked, that they ſhall feele the ſmart of your curſſed enterpriſe, longer than your owne vnnaturall & vngodlie ſtomachs would well vouchſafe. By iuſtice ye ſhould neither hurt nor wrong man, and your pretenſed cauſe of this monſtruous ſturre is to increaſe mens wealth. And yet how manie, and ſaie truth, haue ye decaied and vndoone, by ſpoiling and taking awaie their goods? How ſhould honeſt men liue quietlie in the common-wealth at anie time, if their goods, either gotten by their owne labor, or left to them by their friends, ſhall vnlawfullie and vnorderlie, to the feeding of a ſort of rebels, be ſpoiled and waſted, and vtterlie ſcattered abrode? The thing that ye take is not your right, it is an other mans owne. The maner of taking againſt his will is vnlawfull, & againſt the order of euerie good common-wealth. The cauſe why ye take it is miſchiefous and horrible, to fat your ſedition. Ye that take it be wicked traitors, and common enimies of all good order.

If he that deſireth an other mans goods or cattell, doo fault: what dooth he (thinke you) whoſe deſire [illegible] followeth, and is led to and fro by luſt, as his wicked fanſie void of reaſon dooth guide him? He that vſeth not his owne well and charitablie, hath much to anſwer for: and ſhall they be thought not vniuſt, who not onelie take awaie other mens, but alſo miſuſe and waſt the ſame vngodlie? They that take things priuilie awaie, and ſteale ſecretlie and couertlie other mens goods, be by law iudged worthie death: and ſhall they that without ſhame ſpoile things openlie, and be not affeard by impudencie to profeſſe their ſpoile, be thought either honeſt creatures to God, or faithfull ſubiects to their king, or naturall men to their countrie? If nothing had mooued you but the example of miſcheefe, and the foule practiſe of other mooued by the ſame, ye ſhould yet haue abſteined from ſo licentious and vilanous a ſhew of robberie, conſidering how manie honeſter there be, that being loth their wickedneſſe ſhould be blazed abrode, yet be found out by prouidence, and hanged for deſert. What ſhall we then thinke or ſaie of you? Shall we call you pickers, or hid theeues; naie more than théeues, daie théeues, heard ſtealers, ſhire ſpoilers, and vtter deſtroiers of all kinds of families, both among the poore and alſo among the rich. Let vs yet further ſée. Be there no mo things wherein ye haue broken the kings laws, and ſo vilelie diſobeie? him, flat contrarie to your bounden dutie and allegiance?

The rebels are ſtil charged with their rapines, and violentlie inferred wrongs.

Ye haue not onelie ſpoiled the kings true ſubiects of their goods, but alſo ye haue impriſoned their bodies, which ſhould be at libertie vnder the king, and reſtreined them of their ſeruice, which by dutie they owe the king, and appaired both ſtrength and health, wherewith they liue and ſerue the king. Is there anie honeſt thing more deſired than libertie? Ye haue ſhamefullie ſpoiled them thereof. Is there anie thing more dutifull than to ſerue their lord and maiſter? But as that was deſired of the one part, ſo was it hindered and ſtopped on your part. For neither can the king be ſerued, nor families kept, nor the common-wealth looked vnto, where frédome of libertie is ſtopped, and diligence of ſeruice is hindered; and the helpe of ſtrength and health abated. Mens bodies ought to be frée from all mens bondage and crueltie, and onelie in this realme be ſubiect in publike puniſhment to our publike gouernour, and neither be touched of *headleſſe capteins, nor holden of brainleſſe rebels. For the gouernement of ſo pretious a thing ought to belong vnto the moſt noble ruler, and not iuſtlie to be in euerie mans power, which is iuſtlie euerie liuing mans treaſure. For what goods be ſo deare to euerie man, as his owne bodie is, which is the true veſſell of the mind, to be meaſurablie kept of euerie man for all exerciſes & ſeruices of the mind? If ye may not of your owne authoritie meddle with mens goods, much leſſe you may of your owne authoritie take order with mens bodies.

Libertie deſired aboue all things.

*Fit epithets and terms for head and taile of this rebellion.

For what be goods in compariſon of health, libertie, and ſtrength, which be all ſetled and faſtened in the bodie? They that ſtrike other, doo greatlie offend, and be iuſtlie puniſhable: and ſhall they that cruellie and wrongfullie torment mens bodies with irons and impriſonments, be thought not of others but of themſelues honeſt, and plaine, and true dealing men? What ſhall we ſay by them, who in a priuat buſineſſe will let a man to go his iourneie in the kings high waie? Doo they not (thinke ye) plaine wrong? Then in a common cauſe not onelie to hinder them, but alſo to deale cruellie with them, and ſhut them from dooing their ſeruice to the king, and their dutie to the common-wealth, is it not both diſobedience, crueltie, and miſchiefe thinke ye? What an hinderance is it, to haue a good garment hurt, anie iewell appaired, or anie eſtéemed thing to be decaied? And ſéeing no earthlie thing a man hath is more pretious than his body, to cauſe it to be cruellie tormented with irons, féebled with cold, weakened with ordering: can it be thought anie other thing but wrong to the ſufferer, crueltie in the dooer, & great diſobedience and tranſgreſſion to the king? How then be ye able to defend it? But ſéeing ye ſo vnpitifullie vexe men, caſt them in priſon, lade them with irons, pine them with famine, contrarie to the rule of nature, contrarie to the kings maieſties lawes, contrarie to God holie ordinances, hauing no matter but pretenſed and fained gloſes, ye be not onelie diſobedient to the king like rebels, but withſtanding the law of nature like beaſts, and ſo worthie to die like dogs, except the kings maieſtie, without reſpect of your deſeruing, doo mercifullie grant you of his goodneſſe that which you cannot eſcape by iuſtice.

The offenſe of excluding the kings ſubiects from the benefit of libertie aggrauated.

A pithie concluſion inferred vpon the premiſſes, in forme of ſentence definitiue.

Yet ye being not content with this, as ſmall things enterpriſe great matters, and as though ye could not ſatiſfie your ſelues, if ye ſhould leaue anie miſchiefe vndoone, haue ſought bloud with crueltie, and haue ſlaine of the kings true ſubiects manie, thinking their murder to be your defenſe, when as ye haue increaſed the fault of your vile rebellion, with the horror of bloudſhed, and ſo haue burdened miſchiefe with miſchiefe, whileſt it come to an importable weight of miſchiefe. What could we doo more, in the horribleſt kind of faults, vnto the greateſt tranſgreſſours and offendors of God and men, than to looke ſtrictlie on them by death, and ſo to rid them out of the common-wealth by ſeuere puniſhment, whome ye thought vnworthie to liue among men for their dooings? And thoſe who haue not offended the king, but defended his realme, and by obedience of ſeruice ſought to puniſh the diſobedient, and for ſafegard of euerie man put themſelues vnder dutie of law, thoſe haue ye miſerablie and cruellie ſlaine, and bathed you in their bloud, whoſe dooings ye ſhould haue followed, & not to haue appaired the common-wealth, both by deſtruction of good men, and alſo by increaſe of rebels. And how can that common-wealth by anie meanes indure, wherein euerie man without authoritie, may vnpuniſhed ſlea whome he liſt, and that in ſuch caſe as thoſe who be ſlaine ſhew themſelues moſt noble of courage, and moſt readie to ſerue the king and the common-wealth, and thoſe as doo ſlea be moſt vilanous and traitorous rebels that anie common-wealth did euer ſuſteine?

The rebels charged with the murder and bloudſhed of the kings liege people.

A licentious common-wealth cannot indure.

For a citie and a prouince be not the faire houſes, and the ſtrong walles, nor the defenſe of anie engine, but the liuing bodies of men, being able in number and ſtrength to mainteine themſelues by good order of iuſtice, & to ſerue for all neceſſarie & behouable vſes in the common-wealth. And when as mans bodie being a part of the whole common-wealth, is wrongfullie touched anie way, and ſpeciallie by death, then ſuffereth the common-wealth great iniurie, and that alwaies ſo much the more, how honeſter and nobler he is, who is iniuriouſlie murdered. How was the lord Sheffeld handled among you, a noble gentleman, and of good ſeruice, both fit for counſell in peace, and for conduct in war, conſidering either the grauitie of his wiſedome, or the authoritie of his perſon, or his ſeruice to the common-wealth, or the hope that all men had in him, or the néed that England had of ſuch, or among manie notablie good, his ſingular excellencie, or the fauor that all men bare toward him, being loued of euerie man, and hated of no man?

Wherein and whereof conſiſteth a citie, prouince, or politike bodie.

Lord Sheffelds ſlaughter laid to the rebels charge.

Conſidered ye who ſhould by dutie be the kings ſubiects, either how ye ſhould not haue offended the K. or after offenſe haue required the kings pardon, or not to haue refuſed his goodneſſe offered, or at length, to haue yéelded to his mercie, or not to haue ſlaine thoſe who came for his ſeruice, or to haue ſpared thoſe who in danger offered ranſome. But all theſe things forgotten by rage of rebellion, becauſe one madneſſe cannot be without infinit vices, ye ſlew him cruellie, who offered himſelfe manfullie, nor would not ſo much as ſpare him for ranſome, who was worthie for nobleneſſe to haue had honour, & hewed him bare whome ye could not hurt armed, and by ſlauerie ſlue nobilitie, in deed miſerablie, in faſhion cruellie, in cauſe diueliſhlie. Oh with what cruell ſpite was violentlie ſundred ſo noble a bodie from ſo godlie a mind? Whoſe death muſt rather be reuenged than lamented, whoſe death was no lacke to himſelfe, but to his countrie, whoſe death might euerie way beene better borne, than at a rebels hand. Violence is in all things hurtfull, but in life horrible. What ſhould I ſpeake of others in the ſame caſe, diuerſe and notable, whoſe death for manhood and ſeruice can want no worthie praiſe, ſo long as theſe vglie ſturrers of rebellion can be had in mind. God hath himſelfe ioined mans bodie and his ſoule togither, not to be departed aſunder, afore he euer diſſeuer them himſelfe, or cauſe them to be diſſeuered by his miniſter.

Lord Sheffelds wofull end in this rebellion pithilie vrged.

The knitting of mans bodie and mind Gods worke, and to whome the diſſoluing thereof belongeth.

And ſhall rebels and heedleſſe camps, being armed againſt God, and in field againſt their king, thinke it no fault to ſhed bloud of true ſubiects, hauing neither office of God, nor appointment of miniſters, nor cauſe of rebellion? He that ſtealeth anie part of a mans ſubſtance, is worthie to loſe his life. What ſhall we thinke then of them, who ſpoile men of their liues, for the maintenance whereof, not onelie ſubſtance & riches be ſought for, but alſo all commonwelths be deuiſed? Now then, your owne conſciences ſhould be made your iudges, & none other ſet to giue ſentence againſt ye. Seeing ye haue beene ſuch bloudſhedders, ſo heinous manquellers, ſo horrible murderers, could ye doo anie other than plainlie confeſſe your foule and wicked rebellion to be greeuous againſt God, and traitorous to the king, and hurtfull to the common-wealth? So manie greeuous faults meeting togither in one ſinke, might not onelie haue diſcouraged, but alſo driuen to deſperation, anie other honeſt or indifferent mind.

Hereby he ſheweth the rebels conſciences ſeered vp as it were with an hot iron.

The rebels gluttonouſneſſe and ambition vnſatiable.

But what feele they, whoſe hearts ſo deepe miſcheefe had hardened, and by vehemencie of affection be made vnſhamefaſt, and ſtop all diſcourſe of reaſon, to let at large the full ſcope of their vnmeaſurable madneſſe? Priuat mens goods ſeeme little to your vnſatiable deſires, yee haue waxed greedie now vpon cities, and haue attempted mightie ſpoiles, to glut vp (and yee could) your waſting hunger. Oh how much haue they need of, that will neuer be contented, and what riches can ſuffice anie that will attempt high enterpriſes aboue their eſtate? Ye could not mainteine your camps with your priuat goods, with your neighbours portion, but yee muſt alſo attempt cities, bicauſe ye ſought great ſpoiles with other mens loſſes, and had forgotten how yee liued at home honeſtlie with your owne, and thought them worthie death that would diſquiet yee in your houſe, and plucke awaie that which yee by right of law thought to be your owne. Heerein ſee what yee would haue doone, ſpoiled the kings maieſties ſubiects, weakened the kings ſtrength, ouerthrowne his townes, taken awaie his munition, drawne his ſubiects to like rebellion, yea and as it is among forren enimies in ſacking of cities, no doubt thereof, yee would haue fallen to ſlaughter of men, rauiſhing of wiues, deflouring of maidens, chopping of children, fiering of houſes, beating downe of ſtreets, ouerthrowing of altogither.

A breefe capitulation of the rebels diſloiall attempts and purpoſes.

For what meaſure haue men in the increaſe of madneſſe, when they can not at the beginning ſtaie themſelues from falling into it. And if the beſetting but of one houſe to rob it, be iuſtlie deemed worthie death: what ſhall we thinke of them that beſiege whole cities for deſire of ſpoile? We liue vnder a king to ſerue him at all times when he ſhall need our ſtrength: and ſhall ye then not onlie withdraw your ſelues, which ought as much to be obedient as we be, but alſo violentlie plucke other awaie too, fro the dutie vnto the which by Gods commandement all ſubiects be ſtrictlie bound, and by all lawes euerie nation is naturallie led? The townes be not onelie the ornament of the realme, but alſo the ſeat of merchants, the place of handicrafts, that men ſcattered in villages, and needing diuerſe things, maie in little roome know where to find the lacke. To ouerthrow them then, is nothing elſe but to waſt your owne commodities, ſo that when ye would buie a neceſſarie thing for monie, ye could not tell where to find the ſame.

An argument from the leſſe to the greater.

The vſe and neceſſarie ſeruice of towns, & what it is to ouerthrow them.

Munition ſerueth the king not onelie for the defenſe of his owne, but alſo for the inuaſion of his enimie. And if ye will then ſo ſtrictlie deale with him, that ye will not let him ſo much as defend his owne, ye offer him double iniurie; both that ye let him from dooing anie notable fact abrode, and alſo that ye ſuffer not him quietlie to inioie his owne at home. But herein hath notablie appeered what cities haue faithfully ſerued and ſuffred extreme danger, not onelie of goods, but alſo of famine & death, rather than to ſuffer the kings enimies to enter: and what white liuered cities haue not onlie not withſtood them, but alſo with ſhame fauored them, and with miſchiefe aided them. And I would I might praiſe herein all cities alike! which I would doo, if all were like worthie. For then I might ſhew more faith in ſubiects than ſtrength in rebelles; and teſtifie to men to come, what a generall faith euerie citie bare to the kings maieſtie, whoſe age although it were not fit to rule, yet his ſubiects hearts were willing to obeie, thinking not onelie of the hope, which all men conceiue hereafter to be in him, but alſo of the iuſt kind of gouernment, which in his minoritie his councell dooth vſe among them. And here, how much and how worthilie maie Exceſter be commended, which being in the middeſt of rebels, vnuittelled, vnfurniſhed, vnprepared for ſo long a ſiege, did noblie hold out the continuall and dangerous aſſault of the rebell? For they ſuſteined the violence of the rebell, not onlie they had plentie enough of vittels, but alſo eleuen or twelue daies after the extreme famine came on them, and liuing without bread, were in courage ſo manfull, & in dutie ſo conſtant, that they thought it yet much better to die the extreme death of hunger, ſhewing truth to their king, and loue to their countrie, than to giue anie place to the rebell, and fauor him with aid, although they might haue doone it with their leſſe danger. Whoſe example if Norwich had followed, & had not rather giuen place to traitor Ket, than to keepe their dutie; and had not ſought more ſafegard than honeſtie, and priuat hope more than common quietneſſe: they had ended their rebellion ſooner, and eſcaped themſelues better, and ſaued the loſſe of the worthie lord Sheffeeld, in whome was more true ſeruice for his life, than in them for their goods. And although this can not be ſpoken againſt a certeine honeſt ſort that were amongſt them, whoſe praiſe was the greater, bicauſe they were ſo few: yet the greater number was ſuch, that they not onelie obeied the rebell for feare, but alſo folowed him for loue, and did ſo traitorouſlie order the kings band vnder my lord marqueſſe, that they ſuffered more damage out of their houſes by the townſmen, than they did abrode by the rebelles. Whoſe fault as the kings maieſtie maie pardon, ſo I would either the example might be forgotten, that no citie

Who then that would willinglie defend ye, can ſay anie thing for ye, which haue ſo diuerſlie faulted, ſo traitorouſlie offended, not onlie againſt priuat men ſeuerallie, but alſo generallie againſt whole townes, and that after ſuch a ſort, as outward enimies full of deadlie feud could not more cruellie inuade them? And thus the kings maieſtie diſhonored, his councell diſobeied, the goods of the poore ſpoiled, the houſes of the wealthie ſacked, honeſt mens bodies impriſoned, worthie mens perſonages ſlaine, cities beſieged and threatned, and all kind of things diſordered, can ye without teares and repentance heare ſpoken of, which without honeſtie and godlineſſe ye practiſed, and not find in your hearts now to returne to dutie, which by witchcraft of ſedition were drowned in diſorder? Haue ye not in diſorder firſt gréeuouſlie offended God, next traitorouſlie riſen againſt your king, and ſo neither worthie euerlaſting life, as long as ye ſo remaine, nor yet ciuill life being in ſuch a breach of common quietneſſe? If euerie one of theſe cannot by themſelues plucke you backe from this your lewd and outragious enterpriſes, yet let them altogither ſtir ye; or at leaſt be a fearfull example to others, to beware by your vnmeaſurable follie, how they doo ſo far prouoke God, or offend man: and find by your miſtemper to be themſelues better ordered, and learne ſtill to obeie, bicauſe they would not repent, and ſo to liue with honeſtie, that they would neither willinglie offend Gods law, nor diſobeie mans.

A further view of the inconueniences bred by rebellion.

But and ye were ſo much bleared, that you did thinke impoſſible things, and your reaſon gaue ye againſt all reaſon, that ye neither diſpleaſed God herein, nor offended the king, yet be ye ſo blind, that ye vnderſtand not your owne caſe, nor your neighbors miſerie, nor the ruine of the whole commonwealth, which dooth euidentlie follow your ſo foule and deteſtable ſedition? Doo ye not ſée how for the maintenance of theſe vngodlie rablements, not onlie cities and villages, but alſo ſhires and countries be vtterlie deſtroied? Is not their corne waſted, their cattell fetcht awaie, their houſes rifled, their goods ſpoiled, and all to féed your vpriſing without reaſon, and to mainteine this tumult of rebellion inuented of the diuell, continued by you, and to be ouerthrowen by the power of Gods mightie hand? And whie ſhould not ſo hurtfull waſting and harrieng of countries be iuſtlie puniſhed with great ſeueritie, ſéeing robbing of houſes, and taking of purſes, doo by law deſerue the extremitie of death? How manie ſuffer iniurie when one hundred of a ſhire is ſpoiled? And what iniurie thinke ye is doone, when not onelie whole ſhires be deſtroied, but alſo euerie quarter of the realme touched? Haue ye not brought vpon vs all pouertie, weakneſſe, and hatred within the realme, & diſcourage, ſhame, and damage without the realme? If ye miſerablie intended not onelie to vndoo other, but alſo to deſtroie your ſelues, and to ouerthrow the whole realme, could ye haue taken a readier waie to your owne ruine than this is?

The loſſe of harueſt. Barns be poore mens ſtorehouſes.

Haie rotting on the grou

Loſſe of cor for lacke of reaping.

And firſt if ye be anie thing reaſonable, lift vp your reaſon, and weigh by wiſdome, if not all things, yet your owne caſes, and learne in the beginning of matters to foreſée the end, and iudge aduiſedlie yer ye enter into anie thing haſtilie. Sée ye not this yeare the loſſe of harueſt? And thinke ye can grow to wealth that yéere when ye loſe your thrift and profit? Barns be poore mens ſtorehouſes, wherein lieth a great part of euerie mans owne liuing, his wiues and childrens liuing, wherwith men mainteine their families, paie their rents: and therefore be alwaies thought moſt rich when they haue beſt crops. And now when there is neither plentie of haie, nor ſufficient of ſtraw, nor corne inough, and that through the great diſorder of your lewd rebellion, can ye thinke ye doo well, when ye vndoo your ſelues, and iudge it a common-welth when the commons is deſtroied, and ſéeke your hap by vnhappineſſe, and eſtéeme your owne loſſe to be your owne forwardnes, and by this iudgement ſhew your ſelues, how little ye vnderſtand other mens matters, when ye can ſcarſelie conſider the weightieſt of your owne? Hath not the haie this yeare, as it roſe from the ground, ſo rotted to the ground againe: and where it was woont by mens ſeaſonable labor to be taken in due time, and then ſerue for the maintenance of horſſe and cattell wherwith we liue, now by your diſordered miſchéefe hath béene by mens idleneſſe and vndutifulneſſe let alone vntouched, and ſo neither ſerueth the poore to make monie of, nor anie cattell to liue with. The corne was ſowne with labour, and the ground tilled for it with labour, and looked to be brought home againe with labour: and for lacke of honeſt laborers it is loſt on the ground; the owners being loiterers, and ſéeking other mens, haue loſt their owne, and hoping for mounteins, lacked their preſent thrift, neither obteining that they ſought, nor ſéeking that they ought.

The loſſe of one yeares harueſt verie hurtfull.

And how ſhall men liue when the maintenance of their prouiſion is lacking? For labouring and their old ſtore is waſted by wildneſſe of ſedition, and ſo neither ſpare the old nor ſaue the new. How can men be fed then or beaſts liue, when as ſuch waſtfull negligence is miſerablie vſed? And miſpending the time of their profit, in ſhamefull diſorder of inobedience, they care not greatlie what becommeth of their owne, bicauſe they intend to liue by other mens? Haie is gone, corne is waſted, ſtraw is ſpoiled; what reckoning of harueſt can ye make, either for the aid of others, or for the reléefe of your ſelues? And thus haue ye brought in one kind of miſerie, which if yée ſaw before, as ye be like to féele after, although ye had hated the common-welth, yet for loue of your ſelues ye would haue auoided the great enormitie thereof, into the which ye wilfullie now haue caſt your ſelues.

A neceſſitie of inhanſing the price of things.

An other no leſſe is, that ſuch plentie of vittels as was abundantlie in euerie quarter for the reléefe of vs all, is now waſtfullie and vnthriftfullie ſpent, in mainteining you vnlawfull rebels, and ſo with diſorder all is conſumed, which with good huſbandrie might long haue indured. For, ſo much as would haue ſerued a whole yeare at home with diligence and ſkilfull héed of huſbandrie, that is wilfullie waſted in a moneth in the campe, through the rauening ſpoile of vilanie. For what is vnordered plentie, but a waſtfull ſpoile, whereof the inconuenience is ſo great, as ye be worthie to féele, and bringeth in more hardnes of liuing, greater dearth of all things, & occaſioneth manie cauſes of diſeaſes? The price of things muſt néeds increaſe much, when the number of things wareth leſſe, and by ſcarſitie be inhanſed, & compelleth men to abate their liberalitie in houſe, both to their owne, and alſo to ſtrangers. And where the rich wanteth, what can the poore find, who in a common ſcarſitie liueth moſt ſcarſelie, and féeleth quicklieſt the ſharpneſſe of ſtaruing, when euerie man for lacke is hungerbitten. Which if ye had well remembred before, as ye now maie after perceiue, ye would not I thinke ſo ſtiffe-neckedlie haue reſiſted and indangered your ſelues in the ſtorme of famine, whereof ye moſt likelie muſt haue the greateſt part, which moſt ſtubbornlie reſiſted, to your owne ſhame and confuſion.

After a great dearth commeth a great death, a reaſon why.

Experience teacheth vs, that after a great dearth commeth a great death; for that when men in great want of meat eat much ill meat, they fill their bodies with ill humors, and caſt them from their ſtate of health, into a ſubiection of ſickeneſſe: bicauſe the good bloud in the bodie is not able to keepe his temper, for the multitude of the ill humors that corrupteth the ſame. And ſo grow great & deadlie plagues, and deſtroie great numbers of all ſorts, ſparing no kind that they light on, neither reſpecting the poore with mercie, nor the rich with fauour. Can ye therefore thinke herein, when ye ſee decaie of vittels, the rich pinch, the poore famiſh, the following of diſeaſes, the greatneſſe of death, the mourning of widowes, the pitifulneſſe of the fatherleſſe, and all this miſerie to come thorough your vnnaturall miſbehauiour, that ye haue not dangerouſlie hurt the commons of your countrie with a dolefull and vncurable wound? Theſe things being once felt in the common-wealth, as they muſt needs be, euerie man ſeeth by and by what followeth: euen a great diminiſhment of the ſtrength of the realme, when the due number that the realme doth mainteine is made leſſe, and thereby we be made rather a preie for our enimies, than a ſafetie for our ſelues.

A great decaie of people.

And how can there be but a great decaie of people at the length, when ſome be ouerthrowne in warre, ſome ſuffer for puniſhment, ſome pine for famine, ſome die with the campes diet, ſome be conſumed with ſickeneſſe? For although ye thinke your ſelues able to match with a few vnprepared gentlemen, and put them from their houſes, that ye might gaine the ſpoile: doo ye iudge therefore your ſelues ſtrong inough, not onelie to withſtand a kings power, but alſo to ouerthrow it? Is it poſſible that ye ſhould haue ſo mad a frenſie in your head, that ye ſhould thinke the number ye ſee ſo ſtrong, that all ye ſee not ſhould not be able to preuaile to the contrarie? With what reaſon could ye thinke, that if ye bode the hot brunt of battell, but ye muſt needs feele the ſmart, ſpeciallie the kings power comming againſt you: which if ye feare not, belike ye know not the force thereof? And ſo much the greater number is loſt in the realme, that both the ouercommer and the ouercommed be parties, although vnlike, of one realme: and what loſſe is not onelie of either ſide, but of both, that doth plainlie redound to the whole.

Rebels can not preuaile againſt the princes power.

A neceſſarie conſequent that rebels are ſeuerelie to be puniſhed, and that ſuch puniſhment is good and neceſſarie.

Then where ſo great and ſo horrible a fault is committed, as worſe can not be mentioned of from the beginning, and bringeth in withall ſuch penurie, ſuch weakenes, ſuch diſorder in the common-wealth, as no miſchiefe beſides could doo the like: can anie man thinke with iuſt reaſon, that all ſhall eſcape vnpuniſhed that ſhall eſcape the ſword, and not manie for terrour and examples ſake ſhould be looked vnto, who haue beene either great dooers in ſuch a diſordered vilanie, or great counſellors to ſuch an outgrowne miſchiefe; ſeeing the onelie remedie of redreſſing wilfull faults is a iuſt and ſeuere puniſhment of ſuch, whoſe naughtie deeds good men ought to abhorre for duties ſake, and ill men maie dread for like puniſhments ſake, and a free licence to doo miſchiefe vnpuniſhed is ſo dangerous, that the ſufferance of one is the occaſion of the fall of a great number, and womaniſh pitie to one is a deceitfull crueltie to the whole, intiſing them to their owne deſtruction by ſufferance, which would haue auoided the danger by fore puniſhment.

Againſt fooliſh pitie forbearing and forgiuing a wilfull offendor.

And in ſuch a barrenneſſe of vittels, as muſt needs come after ſo rauening a ſpoile, it muſt needs be, that ſome (though few) ſhall be ſo nipt with egerneſſe of famine, that they ſhall not recouer againe themſelues out of ſo fretting a danger. So in a generall weakeneſſe, where all ſhall be feebled, ſome muſt needs die, and ſo diminiſh the number, and abate ſuch ſtrength as the realme defended it ſelfe withall before. Which occaſion of neuer ſo few, comming of ſo great a cauſe, if ye ſhould make iuſt amends for, not of recompenſe which ye could not, but of puniſhment which ye ought; how manie, how diuerſe and how cruell deaths ought euerie one of ye often ſuffer? How manie came to the camps from long labour to ſudden eaſe, and from meane fare to ſtroieng of vittels: and ſo fell in a maner vnwares to ſuch a contrarie change, that nature hir ſelfe abiding neuer great and ſudden changes, can not beare it without ſome grounds entered of diſeaſes to come, which vncircumſpect men ſhall ſooner feele than thinke of, and then will ſcarſelie iudge the cauſe, when they ſhall be vexed with the effect?

Rebels puniſhable with manie deaths.

Idleneſſe and meat of other mens charge.

It is little maruell that idleneſſe and meat of an other mans charge will ſoone feed vp & fat like men: but it is great maruell if idleneſſe and other mens meat doo not abate the ſame by ſickeneſſe againe, and ſpeciallie comming from the one, and going to the other: contrarie in thoſe who violentlie ſeeke to turne in a moment the whole realme to the contraris. For while their mind changeth from obedience to vnrulineſſe, and turneth it ſelfe from honeſtie to wildneſſe, and their bodies go from labour to idleneſſe, from ſmall fare to ſpoile of vittels, and from beds in the night to cabins, and from ſweet houſes to ſtinking camps, it muſt needs be by changing of affections which alter the bodie, and by vſing of reſt that filleth the bodie, and by glutting of meats which weakeneth the bodie, & with cold in the nights which accraſeth the bodie, and with corrupt aire which infecteth the bodie, that there follow ſome grieuous tempeſt not onelie of contagious ſickeneſſe, but alſo of preſent death to the bodie.

The force of peſtilence following famine.

The greateſt plucke of all is, that vehemencie of plague, which naturallie followeth the dint of hunger, which when it entereth once among men, what darts of pangs, what throwes of paines, what ſhotes of death doth it caſt out? How manie fall, not aſtonied with the ſickeneſſe, but fretted with the paine? How beateth it downe not onelie ſmall townes, but alſo great countries? This when ye ſee light firſt on your beaſts which lacke fodder, and after fall on men whoſe bodies gape for it, and ſee the ſcarſeneſſe of men to be by this your foule enterpriſe, and not onelie other men touched with plagues, but alſo your owne houſe ſtong with death, and the plague alſo raiſed of your riſing, to fire your ſelues: can ye thinke you to be anie other but mankillers of other, and murtherers of your ſelues, and the principals of the ouerthrow of ſo great a number, as ſhall either by ſword or puniſhment, famine, or ſome plague or peſtilence be conſumed and waſted out of the common-wealth?

The plague & peſtilence occaſioned by rebellion.

Rebels enimies & murtherers of their countrie.

And ſeeing he that decaieth the number of cottages or plowes in a towne, ſeemeth to be an enimie to the common-wealth: ſhall we not count him, not onelie an enimie, but alſo a murtherer of his countrie, who by harebrained vnrulineſſe cauſeth vtter ruine and peſtilent deſtruction of ſo manie thouſand men? Grant this follie then and ouerſight to be ſuch as worthilie ye maie count it, and I ſhall go further in declaring of other great inconueniences, which your dangerous and furious miſbehauiour hath hurtfullie brought in; ſeeing diuerſe honeſt and true dealing men, whoſe liuing is by their owne prouiſion, hath come ſo before hand by time, that they haue beene able well to liue honeſtlie in their houſes, & paie beſide the rents of their farmes trulie, and now haue by your crueltie and abhorred inſurrections loſt their goods, their cattell, their harneſt, which they had gotten before, and wherwith they intended to liue hereafter, & now be brought to this extremitie, that they be neither able to liue, as they were wont at home before; nor to paie their accuſtomeable rent at their due time. Whereby they be brought into trouble and vnquietneſſe, not onlie muſing what they haue loſt by you, but alſo curſing you by whome they haue loſt it, and alſo in danger of loſing their holds at their lords hands, except by pitie they ſhew more mercie, than the right of the law will grant by iuſtice.

The fruits of honeſt mens trauels long in gathering, quickelie ſpoiled by rebellion.

And what a griefe is it to an honeſt man, to labor trulie in youth, and to gaine painefullie by labour, wherewith to liue honeſtlie in age, and to haue this, gotten in long time, to be ſuddenlie caught awaie by the violence of ſedition, which name he ought to abhorre by it ſelfe, although no miſerie of loſſe followed to him thereby. But what greater griefe ought ſeditious rebels to haue themſelues, who if they be not ſtriken with puniſhment, yet ought to pine in conſcience, and melt awaie with the griefe of their owne faults, when they ſée innocents and men of true ſeruice hindered and burdened with the hurt of their rebellion, & who in a good commonwealth ſhould for honeſties ſake proſper, they by theſe rebels onlie meanes be caſt ſo behind the hand, as they can not recouer eaſilie againe by their owne truth, that which they haue loſt by thoſe traitors miſchiefe? And if vniuſt men ought not ſo to be handled at anie mans hands, but onelie ſtand to the order of a law: how much more ſhould true and faithfull ſubiects, who deſerue praiſe, féele no vnquietneſſe, nor be vexed with ſedition, who be obedientlie in ſubiection, but rather ſéeke iuſt amends at falſe rebels hands, and by law obteine that they loſt by diſorder, and ſo conſtreine you to the vttermoſt, to paie the recompenſe of wrongfull loſſes, bicauſe ye were the authors of theſe wrongfull ſpoiles.

An argument from equitie & vpright dealing euen with the vniuſt.

Then would ye ſoone perceiue the commonwealths hurt, not when other felt it who deſerued it not, but when you ſmarted who cauſed it, and ſtood not & looked vpon other mens loſſes which ye might pitie, but tormented with your owne which ye would lament. Now I am paſt this miſchiefe, which ye will not hereafter denie, when ye ſhall praiſe other mens foreſight, rather than your wicked doings, in bewailing the end of your furie, in whoſe beginning ye now reioiſe. What ſaie ye to the number of vagabonds and loitering beggers, which after the ouerthrow of your campe, and ſcattering of this ſeditious number, will ſwarme in euerie corner of the realme and not onelie lie loitering vnder hedges, but alſo ſtand ſturdilie in cities, and beg boldlie at euerie doore, leauing labour which they like not, and following idleneſſe which they ſhould not? For euerie man is eaſilie and naturallie brought from labour to eaſe, from the better to the worſe, from diligence to ſlothfulneſſe: and after warres it is commonlie ſéene, that a great number of thoſe which went out honeſt, returne home againe like roiſters, and as though they were burnt to the wars bottome, they haue all their life after an vnſauorie ſmacke thereof, & ſmell ſtill toward daieſléepers, purſepickers, highwaie robbers, quarrelmakers, yea and bloudſheders too.

Multitudes of vagabonds and roges procured by rebellions.

Doo we not ſée commonlie in the end of warres more robbing, more begging, more murdering than before, and thoſe to ſtand in the high waie to aſke their almes, whome ye be affraid to ſaie naie vnto honeſtlie, leaſt they take it awaie from you violentlie, and haue more cauſe to ſuſpect their ſtrength, than pitie their néed? Is it not then dailie heard, how men be not onelie purſued, but vtterlie ſpoiled, & few maie ride ſafe by the kings highwaie, except they ride ſtrong, not ſo much for feare of their goods, which men eſtéeme leſſe, but alſo for danger of their life, which euerie man loueth. Worke is vndoone at home and loiterers linger in ſtréets, lurke in alehouſes, range in highwaies, valiant beggers plaie in towns and yet complaine of néed, whoſe ſtaffe if it be once hot in their hand, or ſluggiſhneſſe bred in their boſome, they will neuer be allured to labour againe, contenting themſelues better with idle beggerie, than with honeſt and profitable labour. And what more noiſome beaſts be there in a commonwealth? Drones in hiues ſucke out the honie, a ſmall matter, but yet to be looked on by good huſbands. Caterpillers deſtroie the fruit, an hurtfull thing, and well ſhifted for by a diligent ouerſéer. Diuerſe vermine deſtroie corne, kill pulleine, engines and ſnares be made for them.

To what ſhifts ſoldiers fall after diſcamping and ceaſſing from warres.

Against loite-ring lubber that can not awaie with labour.

But what is a loiterer? A ſucker of honie, a ſpoiler of corne, a ſtroier of fruit, a waſter of monie, a ſpoiler of vittels, a ſucker of bloud, a breaker of orders, a ſéeker of breakes, a queller of life, a baſiliſke of the commonwealth, which by companie and ſight dooth poiſon the whole countrie, and ſtaineth honeſt minds with the infection of his veneme, and ſo draweth the commonwealth to death and deſtruction. Such is the fruits of your labour and trauell for your pretenſed commonwealth, which iuſtice would no man ſhould taſte of but your ſelues, that yée might trulie iudge of your owne miſchéefe, and fraie other by example from preſuming the like. When we ſée a great number of flies in a yeare, we naturallie iudge it like to be a great plague, and hauing ſo great a ſwarming of loitering vagabonds, readie to beg and brall at euerie mans doore, which declare a greater infection, can we not looke for a gréeuouſer and perillouſer danger than the plague is? Who can therefore otherwiſe déeme, but this one deadlie hurt, wherewith the commonwelth of our nation is wounded, beſide all other is ſo peſtilent, that there can be no more hurtfull thing in a well gouerned eſtate, nor more throwne into all kind of vice and vnrulineſſe: and therefore this your ſedition is not onelie moſt odious, but alſo moſt horrible, that hath ſpotted the whole countrie with ſuch a ſtaine of idleneſſe.

The ſight manie flies in a yeare a na-turall progn ſtication of a plague like follow.

There can be none end of faults, if a man rehearſe all faults that doo neceſſarilie follow this vnrulie ſturdineſſe. For not onelie vagabonds wandering and ſcattering themſelues for miſchéefe, ſhall run in a mans eies, but alſo diſorder of euerie degrée ſhall enter into a mans mind, and ſhall behold hereby the commonwealth miſerablie defaced by you, who ſhould as much as other haue kept your ſelues in order in it. Neither be the magiſtrats dulie obeied, nor the lawes iuſtlie feared, nor degrées of men conſidered, nor maiſters well ſerued, nor parents trulie reuerenced, nor lords remembred of their tenants, nor yet either naturall or ciuill law much regarded. And it is plainlie vnpoſſible that that countrie ſhall well ſtand in gouernement, and the people growe to wealth, where order in euerie ſtate is not fitlie obſerued: and that bodie cannot be without much gréefe of inflammation, where anie leſt part is out of ioint, or not duelie ſet in his owne naturall place.

Diſorder in euerie degré cauſed by re-bellion.

Magiſtrats diſobeied, and neglect of dutie in gene-rall by rebel-lion.

Obſeruing of order in euerie eſtate ſuppor-teth a com-monwealth, contrariwiſe the hurt of diſorder.

Wherefore order muſt be kept in the commonwealth like health in the bodie, and all the drift of policie looketh to this end, how this temper may be ſafelie mainteined, without anie exceſſe of vnmeaſurableneſſe, either of the one ſide, or of the other. And eaſie inough it is to kéepe the ſame, when it is once brought into the meane, and to hold it in the ſtaie it is found in: but when it burſteth out once with a vehemencie, and hath gotten into an vnrulie diſorder, it ſpreadeth ſo faſt, and ouerfloweth all honeſt mens reſiſting ſo violentlie, that it will be hard to recouer the breach of long time againe, except with great and wiſe counſell, which no doubt ſhall be in ſeaſon vſed, there be woonderfull remedies ſought therefore. And euen as a man falling, is eaſier holden vp by ſtaie, than when he is fallen downe he is able to riſe againe: ſo is the commonwealth ſlipping, by the foreſight of wiſedome better kept from ruine; than when it is once fallen into anie kind of miſerie, the ſame may be called againe to the old and former ſtate. Doo we not euidentlie know, that a man may better kéepe his arme or his leg from breaking or falling out of ioint, afore hurt come to it; than after the hurt it may ſafelie and quietlie be healed, and reſtored to the former ſtrength and health againe? And now through your ſeditious means, things that were afore quiet and in good order, laws feared and obeied, ſubiects ruled and kept in dutie, be all now in a great diſorder, and like (if it be not holpen) to grow to wildneſſe, and a beaſtlineſſe; ſéeing that neither common dutie can be kept, which nature preſcribeth, nor common law can be regarded, which policie requireth. How can yée kéepe your owne if yée kéepe no order? Your wiues and children, how can they be defended from other mens violence, if yée will in other things breake all order? By what reaſon would yée be obeied of yours as ſeruants, if yée will not obeie the king as ſubiects? How would yée haue others deale orderlie with you, if yée will vſe diſorder againſt all others? Séeing then there is ſuch a confuſion now of things, ſuch a turmoile of men, ſuch a diſorder of faſhions; who can looke to liue quietlie a great while, who can thinke but that yée haue miſerablie toſſed the commonwealth, and ſo vexed all men with diſorder, that the inconuenience hereof cannot onelie nip others, but alſo touch you?

An argument drawne from compariſon.

A topſie turnie of all things by rebellion.

The neceſſitie of order, and therefore S. Paule ſaid well; Let all things be doone in order.

But now ſée how that not onelie theſe vnlooked for miſchéefes haue heauilie growne on yée, but alſo thoſe commodities, which yée thought to haue holpen your ſelues and others by, be not onelie hindered, but alſo hurt thereby. The kings maieſtie by the aduiſe, &c: intended a iuſt reformation of all ſuch things as poore men could trulie ſhew themſelues oppreſſed with, thinking equalitie of iuſtice to be the diademe of his kingdome, and the ſafegard of his commons. Which was not onelie intended by wiſedome, but alſo ſet on with ſpéed, and ſo entered into a due conſidering of all ſtates, that none ſhould haue iuſt cauſe to grudge againſt the other, when as euerie thing rightfullie had, nothing could be but vnrightfullie grudged at. And this would haue béene doone, not onelie with your glad and willing aſſent: but alſo béene doone by this daie almoſt throughout the whole realme: ſo that quietlie it had béene obteined without inconuenience, and ſpéedilie without delaie. And whatſoeuer had béene doone by the kings maieſties authoritie, that would by right haue remained for euer, and ſo taken in law, that the contrarie partie neither could by iuſtice, neither would by boldneſſe haue enterpriſed the breach thereof.

Rebels are againſt their owne profit.

Equalitie of iuſtice.

But leaſt wicked men ſhould be wealthie, and they whoſe hearts be not truelie bent to obedience, ſhould obteine at the kings hands that they deſerued not in a commonwealth, yée haue maruellouſlie and worthilie hurt your ſelues, and gréeuouſlie prouided (except the kings goodneſſe be more vnto you than your owne deſerts can claime) that yée be not ſo much worthie as to be benefited in anie kind, as yée be worthie to loſe that yée haue on euerie ſide. Yée haue thought good to be your owne reformers belike, not onelie vnnaturallie miſtruſting the kings iuſtice, but alſo cruellie and vnciuillie dealing with your owne neighbours. Wherein I would as yée haue hurt the whole realme, ſo yée had not enterpriſed a thing moſt dangerous to your ſelues, & moſt contrarie to the thing yée intended. If yée had let things alone, thought good by your ſelues to be redreſſed, and dutifullie looked for the performance of that, the kings maieſtie promiſing reformation, they ſhould not haue béene vndoone at this time, as in a great ſort of honeſt places they be, nor whole countries, who for their quietneſſe be moſt worthie to be looked on, ſhould haue béene vnprouided for at this daie. But this commoditie hath happened by the waie, that it is euidentlie knowne by your miſchéefe, and others dutie, who be moſt true to the king, and moſt worthie to be doone for, and who be moſt pernicious and traitorous rebels. And it is not to be doubted, but they ſhall be conſidered with thanks, and find iuſt redreſſe without deſerued miſerie, & you puniſhed like rebels, who might haue had both praiſe & profit like ſubiects.

Rebels hurt themſelues.

Priuat men are not to inforce a reformation.

Rebellion hurteth the whole realme.

The benefit of rebellion in one reſpect.

For that as yée haue valiantlie doone of your ſelues, thinke yée it will ſtand anie longer, than men feare your rage, which cannot indure long; and that yée ſhall not then bide the rigor of the law for your priuat iniuries, as yée vſed the furie of your braines in other mens oppreſſions? Will men ſuffer wrong at your hands, when law can redreſſe it, & the right of the commonwealth will mainteine it, and good order in countries will beare it? Yée amend faults as ill ſurgions heale ſores, which when they ſéeme to be whole aboue, they rankle at the bottome, and ſo be faine continuallie to be ſore, or elſe be mended by new breaking of the skin. Your redreſſe ſéemeth to you perfect and good, yée haue pulled downe ſuch things as yée would, yée thinke now all is well: yée conſider no further, yée ſéeke not the bottome, yée ſée not the ſore, that yée haue doone it by no law, yée haue redreſſed it by no order, what then? If it be no otherwiſe ſearched than by you, it will not tarie long ſo: either it will be after continuallie as it was afore your comming, or elſe it muſt be (when all is doone) amended by the king.

Reformation intended by rebels, like ſores cured by ill ſurgions.

Thus haue yée both lacked in the time, and miſt in the dooing, and yet beſides that ye haue done, which is by your dooing to no purpoſe. Yée haue doone the things with ſuch inconueniences, as hath béene both before rehearſed, and ſhall be after declared; that better it had béene for you, neuer to haue enioied the commoditie, if there be anie; than to ſuffer the gréefs that will inſue, which be verie manie. In euerie quarter ſome men (whom yée ſet by) will be loſt, which euerie one of you (if ye haue loue in ye) would rather haue lacked the profit of your incloſures, than cauſe ſuch deſtruction of them, as is like by reaſon & iudgement neceſſarilie to follow. What commonwealth is it then, to doo ſuch abhominable enterpriſes after ſo vile a ſort, that yée hinder that good yée would doo, and bring in that hurt yée would not, and ſo find that yée ſéeke not, and follow that yée loſe, and deſtroie your ſelues by follie; rather than yée would be ordered by reaſon, and ſo haue not ſo much amended your old ſores, as brought in new plagues, which yée your ſelues that deſerue them will lament, and we which haue not deſerued them may curſſe you for? For although the kings maieſtie, &c: intended for your profits a reformation in his commonwealth: yet his pleaſure was not, nor no reaſon gaue it, that euerie ſubiect ſhould buſilie intermeddle with it of their owne head, but onelie thoſe whome his councell thought moſt méet men for ſuch an honeſt purpoſe.

Gréefes inſuing to the rebels vpon this rebellion.

Reformation ought to be no priuat mans but the princes action.

The kings maieſtie, &c: hath godlie reformed an vncleane part of religion, and hath brought it to the true forme of the firſt church that followed Chriſt, thinking that to be trueſt, not what later mens fanſies haue of themſelues deuiſed, but what the apoſtles and their felowes had at Chriſtes hand receiued, and willeth the ſame to be knowne and ſet abroad to all his people. Shall euerie man now that liſteth and fanſieth the ſame, take in hand vncalled, to be a mi-

What things in a well and iuſtlie doone matter ought well to be weighed.

uiſer, and to ſet forth the ſame, hauing no authoritie? Nie, though the thing were verie godlie that were doone, yet the perſon muſt néeds doo ill that enterpriſeth it, bicauſe he doth a good thing after an ill ſort, and looketh but on a little part of dutie, conſidering the thing, and leaueth a great part vnaduiſed, not conſidering the perſon: when as in a well and iuſtlie doone matter, not onelie theſe two things ought well to be weighed, but alſo good occaſion of time, and reaſonable cauſe of the dooing, ought alſo much to be ſet before euerie doers eies. Now in this your déed, the manner is vngodlie, the thing vnſufferable, the cauſe wicked, the perſon ſeditious, the time traitorous: and can ye poſſiblie by anie honeſt defenſe of reaſon, or anie good conſcience religiouſlie grounded, denie that this malicious and horrible fault, ſo wickedlie ſet on, is not onelie ſinfull afore God, and traitorous to the king, but alſo deadlie and peſtilent to the whole common-wealth of our countrie, and ſo not onelie ouerfloweth vs with the miſerie, but alſo ouerwhelmeth you with the rage thereof?

The yoke that rebels wilfullie bring vpon themſelues.

Yet further ſée and ye be not wearie with the multitude of miſeries, which ye haue maruellouſlie mooued, what a yoke ye wilfullie doo bring on your ſelues, in ſtirring vp this deteſtable ſedition, and ſo bring your ſelues into a further ſlauerie, if ye vſe your ſelues into a further ſlauerie, if ye vſe your ſelues often thus inobedientlie. When common order of the law can take no place in vnrulie and diſobedient ſubiects, and all men will of wilfulneſſe reſiſt with rage, and thinke their owne violence to be the beſt iuſtice; then be wiſe magiſtrats compelled by neceſſitie to ſéeke an extreame remedie, where meane waies helpe not, and bring in the martiall law where none other law ſerueth. Then muſt ye be contented to bide puniſhment without proceſſe, condemnation without witneſſe, ſuſpicion is then taken for iudgement, and diſpleaſure may be iuſt cauſe of your execution, and ſo without fauor ye find ſtrictneſſe, which without rule ſéeke violence. Ye thinke it a hard law and vnſufferable. It is ſo indéed, but yet good for a medicine.

Deſperat remedies for deſperat diſeaſes.

Rebels worthie to ſuffer extremitie of puniſhment.

The greateſt ſhame that can come to a common-wealth.

Deſperate ſickneſſes in phyſicke muſt haue deſperate remedies, for meane medicines will neuer helpe great griefes. So if ye caſt your ſelues into ſuch ſharpe diſeaſes, ye muſt néeds looke for ſharpe medicines againe at your phyſicians hands. And worthie ye be to ſuffer the extremitie in a common-wealth, which ſéeke to doo the extremitie, and by reaſon muſt receiue the like ye offer, and ſo be contenred to bide the end willinglie which ſet on the beginning wilfullie. For no greater ſhame can come to a common-welth, than that thoſe ſubiects which ſhould be obedient euen without a law, can not be contented to be ordered by the law, and by no means kept within their dutie, which ſhould euerie waie offend rather than in their dutie. It is a token that the ſubiects lacke reaſon, when they forſake law, and thinke either by their multitude to find pardon, which cannot iuſtlie ſtretch to all, or elſe by ſtrength to beare the ſtroke, which cannot proſper againſt a king.

Gentlemen more truſti bicauſe the commons b vntruſtie.

They muſt néeds little conſider themſelues, who bring in this neceſſitie, rather to ſtand to the pleaſure of a mans will, than to abide the reaſon of the law; and to be indangered more when an other man liſteth, than when himſelfe offendeth. And this muſt neceſſarilie folow if your rebellion thus continue: and while ye ſéeke to throw downe the yoke, which ye fanſie your ſelues burdened withall, ye bring your ſelues in a greater bondage, leauing ſafetie and folowing danger, and putting your ſelues vnder the iuſtice of them whoſe fauour ye might eaſilie haue kept, if ye would willinglie and dutifullie haue ſerued. Now the gentlemen be more in truſt, bicauſe the commons be vntruſtie, and they get by ſeruice, which ye looſe by ſtubbornneſſe, and therefore muſt néeds, if ye thus continue, haue more authoritie from the king: bicauſe ye would be in leſſe ſubiection to the king, and that as ye will not doo of your ſelues, ye muſt be compelled to doo by others, and that ye refuſe to doo willinglie, thinke ye muſt be drawne to doo the ſame conſtreinedlie. Which when it commeth to paſſe, as wiſedome ſéeth in your faults that it muſt néeds, what gaine ye then, or what profit can ariſe to you by riſing, which might haue found eaſe in ſitting ſtill? And what ſhall ye be at length the better for this turmoile, which beſide diuerſe other incommodities rehearſed, ſhall be thus clogged with the vnſufferable burden of the martiall law.

Martiall l a burden v ſufferable.

Crueltie extreame ſhewed t gentlemen the rebels.

Yet there is one thing behind, which me thinketh your ſelues ſhould not forget, ſéeing that ye haue giuen the cauſe, ye ſhould dulie looke for the effect. Ye haue ſpoiled, impriſoned, and threatened gentlemen to death, and that with ſuch hatred of mind, as may not well be borne. The cauſe therof I ſpeake not on, which tried, will happilie be not ſo great: but ſée the thing, ſet murther aſide, it is the heinouſeſt fault to a priuat man. What could more ſpitefullie haue béene doone againſt them, than ye haue vſed with crueltie? Can this doo anie other but bréed in their ſtomachs great grudge of diſpleaſure toward you, and ingender ſuch an hatred, as the weaker and the ſufferer muſt néeds beare the ſmart thereof.

The kings beſt kind of gouernment.

The fruits diſſention.

The kings beſt kind of gouernment is ſo to rule his ſubiects, as a father ordereth his children, and beſt life of obedient ſubiects is one to behaue himſelfe to an other, as though they were brethren vnder the king their father. For loue is not the knot onelie of the common-wealth, whereby diuerſe parts be perfectlie ioined togither in one politike bodie, but alſo the ſtrength and might of the ſame, gathering togither into a ſmall roome with order, which ſcattered would elſe bréed confuſion and debate. Diſſention we ſée in ſmall houſes, and thereby may take example to great common-wealths, how it not onelie decaieth them from wealth, but alſo abateth them from ſtrength. Thinke ſmall examples to take place in great matters, and the like though not ſo great to follow in them both, and thereby learne to iudge of great things vnknowne, by ſmall things perceiued. When brethren agrée not in a houſe, goeth not the weakeſt to the walles; and with whome the father taketh part withall, is not he likeſt to preuaile? Is it not wiſedome for the yoonger brother, after the good will of the parents, to ſéeke his eldeſt brothers fauour, who vnder them is moſt able to doo for him? To ſéeke them both with honeſtie is wiſedome, to looſe them both by ſullenneſſe is madneſſe.

The rebels had cauſe to beare with the gentlem and to haue ued them.

All the parts of a comm wealth be n of like wor thineſſe: E gentlemen more worthi than yeom &c.

Haue there not béene dailie benefits from the gentlemen to you, in ſome more, and in ſome leſſe, but in none conſidered, which they haue more friendlie offered, than you haue gentlie requited? This muſt ye loſe, when ye will not be thankefull, and learne to gaine new good will by deſert, when ye forſake the old friendſhip vnprouoked. And ye muſt thinke that liuing in a common-wealth togither, one kind hath néed of an other: and yet a great ſort of you more néed of one gentleman, than one gentleman of a great ſort of you. And though all be parts of one common-wealth, yet all be not like worthie parts, but all being vnder obedience, ſome kind in more ſubiection one waie, and ſome kind in more ſeruice an other waie. And ſéeing ye be leſſe able by monie and liberalitie to deſerue good will than others be, and your onelie kind of deſert is to ſhew good will, which honeſt men doo well accept as much worth as monie, haue ye not much hindered & hurt your ſelues herein, loſing that one kind of humanitie which ye haue onelie left, and turning it into crueltie, which ye ought moſt to abhor, not onelie bicauſe it is wicked of it ſelfe, but alſo moſt noiſome to you.

I can therefore for my part thinke no leſſe herein, if ye follow your ſtiffeneſſe ſtill, & muſt needs iudge that ye haue wilfullie brought on your ſelues ſuch plagues, as the like could not haue fallen on you, but by your ſelues. Seeing then thus manie waies ye haue hurt the common-welth of this whole countrie within, by deſtruction of ſhires, loſing of harueſt, waſting of vittels, decaieng of manhood, vndooing of farmers, increaſing of vagabonds, mainteining of diſorders, hindring of redreſſes, bringing in of martiall law, and breeding continuall hatred among diuerſe ſtates: what thinke ye, I praie you? Iudge ye not that ye haue committed an odious and deteſtable crime againſt the whole common-wealth, whoſe furtherance ye ought to haue tendered by dutie, and not to haue ſought the hurt thereof with your owne damage?

A breefe enumeration of the inconueniences flowing from this rebellion.

Beſides all theſe inward griefes, which euerie one ſeuerallie muſt needs feele with miſerie, there happeneth ſo manie outward miſchances among ſtrangers to vs with diſdaine; that if there were nothing ill within the realme which we ſhould feele, yet the ſhame which dooth touch vs from other countries, ſhould not onelie mooue, but alſo compell you hartilie to forethinke this your rebellious ſedition. For what ſhall ſtrangers thinke, when they ſhall heare of the great miſorder which is in this realme with ſuch confuſion, that no order of law can keepe you vnder, but muſt be faine to be beaten downe with a kings power? Shall they not firſt thinke the kings maieſtie, in whoſe mind God hath powred ſo much hope for a child, as we may looke for gifts in a man; either for his age to be little ſet by, or for lacke of qualities not to be regarded, or for default of loue to be reſiſted, and no notable grace of God in him conſidered, nor the worthineſſe of his office looked vpon, nor naturall obedience due to him remembred?

Outward miſchances inſuing vpon rebellions to the ſhame of the land and eſtate wherin they be raiſed.

King contemned.

Shall they not next ſuppoſe, ſmall eſtimation to be giuen to the rulers, to whom vnder the king we owe due obedience, that can not in iuſt and lawfull matters be heard, nor men to haue that right iudgement of their wiſedome, as their iuſtice in rule, and foreſight in counſell requireth: but rather prefer their owne fanſies before others experience, and deeme their owne reaſon to be common-wealth, and other mens wiſedome to be but dreaming? Shall they not trulie ſaie the ſubiects to be more vnfaithfull in diſobedience, than other ſubiects worſſe ordered be; and licence of libertie to make wild heads without order, and that they neither haue reaſon that vnderſtand not the miſchiefe of ſedition, nor dutie which follow their beaſtlineſſe, nor loue in them which ſo little remember the common-wealth, nor naturall affection which will dailie ſeeke their owne deſtruction?

Subiects diſordered.

Thus the whole countrie lacking the good opinion of other nations, is caſt into great ſhame by your vnrulineſſe, and the proceedings of the countrie, be they neuer ſo godlie, ſhall be ill ſpoken of, as vnfit to be brought into vſe; and good things hereby that deſerue praiſe, ſhall bide the rebuke of them that liſt to ſpeake ill, and ill things vntouched ſhall be boldlier mainteined. Nothing may with praiſe be redreſſed, where things be meaſured by changeable diſorder, rather than by neceſſarie vſe; and that is thought moſt politike, that men will be beſt contented to doo, and not that which men ſhould be brought vnto by dutie. And with what dutie or vertue in ye, can ye quench out of memorie this foule enterpriſe, or gather a good report againe to this realme, who haue ſo vilelie with reproch ſlandered the ſame, and diuerſlie diſcredited it among others, and abated the good opinion which was had of the iuſt gouernement and ruled order vſed heretofore in this noble realme, which is now moſt grieuous, bicauſe it is now moſt without cauſe.

The whole countrie ill ſpoken of.

Nothing redreſſeable by diſorder chanceable.

If this outward opinion (without further inconuenience) were all, yet it might well be borne, and would with eaſe decaie as it grew: but it hath not onlie hurt vs with voice, but indangered vs in deed, and caſt vs a great deale behind the hand, where elſe we might haue had a iollie foredeale. For that opportunitie of time which ſeldome chanceth, and is alwaies to bee taken, hath beene by your froward meanes loſt this yeare, and ſo vainlie ſpent at home for bringing downe of you, which ſhould elſe profitablie haue beene otherwiſe beſtowed, that it hath beene almoſt as great a loſſe to vs abrode, to leeſe that we might haue obteined, as it was combrance at home, to go about the ouerthrow of you, whoſe condition is to be abhorred. And we might both conuenientlie haue inuaded ſome, if they would not reaſonablie haue growne to ſome kind of friendſhip, and alſo defended others which would beſide promiſe for times ſake vniuſtlie ſet vpon vs, and eaſilie haue made this ſtormie time a faire yeare vnto vs, if our men had beene ſo happie at home, as our likelihood abrode was fortunat.

Further outward hurt beſides voice ingendered of rebellions.

He meaneth the Scots & French with whome we haue had alwaies incomberance.

But what is it (I praie you) either to let ſlip ſuch an occaſion by negligence, or to ſtop it by ſtubbornneſſe, which once paſt awaie, can be by no meanes recouered; no not though with diligence ye go about to reinforce the ſame againe? If ye would with wickednes haue forſaken your faith to your naturall countrie, and haue ſought craftie means to haue vtterlie betraied it to our common enimies: could ye haue had anie other ſpeedier waie than this is, both to make our ſtrength weake, and their weakeneſſe ſtrong? If ye would haue ſought to haue ſpited your countrie, and to haue pleaſed your enimie, and follow their counſell for our hinderance: could ye haue had deuiſed of them anie thing more ſhamefull for vs, and ioifull to them? If they which lie like ſpials, and hearken after likelihoods of things to come, bicauſe they declare opportunitie of times to the enimie, are to be iudged common enimies of the countrie; what ſhall we reaſonablie thinke of you, who doo not ſecretlie bewraie the counſels of other, but openlie betraie the common-wealth with your owne deeds, and haue as much as lieth in you, ſought the ouerthrow of it at home: which if ye had obteined at Gods hand, as he neuer alloweth ſo horrible an enterpriſe, how could yee haue defended it from the ouerthrow of others abrode?

Note in a few words of force the dangerous qualitie of rebellion.

A reaſon drawne from the leſſe to the greater.

For is your vnderſtanding of things ſo ſmall, that although ye ſee your ſelues not vnfit to get the vpper hand of a few gentlemen, that ye be able to beat downe afore the kings power: ye and by chance ye were able to doo that, would ye iudge your ſelues by ſtrength mightie enough, to reſiſt the power of outward nations, that for praiſe ſake would inuade ye? Naie, thinke trulie with your ſelues, that if yee doo ouercome, ye be vnſure both by ſtrength abrode, and diſpleaſure of honeſt men at home, and by the puniſhment of God aboue. And now ye haue not yet gotten in deed, that your vaine hope looketh for by fanſie: thinke how certeinlie ye haue wounded the common-wealth with a ſore ſtroke, in procuring our enimies by our weakeneſſe to ſeeke victorie, and by our outward miſerie to ſeeke outward glorie with inward diſhonor. Which howſoeuer they get, thinke it to be long of you, who haue offered them victorie before they began warre: bicauſe ye would declare to men hereafter (belike) how dangerous it is to make ſturres at home, when they doo not onelie make our Rebellion maketh paſſage to forren inuaſion, & weakeneth our owne region.

ſelues weake, but alſo our enimies ſtrong.

Rebellion animateth the papiſts, & each one beſide that is offended at true religion.

Beſide theſe, there is another ſort of men deſirous of aduantage, and diſdainefull of our wealth, whoſe gréefe is moſt our greateſt hap, and be offended with religion, bicauſe they be drowned in ſuperſtition, men zealed toward God, but not fit to iudge, meaning better without knowledge, than they iudge by their meaning, worthier whoſe ignorance ſhould be taken awaie, than their will ſhould be followed; whome we ſhould more rebuke for their ſtubbornneſſe, than deſpiſe for their ignorance. Theſe ſéeing ſuperſtition beaten downe, and religion ſet vp, Gods word taking place, traditions kept in their kind, difference made betwéene Gods commandements and mens learning, the truth of things ſought out according to Chriſtes inſtitution, examples taken of the primitiue churches vſe, not at the biſhop of Romes ordinance, and true worſhip taught, and wil-worſhip refuſed, doo by blindneſſe rebuke that as by truth they ſhould follow, and by affection follow that as by knowledge they ſhould abhorre, thinking vſage to be truth, and ſcripture to be error, not weieng by the word, but miſconſtruing by cuſtome.

Religion beareth the blame and is counted the cauſe of rebellion, but amiſſe.

And now things be changed to the better, and religion trulier appointed, they ſée matters go awrie, which hurteth the whole realme, and they reioiſe in this miſchéefe as a thing worthilie happened, miſtaking the cauſe, and ſlandering religion, as though [illegible] were no cauſe whie God might haue puniſhed, [illegible] vſed profeſſion might ſtill haue taken place. [illegible] ſée not that where Gods glorie is trulieſt ſet forth, there the diuell is moſt buſie for his part, and laboureth to corrupt by lewdneſſe, that as is gotten out by the truth, thinking that if it were not blemiſhed at the firſt, the reſidue of his falſehood ſhould after leſſe preuaile. So he troubleth by biwaies, that he cannot plainlie withſtand, and vſeth ſubtiltie of ſophiſtrie, where plaine reaſon faileth, and perſuadeth ſimple men that to be a cauſe, which in déed can not be tried and taken for a cauſe. So he cauſeth religion which teacheth obedience, to be iudged the cauſe of ſedition; & the doctrine of loue, the ſéed of diſſention; miſtaking the thing, but perſuading mens minds, and abuſing the plaine meaning of the honeſt to a wicked end of religions ouerthrow.

The diuels ſophiſtrie.

Examples.

The huſbandman had not ſo ſoone throwne ſéed in his ground, but ſteppeth vp the enimie, and hée ſoweth cockle too, and maketh men doubt whether the good huſband had doone well or no, and whether he had ſowne there good ſéed or bad. The fanſifull Iewes in Egypt would not beléeue Ieremie, but thought their plague and their miſerie to come by his means; and leauing of idolatrie to be the cauſe of penurie, wherefore by wilfull aduiſe they intended to forſake the prophets councell, and thought to ſerue God moſt trulie by their rooted & accuſtomed idolatrie. When the chriſtian men were perſecuted in the primitiue church, & dailie ſuffered martyrdome for Chriſts profeſſion, ſuch faire ſeaſon of weather was for thrée or foure yeares togither, that the heathen iudged thereupon God to be delighted with their crueltie, and ſo were perſuaded that with the bloud of the martyrs they pleaſed God highlie. Such fanſies light now in papiſts, and irreligious mens heads, and ioine things by chance happening togither, and conclude the one to be the cauſe of the other, and then delight in true worſhippers hurt, bicauſe they iudge curſedlie the good to be bad, and therefore reioiſe in the puniſhment of the godlie. For they being fleſhlie, iudge by outward things, and perceiue not the inward, for that they lacke the ſpirit and ſo iudge amis, not vnderſtanding God, what diuerſitie he ſuffereth to blind ſtill the wilfull, and how through all dangers he ſaueth his forechoſen.

The Iewes aſcribe their miſerie to a falſe cauſe.

The heathens fond opinion of gods fauouring their crueltie againſt chriſtians.

The papiſts by rebellion haue an euill opinion of Gods holie truth.

And thus haue ye giuen a large occaſion to ſtubborne papiſts, both to iudge amiſſe, and alſo to reioiſe in this wicked chance, contented with our miſchéefe, not liking our religion, and thinking God doth puniſh for this better change, and haue thereby an euill opinion of Gods holie truth, confirmed in them by no ſure ſcripture, but by following of miſchance, which they ought to thinke to come for the pride and ſtubbornneſſe of the people, who doth not accept Gods glorie in good part, nor giue no due praiſe to their Lord and maker. What ſhould I ſaie more? Ye hurt euerie waie, the dangers be ſo great, and the perils ſo manie, which doo dailie follow your diueliſh enterpriſe, that the more I ſéeke in the mater, the more I continuallie ſée to ſaie. And what words can worthilie declare this miſerable beaſtlines of yours, which haue intended to diuide the realme, and arme the one part for the killing of the other? For euen as concord is not onelie the health, but alſo the ſtrength of the realme: ſo is ſedition not onelie the weakneſſe but alſo the apoſtume of the realme, which when it breaketh inwardlie, putteth the ſtate in great danger of recouerie, and corrupteth the whole commonwealth with the rotten furie that it hath béene long putrified withall. For it is not in ſedition as in other faults, which being miſchéefous of themſelues, haue ſome notable hurt alwaies faſt adioined to them: but in this one is there a whole hell of faults, not ſeuerallie ſcattered, but cluſtered on a lumpe togither, and comming on ſo thicke, that it is vnpoſſible for a region armed with all kinds of wiſedome, and ſtrength thereto, to auoid the dangers that iſſue out thereof.

The hurts iſſuing from rebellion out of count.

Concord and diſcord with their differing effects.

The miſchiefs ſpringing of ſedition.

When ſedition once breaketh out, ſée ye not the lawes ouerthrowne, the magiſtrates deſpiſed, ſpoiling of houſes, murthering of men, waſting of countries, increaſe of diſorder, diminiſhing of the realms ſtrength, ſwarming of vagabonds, ſcarſitie of laborers, and all thoſe miſchiefes plentiouſlie brought in, which God is wont to ſcourge ſeuerelie withall, warre, dearth, and peſtilence? And ſéeing ye haue theft & murther, plague & famine, confuſion and idleneſſe linked togither, can ye looke for anie more miſchéefe in one ſhamefull enterpriſe, than ye euidentlie ſée to grow herein? As for warre, although it be miſerable, yet the one part getteth ſomewhat, and reioiſeth in the ſpoile, and ſo goeth luſtier awaie: and either increaſeth his countrie with riches, or inhanſeth himſelfe with glorie: but in ſedition both parts looſe, the ouercommer cannot ſlie, the ouercommed cannot ſpoile; the more the winner winneth, the more he looſeth; the more that eſcape, the more infamous men liue; all that is gained is ſcarſelie ſaued; the winning is loſſe, the loſſe is deſtruction, both waſt themſelues, and the whole moſt waſted; the ſtrengthening of themſelues, the decaie of the countrie; the ſtriuing for the victorie, is a preie to the enimie: and ſhortlie to ſaie, the helliſh turmoile of ſedition ſo farre paſſeth the common miſerie of warre, as to ſlaie himſelfe is more heinous, than to be ſlaine of another.

Forren war farre better than ſedition at home.

The praiſe and benefits of peace.

O noble peace, what wealth bringeſt thou in, how doo all things flouriſh in field and in towne, what forwardneſſe of religion, what increaſe of learning, what grauitie in counſell, what deuiſe of wit, what order of maners, what obedience of laws, what reuerence of ſtates, what ſafegard of houſes, what quietneſſe of life, what honor of countries, what friendſhip of minds, what honeſtie of pleaſure haſt thou allwaies mainteined, whoſe happineſſe we knew not, while now we féele thy lacke, and ſhall learne by miſerie to vnderſtand plentie, and ſo to auoid miſchiefe by the hurt that it bringeth, and learne to ſerue better, where rebellion is once knowen; and ſo to liue trulie, The rebels neglect the right meanes of redreſſing things amiſſe, and follow their owne fanſies.

The ſtate of a countrie or land in time of ſedition and tumult.

trulie, and keepe the kings peace. What good ſtate were ye in afore ye began, not pricked with pouertie, but ſturred with miſchiefe, to ſeeke your deſtruction, hauing waies to redreſſe all that was amiſſe? Magiſtrats moſt readie to tender all iuſtice, and pitifull in hearing the poore mens cauſes, which ſought to amend matters more than you can deuiſe, and were readie to redreſſe them better than ye could imagine: and yet for a headineſſe ye could not be contented; but in deſpite of God, who commandeth obedience, and in contempt of the king, whoſe lawes doo ſeeke your wealth, and to ouerthrow the countrie, which naturallie we ſhould loue, ye would proudlie riſe, and doo ye wot not what, and amend things by rebellion to your vtter vndooing. What ſtate leaue ye vs in now, beſieged with enimies, diuided at home, made poore with ſpoile and loſſe of our harueſt, vnordered and caſt downe with ſlaughter and hatred, hindered from amendments by our owne diueliſh haſt, indangered with ſickeneſſe by reaſon of miſorder, laid open to mens pleaſures for breaking of the lawes, and feebled to ſuch faintneſſe that ſcarſelie it will be couered.

Reaſons to withdraw the rebels from their enterpriſes of rebellion, and to allure them to loialtie.

Wherefore for Gods ſake haue pittie on your ſelues, conſider how miſerablie ye haue ſpoiled, deſtroied, and waſted vs all: and if for deſperatneſſe ye care not for your ſelues, yet remember your wiues, your children, your countrie, and forſake this rebellion. With humble ſubmiſſion acknowledge your faults, and tarie not the extremitie of the kings ſword, leaue off with repentance, and turne to your duties, aſke God forgiueneſſe, ſubmit ye to your king, be contented for a common-wealth one or two to die. And ye capteins for the reſidue ſacrifice your ſelues, ye ſhall ſo beſt atteine the kings gratious pardon, ſaue the aſſemblie, and helpe the common-wealth, & to declare your doings to proceed of no ſtubborneſſe; but all this miſchiefe to grow out of ignorance, which ſeeing the miſerie, would redreſſe the fault, & to recouer beſt the blot of your diſorder, and ſtaie the great miſeries which be like to follow. Thus if ye doo not, thinke trulie with your ſelues, that God is angrie with you for your rebellion, the kings ſword drawne to defend his countrie, the crie of the poore to God againſt ye, the readineſſe of the honeſt in armor to vanquiſh ye, your death to be at hand, which ye cannot eſcape, hauing God againſt ye, as he promiſeth in his word, the kings power to ouerthrow ye, gathered in the field, the commonwelth to beate ye downe with ſtripes and with curſſes, the ſhame of your miſchiefe to blemiſh ye for euer.

A concluſion peremptorie againſt irreuocable rebels.

¶Thus far this neceſſarie treatiſe touching rebellion, penned by ſir Iohn Cheeke, a gentleman euerie waie in complet ſort ſatiſfieng the report blazed abroad of him. For if there were no more teſtimonies extant in the world, but this onelie treatiſe diſcourſing Kets rebellion; it were enough to warrant no leſſe true, than in common ſpeech and writing is left witneſſed of him. And ſuerlie it appeareth, that as in this gentleman there was an extraordinarie heape of laudable gifts; ſo was there alſo in him the right vſe of them all. Wherby he grew in ſuch fauor with king Henrie the eight, that partlie for his abſolute knowledge in toongs, ſpeciallie the Greeke and Latine, and alſo for his integritie of life and religion; he was choſen ſchoolemaiſter to yoong prince Edward, to traine him vp in the right vnderſtanding, both of forren languages, & the purenes of Gods ſeruice. Inſomuch that by his induſtrie ſuch effects followed (God aboue proſpering his actions) that the yoong prince, when he came to the kingdome was mindfull of him, and among other (I will not ſaie gratuities, where cauſe of deſert maketh challenge of ſome recompenſe) tokens of beneuolence, aduanced him to the dignitie of knighthood; as hereafter in due place maie appeare. Of this worthie man, whoſe praiſe though neuer ſo exceſſiue (if meet for a man) is equiualent vnto his merits, Iohn Leland, vpon preſenting vnto him a booke, taketh occaſion to write this epigram, compriſing in ſumme no leſſe than is here vnder in Engliſh remembred:

The French king purpoſed to ſurpriſe Gerneſeie and Ierſeie, but is repelled.

During the time of theſe commotions and ſturs here within the realme, to the great danger of the ſtate; the French king hauing knowledge thereof, ment not to omit the oportunitie offered, to recouer out of the Engliſhmens hands thoſe fortreſſes which they held at Bullongne and in Bullongnois. Whereupon he gaue ſummons to the gentlemen and men of armes, and others of his realme, to put themſelues in order with all their furniture, that they might be readie to attend him in his armie in Bullongnois by a daie appointed. And about the ſame time, that is to ſaie, in the beginning of Auguſt; the French king purpoſing to ſurpriſe the Iles of Gerneſeie and Ierſeie, appointed certeine gallies and ſhips of warre to paſſe thither; but being receiued by the king of Englands nauie that laie there, and other of the Iland, they were beaten backe and repelled, with the loſſe of a thouſand men (as ſome write) and ſo were conſtreined to retire without atchiuing their enterpriſe.

Iohn Fox.

The French king is aſhamed that anie report ſhould paſſe of his euill ſucceſſe.

Credible word was brought out of France to the lord protector, that into one towne in one veſſell were brought at the leaſt three ſcore gentlemen to be buried, & alſo an inhibition giuen out by the French king, not to ſpeake of the euill ſucceſſe of that iournie. In the meane time, the French king being come downe vnto Abuile, departed from thence the ſixteenth of Auguſt, and comming vnto Rue, lodged there that night, and the next daie came to Monſtreull, where he found the coneſtable and monſieur Daumalle. The next daie being the eighteenth of Auguſt, he came to his armie lodged foure leagues on this ſide Monſtreull at a village called Neufcaſtell, neere to the forreſt of Ardelo, vpon the waie that leadeth to Bullongne. The ſame daie were certeine pioners ſent to Pont de Bricque to repare the bridge there, and to make the waies eaſie for the artillerie to paſſe. The next daie the ſaid king with his armie paſſed by Bullongne berg, and camped that night on a little hill betwixt that forreſt and the forreſt of Suren.

The French king perſeuereth in his former purpoſe, and martiall action.

In this place he cauſed trenches to be caſt about a plot of ground, after the maner of a fortreſſe, within the which he left certeine bands of men of warre to be a ſafegard vnto ſuch as ſhould paſſe to and fro with vittels to furniſh his campe. He ſtaied not there paſt a daie & a halfe, but remoued to Ardenton, a mile or little more beyond Marguiſen; from thence he came with his armie, and lodged on a hill, ſomewhat more than a mile & a halfe from Hambleteuue. The French king hauing viewed the forts, cauſed fiue and twentie péeces of artillerie to be planted againſt that fort, which was built in a place called the Almaine campe, but the Frenchmen named it Le fort de Selaque, diſtant from Hambleteuue about a quarter of a mile. The artillerie had not gone off little more than the ſpace of two houres, but that Charls Sturton capteine of that péece, and George Willoughbie a gentleman aſſociat with him, came forth to parlée with the Coneſtable, offering to yéeld the fort into his hands, vpon condition they might depart with bag and baggage. But as they were thus in hand to make their compoſition, the Frenchmen thruſt forward to the rampiers, and entered in plumps into the fortreſſe, ſlue foureſcore perſons, & tooke the reſt priſoners. There might be in all within that péece two hundred and thirtie perſons, men and women. This happened the foure and twentith of Auguſt, being Bartholomew daie.

Charles Sturton, and George Willoughbie.

Les chroniques de Aquitaine.

The fort called Almaine campe wonne.

This doone, the king cauſed part of the artillerie to be planted againſt the caſtell of Hambleteuue, ſituated at the one end of the towne néere to the ſea ſide. Towards night monſieur de Vandoſme gaue an approch to the ſaid caſtell, and they within by commandement of the lord Greie retired to the maine fort to helpe to furniſh the ſame, wanting numbers ſufficient to defend it. The next daie being the fiue and twentith of Auguſt, the king cauſed approches to be made vnto the great fort, and the morrow after the batterie began moſt furiouſlie. The ſame daie after dinner, the king ſummoned them within to yéeld; but the lord Iohn Greie being generall (although he ſaw how weake the péece was of it ſelfe, & the lacke of ſufficient numbers of men to reſiſt ſuch a puiſſant force, as the French king had there with him) would not yet hearken vnto anie talke, nor ſuffer the herald to come néere; for that he ſhould not perceiue the weakeneſſe of the péece: and ſo he was commanded to get him thence with ſpéed, or elſe they would cauſe him to be packing ſmallie to his eaſe. The French king ſore offended herewith, that his herald was ſo vncourteouſlie vſed, cauſed the batterie to be reinforced with great diligence, which diſmounting their ordinance within, and beating downe their rampiers, made ſuch breaches, that my lord Iohn and the capteins within perceiued they were not able by anie meanes to defend the place anie longer. Herevpon they offered to render the fort to the king vpon compoſition: which in the end fell out to be thus, that the ſouldiers ſhould depart with their liues ſaued, and that their generall (for honor ſake) ſhould haue one horſſe to ride on in his corſlet, without ſword or dagger, and likewiſe two other capteins with him: but as for the other ſouldiers, with the women and children, ſhould depart on foot in their ſhirts, leauing all their goods and ſubſtance behind them. After it was agréed that the fort ſhould be thus ſurrendered, there entered monſieur de Chatillon that was after admerall of France, and monſieur de Deſſe, latelie returned out of Scotland. The French ſouldiers entring by ſtealth into the fort by the breaches, committed foule diſorders, not onelie in ranſacking the houſes, but alſo in ſpoiling the ſouldiers by force, intreating them in moſt rigorous maner.

The French writers report of their owne countriemens crueltie and ſauageneſſe.

The French writers confeſſe, that it was pitie to ſée the poore men and women ſo miſerablie handled and abuſed as they were by the outragious ſoldiors that thus entred the fort, and ſacked all that they could laie hands vpon. Monſieur de Deſſe ſaued a great number of women and yoong maidens from the cruell hands of their aduerſaries, cauſing them to paſſe forth by the breach, and preſented them to the king, who appointed that they ſhould be conueied in ſafetie, with all that they had about them, till they had gotten out of danger. Monſieur de Chatillon, by the kings commandement, cauſed all the reſt within the fort to come forth, who paſſing thrée and thrée in a range came before the king, who ſtood there to behold them, with the whole armie placed ſo in order on either ſide the waie as they ſhould come, that they might paſſe betwixt their ranks, as it were through a lane. They that came forth in this ſort might be (as the French writers record) about ſeuen or eight hundred in all of men and women, whereof there were manie hurt and maimed; ſome with halfe a ſhirt on to couer them, and diuerſe ſtarke naked. The lord Iohn Greie being mounted on a curtaille, paſſing by the French king, and ſaluting him, was courteouſlie of him embraced.

The numbe that came forth of Hambleteuue,

The morrow after was the fort of Blackneſſe or Blaconneſſe rendered to the French king, with like conditions as they of Hambleteuue had rendered theirs. This was on the tueſdaie the ſeuen and twentith of Auguſt. The nine and twentith of Auguſt ſir Nicholas Arnault conueieng all the artillerie, munition, vittels, and goods out of Bullongne berg, cauſed fire to be ſet on that fort, and retired with all his ſoldiors and other people vnto Bullongne. Wherevpon ſhortlie after the Frenchmen ſeized vpon the ſaid place of Bullongne berg, & kept it. The French king leauing monſieur de Chatillon within Hambleteuue with the old bands of the French footmen, returned towards Bullongne, & approching within a mile and a halfe of the Old man, meant to build there a fort on the ſea ſide: but what through ſuch ſharpe ſkirmiſhes as the Engliſhmen continuallie were redie to make with his men, and what through the abundance of raine which fell in that ſeaſon, he was conſtreined to breake vp his campe, and leauing ſtrong garriſons both of horſſemen and footmen in all thoſe places, which he had in that ſeaſon wonne out of the Engliſhmens hands, he returned himſelfe with the princes of his bloud into France.

Cauſes that compelled the French king to breake vp his campe.

In this meane time whileſt the French king was thus occupied, to vſe the oportunitie of time in recouering of thoſe fortreſſes in Bullongnois out of the Engliſhmens hands, the kings maieſtie and his councell were buſie ſtill in quieting his rebellious ſubiects here in England: and finallie for meane of a full pacification, and to ſet all things in good frame and quiet reſt, the king publiſhed his graces moſt generall and frée pardon to all rebelles, ſo that they would forthwith (vpon publication of the ſame pardon) returne euerie man to his houſe and countrie; which they gladlie did: and ſo theſe ſeditious and moſt dangerous troubles were brought to end and pacified.

The kings generall pardon.

¶ Alſo in this buſie time Marie Steward quéene of Scots was conueied by ſea out of Scotland into France, and there on the ninetéenth daie of Aprill 1549, was married in our ladie church in Paris (with great triumph and ſolemnitie) to Francis the Dolphin, eldeſt ſonne vnto king Henrie the ſecond of that name French king. This conueieng of the yoong quéene is reported by one to haue béene priuilie wrought, at ſuch time as the councell of England were in ſome expectation and hope to obteine hir. Neuertheleſſe the ſubtill aduiſe of the French, and the trecherous forwardneſſe of the Scots, vtterlie diſappointed the honeſt and honorable purpoſe of the Engliſh. Now when the yoong quéene and hir traine, with the gard of hir perſon (be they whome you will) were vnder ſaile, the Engliſh nauie was abroade, and lieng in wait to haue intercepted hir courſe, courſe, meant not onlie to ſkirmiſh, but alſo to recouer the yong queene from the French in ſpite of their hearts, had not the king of England and the moſt of his councell flatlie forbidden them to attempt anie warlike incounter, for certeine iuſt and weightie cauſes to them knowne. But the Scots ſmarted for this their vaine lightneſſe, as in former times for like practiſes of their vile lewdneſſe, as C.O. ſaith:

In this troubleſome yeere alſo Edmund Bonner biſhop of London preached a ſermon at Paules croſſe, for the which he was accuſed vnto the councell by William Latimer parſon of ſaint Laurence Pountneie, and John Hooper ſometime a white monke, and ſo conuented before the archbiſhop of Canturburie, and other commiſſioners at Lambeth, on the twentith daie of that ſame moneth, and ſent to the Marſhalſea. The councell withdraw themſelues into priuat conferences about the lord protectors diſplacing.

Now after that theſe hurlie burlies were throughlie quieted, manie of the lords of the realme, as well councellors as other, miſliking the gouernment of the protector, began to withdraw themſelues from the court, and reſorting to London, fell to ſecret conſultation for redreſſe of things, but namelie for the diſplacing of the lord protector. And ſuddenlie vpon that occaſion manie maruelled, but few knew. Euerie lord and councellor went through the citie weaponed, and had their ſeruants likewiſe weaponed, attending vpon them in new liueries, to the great woondering of manie. And at the laſt a great aſſemblie of the ſaid councellors was made at the earle of Warwiks lodging, which was then at Elie place in Holborne, whither all the confederats in this matter came priuilie armed; and finallie concluded to poſſeſſe the tower of London, which by the policie of ſir William Paulet lord treaſuror of England was peaceablie obteined, & who by order of the ſaid confederats immediatlie remooued ſir John Markam then lieutenant of the tower, and placed in that roome ſir Leonard Chamberleine. And after that the ſaid councell was broken vp at Elie place, the earle of Warwike remooued forthwith into the citie of London, and laie in the houſe of one John Yorke a citizen of London, who was then cheefe maiſter of the mint, kept at Suffolke place in Southworke. The lord protector hearing of the maner of the aſſemblie of this councell, and of the taking of the tower, which ſeemed to him verie ſtrange and doubtfull, did preſentlie the ſaid night remoue frō Hampton court, taking the king with him, vnto the caſtell of Windſore, and there began to fortifie the ſame, and withall wrote a letter to that noble gentleman the lord Ruſſell lord priuie ſeale remaining as yet in the weſt countrie, aduertiſing him of theſe troubles as followeth.

After our right hartie commendations to your good lordſhip. Here hath of late riſen ſuch a conſpiracie againſt the kings maieſtie & vs, as neuer hath beene ſeene, the which they can not mainteine, with ſuch vaine letters and falſe tales ſurmiſed, as was neuer ment nor intended on vs. They pretend and ſaie, that we haue ſold Bullongne to the French, and that we doo withhold wages from the ſoldiers, & other ſuch tales and letters they doo ſpread abroad (of the which if anie one thing were true, we would not wiſh to liue) the matter now being brought to a maruellous extremitie, ſuch as we would neuer haue thought it could haue come vnto, eſpeciallie of thoſe men towards the kings maieſtie and vs, of whome we haue deſerued no ſuch thing, but rather much fauour and loue. But the caſe being as it is, this is to require & praie you, to haſten you hither to the defenſe of the kings maieſtie, in ſuch force and power as you maie, to ſhew the part of a true gentleman, and of a verie friend: the which thing we truſt God ſhall reward, and the kings maieſtie in time to come, and we ſhall neuer be vnmindfull of it too. We are ſure you ſhall haue other letters from them, but as ye tender your dutie to the kings maieſtie, we require you to make no ſtaie, but immediatlie repaire with ſuch force as ye haue to his highneſſe in his caſtell of Windſor, and cauſe the reſt of ſuch force as ye maie make to follow you. And ſo we bid you right hartilie farewell. From Hampton court the ſixt of October.

An anſwer to the lord protectors letter.

The effect of the lord Ruſſels letter anſwering the lord protector.

To this letter of the lord protectors ſent the ſixt of October, the lord Ruſſell returning anſwer againe vpon the eight of the ſaid moneth, firſt lamented the heauie diſſention fallen betweene the nobilitie and him, which he tooke for ſuch a plague, as a greater could not be ſent of almightie God vpon this realme being the next waie (ſaid he) to make vs of conquerors, ſlaues; and like to induce vpon the whole realme an vniuerſall thraldome and calamitie, vnleſſe the mercifull goodneſſe of the Lord doo helpe, and ſome wiſe order be taken in ſtaieng theſe great extremities. And as touching the dukes requeſt in his letters, forſomuch as he had heard before of the broile of the lords, and feared leaſt ſome conſpiracie had beene meant againſt the kings perſon, he haſted forward with ſuch companie as he could make, for the ſuertie of the king as to him apperteined. Now perceiuing by the lords letters ſent vnto him the ſame ſixt daie of October, theſe tumults to riſe vpon priuat cauſes betweene him and them, he therefore thought it expedient, that a conuenient power ſhould be leuied, to be in a readineſſe to withſtand the worſt (what perils ſoeuer might inſue) for the preſeruation both of the king and ſtate of the realme from inuaſion of forren enimies, and alſo for the ſtaieng of bloudſhed, if anie ſuch thing ſhould be intended betwixt the parties in the heat of this faction. And this he thinking beſt for the diſcharge of his allegiance, humblie beſought his grace to haue the ſame alſo in ſpeciall regard and conſideration; firſt, that the kings maieſtie be put in no feare; and that if there be anie ſuch thing, wherein he hath giuen iuſt cauſe to them thus to proceed, he would ſo conforme himſelfe, as no ſuch priuat quarrels doo redound to the publike diſturbance of the realme: certifieng moreouer the duke, that if it were true which he vnderſtood by the letters of the lords, that he ſhould ſend about proclamations and letters for raiſing vp of the commons, he liked not the ſame. Notwithſtanding he truſted well that his wiſedome would take ſuch a waie, as no effuſion of bloud ſhould follow.

The contents of the ſecond anſwer of the lord Ruſſell to the lord protector.

And thus much being conteined in his former letters the eight of October, in his next letters againe written the eleuenth of October, the ſaid lord Ruſſell reioiſing to heare of the moſt reaſonable offers of the lord protector made to the lords, wrote vnto him and promiſed to doo, what in the vttermoſt power of him (and likewiſe of ſir William Herbert ioined togither with him) did lie, to worke ſome honorable reconciliation betweene him & them: ſo as his ſaid offers being accepted and ſatiſfied, ſome good concluſion might inſue, according to their good hope and expectation: ſignifieng moreouer, that as touching the leuieng of men, they had reſolued to haue the ſame in readineſſe for the benefit of the realme, to occurre all inconueniences whatſoeuer, that either by forren inuaſion or otherwiſe might happen: & ſo hauing their power at hand to draw neere, wherby they might haue the better oportunitie to be ſolicitors and meanes for this reformation on both parts, &c. And thus much for the anſwer of the lord Ruſſell to the lord protectors letters.

The good lord Ruſſell a ſolicitor for peace betweene the lord protector and the lords.

The lords of the councell aſſembled againſt the lord protector.

But now to proceed and go forward with the matter of the lords, who togither with the earle of Warwike (vpon what occaſion God knoweth) were aſſembled at London (as ye haue heard) againſt the lord protector. When the king with his councell at Hampton court heard therof, firſt ſecretarie Peter with the kings meſſage was ſent vnto them, whome the lords notwithſtanding deteined ſtill with them, making as yet no anſwer to the meſſage. Wherevpon the lord protector wrote as followeth.

A letter of the lord protectors to the councell at London.

The protectors letter to the lords.

My lords we commend vs heartilie vnto you. And wheras the kings maieſtie was informed that you were aſſembled in ſuch ſort as you doo, and now remaine, and was aduiſed by vs and ſuch other of his councell as were then here about his perſon, to ſend maſter ſecretarie Peter vnto you with ſuch a meſſage, as whereby might haue inſued the ſuertie of his maieſties perſon, with the preſeruation of his realme and ſubiects, and the quiet both of vs and your ſelues, as maſter ſecretarie can well declare to you: his maieſtie and we of his councell here doo not a little maruell, that you ſtaie ſtill with you the ſaid maſter ſecretarie, & haue not as it were vouchſafed to ſend anſwer to his maieſtie, neither by him nor yet by anie other. And for our ſelues we doo much more maruell and are ſorie, as both we and you haue good cauſe to be, to ſee the maner of your doings bent with force of violence, to bring the kings maieſtie & vs to theſe extremities.

No word hitherto ſent from the lords to the lord protector what they required of him to doo.

Which as we intend, if you will take no other waie but violence, to defend (as nature and allegiance doth bind vs) to extremitie of death, and to put all to Gods hand, who giueth victorie as it pleaſeth him: ſo if that anie reaſonable conditions & offers would take place (as hitherto none hath beene ſignified vnto vs from you, nor we doo not vnderſtand, what you doo require or ſeeke, or what you doo meane) and that you doo ſeeke no hurt to the kings maieſties perſon, as touching all other priuat matters, to auoid the effuſion of chriſtian bloud, and to preſerue the kings maieſties perſon, his realme and ſubiects, you ſhall find vs agreeable vnto anie reaſonable conditions that you will require. For we doo eſteeme the kings wealth and tranquillitie of the realme more than all other worldlie things, yea than our owne life. Thus praieng you to ſend vs your determinate anſwer herein by maſter ſecretarie Peter, or if you will not let him go, by this bearer, we beſeech God to giue both you and vs grace to determinate this matter, as maie be to Gods honor, the preſeruation of the king, and the quiet of vs all: which maie be, if the fault be not in you. And ſo we bid you moſt hartilie farewell. From the kings maieſties caſtell of Windſor the ſeuenth of October, 1549.

Your lordſhips louing friend
Edward Summerſet.

The lords continue in their intended purpoſe againſt the lord protector.

After the receipt of theſe letters, the lords ſeeming not greatlie to regard the offers conteined therein, perſiſted in their intended purpoſe; and continuing ſtill in London conferred with the maior of London and his brethren, firſt willing them to cauſe a good and ſubſtantiall watch by night, and a good ward by daie to be kept for the ſafegard of the citie, and the ports and gates thereof: which was conſented vnto, and the companies of London in their turnes warned to watch and ward accordinglie. Then the ſaid lords and councellors demanded of the lord maior and his brethren fiue hundred men to aid them, to fetch the lord protector out of Windſor from the king. But therevnto the maior anſwered, that he could grant no aid without the aſſent of the common councell of the citie: wher vpon the next daie a common councell was ſummoned to the Guildhall in London. But in this meane time the ſaid lords of the councell aſſembled themſelues at the lord maiors houſe in London, who was then ſir Henrie Amcotes fiſhmonger, and Iohn Yorke and Richard Turke ſhiriffes of the ſaid citie. And there the ſaid councell agreed and publiſhed forthwith a proclamation againſt the lord protector, the effect of which proclamation was as followeth.

A proclamation publiſhed againſt the lord protector.

1 That the lord protector, by his malicious and euill gouernement, was the occaſion of all the ſedition that of late hath happened within the realme.

2 The loſſe of the kings peeces in France.

3 That he was ambitious and ſought his owne glorie, as appeared by his building of moſt ſumptuous and coſtlie buildings, and ſpeciallie in the time of the kings warres, and the kings ſoldiers vnpaied.

4 That he eſteemed nothing the graue councell of the councellors.

5 That he ſowed ſedition betweene the nobles, the gentlemen, and commons.

6 That the nobles aſſembled themſelues togither at London, for none other purpoſe, but to haue cauſed the protector to haue liued within his limits, and to haue put ſuch order for the kings maieſtie as apperteined, whatſoeuer the protectors doings were, which (as they ſaid) were vnnaturall, ingrate, and traitorous.

7 That the protector ſlandered the councell to the king, and did what in him laie to cauſe variance betweene the king and his nobles.

8 That he was a great traitor, and therefore the lords deſired the citie and commons to aid them to take him from the king. And in witneſſe and teſtimonie of the contents of the ſaid proclamation the lords ſubſcribed their names and titles as followeth.

Witneſſes to the contents of the ſaid proclamation.

The lord Rich lord chancellor, the lord S. Iohn lord great maiſter and preſident of the councell, the lord marqueſſe of Northampton, the earle of Warwike lord great chamberleine, the earle of Arundell lord chamberleine, the earle of Shrewesburie, the earle of Southampton Wriotheſleie, ſir Thomas Cheinie knight treaſuror of the kings houſe and lord warden of the cinque ports, ſir Iohn Gage knight coneſtable of the tower, ſir William Peter knight ſecretarie, ſir Edward North knight, ſir Edward Montague cheefe iuſtice of the common plees, ſir Raſe Sadler, ſir Iohn Baker, ſir Edward Wotton, doctor Wotton deane of Canturburie, ſir Richard Southwell.

After the foreſaid proclamation was proclamed, the lords or the moſt of them continuing and lieng in London, came the next daie to the Guildhall, during ring the time that the lord maior and his brethren ſat in their court or inner chamber, and entered and communed a long while with them, and at the laſt the maior and his brethren came forth vnto the common councell, where was read the kings letter ſent vnto the maior and citizens, commanding them to aid him with a thouſand men, as hath maiſter Fox, and to ſend the ſame to his caſtell at Windſore: and to the ſame letter was adioined the kings hand, and the lord protectors. On the other ſide, by the mouth of the recorder it was requeſted, that the citizens would grant their aid rather vnto the lords: for that the protector had abuſed both the kings maieſtie, and the whole realme, and without that he were taken from the king, & made to vnderſtand his follie, this realme was in a great hazard: and therefore required that the citizens would willinglie aſſent to aid the lords with fiue hundred men: herevnto was none other anſwer made but ſilence. But the recorder (who at that time was a worthie gentleman called maiſter Brooke) ſtill cried vpon them for anſwer.

George Stadlow citizen of London maketh anſwer to the recorder of London verie wiſelie and worthilie.

At the laſt ſtepped vp a wiſe and good citizen, named (as maiſter Fox ſaith) George Stadlow, and ſaid thus. In this caſe it is good for vs to thinke of things paſt to auoid the danger of things to come. I remember (ſaith he) in a ſtorie written in Fabians chronicle, of the warre betwéene the king and his barons, which was in the time of king Henrie the third, and the ſame time the barons (as our lords doo now) commanded aid of the maior and citie of London, and that in a rightfull cauſe for the commonweale, which was for the execution of diuerſe good lawes, wherevnto the king before had giuen his conſent, and after would not ſuffer them to take place, and the citie did aid the lords. Now it came to an open battell, wherein the lords preuailed, and tooke the king and his ſonne priſoners, and vpon certeine conditions the lords reſtored againe the king and his ſonne to their liberties. And among all other conditions, this was one, that the king ſhould not onelie grant his pardon to the lords, but alſo to the citizens of London, which was granted, yea and the ſame ratified by act of parlement. But what followed?

what it is to fall into the wrath and diſpleaſure of the prince.

The aduiſe of George Stadlow.

Was it forgotten? No ſuerlie, nor yet forgiuen during the kings life. The liberties of the citie were taken awaie, ſtrangers appointed to be our heads and gouernours, the citizens giuen awaie bodie and goods, and from one perſecution to another were moſt miſerablie afflicted: ſuch it is to enter into the wrath of a prince, as Salomon ſaith; The wrath and indignation of a prince is death. Wherefore forſomuch as this aid is required of the kings maieſtie, whoſe voice we ought to hearken vnto (for he is our high ſhepheard) rather than vnto the lords: and yet I would not wiſh the lords to be clearlie ſhaken off, but that they with vs, and we with them may ioine in ſute, and make our moſt humble petition to the kings maieſtie, that it would pleaſe his highneſſe, to heare ſuch complaint againſt the gouernement of the lord protector as may be iuſtlie alledged and prooued. And I doubt not but this matter will be ſo pacified, that neither ſhall the king nor yet the lords haue cauſe to ſéeke for further aid, neither we to offend anie of them both. After this tale the commons ſtaied, and the lord maior & his brethren for that time brake vp, and afterward communed with the lords.

Sir Philip Hobbie ſent to the king by the lords.

The lords ſat the next daie in councell in the Star chamber, and from thence they ſent ſir Philip Hobbie with their letters of credence to the kings maieſtie, beſéeching his highneſſe to giue credit to that which the ſaid Philip ſhould declare vnto his maieſtie in their names: & the king gaue him libertie to ſpeake, and moſt gentlie heard all that he had to ſaie. And trulie he did ſo wiſelie declare his meſſage, and ſo grauelie told his tale in the name of the lords, yea therewithall ſo vehementlie and gréeuouſlie againſt the protector, who was alſo there preſent by the king, that in the end, the lord protector was commanded from the kings preſence, and ſhortlie was committed to ward in a tower within the caſtell of Windſore called Beauchamps tower. And ſoone after were ſtaied ſir Thomas Smith, ſir Michaell Stanhope, and ſir Iohn Thin knights, maſter Whalleie, maſter Fiſher, Woolſe of the priuie chamber, Grate of Reading, and diuers other gentlemen that attended vpon the lord protector. And the ſame daie the lords of the councell came to Windſore to the king, and the next daie they brought from thence the lord protector, and the other that were there ſtaied, and conueied them through the citie of London, with as much woonderment as might be, vnto the tower, where they remained priſoners.

The lord protector committed to priſon.

Abr.Fl. ex I.Stow.1044.

The lord protectour committed to the tower.

¶ Touching the manner of the dukes comming to the tower from Windſore, I find that it was on the fouretéenth of October in the after noone, at which time he was brought on horſſebacke through Holburne, in at Newgate, and ſo to the tower of London, accompanied with diuerſe lords and gentlemen with thrée hundred horſſe: the lord maior, ſir Rafe Warren, ſir Iohn Greſham, maiſter recorder, ſir William Locke, and both the ſhiriffes, and other knights, ſitting on their horſſes againſt Soper lane, with all the officers with halberds, and from Holburne bridge to the tower, certeine aldermen or their deputies on horſſebacke in euerie ſtréet, with a number of houſholders ſtanding with billes as he paſſed.] Shortlie after the lords reſorted to the tower, and there charged the protector with ſundrie articles, as followeth.

Articles obiected againſt the lord protector.

IN primis, you tooke vpon you the office of a protector and gouernour, vpon condition, expreſſelie and ſpeciallie, that you would doo nothing in the kings affaires publikelie or priuatlie, but by the aſſent of the late kings executors.

2 Alſo you, contrarie to the ſaid condition, of your owne authoritie, did ſtaie and let iuſtice, and ſubuerted the lawes, as well by your letters as by your commandements.

3 Alſo you cauſed diuerſe perſons, being areſted and impriſoned for treaſon, murther, manſlaughter and felonie, to be diſcharged and ſet at large, againſt the kings lawes and ſtatutes of this realme.

4 Alſo you haue made and ordeined lieutenants for the kings armies, and other weightie affaires vnder your owne writing and ſeale.

5 Alſo you haue communed with the ambaſſadors of other realmes, diſcourſing alone with them in the weightie cauſes of this realme.

6 Alſo you haue ſometime rebuked, checked and tawnted, as well priuatlie as openlie, diuerſe of the kings moſt honorable councellors, for ſhewing and declaring their aduiſes and opinions againſt your purpoſes in the kings weightie affaires, ſaieng somtimes to them, that you néed not to open matters vnto them, and would therefore be otherwiſe aduiſed: and that you would, if they were not agréeable to your opinion, put them out, and take other at your pleaſure.

7 Alſo you had and held againſt the law in your owne houſe, a court of requeſts, and thereby did inforce diuerſe the kings ſubiects to anſwer for their frée holds and goods, and determined the ſame to the ſubuerſion of the ſame lawes.

8 Alſo you being no officer, without the aduiſe of the councell, or the more part of them, did diſpoſe of the offices of the kings gift for monie, and granted leaſes and wards of the kings, and gaue preſentations to the kings benefices and biſhopriks, hauing no authoritie ſo to doo. And further, you did meddle with the ſelling of the kings lands.

9 Alſo you commanded multiplication and alcumiſtrie to be practiſed to abuſe the kings coine.

10 Alſo you cauſed a proclamation to be made concerning incloſures, whereby the common people haue made diuerſe inſurrections, and leuied open war, and diſtreined and ſpoiled diuerſe of the kings ſubiects, which proclamation went forth againſt the will of the whole councell.

11 Alſo you haue cauſed a commiſſion with certeine articles therevnto annexed, to be made out concerning incloſures of commons, high waies, decaieng of cottages, and diuerſe other things, giuing the commiſſioners authoritie to heare and determine the ſame cauſes, to the ſubuerſion of the laws and ſtatutes of this realme: whereby much ſedition, inſurrection, and rebellion haue riſen and growne among the kings ſubiects.

12 Alſo you haue ſuffered the rebels and traitors to aſſemble and to lie in campe and armor againſt the king, his nobles, and gentlemen, without anie ſpéedie ſubduing or repreſſing of them.

13 Alſo you did comfort and incourage diuerſe of the ſaid rebels, by giuing of them diuerſe ſums of your owne monie, and by promiſing to diuerſe of them, fées, rewards, and ſeruices.

14 Alſo you in fauor of the ſaid rebels did againſt the lawes cauſe a proclamation to be made, that none of the ſaid rebels and traitors ſhould be ſued or vexed by anie perſon; for anie their offenſes in the ſaid rebellion, to the cleare ſubuerſion of the ſame lawes.

15 Alſo you haue ſaid in time of the rebellion, that you liked well the dooings and procéedings of the ſaid rebels and traitors, and ſaid that the couetouſneſſe of the gentlemen gaue occaſion to the common people to riſe: ſaieng alſo, that better it is for the commons to die, than periſh for lacke of liuing.

16 Alſo you ſaid that the lords of the parlement were loth to incline themſelues to reformation of incloſures and other things: therefore the people had good cauſe to reforme the things themſelues.

17 Alſo you after the report and declaration of the defaults and lacks reported to you by ſuch as did ſurueie Bullongne and the péeces there, would neuer amend the ſame defaults.

18 Alſo you would not ſuffer the péeces beyond the ſeas, called Newhauen and Blackneſſe, to be furniſhed with men and vittels; although you were aduertiſed of the defaults therein by the capteins of the ſame péeces and others, and were thereto aduertiſed by the kings councell: wherby the French king being the kings open enimie, was incouraged and comforted to win the ſaid péeces, to the kings great loſſe, and diſhonour of his realme.

19 Alſo you declared and publiſhed vntrulie, as well to the kings maieſtie, as other the yoong lords attendant vpon his graces perſon, that the lords of the councell at London minded to deſtroie the king, and you required the king neuer to forget it, but to reuenge it: and likewiſe you required the yoong lords to put the king in remembrance thereof, to the intent to make ſedition & diſcord betwéene the king and his lords.

20 Alſo where the kings maieſties priuie councell, of their loue and zeale that they did beare vnto the king and his realme, did conſult at London to haue communed with you, to the intent to moue you charitablie to amend your dooings and miſgouernement: you hearing of the ſaid aſſemblie, did cauſe to be declared by letters in diuerſe places the ſaid lords to be high traitors to the king, to the great diſturbance of the realme.

And thus much for theſe troubles of the lord protector, and articles againſt him obiected; to the end (as was doubted) that the ſame ſhould haue coſt him his life. But ſuch was the pleaſure of almightie God, diſpoſing mens hearts as ſéemeth to him beſt, that at length, to wit, the ſixt of Februarie next, he was deliuered; and that night he ſupped at ſir Iohn Yorks one of the ſhiriffes of London, alſo the proclamation before ſet forth againſt him was reuoked & called in. And thus being againe reſtored, though not to his former office, yet vnto libertie, he continued therein for the ſpace of two yeares and two daies, till new troubles (as after ſhall appeare) chanced to him, which as they were too heauie for him either to caſt off, or carrie awaie; ſo were his loders more readie to aggrauate his burthen, than willing to eaſe him anie waie of the weight. So that this his exaltation & raiſing to dignitie, in reſpect of the ſhort continuance thereof, as alſo for the enuie wherewith it was aſſailed, had béene better not to haue happened, than with ſuch infelicitie in ſo ſhort a time to haue ended. But this fall from honor & aduancement with loſſe of life (than the which nothing more pretious, nothing more delicious) gréeued him the leſſe: bicauſe he might perceiue (as ſome ſuſpected) that rather of enuie than otherwiſe (reſeruing the courſe of Gods iudgement and vengeance to the ſecrecie of his owne counſels) the ſame was deuiſed, proſecuted, & finallie practiſed;

Nam quo quiſque magis pius eſt, ſtudioſior æqui,
Charior & regi, & quo quiſque potentior extat,
Sentiet à prauis ſe tanto odioſius iri
Dente Theonino roſum, quod fortè latenter
Fiet & occultè, linguæ ne ſentiat ictum
Lethalem, donec ſtamen trux Atropos occet,
Et vi Parcarum cænum voluatur in imum.]

K. Edward rode through London.

¶ The ſeuentéenth of October, king Edward came from Hampton court to his place in Southworke, and there dined, and after dinner he made maiſter Yorke one of the ſhiriffes knight, and then rode thorough the citie to Weſtminſter. The lord maior of London for this yeare named ſir Rowland Hill, was a man of great charitie and compaſſion, euident and effectuall teſtimonies whereof he hath left in the world; ſome of whoſe good déeds partlie in his remembrance & partlie for others example are deſeruedlie recorded. This man cauſed to be made a cauſeie, commonlie called Ouerlane pauement in the high waie from Stone to Nantwich, in length foure miles, for horſſe and man, with diuerſe lanes on both ſides the ſame cauſete. He cauſed likewiſe a cauſete to be made from Dunchurch to Branſen in Warwikeſhire, more than two miles of length, and gaue twentie pounds in monie towards the making of Roitton bridge, thrée miles from Couentrie. He made the high waie to Kilborne néere to London. He made foure bridges, two of them of ſtone, conteining eightéene arches in them both, the one ouer the riuer of Seuerne, called Achambridge; the other Ternebridge, for that the water of Terne runneth vnder it; the other two of timber at Stoke, and built a good part of Stoke church. He builded one notable frée ſchoole at Draiton in Shropſhire, with maiſter and vſher, and ſufficient ſtipends for them both, beſides conuenient lodgings for the ſame. He alſo purchaſed a frée faire to the ſaid towne, with a frée market wéekelie, & alſo a frée market for cattell euerie foure-

Hadington raſed.

But now to returne to other dooings. Whileſt theſe hurls and tumults were in hand, to the danger of the whole ſtate, the wars againſt the Scots were nothing followed, according to the former purpoſed meaning of the councell: ſo that it ſéemed neceſſarie to giue ouer the kéeping of Hadington, the ſame being in déed more chargeable (as was thought) than profitable, ſith the garriſon there could not be vitteled but with a great power to conduct the cariages in ſafetie, the enimies being ſtill readie to take their aduantage to diſtreſſe them vpon anie opportunitie offered. It was therefore reſolued, that the earle of Rutland ſhould go thither to ſée the fortifications raſed, and to conduct from thence the men & ordinance in ſafetie home into England. Hérevpon the ſaid earle with the Almans, and other ſouldiours then remaining on the borders, marched thither, and cauſed the bulworks, rampiers, and trenches to be raſed and filled flat with the ground, and bringing from thence all the men, artillerie and munition, bag and baggage, returned vnto Barwike without incounter, in peaceable and quiet maner.

An act for vnlawfull aſſemblies.

Shortlie after this, the kings maieſtie called his high court of parlement, which began at Weſtminſter, the foure and twentith daie of Nouember in this third yeare of his reigne, and there continued the ſame vntill the firſt daie of Februarie next following, which was in the beginning of the fourth yeare of his reigne. And among other things there enacted and concluded, one ſtatute was made for the puniſhment of rebels, and vnlawfull aſſemblies: the which law was made by occaſion of the late rebellion that happened in manner through the realme the yeare paſſed, & was not thought nor meant to haue touched anie noble man, ſpeciallie ſuch as the duke of Summerſet was, which after (as it ſhall appeare) it did, and by that ſtatute he was condemned within two yeares next after.

Peter Gambo and another capteine murthered.

Gauaro and other hanged.

¶The ninteenth of Ianuarie, ſir Iohn Ruſſell lord priuie ſeale, was created earle of Bedford: and lord ſaint Iohn Lord great maiſter, was created earle of Wilſhire: and ſir William Paget, comptrollor of the kings houſe, was made lord Paget. On the ſame daie at night, were murthered by ſaint Pulchres church againſt the kings head without Newgate of London two capteins, that had ſerued the king of Bullongne and elſe-where, the one was ſir Peter Gambo, the other Filicirga. Which murther was committed by Charles Gauaro a Flemming, who came poſt from Barwike to doo that act. On the morrow, he with thrée of his companie was taken in Smithfield by the lord Paget, and ſent to Newgate, and the foure and twentith of Ianuarie they were all foure, Charles Gauaro, Balthaſar Gauaro, Nicholas Diſalueron, and Francis Deualaſco, had in a cart to Smithfield. And by the waie at the place where the murther was doone, Charles Gauaro had his right hand ſtriken off on the cart whéele, and then all hanged in Smithfield; who being exhorted to reconcile himſelfe to God and the world by confeſſing his fault, by repenting himſelfe of the offenſe, and aſking forgiueneſſe, that he might with a diſburthened conſcience reſigne his ſoule into the hands of God, obſtinatlie and deſperatlie anſwered, that he would neuer repent him of the déed.]

Anno Reg.4.

Sir Iohn Lutterell priſoner.

Erle of Warwike in higheſt authoritie.

Morguiſon the midwaie betwéene Bullen and Calis.

About the ſame time, monſieur de Thermes that ſuccéeded monſieur de Deſſe in gouernement as generall of the French forces in Scotland, came before Broughticrag, where he did ſo much by batterie & other kinds of inforcement, that giuing an aſſault both with his Frenchmen and certeine Scots ioined with him, the twentith of Februarie, the fort was entered by fine force, and all within it either taken or ſlaine. Sir Iohn Lutterell gouernour of that péece remained priſoner amongſt the Frenchmen. Moreouer, now after the end of the parlement, the earle of Warwike, hauing then higheſt authoritie, and the reſt of the lords of the councell, calling to remembrance how the laſt yeare in the time of rebellion, the French king had entered Bullongnois, and woone diuerſe of the Engliſh forts there, being of great importance for defenſe of the towne and countrie, the default whereof was imputed to the negligent gouernment of the lord protector: and for ſo much as they well vnderſtood that the French king vpon further practiſe had placed a capteine called the Reingraue, with diuerſe regiments of Almaine lancequenets, and certeine enſignes alſo of Frenchmen, to the number of foure or fiue thouſand at the towne of Morguiſon, being the midwaie betwéene Bullongne and Calis, to the great perill and danger as well of the countie of Bollongnois, as al of Calis, Guiſnes, and all the low countrie.

It is agréed among the lords to inſiſt and annoie the French.

The king therefore for the defenſe of the ſaid frontiers, cauſed all the ſtrangers which had ſerued that yeare againſt the rebels, being to the number of two thouſand, to be tranſported ouer the ſea to the marches of Calis. And now at Chriſtmas laſt paſt, by order of the ſaid earle, and of the councellors aforeſaid, Francis earle of Huntington, and ſir Edward Haſtings his brother, ſir Iames Croft, ſir Leonard Chamberleine, and diuerſe other capteins and ſouldiers, to the number of thrée thouſand, were ſet ouer to the marches of Calis, to ioine with the ſaid ſtrangers, minding with as conuenient ſpéed as they might, to remooue the campe, and otherwiſe to annoie the French. But in the meane time through the diligent trauell of certeine perſons, ſpeciallie of one Guidoti an Italian, and a Florentine borne, there was a motion made for a treatie to be had by certeine commiſſioners, appointed betwixt the kings of England and France, for the concluſion of ſome peace, vpon ſuch reaſonable conditions and articles as might be thought expedient for the preſent time; and to ſtand with the honor and commoditie of both the princes.

Commiſſioners ſent to treat of peace.

This motion tooke ſuch effect, that about the ſeuenth daie of Februarie, certeine commiſſioners, appointed for this treatie, that is to wit, Iohn the earle of Bedford, the lord Paget, ſir William Peter the kings chéefe ſecretarie, and ſir Iohn Maſon, arriued at Calis: by reaſon of whoſe comming, the earle of Huntington, and the armie ſent ouer before for the defenſe of the frontiers were countermanded from anie attempt, ſo that little or nothing was doone in that voiage, ſauing certeine ſkirmiſhes at diuerſe times, not much materiall to be written of. Theſe commiſſioners being thus arriued, paſſed from Calis to Bullongne, there to méet with the commiſſioners appointed for the French king, where as a certeine houſe was newlie erected for the ſaid treatie to be had, which was vpon the ſide of Bullongne hauen next to France, where after diuerſe méetings & conferences of the commiſſioners of either partie, a finall peace was at laſt concluded betwixt both the realmes. But chéeflie among other things, for the reſtitution of Bullongne and Bullongnois to the Frenchmen, which were vpon certeine conditions following.

Firſt, that the French king ſhould yéeld and paie to the king of England a certeine ſumme of monie and the ſame to be paid at two paiments, as it was then agréed: and for the ſame ſumme the king of England ſhould render the towne of Bullongne and all the forts thereto adioining, which he then inioied, with all ſuch artillerie and munition as was there found at the taking of the ſame to the French king. And for the ſure paiment of the ſaid ſums, the French king ſent into England for hoſtages and pledges, the counte de Anguien, Lewes the duke of Vandoſme his brother, the Vidame of Charters, and the duke de Aumale and others. And on S. Markes daie next following, being the fiue and twentith daie of Aprill, about eight of the clocke in the morning, the Engliſhmen did deliuer to the Frenchmen the poſſeſſion of Bullongne, and the caſtels and forts in the countie of Bullognois, according to the agreements and articles of peace afore mentioned. And the fifteenth daie next following the French king entered into the ſaid towne of Bullongne with trumpets blowne, & with all the roiall triumph that might be, where he offered one great image of ſiluer of our ladie in the church there, which was called our ladie church: the which image he had cauſed ſpeciallie to be made in the honor of the ſaid ladie, and cauſed the ſame to be ſet vp in the place where the like image before did ſtand, the which before was taken awaie by the Engliſhmen at the winning of the towne.

Bullongne giuen vp to the French.

He entereth.

A marriage to compoſe ſtrife and eſtabliſh amitie.

Soone after the aforeſaid agreement betweene England and France was concluded, vpon the fore remembred capitulations, bicauſe of ſuſpicion of diſpleaſure and hatred that was thought to remaine betweene the earle of Warwike and the duke of Summerſet, latelie before deliuered out of the tower, a meane was found that their freendſhip ſhould be renewed through aliance, and a mariage was concluded betweene the earle of Warwikes eldeſt ſonne, and the duke of Summerſets eldeſt daughter: the which marriage was ſolemnized at Shene, the king being then preſent. After the ſolemnitie of this marriage, there appeared outwardlie to the world great loue and freendſhip betweene the duke and the earle, but by reaſon of carietales and flatterers, the loue continued not long, howbeit manie did verie earneſtlie wiſh loue and amitie to continue betweene them. ¶ About this time was a new rebellion in Kent, but it was ſoone ſuppreſſed, and certeine of the chiefe were apprehended and put to death, namelie Richard Lion, Coddard Gorram, and Richard Ireland. About this time there was at Feuerſham in Kent a gentleman named Arden, moſt cruellie murthered and ſlaine by the procurement of his owne wife. The which murther, for the horribleneſſe thereof, although otherwiſe it may ſeeme to be but a priuate matter, and therefore as it were impertinent to this hiſtorie, I haue thought good to ſet it foorth ſomewhat at large, hauing the inſtructions deliuered to me by them, that haue vſed ſome diligence to gather the true vnderſtanding of the circumſtances. This Arden was a man of a tall and comelie perſonage, and matched in marriage with a gentlewoman, yoong, tall, and well fauoured of ſhape and countenance, who chancing to fall in familiaritie with one Moſbie a tailor by occupation, a blacke ſwart man, ſeruant to the lord North, it happened this Moſbie vpon ſome miſliking to fall out with hir: but ſhe being deſirous to be in fauour with him againe, ſent him a paire of ſiluer dice by one Adam Foule dwelling at the Floure de lice in Feuerſham.

1551 Anno Reg. 5.

Arden murthered.

Arden deſcribed.

Loue and luſt.

A paire of ſiluer dice worke much miſchiefe.

After which he reſorted to hir againe, and oftentimes laie in Ardens houſe: in ſomuch that within two yeares after, he obteined ſuch fauour at hir hands, that he laie with hir, or (as they terme it) kept hir, in abuſing hir bodie. And although (as it was ſaid) Arden perceiued right well their mutuall familiaritie to be much greater than their honeſtie, yet bicauſe he would not offend hir, and ſo looſe the benefit which he hoped to gaine at ſome of hir freends hands in bearing with hir lewdneſſe, which he might haue loſt if he ſhould haue fallen out with hir: he was contented to winke at hir filthie diſorder, and both permitted, and alſo inuited Moſbie verie often to lodge in his houſe. And thus it continued a good ſpace, before anie practiſe was begun by them againſt maiſter Arden. She at length inflamed in loue with Moſbie, and loathing hir huſband, wiſhed and after practiſed the meanes how to haſten his end.

Ardens wife attempteth meanes to make awaie hir huſband.

There was a painter dwelling in Feuerſham, who had ſkill of poiſons, as was reported. She therefore demanded of him, whether it were true that he had ſuch ſkill in that feat or not? And he denied not but that he had in déed. Yea (ſaid ſhe) but I would haue ſuch a one made, as ſhould haue moſt vehement and ſpéedie operation to diſpatch the eater thereof. That can I doo (quoth he) and forthwith made hir ſuch a one, and willed hir to put it into the bottome of a porrenger, & then after to powre milke on it. Which circumſtance ſhe forgetting, did cleane contrarie, putting in the milke firſt, and afterward the poiſon. Now maiſter Arden purpoſing that daie to ride to Canturburie, his wife brought him his breakefaſt, which was wont to be milke and butter. He hauing receiued a ſpoonefull or two of the milke, miſliked the taſt and colour thereof, and ſaid to his wife; Miſtreſſe Ales what milke haue you giuen me here? Wherewithall ſhe tilted it ouer with hir hand, ſaieng, I wéene nothing can pleaſe you. Then he tooke horſſe and road towards Canturburie, and by the waie fell into extreme purging vpwards and downewards, and ſo eſcaped for that time.

Arden is poiſoned by his wife but recouereth.

After this, his wife fell in acquaintance with one Gréene of Feuerſham, ſeruant to ſir Anthonie Ager, from which Gréene maiſter Arden had wreſted a péece of ground on the backeſide of the abbeie of Feuerſham, and there had blowes and great threats paſſed betwixt them about that matter. Therefore ſhe knowing that Gréene hated hir huſband, began to practiſe with him how to make him awaie; and concluded, that if he could get anie that would kill him, he ſhould haue ten pounds for a reward. This Gréene hauing dooings for his maſter ſir Anthonie Ager, had occaſion to go vp to London, where his maiſter then laie, and hauing ſome charge vp with him, deſired one Bradſhaw a goldſmith of Feuerſham that was his neighbor, to accompanie him to Graueſend, and he would content him for his pains. This Bradſhaw, being a verie honeſt man, was content, and road with him. And when they came to Rainham downe, they chanced to ſée thrée or foure ſeruingmen that were comming from Léeds: and therewith Bradſhaw eſpied comming vp the hill from Rocheſter, one blacke Will, a terrible cruell ruffian with a ſword and a buckler, and an other with a great ſtaffe on his necke.

She deuiſeth another waie to diſpatch hir huſband Arden.

A notorious murthering ruffian.

Then ſaid Bradſhaw to Gréene; We are happie that here commeth ſome companie from Léeds, for here commeth vp againſt vs as murthering a knaue as anie is in England: if it were not for them we might chance hardlie to eſcape without loſſe of our monie and liues. Yea thought Gréene (as he after confeſſed) ſuch a one is for my purpoſe, and therefore aſked; Which is he? Yonder is he quoth Bradſhaw, the ſame that hath the ſword and buckler: his name is blacke Will. How know you that, ſaid Gréene? Bradſhaw anſwered, I knew him at Bullongne, where we both ſerued, he was a ſoldier, and I was ſir Richard Cauendiſhes man, and there he committed manie robberies and heinous murthers on ſuch as trauelled betwixt Bullongne and France.

Marke how the diuell will not let his organs or inſtruments let ſlip either occaſiō or opportunitie to commit moſt heinous wickedneſſe.

By this time the other companie of ſeruingmen came to them, and they going all togither, met with blacke Will and his fellow. The ſeruingmen knew blacke Will, & ſaluting him, demanded of him whither he went? He anſwered; By his bloud (for his vſe was to ſweare almoſt at euerie word) I know not, nor care not, but ſet vp my ſtaffe, and euen as it falleth I go. If thou (quoth they) wilt go backe againe to Graueſend, we will giue thée thy ſupper. By his bloud (ſaid he) I care not, I am content, haue with you: and ſo he returned againe with them. Then blacke Will tooke acquaintance of Bradſhaw, ſaieng; Fellow Bradſhaw how dooſt thou? Bradſhaw vnwilling to renew acquitance, or to haue ought to doo with ſo ſhameles a ruffian, ſaid; Why doo ye know me? Yea that I doo (quoth he) did not we ſerue in Bullongne togither? But ye muſt pardon me (quoth Bradſhaw) for I haue forgotten you.

An honeſt man is aſhamed to renew old acquaintance with a knaue.

Then Greene talked with blacke Will, and ſaid; When ye haue ſupped, come to mine hoſts houſe at ſuch a ſigne, and I will giue you the ſacke and ſugar. By his bloud (ſaid he) I thanke you, I will come and take it I warrant you. According to his promiſe he came, and there they made good cheare. Then blacke Will & Greene went and talked apart from Bradſhaw, and there concluded togither, that if he would kill maſter Arden, he ſhould haue ten pounds for his labor. Then he anſwered, By his wounds that I will if I maie know him. Marie to morrow in Poules I will ſhew him thée, ſaid Gréene. Then they left their talke, & Gréene bad him go home to his hoſts houſe. Then Greene wrote a letter to miſtreſſe Arden, & among other things put in theſe words: We haue got a man for our purpoſe, we maie thanke my brother Bradſhaw. Now Bradſhaw not knowing anie thing of this, tooke the letter of him, and in the morning departed home againe, and deliuered the letter to miſtreſſe Arden, and Greene & blacke Will went vp to London at the tide.

The match made to murther Arden.

Simplicitie abuſed.

At the time appointed, Gréene ſhewed blacke Will maiſter Arden walking in Poules. Then ſaid blacke Will, What is he that goeth after him? Marie ſaid Gréen, one of his men. By his bloud (ſaid blacke Will) I will kill them both. Naie (ſaid Gréene) doo not ſo, for he is of counſell with vs in this matter. By his bloud (ſaid he) I care not for that, I will kill them both. Naie ſaid Gréene in anie wiſe doo not ſo. Then blacke Will thought to haue killed maiſter Arden in Poules churchyard, but there were ſo manie gentlemen that accompanied him to dinner, that he miſſed of his purpoſe. Gréene ſhewed all this talke to maiſter Ardens man, whoſe name was Michaell, which euer after ſtood in doubt of blacke Will, leſt he ſhould kill him. The cauſe that this Michaell conſpired with the reſt againſt his maiſter, was: for that it was determined, that he ſhould marrie a kinſwoman of Moſbies.

Blacke will maketh no conſcience of bloudſhed and murther.

Why Ardens man conſpired with the reſt to kill his maiſter.

After this, maiſter Arden laie at a certeine parſonage which he held in London, and therefore his man Michaell and Gréene agréed, that blacke Will ſhould come in the night to the parſonage, where he ſhould find the doores left open, that he might come in and murther maiſter Arden. This Michaell hauing his maiſter to bed, left open the doores according to the appointment. His maiſter then being in bed, aſked him if he had ſhut faſt the doores, and hée ſaid yea: but yet afterwards, fearing leaſt blacke Will would kill him as well as his maiſter, after he was in bed himſelfe, he roſe againe and ſhut the doores, bolting them faſt. So that blacke Will comming thither, and finding the doores ſhut, departed, being diſappointed at that time. The next daie blacke Will came to Gréene in a great chafe, ſwearing and ſtaring bicauſe he was ſo deceiued, and with manie terrible oths threatened to kill maiſter Ardens man firſt, whereſoeuer he met him. No (ſaid Gréene) doo not ſo, I will firſt know the cauſe of ſhutting the doores.

One murthering mind miſtruſting another, doo hinder the action whereabout they agréed.

Then Greene met and talked with Ardens man, and aſked of him, why he did not leaue open the doores, according to his promiſe? Marie (ſaid Michaell) I will ſhew you the cauſe. My maiſter yeſternight did that he neuer did before: for after I was in bed, hée roſe vp and ſhut the doores, and in the morning rated me for leauing them vnſhut. And herewith Gréene & blacke Will were pacified. Arden being redie to go homewards, his maid came to Gréene & ſaid; This night will my maiſter go downe. Wherevpon it was agréed that blacke Will ſhould kill him on Reinam downe. When maiſter Arden came to Rocheſter, his man ſtill fearing that blacke Will would kill him with his maiſter, pricked his horſſe of purpoſe, and made him to halt, to the end he might protract the time, and tarie behind. His maiſter aſked him whie his horſſe halted, he ſaid, I know not. Well (quoth his maiſter) when ye come at the ſmith here before (betwéene Rocheſter and the hill foot ouer againſt Chéetam) remooue his ſhoo, and ſearch him, and then come after me. So maiſter Arden rode on: and yer he came at the place where blacke Will laie in wait for him, there ouertooke him diuerſe gentlemen of his acquaintance, who kept him companie: ſo that blacke Will miſt here alſo of his purpoſe.

The fourth attempt to make Arden awaie diſappointed.

Blacke will miſſeth his purpoſe.

After that maiſter Arden was come home, hée ſent (as he vſuallie did) his man to Shepeie to ſir Thomas Cheinie, then lord warden of the cinque ports, about certeine buſineſſe, and at his comming awaie, he had a letter deliuered ſent by ſir Thomas Cheinie to his maiſter. When he came home, his miſtreſſe tooke the letter and kept it, willing hir man to tell his maiſter, that he had a letter deliuered him by ſir Thomas Cheinie, and that he had loſt it; adding that he thought it beſt that his maiſter ſhould go the next morning to ſir Thomas, bicauſe he knew not the matter: he ſaid he would, and therefore he willed his man to be ſtirring betimes. In this meane while, blacke Will, and one George Shakebag his companion, were kept in a ſtorehouſe of ſir Anthonie Agers at Preſton, by Gréenes appointment: and thither came miſtreſſe Arden to ſée him, bringing and ſending him meat and drinke manie times. He therefore lurking there, and watching ſome opportunitie for his purpoſe, was willed in anie wiſe to be vp earlie in the morning, to lie in wait for maiſter Arden in a certeine broome cloſe, betwixt Feuerſham & the ferrie (which cloſe he muſt néeds paſſe) there to doo his feat. Now blacke Will ſtirred in the morning betimes, but miſt the waie, & taried in a wrong place.

Ardens wiſe viſiteth, ſuccoureth, emboldneth, and directeth black will &c: how to accompliſh his bloudie purpoſe.

Maiſter Arden & his man comming on their waie earlie in the morning towards Shornelan, where ſir Thomas Cheinie laie: as they were almoſt come to the broome cloſe, his man alwaies fearing that blacke Will would kill him with his maiſter, feined that he had loſt his purſſe; Why ſaid his maiſter, thou fooliſh knaue, couldſt thou not looke to thy purſſe but looſe it? What was in it? Thrée pounds ſaid he. Why then go thy waies backe againe like a knaue (ſaid his maiſter) and ſéeke it, for being ſo earlie as it is, there is no man ſtirring, and therefore thou maiſt be ſure to find it, and then come and ouertake me at the ferrie. But neuertheleſſe, by reaſon that blacke Will loſt his way, maiſter Arden eſcaped yet once againe. At that time, blacke Will yet thought hée ſhould haue béene ſure to haue met him homewards: but whether that ſome of the lord wardens men accompanied him backe to Feuerſham, or that being in doubt, for that it was late to go through the broome cloſe, and therfore tooke another waie, blacke Will was diſappointed then alſo.

Note here the force of feare and a troubled conſcience.

Blacke will yet againe diſappointed.

But now ſaint Valentines faire being at hand, the conſpirators thought to diſpatch their diueliſh intention at that time. Moſbie minded to picke ſome quarrell to maiſter Arden at the faire to fight with him; for he ſaid he could not find in his heart to murther a gentleman in that ſort as his wife wiſhed: although ſhe had made a ſolemne promiſe to him, and he againe to hir, to be in all points as man and wife togither, and therevpon they both receiued the ſacrament on a ſundaie at London, openlie in a church there. But this deuiſe to fight with him would not ſerue, for maiſter Arden both then and at other times had béene greatlie prouoked by Moſbie to fight with him, but he would not. Now Moſbie had a ſiſter that dwelt in a tenement of maiſter Ardens néere to his houſe in Feuerſham: and on the faire éeuen, blacke Will was ſent for to come thither, and Gréene bringing him thither, met there with miſtreſſe Arden, accompanied with Michaell hir man, and one of hir maids. There were alſo Moſbie and George Shakebag, and there they deuiſed to haue killed him in maner as afterwards he was. But yet Moſbie at the firſt would not agrée to that cowardlie murthering of him, but in a furie flong awaie, and went vp the abbeie ſtréet toward the flower de lice, the houſe of the aforenamed Adam Foule, where he did often hoſt. But before he came thither now at this time, a meſſenger ouertooke him, that was ſent from miſtres Arden, deſiring him of all loues to come backe againe to helpe to accompliſh the mater he knew of. Herevpon he returned to hir againe, and at his comming backe, ſhe fell downe vpon hir knées to him, and beſought him to go through with the matter, as if he loued hir he would be content to doo, ſith as ſhée had diuerſe times told him, he néeded not to doubt, for there was not anie that would care for his death, nor make anie great inquirie for them that ſhould diſpatch him.

A prepenſed quarel againſt Arden by the conſpirators.

Ardens wiſe, blacke will, the knot of vilans méet and conclude vpon their former prepenſe miſchiefe.

O importunate & bloudie minded ſtrumpet!

Thus ſhe being earneſt with him, at length hée was contented to agrée vnto that horrible deuiſe, and therevpon they conueied blacke Will into maiſter Ardens houſe, putting him into a cloſet at the end of his parlour. Before this, they had ſent out of the houſe all the ſeruants, thoſe excepted which were priuie to the deuiſed murther. Then went Moſbie to the doore, and there ſtood in a night gowne of ſilke girded about him, and this was betwixt ſix and ſeuen of the clocke at night. Maſter Arden hauing béene at a neighbors houſe of his, named Dumpkin, & hauing cleared certeine reckonings betwixt them, came home: and finding Moſbie ſtanding at the doore, aſked him if it were ſupper time? I thinke not (quoth Moſbie) it is not yet readie. Then let vs go and plaie a game at the tables in the meane ſeaſon, ſaid maiſter Arden. And ſo they went ſtreight into the parlor: and as they came by through the hall, his wife was walking there, and maiſter Arden ſaid; How now miſtreſſe Ales? But ſhe made ſmall anſwer to him. In the meane time one cheined the wicket doore of the entrie. When they came into the parlor, Moſbie ſat downe on the bench, hauing his face toward the place where blacke Will ſtood. Then Michaell maiſter Ardens man ſtood at his maſters backe, holding a candle in his hand, to ſhadow blacke Will, that Arden might by no meanes perceiue him comming forth. In their plaie Moſbie ſaid thus (which ſéemed to be the watchword for blacke Wils comming forth) Now maie I take you ſir if I will. Take me (quoth maiſter Arden) which waie? With that blacke Will ſtept forth, and caſt a towell about his necke, ſo to ſtop his breath and ſtrangle him. Then Moſbie hauing at his girdle a preſſing iron of fourtéene pounds weight, ſtroke him on the hed with the ſame, ſo that he fell downe, and gaue a great grone, inſomuch that they thought he had béene killed.

Then they bare him awaie, to laie him in the counting houſe, & as they were about to laie him downe, the pangs of death comming on him, he gaue a great grone, and ſtretched himſelfe, and then blacke Will gaue him a great gaſh in the face, and ſo killed led him out of h[illegible], laid him along, tooke the monie out of his purſſe, and the rings from his fingers, and then comming out of the counting houſe, ſaid; Now the feat is doone, giue me my monie. So miſtres Arden gaue him ten pounds: and he comming to Greene, had a horſſe of him, and ſo rode his waies. After that blacke Will was gone, miſtreſſe Arden came into the counting houſe, and with a knife gaue him ſeuen or eight picks into the breſt. Then they made cleene the parlor, tooke a clout, and wiped where it was bloudie, and ſtrewed againe the ruſhes that were ſhuffled with ſtrugling, and caſt the clout with which they wiped the bloud, and the knife that was bloudie, wherewith ſhe had wounded hir huſband, into a tub by the wels ſide; where afterwards both the ſame clout and knife were found. Thus this wicked woman, with hir complices, moſt ſhamefullie murdered hir owne huſband, who moſt entirelie loued hir all his life time. Then ſhe ſent for two Londoners to ſupper, the one named Prune, and the other Cole, that were groſers, which before the murder was committed, were bidden to ſupper. When they came, ſhe ſaid: I maruell where maiſter Arden is; we will not tarie for him, come ye and ſit downe, for he will not be long. Then Moſbies ſiſter was ſent for, ſhe came and ſat downe, and ſo they were merie.

Blacke will receiueth ten pounds for his reward of Ardens wife, for murdering hir huſband.

After ſupper, miſtres Arden cauſed hir daughter to plaie on the virginals, and they danſed, and ſhe with them, and ſo ſeemed to protract time as it were, till maiſter Arden ſhould come, and ſhe ſaid, I maruell where he is ſo long; well, he will come anon I am ſure, I praie you in the meane while let vs plaie a game at the tables. But the Londoners ſaid, they muſt go to their hoſts houſe, or elſe they ſhould be ſhut out at doores, and ſo taking their leaue, departed. When they were gone, the ſeruants that were not priuie to the murder, were ſent abroad into the towne; ſome to ſeeke their maiſter, and ſome of other errands, all ſauing Michaell and a maid, Moſbies ſiſter, and one of miſtres Ardens owne daughters. Then they tooke the dead bodie, and caried it out, to laie it in a field next to the church-yard, and ioining to his garden wall, through the which he went to the church. In the meane time it began to ſnow, and when they came to the garden gate, they remembred that they had forgotten the kaie, and one went in for it, and finding it, at length brought it, opened the gate, and caried the corps into the ſame field, as it were ten paſes from the garden gate, and laid him downe on his backe ſtreight in his night gowne, with his ſlippers on: and betweene one of his ſlippers and his foot, a long ruſh or two remained. When they had thus laid him downe, they returned the ſame way they came through the garden into the houſe.

Marke what a countenance of innocencie and ignorance ſhe bore after the murdering of hir huſband.

The workers of this miſchiefe carie out Arden ſlaine into the field.

They being returned thus backe againe into the houſe, the doores were opened, and the ſeruants returned home that had beene ſent abroad: and being now verie late, ſhe ſent foorth hir folks againe to make inquirie for him in diuerſe places; namelie, among the beſt in the towne where he was woont to be, who made anſwer, that they could tell nothing of him. Then ſhe began to make an outcrie, and ſaid; Neuer woman had ſuch neighbors as I haue, and herewith wept: in ſomuch that hir neighbors came in, and found hir making great lamentation, pretending to maruell what was become of hir huſband. Wherevpon, the maior and others came to make ſearch for him. The faire was woont to be kept partlie in the towne, and partlie in the abbeie; but Arden for his owne priuat lucre & couetous gaine had this preſent yeare procured it to be wholie kept within the abbeie ground which he had purchaſed; & ſo reaping all the gaines to himſelfe, and bereauing the towne of that portion which was woont to come to the inhabitants, got manie a bitter curſſe. The maior going about the faire in this ſearch, at length came to the ground where Arden laie: and as it happened, Prune the groſer getting ſight of him, firſt ſaid; Staie, for me thinke I ſee one lie here. And ſo they looking and beholding the bodie, found that it was maiſter Arden, lieng there throughlie dead, and viewing diligentlie the maner of his bodie & hurts, found the ruſhes ſticking in his ſlippers, and marking further, eſpied certeine footſteps, by reaſon of the ſnow, betwixt the place where he laie, and the garden doore.

This ſhe did to colour hir wickedneſſe which by no meanes was excuſeable.

Arden a couetous man and a preferrer of his priuat profit before common gaine.

Ardens dead bodie is deſcried by one of his acquaintance.

Then the maior commanded euerie man to ſtaie, and herewith appointed ſome to go about, & to come in at the inner ſide of the houſe through the garden as the waie laie, to the place where maiſter Ardens dead bodie did lie; who all the waie as they came, perceiued footings ſtill before them in the ſnow: and ſo it appeared plainlie that he was brought along that waie from the houſe through the garden, and ſo into the field where he laie. Then the maior and his companie that were with him went into the houſe, and knowing hir euill demeanor in times paſt, examined hir of the matter: but ſhe defied them and ſaid, I would you ſhould know I am no ſuch woman. Then they examined hir ſeruants, and in the examination, by reaſon of a peece of his heare and bloud found neere to the houſe in the waie, by the which they caried him foorth, and likewiſe by the knife with which ſhe had thruſt him into the breſt, and the clout wherewith they wiped the bloud awaie which they found in the tub, into the which the ſame were throwen; they all confeſſed the matter, and hir ſelfe beholding hir huſbands bloud, ſaid; Oh the bloud of God helpe, for this bloud haue I ſhed.

Footſteps all alongſt from the dead bodie of Arden to his dwelling houſe.

A peece of Ardens heare and his bloud ſpilt in the houſe eſpied, as alſo a bloudie knife and a clout found.

Then were they all attached, and committed to priſon, and the maior with others went preſentlie to the flower de lice, where they found Moſbie in bed: and as they came towards him, they eſpied his hoſe and purſſe ſtained with ſome of maiſter Ardens bloud. And when he aſked what they meant by their comming in ſuch ſort, they ſaid; See, here ye may vnderſtand wherefore, by theſe tokens, ſhewing him the bloud on his hoſe and purſſe. Then he confeſſed the deed, and ſo he and all the other that had conſpired the murder, were apprehended and laid in priſon, except Greene, blacke Will, and the painter, which painter and George Shakebag, that was alſo fled before, were neuer heard of. Shortlie were the ſeſſions kept at Feuerſham, where all the priſoners were arreigned and condemned. And therevpon being examined whither they had anie other complices, miſtres Arden accuſed Bradſhaw, vpon occaſion of the letter ſent by Greene from Graues end, (as before ye haue heard) which words had none other meaning, but onelie by Bradſhaws deſcribing of blacke Wils qualities; Greene iudged him a meete inſtrument for the execution of their pretended murder. Whereto notwithſtanding (as Greene confeſſed at his death certeine yeares after) this Bradſhaw was neuer made priuie; howbeit, he was vpon this accuſation of miſtres Arden, immediatlie ſent for to the ſeſſions, and indicted, and declaration made againſt him, as a procurer of blacke Will to kill maiſter Arden, which proceeded wholie by miſvnderſtanding of the words conteined in the letter which he brought from Greene.

The principals of this murder fled awaie.

Bradſhaw as vniuſtlie accuſed, as his ſimplicitie was ſhamefullie abuſed.

Then he deſired to talke with the perſons condemned, and his requeſt was granted. He therefore demanded of them if they knew him, or euer had anie conuerſation with him, & they all ſaid no. Then the letter being ſhewed and read, he declared the ve-rie truth of the matter, and vpon what occaſion he told Gréene of blacke Will: neuertheleſſe, he was condemned, and ſuffered. Theſe condemned perſons were diuerſlie executed in ſundrie places, for Michaell maiſter Ardens man was hanged in chaines at Feuerſham, and one of the maids was burnt there, pitifullie bewailing hir caſe, and cried out on hir miſtres that had brought hir to this end, for the which ſhe would neuer forgiue hir. Moſbie & his ſiſter were hanged in Smithfield at London; miſtres Arden was burned at Canturburie the foure and twentith of March. Gréene came againe certeine yeares after, was apprehended, condemned, & hanged in chaines in the high waie betwixt Oſpring & Boughton againſt Feuerſham; blacke Will was burnt on a ſcaffold at Fliſhing in Zeland. Adam Foule that dwelt at the floure de lice in Feuerſham was brought into trouble about this matter, and caried vp to London, with his legs bound vnder the horſſe bellie, and committed to priſon in the Marſhalſeie: for that Moſbie was heard to ſaie; Had it not béene for Adam Foule, I had not come to this trouble: meaning that the bringing of the ſiluer dice for a token to him from miſtreſſe Arden, as ye haue heard, occaſioned him to renew familiaritie with hir againe. But when the matter was throughlie ripped vp, & that Moſbie had cléered him, proteſting that he was neuer of knowledge in anie behalfe to the murder, the mans innocencie preſerued him.

A wonder touching the print of Ardens dead bodie two yeares after he was ſlaine.

This one thing ſéemeth verie ſtrange and notable, touching maiſter Arden, that in the place where he was laid, being dead, all the proportion of his bodie might be ſéene two yeares after and more, ſo plaine as could be, for the graſſe did not grow where his bodie had touched: but betwéene his legs, betwéene his armes, and about the hollowneſſe of his necke, and round about his bodie, and where his legs, armes, head, or anie other part of his bodie had touched, no graſſe growed at all of all that time. So that manie ſtrangers came in that meane time, beſide the townesmen, to ſée the print of his bodie there on the ground in that field. Which field he had (as ſome haue reported) moſt cruellie taken from a woman, that had béene a widow to one Cooke, and after maried to one Richard Read a mariner, to the great hinderance of hir and hir huſband the ſaid Read: for they had long inioied it by a leaſe, which they had of it for manie yeares, not then expired: neuertheleſſe, he got it from them. For the which, the ſaid Reads wife not onelie exclaimed againſt him, in ſheading manie a ſalt téere, but alſo curſſed him moſt bitterlie euen to his face, wiſhing manie a vengeance to light vpon him, and that all the world might wonder on him. Which was thought then to come to paſſe, when he was thus murdered, and laie in that field from midnight till the morning: and ſo all that daie, being the faire daie till night, all the which daie there were manie hundreds of people came wondering about him. And thus far touching this horrible and heinous murder of maiſter Arden. To returne then where we left.

God heareth the teares of the oppreſſed and taketh vengeance: note an example in Arden.

A parlement.

About this time the kings maieſtie calling his high court of parlement, held the ſame at Weſtminſter the thrée and twentith daie of Ianuarie, in this fift yéere of his reigne, and there continued it, vntill the fiftéenth daie of Aprill in the ſixt yeare of his ſaid reigne. In this parlement the booke of common praier, which in ſome part had béene corrected and amended, was newlie confirmed & eſtabliſhed.

Sweating ſickneſſe.

¶ In the end of this parlement, namelie the fiftéenth of Aprill the infectious ſweating ſickneſſe began at Shreweſburie, which ended not in the north part of England vntill the end of September. In this ſpace what number died, it cannot be well accounted: but certeine it is, that in London in few daies nine hundred and ſixtie gaue vp the ghoſt. It began in London the ninth of Iulie, and the twelfth of Iulie it was moſt vehement: which was ſo terrible, that people being in beſt helth, were ſuddenlie taken, and dead in foure and twentie houres, and twelue, or leſſe, for lacke of ſkill in guiding them in their ſweat. And it is to be noted, that this mortalitie fell chéeflie or rather vpon men, and thoſe alſo of the beſt age, as betwéen thirtie & fortie yeers. The ſpéedie riddance of life procured by this ſicknes, did ſo terrifie people of all ſorts, that ſuch as could make ſhift, either with monie or fréendſhip, changed their ſoile, and leauing places of concourſe, betooke them (for the time) to abodes, though not altogither ſolitarie, yet leſſe frequented: to conclude, manifold meanes were made for ſafetie of life. The firſt wéeke died in London eight hundred perſons.

The manner of this ſweat was ſuch, that if men did take anie cold outwardlie, it ſtroke the ſweat in, and immediatlie killed them. If they were ſuffered to ſléepe, commonlie they ſwooned in their ſléepe and departed, or elſe died immediatlie vpon their waking. But the waie to eſcape danger was cloſe kéeping moderatlie with ſome aire and a little drinke, and the ſame to be poſſet-ale, and ſo to kéepe them thirtie houres, & then was the danger paſt; but beware of ſudden cold. Before men had learned the manner of kéeping, an infinit number periſhed. This diſeaſe at that time followed Engliſhmen & none other nation; for in Antwerpe and other countries, our Engliſhmen being there amongſt diuerſe other nations, onelie our Engliſhmen were ſicke thereof, and none other perſons. The conſideration of which thing made this nation much afraid thereof, who for the time began to repent and giue almes, and to remember God from whom that plague might well ſéeme to be ſent among vs. But as the diſeaſe in time ceaſed, ſo our deuotion in ſhort time decaied.] At this time alſo the king with the aduiſe of his priuie councell, and hauing alſo great conference with merchants and others, perceiuing that by ſuch coins and copper monies, as had béene coined in the time of the king his father, and now were commonlie currant in the realme; and indéed a great number of them not worth halfe the value that they were currant at, to the great diſhonor of the kings maieſtie & the realme, and to the deceit & no little hinderance of all the kings maieſties good ſubiects, did now purpoſe not onelie the abaſing of the ſaid copper monies, but alſo meant wholie to reduce them into bullion, to the intent to deliuer fine and good monies for them. And therefore in the moneth of Iulie by his graces proclamation, he abaſed the péece of twelue pence, commonlie called a teſton vnto nine pence, and the péece of foure pence vnto thrée pence. And in Auguſt next following, the péece of nine pence was abaſed to ſix pence, and the péece of thrée pence vnto two pence, and the pennie to an halfepennie.

The duke arreigned both of treaſon and felonie.

Stanhope, ſir Thomas Arundell, ſir Rafe Vane, ſir Miles Partrige & other for ſuſpicion of treaſon and felonie, whereof they were all ſhortlie after indicted. And ſo ſtanding indicted, the ſecond daie of December next following, the ſaid duke was brought out of the tower of London with the ax of the tower borne before him, with a great number of billes, gleaues, halberds & pollaxes attending vpon him, & ſo came into Weſtminſter hall, where was made in the middle of the hall a new ſcaffold, where all the lords of the kings councell ſate as his iudges: and there was he arreigned and charged with manie articles both of felonie and treaſon. And when after much mild ſpeech he had anſwered not guiltie, he in all humble manner put himſelfe to be tried by his péeres: who after long conſultation among themſelues, gaue their verdict that he was not guiltie of the treaſon, but of the felonie. The people there preſent (which was a great number) hearing the lords ſaie not guiltie, which was to the treaſon, thinking moſt certeinlie that he was cléerelie acquited; and chieflie for that immediatlie vpon the pronouncing of thoſe words, he that caried the ax of the tower departed with the ax, they made ſuch an outcrie and ioie, as the like hath not béene heard. Which was an euident declaration of their good willes and hartie fauors vnto him, whoſe life they greatlie deſired to haue ſaued, for that he had deſerued right well of moſt (though the good gentleman had ſome priuat enimies) and had béene as a man maie iuſtlie ſaie:

Solamen magnum patria, ſolamen amicis.

The duke condemned to die for felonie.

But neuertheleſſe, he was condemned to the death, whereof ſhortlie after he taſted. The felonie that he was condemned of, was vpon the ſtatute made the laſt yeare againſt rebelles, and vnlawfull aſſemblies, wherein amongſt other things is one branch, that whoſoeuer ſhall procure the death of anie councellor, that euerie ſuch attempt or procurement ſhall be felonie. And by force of that ſtatute, the duke of Summerſet, being accompanied with certeine others, was charged that he purpoſed and attempted the death of the duke of Northumberland, the lord marqueſſe, the lord of Penbroke, and others of the priuie councell, which by ſtatute was felonie.

The duke of Summerſet condemned returneth to the tower.

George Ferrers maiſter of the kings paſtimes.

After the duke was thus condemned, he was againe returned to the tower, and landed at the crane of the vinetree, and ſo paſſed through London, where were both exclamations: the one cried for ioie that he was acquitted, the other cried out that he was condemned. But howſoeuer they cried, he was conueied to the tower of London, where he remained vntill the two and twentith daie of Ianuarie next following. The duke being condemned (as is aforeſaid) the people ſpake diuerſlie, and murmured againſt the duke of Northumberland, and againſt ſome other of the lords, for the condemnation of the ſaid duke: and alſo (as the common fame went) the kings maieſtie tooke it not in good part. Wherefore as well to remooue fond talke out of mens mouths, as alſo to recreat and refreſh the troubled ſpirits of the yoong king; who (as ſaith Grafton) ſéemed to take the trouble of his vncle ſomewhat heauilie: it was deuiſed, that the feaſt of Chriſts natiuitie, commonlie called Chriſtmaſſe then at hand, ſhould be ſolemnlie kept at Gréenwich with open houſhold, and franke reſort to court (which is called kéeping of the hall) what time of old ordinarie courſe there is alwaies one appointed to make ſport in the court, called commonlie lord of miſrule: whoſe office is not vnknowne to ſuch as haue beene brought vp in noble mens houſes, and among great houſe-keepers, which vſe liberall feaſting in that ſeaſon. There was therfore by order of the councell, a wiſe gentleman & learned named George Ferrers, appointed to that office for this yeare; who being of better credit & eſtimation than cõmonlie his predeceſſors had beene before, receiued all his commiſſions and warrants by the name of the maiſter of the kings paſtimes. Which gentleman ſo well ſupplied his office, both in ſhew of ſundrie ſights and deuiſes of rare inuentions, and in act of diuerſe interludes, and matters of paſtime plaied by perſons, as not onelie ſatiſfied the common ſort, but alſo were verie well liked and allowed by the councell, and other of ſkill in the like paſtimes: but beſt of all by the yoong king himſelfe, as appéered by his princelie liberalitie in rewarding that ſeruice.

The ſhiriffes lord of miſrule.

¶On mondaie the fourth of Ianuarie, the ſaid lord of merie diſports came by water to London, and landed at the tower wharffe, entred the tower, and then rode through tower ſtreet, where he was receiued by Vauſe lord of miſrule to Iohn Mainard one of the ſhiriffes of London, and ſo conducted through the citie with a great companie of yoong lords & gentlemen to the houſe of ſir George Barne lord maior, where he with the chéefe of his companie dined, and after had a great banket: and at his departure, the lord maior gaue him a ſtanding cup with a couer of ſiluer and guilt of the value of ten pounds for a reward, and alſo ſet a hogſhed of wine, and a barrell of beere at his gate, for his traine that followed him. The reſidue of his gentlemen & ſeruants dined at other aldermens houſes, and with the ſhiriffes, and then departed to the tower wharffe againe, & ſo to the court by water, to the great commendation of the maior and aldermen, and highlie accepted of the king and councell.]

The executiõ of the duke of Summerſet.

This Chriſtmas being thus paſſed and ſpent with much mirth and paſtime, wherewith the minds and eares of murmurers were méetlie well appeaſed, according to a former determination as the ſequele ſhewed: it was thought now good to procéed to the execution of the iudgement giuen againſt the duke of Summerſet, touching his conuiction & atteindor of the fellonie before mentioned. Wherevpon, the two and twentith daie of Ianuarie, then next following being fridaie, he was brought out of the tower, and according to the manner, deliuered to the ſhiriffes of London; and ſo with a great companie of the gard & others with weapons, was brought to the ſcaffold where he ſhould ſuffer, without changing either voice or countenance, other than he was accuſtomed to vſe at other times.

Meanes to reſtraine the multitude from the dukes execution.

Iohn Fox. The dukes behauiour at his death.

The ſame morning earelie, the coneſtables of euerie ward in London (according to a precept directed from the councell to the maior) ſtrictlie charged euerie houſhold of the ſame citie, not to depart anie of them out of their houſes, before ten of the clocke of that daie: meaning thereby to reſtreine the great number of people that otherwiſe were like to haue been at the ſaid execution. Notwithſtanding, by ſeauen of the clocke, the tower hill was couered with a great multitude, repairing from all parts of the citie, as well as out of the ſuburbs. And before eight of the clocke, the duke was brought to the ſcaffold, incloſed with the kings gard, the ſhiriffes officers, the warders of the tower, & other with halberds: where as he nothing changing neither voice or countenance, but in a maner with the ſame geſture which he commonlie vſed at home, knéeling downe vpon both his knees, and lifting vp his hands, commended himſelfe vnto God. After he had ended a few ſhort praiers, ſtanding vp againe, and turning himſelfe toward the eaſt ſide of the ſcaffold, nothing at all abaſhed (as it ſéemed vnto thoſe that ſtood by) neither with the ſight of the ax, neither yet of the hangman, nor of preſent death, but with the like alacritie and chéerefulneſſe of mind and countenance as before times, he was accuſtomed to heare the cauſes & ſupplications of other, & ſpeciallie of the poore (towards whome as it were with a certeine fatherlie loue to his children he alwaies ſhewed himſelfe moſt attentiue) he vttered theſe words to the people.

The words of the duke of Summerſet at his death.

DEerelie beloued friends, I am brought hither to ſuffer death, albeit I neuer offended againſt the king, neither by word nor deed, and haue beene alwaies as faithfull and true vnto this realme, as anie man hath beene. But forſomuch as I am by law condemned to die, I doo acknowledge my ſelfe as well as others, to be ſubiect thereunto. Wherefore to teſtifie mine obedience which I owe vnto the lawes, I am come hither to ſuffer death, whereunto I willinglie offer my ſelfe with moſt hartie thanks vnto God, that hath giuen me this time of repentance, who might thorough ſudden death haue taken awaie my life, that I neither ſhould haue acknowledged him nor my ſelfe.

Moreouer (deerelie beloued friends) there is yet ſomewhat that I muſt put you in mind of, as touching chriſtian religion, which ſo long as I was in authoritie, I alwaies diligentlie ſet foorth, and furthered to my power. Neither doo I repent me of my doings, but reioiſe therein, ſith now the ſtate of chriſtian religion commeth moſt neere vnto the forme and order of the primitiue church. Which thing I eſteeme as a great benefit giuen of God, both to you and me, moſt hartilie exhorting you all, that this which is moſt purelie ſet foorth vnto you, you will with like thankefulneſſe accept and embrace, and ſet out the ſame in your liuing: which thing if you doo not, without doubt, greater miſchiefe and calamitie will follow.

Great feare among the people aſſembled on the tower hill. Rich. Grafton. Iohn Stow.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, ſuddenlie there was a great noiſe heard, wherevpon the people were ſtreight driuen into a great feare, few or none knowing the cauſe. Wherefore I thinke it good to write what I ſaw (ſaith Iohn Stow) concerning that matter. The people of a certeine hamlet which were warned to be there by ſeauen of the clocke to giue their attendance on the lieutenant, now came thorough the poſterne, and perceiuing the duke to be alreadie on the ſcaffold, the foremoſt began to run, crieng to their fellowes to follow faſt after. Which ſuddennes of theſe men, being weaponed with bils and halberds, & this running cauſed the people which firſt ſaw them, to thinke ſome power had come to haue reſcued the duke from execution, and therefore cried Awaie awaie. Wherevpon the people ran, ſome one waie, ſome an other, manie fell into the tower ditch, and they which tarried, thought ſome pardon had beene brought: ſome ſaid it thundered, ſome that the ground moued, but there was no ſuch matter.

Abr. Fl. ex Io. Foxi martyrologio.

¶ This amazement of the people is in other words recorded by Iohn Fox in the ſtorie of this dukes troubles & death: which bicauſe they be effectuall I thinke good to interlace. When the duke had ended his ſpeech (ſaith he) ſuddenlie there was a terrible noiſe heard: wherevpon there came a great feare on all men. This noiſe was as it had beene the noiſe of a great ſtorme or tempeſt, which to ſome ſeemed to be heard from aboue: like as if a great deale of gunpowder being incloſed in an armorie, and hauing caught fire, had violentlie broken out. But to ſome againe it ſeemed as though it had beene a great multitude of horſemen running togither, or comming vpon them; ſuch a noiſe was then in the eares of all men, albeit they ſaw nothing. Whereby it happened, that all the people being amazed without any euident cauſe, and without anie violence or ſtroke ſtriken, they ran awaie, ſome into the ditches and puddles, and ſome into the houſes thereabout. Other ſome being affraid with the horrour and noiſe, fell downe groueling vnto the ground with their pollaxes & halberds, and moſt part of them cried out: Ieſus ſaue vs, Ieſus ſaue vs. Thoſe which tarried ſtill in their places, for feare knew not where they were. And * I my ſelfe which was there preſent among the reſt, being alſo affraid in this hurlie burlie, ſtood ſtill altogither amazed, looking when anie man would knocke me on the head. It happened here, as the euangeliſts write, it did to Chriſt, when the officers of the high prieſts & Phariſeis comming with wepons to take him, being aſtonied ran backe, & fell to the ground.

A ſudden noiſe & feare of the people at the death of the duke of Summerſet.

* Namelie Iohn Fox the writer of this report.

In the meane time, whileſt theſe things were thus in dooing, the people by chance ſpied one ſir Anthonie Browne riding vnto the ſcaffold: which was the occaſion of a new noiſe. For when they ſaw him comming, they coniectured that which was not true, but notwithſtanding which they all wiſhed for, that the king by that meſſenger had ſent his vncle pardon: and therfore with great reioiſing and caſting vp their caps, they cried out; Pardon, pardon is come: God ſaue the king. Thus this good duke, although he was deſtitute of all mans helpe, yet he ſaw before his departure, in how great loue and fauour he was with all men. And trulie I doo not thinke, that in ſo great ſlaughter of dukes as hath beene in England within this few yeares, there was ſo manie weeping eies at one time: and not without cauſe. For all men did ſee in the decaie of this duke, the publike ruine of all England, except ſuch as indeed perceiued nothing.] The duke in the meane time ſtanding ſtill, both in the ſame place and mind wherin he was before, ſhaking his cap which he held in his hand, made a ſigne vnto the people that they ſhould keepe themſelues quiet: which thing being doone, & ſilence obteined, he ſpake to them the ſecond time in this maner.

The like hiſtorie you ſhall read of Caius Marius in Valerius Maximus the ſecond booke and ſift chapter.

The great fauour of the people to the duke of Summerſet.

The ſecond ſpeech of the duke of Summerſet to the people.

DEerelie beloued friends, there is no ſuch matter in hand, as you vainlie hope or beleeue. It ſeemeth thus good to almightie God, whoſe ordinance it is meet & neceſſarie that we be all obedient vnto. Wherfore I praie you all to be quiet, and without tumult: for I am euen now quiet, and let vs ioine in praier vnto the Lord, for the preſeruation of our noble king, vnto whoſe maieſtie I wiſh continuall health, with all felicitie and abundance & all maner of proſperous ſucceſſe: wherevnto the people cried out, Amen. Moreouer, I wiſh vnto all his councellors the grace and fauour of God, whereby they may rule althings vprightlie with iuſtice, vnto whome I exhort you all in the Lord to ſhew your ſelues obedient, the which is alſo verie neceſſarie for you, vnder the paine of condemnation, and alſo moſt profitable for the preſeruation and ſafegard of the kings maieſtie. And forſomuch as heretofore I haue had oftentimes affaires with diuers men, & that it is hard to pleaſe euerie man that hath béene offended or iniuried by me, I moſt humblie require and aſke them forgiueneſſe: but eſpeciallie almightie God, whome thoroughout all my life I haue moſt gréeuouſlie offended. And vnto all other, whatſoeuer they be that haue offended me, I doo with my whole heart forgiue them.

And once againe (dearelie beloued in the Lord) I require that you will kéepe your ſelues quiet and ſtill, leaſt thorough your tumult you might cauſe me to haue ſome trouble, which in this caſe would nothing at all profit me, neither be anie pleaſure vnto you. For albeit the ſpirit be willing and readie, the fleſh is fraile and wauering, and thorough your quietneſſe I ſhall be much more the quieter: but if that you fall vnto tumult, it will be great trouble & no gaine at all vnto you. Moreouer, I deſire you to beare me witneſſe, that I die héere in the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, deſiring you to helpe me with your praiers, that I maie perſeuere conſtant in the ſame vnto my liues end.

Doctor Cox the dukes ghoſtlie father.

Then he turning himſelfe about knéeled downe vpon his knées, vnto whome doctor Cox, which was there preſent, to counſell and aduertiſe him, deliuered a certeine ſcroll into his hand, wherein was conteined a briefe confeſſion to God. Which being read, he ſtood vp againe on his féet, without anie trouble of mind as it appeared, and firſt bad the ſhiriffes farewell, then the lieutenant of the tower, & certeine other that were on the ſcaffold, taking them all by the hands. Then he gaue the executioner monie, which doone, he put off his gowne, and knéeling downe againe in the ſtraw, vntied his ſhirt ſtrings: and then the executioner comming to him, turned downe his collar round about his necke, and all other things which did let and hinder him. Then he couering his face with his owne handkerchiefe, lifting vp his eies vnto heauen, where his onelie hope remained, laid himſelfe downe along, ſhewing no maner of trouble or feare; neither did his countenance change, but that before his eies were couered there began to appéere a red colour in the middeſt of his chéeks.

Abr. Fl. out of Iohn Fox in the Acts and Monuments.

The godlie end of the duke of Summerſet.

¶ Thus this moſt méeke and gentle duke lieng along and looking for the ſtroke, bicauſe his doublet couered his necke he was commanded to riſe vp and put it off; & then laieng himſelfe downe againe vpon the blocke, and calling thriſe vpon the name of Ieſus, ſaieng: Lord Ieſu ſaue me, as he was the third time repeating the ſame, euen as the name of Ieſu was in vttering, in a moment he was bereft both of head and life; and ſlept in the Lord Ieſus, being taken awaie from all the dangers and euils of this life, and reſting now in the peace of God: in the preferment of whoſe truth and goſpell he alwaies ſhewed himſelfe an excellent inſtrument and member, and therefore hath receiued the reward of his labours. Thus gentle reader thou haſt the true hiſtorie of this worthie and noble duke, and if anie man report it otherwiſe, let it be counted as a lie.]

This duke was in high fauour and eſtimation with king Henrie the eight, of whome he receiued ſundrie high & great preferments, by reaſon that the the ſaid king had married ladie Iane his ſiſter, by whome he had iſſue king Edward the ſixt. He was not onelie courteous, wiſe and gentle, being dailie attendant at the court; but forward and fortunate in ſeruice abroad, as may well appeare in his ſundrie voiages, both into France and Scotland. He was of nature verie gentle and pitifull, not blemiſhed by any thing ſo much, as by the death of the admerall his naturall brother, which could not haue béene brought to paſſe in that ſort, without his conſent. But of this good duke (to let paſſe multitude of words) maiſter Fox hath written no leſſe trulie than commendablie, & no leſſe commendablie than deſeruedlie, and no leſſe deſeruedlie than profitablie in his hiſtorie, whereto I refer the reader for further knowledge. Neuertheleſſe of this vertuous duke by waie of application I ſaie as ſomtime one ſaid (verie aptlie as ſome thinke) of the gratious ladie *An Bullen,

The protectors of England collected out of the ancient and moderne chronicles, wherin is ſet downe the yeare of Chriſt, and of the king in which they executed that function.

The collectiō of Frācis Thin in the yeare 1585.

VPon the death of this duke of Summerſet protector of England, it ſhall not be vnſitting in this place to ſet downe all the protectors (whereof I can as yet haue intelligence) and who haue béene gouernors, regents, gardians, or deputies of the realme, and of the kings perſon during his minoritie and time of his inſufficiencie of gouernement; or elſe of his abſence being out of the realme: whereof I haue made an eſpeciall title in my Pantographie of England, in which this my collection of the protectors, although perhaps I ſhall not ſet downe all (for Barnardus non videt omnia) yet it is better to haue halfe a loafe than no bread, knowledge of ſome than of none at all. Thus therefore I begin.

Guendoline.

Guendoline the daughter of Corineus duke of Cornewall (after the procurement of warre againſt hir huſband wherein he was ſlaine) was by common conſent (for that hir ſonne Madrane which ſhe had by Locrine was inſufficient by reaſon of his minoritie to gouerne the kingdome) made by the Britons ruler of the Ile, in the yeare of the world 2894, and ſo continued the ſame by the ſpace of fiftéene yéeres, vntill hir ſonne came to lawfull age.

Martia.

Martia (the widow of Guenteline the king) by reaſon that Sicilius hir ſonne was not of age conuenient to weld the ſcepter (as one being but ſeuen yeares old) obteined the gouernement both of the realme and of hir ſonnes perſon, which ſhe moſt worthilie deſerued, being a woman of rare vertue and iudgement.

Eldred.

Eldred, Ethelred, or Edred (for all theſe diuerſities are found in authors) brother to Edmund king of England, while the ſonnes of Edmund (Edwine and Edgar) were for their minorities inſufficient to diſpoſe the kingdome, was appointed protector to his nephues, in the yeare of Chriſt 940, who about ſix or ſeuen yeares after his protectorſhip tooke on him the kingdome at Kingſtone on Eaſter daie, in the yeare of Chriſt, as hath Iohn Stow 946, as others haue nine hundred fortie ſeuen.

Emma.

Emma the quéene of England, the widow of king Ethelred, and of Canutus, both kings of England iointlie, with Godwine earle of Kent had the gouernement of the realme vnder Hardiknute king of England, who began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt 1041.

Harold.

Harold the ſonne of Goodwine at the death of king Edward the Confeſſor (which fell in the yeare of Chriſt 1066, and the thrée and twentith yeare of the ſame king) was by the teſtament of the ſaid king Edward appointed regent of the yong Edgar Atheling (named heire in the life of the ſaid Edward) and of the kingdome, after the death of king Edward, during the minoritie of the ſaid Edgar. Beſide which the like commending of the kingdome to this Harold, in reſpect of the quéenes honour, as that before of the ſucceſſours right, is ſet downe by one that liued at that time, and wrote the life of king Edward, of erle Goodwine, and of his children, in theſe words. Porrectáq; manu (meaning king Edward lieng on his death bed, and ſpeaking in the behalfe of Editha the quéene, ſiſter to this Harold) ad prædictum nutricium ſuum fratrem Haroldum; Hanc inquit cum omni regno tutandam tibi commendo, vt pro domina & ſorore vt eſt fideli ſerues & honores obſequio, vt quoad vixerit à me adepto non priuetur honore debito. Commendo pariter etiam eos, qui natiuam terram ſuam reliquerunt cauſa amoris mei, mihíque hactenus fideliter ſunt obſequuti: vt ſuſcepta ab eis ſi ita volunt fidelitate eos tuearis & retineas, aut tua defenſione conductos cum omnibus quæ ſub me acquiſiuerunt cum ſalute ad propria transfretari facias, &c. But he, when king Edward was dead, vſurped the crowne to himſelfe, and ſhortlie after loſt both his life and his kingdome.

Odo biſhop of Baieux, and William Fitz-oſborne earle of Hereford.

Odo biſhop of Baieux, and William Fitzoſborne the firſt, being earle of Kent, and chiefe iuſtice of England, and the ſecond being earle of Hereford, were gouernours of the realme, in the yeare of our Lord 1067, and the firſt yeare of William the Conquerour, when he went into Normandie after the conqueſt and indifferent quieting of the realme.

Lanfranke archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Lanfranke archbiſhop of Canturburie, as appeareth by Matthew Parker, writing in this ſort in the life of the ſaid Lanfranke: Abſente Gulielmo omnia Lanfranco mandabantur, qui ſumma prudentia cuncta moderatus, proceres & plebem in officio tranquillè ſine vlla motu atque tumultu continebat, adeò vt ſi quæ defectionis ſuſpicio naſcebatur, ad eam illicò compeſcendam maximus & potentiſſimus quiſque opem & adiumentum illi imperanti præſtitit.

Sir Richard Lucie chéefe iuſtice of England.

Sir Richard Lucie knight, chiefe iuſtice of England was protector of the realme in the twelfe yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſecond, being the yeare of our Lord 1166, in the abſence of the king when he was in Normandie, and in the parts beyond the ſeas. Which Lucie in the thirtéenth yeare of the ſame king, being the yeare of our redemption 1167, did valiantlie reſiſt, and politikelie driue backe the earle of Bullongne inuading the realme. Hée built the abbeie of Leoſnes or Weſtwood in the pariſh of Erith in Kent (and not in Southfléet as ſome haue written) in the yeare of Chriſt 1178, being about the foure and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſecond; and further built the caſtell of Angier in Eſſex, in the dioceſſe of the biſhop of London. He had iſſue Godfreie biſhop of Wincheſter, and thrée daughters, who after the death of Godfreie their brother were his heires: the eldeſt daughter of which ſir Richard Lucie, was maried to Robert the firſt called Fitzwater: the ſecond daughter Auelina, was maried to Riuers, of whome iſſued Iohn de Riuers: the third daughter Roſe, was maried to Richard Warraine, ſon to king Iohn, as appeareth by a déed (belonging to my ſelfe, who had the rectorie of Leoſnes) beginning thus: Roſa de Douer quondam vxor venerabilis viri Richardi filij regis de Chilham.

Hugh Pudſie biſhop of Durham.

Hugh Puſaz de Puteaco or Pudſie, nephue to king Stephan, being biſhop of Durham, and erle of Northumberland, and William Longchampe biſhop of Elie, had the gouernement of the realme for Richard the firſt, vpon his departure forth of the realme to take his iournie into the holie land. For in his abſence he appointed this Hugh to haue the rule of the north parts, as chiefe iuſtice & warden of the realme from Humber to Scotland, deliuering to him alſo the kéeping of the caſtell of Wincheſter, the other parts of the realme, with the cuſtodie of the tower, he aſſigned to the gouernement of William Longchampe biſhop of Elie, whome he made chiefe iuſtice and warden of thoſe eaſt, ſouth and weſt parts, making him alſo his chancellour: who being a man of great diligence and knowledge in the adminiſtration of things, was yet verie factious and deſirous of rule, honour and riches, farre aboue all meaſure. And with theſe two biſhops hée linked in authoritie by commiſſion Hugh lord Bardolph, William Marſhall the great, earle of Chepſtow Strigull or Penbroke, Geffreie Fitzpeter, and William Brewer, barons, men of great honor, wiſdome & diſcretion. This the king did in the yeare of Chriſt 1190, and the firſt yeare of his reigne.

Walter de Conſtantijs archbiſhop of Roane.

Walter de Conſtantijs ſometime chancellor of England, biſhop of Lincolne, and now archbiſhop of Roane, vpon the miſdemeanor of the proud biſhop of Elie William Longchampe, about the yeare 1192, had the cuſtodie and gouernement of the realme committed vnto him, whileſt king Richard the firſt remained ſtill in the holie warres: who being called from that place in the yeare of Chriſt 1193 (with Eleanor mother to the king) to come to king Richard then impriſoned in Auſtria, the archbiſhop of Canturburie Hubert ſucceeded him in the yeare 1194, whome the ſaid archbiſhop of Roane procured to be inſtalled in the ſee of Canturburie, which Walter de Conſtantijs (as hath Eueresden) was made biſhop of Lincolne in the yeare 1183, and the next yeare after biſhop of Roane.

Hubert archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Hubert Walter, or Walter Hubert (for ſuch a tanſmutation of the name is vſed amongſt hiſtoriographers) was made (vpon the diſcharge and going of Walter archbiſhop of Roane beyond the ſeas to king Richard) gouernor and protector of the realme, before the returne of Richard the firſt into England after the ſaid kings impriſonment (by the duke of Auſtria and the emperour) procured by Sauaricus biſhop of Glaſtenburie and Welles, & kinſman to the emperor, whereof our moderne printed chronicles nor our ancient writers, except one, make any mention. This Hubert died at his manor of Tenham, and was buried at Canturburie in the ſouth wall, in the yeare of our redemption 1205, the third ides of Iulie, being the ſeuenth yeare of king Iohn.

Eleanor widow of Henrie the ſecond.

Eleanor widow to Henrie the ſecond, and mother to Richard the firſt, was made protectreſſe of England, after the departure of hir ſon into France, when he had béene deliuered out of priſon: in which office ſhe continued during the life of hir ſonne, which he ended in Poitiers in thoſe French warres, by a hurt receiued from one that diſcharged a croſſebow againſt him, on a fridaie as he beſieged Chalons. Touching whoſe death (ſith I am now in hand with the ſame) it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſet downe ſuch ſeuerall verſes compoſed by ſeuerall men in ſeuerall ſorts, as I haue read, and are not yet made common to the world, which verſes be theſe, concerning his death and place of buriall, as hereafter followeth:

Pictauus exta ducis ſepelit, tellúſque Chalucis
Corpus dat claudi ſub marmore fontis Ebraudi,
Neuſtria túq; tegis cor inexpugnabile regis,
Sic loca per trina ſe ſparſit tanta ruina,
Nec fuit hoc funus cui ſufficeret locus vnus.

Whereof alſo another compoſed theſe following verſes ſomewhat eloquentlie, as ſaith Matthew Paris (and ſo in truth they were, conſidering that age which moſtlie vſed a riming kind of Latine verſes, induced into the weſt part of the world by the barbarous Gothes) in his greater hiſtorie of the life of king Richard in manner and forme following:

halus quaſi
ſus lucis.

Ad Chalus cecidit rex regni cardo Richardus,
His ferus, his humilis, his agnus, his leopardus,
Caſus erat lucis, Chalus per ſecula nomen
Non intellectum fuerat, ſed nominis omen
Non patuit, res clauſa fuit, ſed duce cadente
Prodijt in lucem, pro caſu lucis adepta.

Beſides which verſes of two ſeuerall men, it pleaſeth my pen to ad alſo the third mans dooing, aſwell for that the number of thrée is the holie number, as for that there is nothing ſo ſweet, but that varietie doth refreſh it; yet eſpeciallie ſith it is delightfull to ſee the ſeuerall inuentions of manie wits, this third poet therefore, exclaming againſt the daie in which the ſaid king Richard the firſt receiued his deaths wound (being on a fridaie) doth thus write:

O veneris damnoſa dies! ô ſydus amarum!
Ille dies tua nox fuit, & Venus illa venenum,
Illa dedit lethum, ſed peſſimus ille dierum,
Primus ab vndecimo, quo vita victricus ipſum
Clauſit vtraq; dies: homicida tyrannide mira
Tranſigitur, clauſus excluſum, tectus opertum,
Prouidus incautum, miles inimicus inermem.

This quéene Eleanor the protectreſſe died in the yere of Chriſt 1205, being the ſeuenth of king Iohn.

Geffreie Fitzter earle of Eſſex.

Geffrie Fitzpeter lord Ludgerſall, who was by Richard the firſt made chiefe iuſtice of England, after the remouing of Hubert the archbiſhop of Canturburie, and was in the firſt yeare of king Iohn girded by him with the ſword of the earldome of Eſſex, was alſo protector of the realme. Who being a man of great power and authoritie, was by nature gentle, by birth noble, in the lawes cunning, in reuenues great, and to all a good iuſticer. This man was a bridle to king Iohn, to reſtreine his inſolencie; ſince he was confederat and alied in friendſhip & bloud with all the nobilitie of England: & for that cauſe was greatlie feared of the K. who ſaid of him, as he did before of the archbiſhop Hubert, that he then did fullie reigne, when they two were dead. For turning to thoſe which ſtood by him, when newes was brought vnto him of the death of Fitz Geffreie, he ſware by Gods féet, that he was then king & lord of England, and not before. Which words he would not vſe, when the archbiſhop Hubert died; becauſe this man was yet liuing, whome the king (as is alreadie ſaid) greatlie feared. And therefore vpon the death of the archbiſhop, he did onelie ſaie that he began to reigne; but now vpon this mans departure out of the world, he ſaid he was become a full lord & abſolute king of England. This Geffreie Fitzpeter died in the yeare of our redemption 1212, being about the fourtéenth yeare of the reigne of the ſaid miſerablie afflicted king Iohn, who died in the yeare of Chriſt 1216; whoſe death I haue béene the willinger here to mention; becauſe I would ſet downe his epitaph (not elſe before ſet downe in our Engliſh chronicles) as I find the ſame of ancient report:

Hoc in ſarcophago ſepelitur regis imago,
Qui moriens multum ſedauit in orbe tumultum,
Et cui connexa dum vixit probra manebant,
Hunc mala poſt mortem timor eſt ne fata ſequantur.
Qui legis hæc metuens dum cernis te moriturum,
Diſcito quid rerum pariat tibi meta dierum.

This Geffreie Fitzpeter maried Beatrice, daughter and heire of William lord Saie, by whom he had iſſue, Geffreie Mandeuile earle of Eſſex, & Mawd maried to Humfreie de Bohune, by whome the Bohunes became earles of Eſſex.

illiam
arſhall
earle of Penbroke.

William Marſhall ſurnamed the great, being erle of Penbroke, was made protector of the realme, & perſon of the king, after that the king (being nine yeares of age) was crowned in the yeare of our Lord 1216. Which office this William (being alſo marſhall of England) vſed ſo honorablie, that he recouered a great part of the nobilitie (which tooke part with Lewes ſon of the French king againſt king Iohn father to this Henrie) to aſſiſt the yoong king Henrie againſt the ſaid Lewes: who in the time of the ſaid Iohn had obteined a great part of the kingdome of England. By which meanes the ſaid Lewes was expelled, and the kingdome wholie recouered to the vſe of the ſaid yoong king Henrie the third.

This William Marſhall maried Iſabell daughter and heire to Richard Strangbow earle of Penbroke, who made him a happie father in the multitude of his children. For by hir he had fiue ſonnes, all which were in ſucceſſion marſhals of England, and earles of Penbroke; and fiue daughters. The ſonnes were William, Richard, Gilbert, Walter, and Anſelme; who all dieng without iſſue, the inheritance was deuolued to the fiue ſiſters; which were, Mawd the eldeſt, maried to Hugh Bigod, in hir right earle marſhall; Ione the ſecond, maried to Waraine Monchenſie, in hir right alſo earle of Penbroke, as hath Nicholas Triuet; Iſabell the third, maried to Gilbert de Clare earle of Gloceſter; Sibill the fourth, maried to William Ferrers erle of Darbie; & Eue the fift daughter, maried to William de Berehuſe, or de Brauſe. This William the great died in the yeare of our redemption 1219, being the third (as hath Nicholas Triuet) or the fourth (as hath Matthew Weſtminſter) yeare of the reigne of the ſaid king Henrie the third, and was buried at the new temple, on Aſcenſion daie, being the ſeuenteenth calends of Aprill: of whome was made this epitaph by Geruaſius Melckeleie, taking vpon him the perſon of the earle marſhall:

fol. 213.

Sum quem Saturnum ſibi ſentit Hibernia, Solem
Anglia, Mercurium Normannia, Gallia Martem.

Which ſignifieth that he was a ſharpe corrector and ruler of the Iriſh, an honor & glorie to the Engliſh, a councellor and diſpatcher of the affaires of Normandie, a warlike knight and inuincible capteine againſt the Frenchmen.

Peter de la
Roches.

Petrus de rupibus, or Peter of the Roch, being biſhop of Wincheſter, was after the death of William Marſhall earle of Penbroke aduanced to the protectorſhip of the king; becauſe that the yoong king was almoſt deſtitute of anie of his owne kindred that might worthilie haue the rule of his perſon. For his mother quéene Iſabell was newlie maried to Hugh Brune earle of March in France. This biſhop of Wincheſter (who was both a wiſe and a ſtout prelat) being now in poſſeſſion of the king, and miſtruſting that he had entred into a more weightie office than he might well diſcharge, if all things were not doone according to the fanſie of the nobilitie, procured diuerſe graue and honorable men to be preferred to the kings councell, and to be aſſociats to him in the adminiſtration of the weale publike; and ſo entred into the adminiſtration of his new atchiued honor. Which yet he did not long inioie.

But as the biſhop was at the firſt carefull to plant ſuch of the nobilitie about the king, for the ſupport of the realme; ſo yet himſelfe being a Gaſcoine, did after in the riper yeares of the king prefer to offices about the king ſuch Gaſcoins as both were of his owne bloud and kindred; and by their extraordinarie dealing procured the nobilitie with an hard and vndutifull courſe to oppoſe themſelues againſt the king. This Peter was aduanced to the ſeat of Wincheſter, in the yeare of our redemption 1204, being about the firſt yeare of king Iohn. After which he went to Rome, and being a prelat more fit to fight than to preach, for Mars than for the muſes; did returne from Rome in the yeare of Chriſt 1205, being about the ſeuenth yeare of king Iohn. He remained biſhop about two and thirtie yeares, and died at his manour houſe of Fernham, on the fift ides of Iune, in the yeare of our Lord (as haue Matthew Paris and Matthew Weſtminſter) 1238, being the two & twentith yeare of Henrie the third. Who ſomewhat before his death, about the one and thirtith yeare of his biſhoprike, went into the holie land with the biſhop of Exceſter. He builded, and indued with poſſeſſions manie religious houſes: amongſt which he founded Tichfield in Hampſhire; of which Peter de la Roches, or of the rocks, Matthew Paris maketh a more large diſcourſe.

Hubert de Burow earle of Kent.

Hubert de Burow, coneſtable of Douer caſtle, earle of Kent, and chiefe iuſtice of England, being of great account in the realme for his probitie and goodneſſe, was made protector of the king and kingdome, in the yeare of our redemption 1221, being the fift yeare of king Henrie the third. This man in the yeare of Chriſt 1221 (being the ſame yeare in the which he was made protector) maried at Yorke, Margaret, ſiſter to Alexander king of Scots. And here I thinke it not amiſſe to ſaie ſomewhat touching the iſſue of this Hubert of Burow, who in a certeine nameleſſe booke (caried about in the hands of all men) treating of the nobilitie (created ſince the inuaſion of William Conqueror) is ſaid to die without iſſue: which cannot poſſiblie be ſo, if that be true which I haue ſéene: which I am led by manie reaſons to beléeue to be moſt true.

For I haue read of two children which this Hubert had, whereof the one being a ſonne, was called Richard de Burow, who was knighted by Henrie the third (as it ſéemeth to me) after the death of his father: if this Richard be not the ſame Iohn, of whome Matthew Paris writeth, that in the yeare of Chriſt 1229, Rex Anglorum Henricus, in die Pentecoſtes Iohannem filium Huberti Angliæ iuſticiarij cingulo militari donauit tertio nonas Iunij. The other child was a daughter called Margaret, maried to Richard heire to the earldome of Gloceſter, as noteth Iohn Beuer in theſe words: Richardus hæres comitis Glouerniæ Margaretam filiam Hoberti de Burgo comitis Cantiæ in vxorem accepit. This Hubert of Burow was a verie old man, who after manie perſecutions by the king, and after ſo manie chances of both fortunes, departed this world on the fourth ides of Maie, in the yeare of our redemption 1243, being the ſeuen and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third at his manour of Banſtud, or Banſted. Whoſe bodie was honorablie caried to London, and there buried in the church of the frier preachers, to whom in his life he had giuen great gifts; and amongſt other things, his goodlie place which ſtood not far from the palace of earle Richard of Cornewall (as I with ſome probable reaſons coniecture) néere vnto Weſtminſter, which afterward the archbiſhop of Yorke did procure. His wife the counteſſe of Kent, being likewiſe verie old, a woman that kept verie great hoſpitalitie, and that was well beloued, died in the yeare of Chriſt 1259, being the thrée and fortith yeare of Henrie the third, about ſixtéene years after the death of the earle hir huſband.

Walter Greie archbiſhop of Yorke.

Walter Greie archbiſhop of Yorke was made protector of the realme in this ſort. The French king hauing vniuſtlie giuen the earldome of Poitiers to his brother Adulphus; Hugh Brune earle of March (the greateſt of the nobilitie in that prouince) would not doo homage vnto Adulphus, but wrote his letters to his ſon in law king Henrie the third (whoſe mother Eleanor he had married) that if he would come into thoſe parts, he ſhould haue both aid of men, and furniture of war for the perfect reſtoring of thoſe dominions to the crowne of England. For which cauſe Henrie the third aſſembling his power, did with his brother Richard (then latelie returned frõ Ieruſalem) depart the realme in the yéere of our redemption 1242, being the ſix & twentith yeare of his gouernment into Poitiers, & left the adminiſtration of the kingdome to Walter Greie archbiſhop of Yorke, whileſt he ſhould remaine in thoſe parts. Which office the ſaid archbiſhop held alſo in the yéere of Chriſt 1243, being the ſeauen and twentith yéere of king Henrie the third. Of this man is more mention made in my collection of the chancellors of England; in this place onelie further ſetting downe, that this Walter died in the yéere of Chriſt 1255, being about the nine and thirtith yeare of this Henrie the third, as hath Anonymus M. S.

Eleanor wife to king Henrie.

Eleanor daughter to Reimond earle of Prouince, wife to king Henrie the third and quéene of England, with Richard earle of Cornewall the kings brother (to whoſe cuſtodie was committed Edward Longſhanks, being after king of England by the name of Edward the firſt, ſon to the ſaid king Henrie) were (in the yéere of our redemption 1253, being the ſeuen and thirtith yéere of the reigne of king Henrie the third) appointed gouernors and protectors of the realme in the kings abſence, whileſt he went into Gaſcoine, whither he went to pacifie the nobilitie, and to kéepe the ſame in ſafetie from the French. And becauſe my pen hath here fallen vpon Richard earle of Cornwall, I determine to ſay ſomewhat of him in this place, not hauing other occaſion offered to me therefore. This Richard the ſon of king Iohn was borne in the yeare of Chriſt 1208, being the tenth yeare of the reigne king Iohn. He was made (and ſo called) earle of Poitiers by Henrie the third, about the ninth yéere of his reigne, in the yéere of Chriſt 1225, who alſo that yéere with his vncle William earle of Sariſburie went into Poitiers, where he was ioifullie receiued: he putteth the earle of March to flight, he recouereth that which was loſt in Gaſcoine, he went into the holie land, refuſeth the kingdome of Apulia offered vnto him, he is choſen emperor, and receiueth that honor at Colen, being there crowned king of the Romans: he ſubdued Alfonſus competitor with him for the empire, he after returneth into England: he is an enimie to Simon Montfort and the barons rebelling againſt his brother king Henrie the third; he is taken priſoner by the barons, and is afterward deliuered: he was created knight and earle of Cornwall in the yeare of our redemption 1225, as hath Matthew Weſtminſter, but as ſaith William Packington, he was created earle of Cornwall in the yeare of Chriſt 1227. He married foure wiues, if that Eliſabeth his firſt wife and Iſabell the widow of Gilbert de Clare were not all one woman. But leauing that to further knowledge, I doo for this time make them but one perſon; for ſo in truth it muſt be, whatſoeuer otherwiſe ſhall be ſhewed in miſtaking their names. Elizabeth that was his firſt wife, as noteth Leland, was buried in the quéere of Belland, being that woman which is called Iſabell, and was the daughter of William Marſhall earle of Penbroke ſurnamed the great: and the widow of Gilbert de Clare earle of Gloceſter was maried to this erle of Cornwall, in the yeare of our Lord 1231 being the fiftéenth yeare of king Henrie the third.

This Iſabell died in the yeare of our redemption 1240, being the foure and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, after this manner. For ſhe being great with child, and néere to the time of hir deliuerance, fell into Morbum ictericum, or the hicket,

bicket, and deliuering a child into the world, which had life, and was baptiſed by the name of Nicholas, they both preſentlie died therevpon. Which thing when the earle vnderſtood being then on his iournie into Cornwall, he burſt out in teares, and greatlie lamented that loſſe. Wherefore haſtilie returning, and leauing his former iournie, he honorablie buried his wife at * Belland or Beaulen, an houſe of religion builded by king Iohn from the foundation, and repleniſhed with Charterhouſe monks.

ellum locum religious ouſe in ampſhire, as by ſome appoſed.

His ſecond wife was Sinthia or Sanclia, daughter to Reimond earle of Prouince, and ſiſter to the queene of England, wife to king Henrie the third, brother to the ſaid Richard earle of Cornwall, who maried the ſaid Sinthia in the yeare of our redemption 1243, being the ſeuen and twentith yeere of the reigne of king Henrie the third. Leland alſo appointeth to him the third wife, which was Beatrix de Famaſtais, whom he calleth queene of Almaine, ⁊ wife to king Richard, brother to Henrie the third. Which ladie died in the yere of our redemption 1277, being the firſt yeere of Edward the firſt, and was buried at the friers minors in Oxford. This noble Richard erle of Cornwall died in Februarie at Berkhamſted, in the yeare of Chriſt 1271, in the fiue and fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, as ſaie Matthew Paris and Matthew Weſtminſter: but Nicholas Triuet referreth his death to the yeare 1270, being the foure and fiftith yeere of Henrie the third: and the chronicle belonging to Eueſham to the yeare 1272, being the ſix and fiftith yeare of Henrie the third. After whoſe death his hart was buried in the friers minors of Oxford, and his bodie committed to the earth in the monaſterie of Hales (being Charterhouſe monks) which he had builded at his charge of 10000 marks, which at this daie at fiue ſhillings the ounce of ſiluer amounteth to the ſumme of twentie thouſand pounds. He had two ſonnes, the one called Henrie by his firſt wife Iſabell; the other called Edmund de Almania by his ſecond wife Sinthia. Henrie was ſlaine by Simon and Guie of Montfort ſonnes of the laſt Simon Montfort earle of Leiceſter, in the life of his father Richard in Italie at Viterbo, in the yere of our redemption 1270. Which fact being done in ſaint Sylueſters church as he was at maſſe, occaſioned the towneſmen to paint the maner of his death on the wall of the church: and that picture being beheld by a certeine verſifier, he was vrged therevpon to compoſe theſe following verſes:

Regis Theutonici Richardi clara propago,
Sternitur Henricus, velut hæc deſignat imago,
Dum redit à Tripoli, regum fultus comitiua,
In crucis obſequio patitur ſub gente nociua,
Irruit in templum, poſt miſſam, ſtirps Guenelonis
Perfodit gladius hunc Simonis atque Guidonis,
Diſpoſuit Deus vt per eos vir tantus obiret,
Ne reuocatis his, gens Anglica tota periret,
Anno milleno Domini cum ſeptuageno,
Atque duceno, Carolo ſub rege ſereno,
Vrbe Viterbina fit in eius carne ruina,
Cæli regina precor vt ſit ei medicina.

His bones were brought into England, and buried in the monaſterie of Hales, where his father was after alſo buried: but his hart was beſtowed in a guilt cup, and placed beſide the chaine of ſaint Edward the Confeſſor in Weſtminſter abbeie. The other ſonne to this Richard earle of Cornwall was Edmund of Almaine, who after the death of his father was inueſted with the honor of the earledome of Cornwall, being borne at Berkhamſted in the yeere of our redemption 1250, being the foure and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, to whome his vncle Bonifacius biſhop of Canturburie was godfather, and called him Edmund in the honor of ſaint Edmund archbiſhop of Canturburie and Confeſſor. This Edmund earle of Cornwall married the daughter of Richard earle of Clare, of whome ſhall be more ſpoken when we come to treat of him as protector of England.

Boniface archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Boniface the archbiſhop of Canturburie, with others which follow, were protectors of the realme after this maner, as I haue gathered. It was ordeined in the parlement at Oxford called Parlementum inſanum, that the king ſhould chooſe foorth twelue perſons of the realme, and the communaltie of the land other twelue, the which hauing regall authoritie in their hands, might as gardians of the kingdome take in charge vpon them the gouernment of the realme, ⁊ ſhould from yeare to yeare prouide for the due election of iuſtices, chancellors, treaſurors, and other officers, and further prouide to ſee to the ſafe keeping of the caſtels belonging to the crowne.

Theſe foure and twentie perſons appointed to that function, began to order all things at their owne pleaſure: in the meane time not forgetting to vſe things chieflie to their owne aduantage, as well in prouiding excheats and wards for their children and kinſfolks, as alſo in beſtowing of patronages of churches belonging to the kings gift, vnto their owne liking. So that theſe prouiders which ſhuld haue made carefull and beneficiall prouiſions for the realme, made ſpeedie and plentifull prouiſion for them and theirs, inſomuch that neither king nor Chriſt could get anie thing from theſe protectors. There be that write, how that there were but twelue or thirteene choſen to be gouernors at this time (which for this preſent I deeme to be the truer opinion) whoſe names are as follow: Boniface archbiſhop of Canturburie, the biſhop of Worceſter, Roger Bigod earle of Norffolke and marſhall of England, Simon de Montfort earle of Leiceſter, Richard de Clare earle of Gloceſter, Humfreie Bohune earle of Hereford, Richard Fitzalane earle of Arundell, ſir Iohn Manſell chiefe iuſtice of England, ſir Roger lord Mortimer, ſir Hugh Bigod, ſir Peter de Sauoie, ſir Iames Andlete, ⁊ ſir Peter de Montfort. To theſe (as ſome ſaie) was authoritie onlie giuen to puniſh all ſuch as treſpaſſed in the breach of anie of the conſtitutions of the parlement of Oxford. Others ſay that they were made rulers ⁊ protectors of the realme, and to diſpoſe thereof, becauſe the king was much miſſeled in the gouernment of the kingdome by the peruerſe councell of his flatterers. Which twelue gouernors I ſuppoſe did not long continue: for being euerie one priuatlie for himſelfe, and ſo not iointlie for the common-wealth, they grew diuided, and what the one labored to ſet vp, the other ſought to pull downe.

Boniface archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Boniface archbiſhop of Canturburie the ſecond time, ⁊ the biſhop of Worceſter, with ſir Philip Baſſet, or rather ſir Hugh Bigod made chiefe iuſtice of England by the barons, were appointed in the yeere of our redemption 1260, being the fortie and fourth of king Henrie the third, to haue the gouernment of the realme in the abſence of the king, whileſt he remained in France at Paris about the affaires of Normandie: at what time a peace was made betweene the kings of England and France.

Gilbert de Clare.

Gilbert de Clare the ſecond of that name that was earle of Gloceſter and Hertford, was the ſonne of Richard de Clare erle of Gloceſter and Hertford, which died in the yeere of our redemption 1262, being the fortie ⁊ firſt yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, and was buried at Tewkeſburie, with a great image of ſiluer and gilt vpon his toome, and the ſame ſword and ſpurres which he did weare in his life time. Of which Richard theſe verſes were compoſed for his probitie and rareneſſe of vertuous maners and conditions, and ſet vpon his toome:

Hic pudor Hyppoliti, Paridis gena, ſenſus Vlyſsi,
Aeneæ pietas, Hectoris ira iacet.

This Gilbert (I ſaie) the ſonne of the ſaid Richard was after the death of Henrie the third (which happened in the yeare of our Lord 1277, & in the ſeuen & fiftith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid king Henrie) in the abſence of king Edward the firſt in the holie warres made gouernour of the realme, vntill the returne of the ſaid king Edward into England, to which function he was appointed by king Henrie the third, lieng on his death-bed: who cauſed the ſaid Gilbert to ſweare to kéepe the peace of the land to the behoofe of Edward his ſonne. Which he did moſt faithfullie, vntill the ſecond daie of Auguſt, in the ſecond yeare of the ſaid king, in which the ſaid king Edward landed in England, being in the yeare of our redemption 1274, at what time the king was honorablie interteined of the ſaid Gilbert, and Iohn earle of Warraine (a ſupporter to him in the charge of the kingdome) at the caſtell of Tunbridge in Kent, and Rigate in Surrie, which Gilbert with the other péers of the land, immediatlie after the death of king Henrie the third, aſſembling at the new temple brake the old ſeale of king Henrie, made a new ſeale in the name of king Edward, and appointed faithfull officers for the ſure kéeping and obſeruing of the treaſure, the riches, the peace, and the lawes of the kingdoms.

This Gilbert had two wiues, his firſt wife was Alice the daughter of Hugh le Brune erle of March, by whom he had iſſue a daughter, that was counteſſe of Fife in Scotland: his ſecond wife was Ione the daughter of king Edward the firſt, called Ione of Acres, by whome he had one ſonne, called Gilbert the third, earle of Gloceſter and Hertford, who married Mawd the daughter of Richard earle of Vlſter in the yeare of Chriſt 1308 at Waltham, by whome he had iſſue a ſonne, Iohn borne in the yeare of Chriſt 1312, being in the ſixt yeare of Edward the ſecond, that died without iſſue; after the death of which Gilbert the third, his lands and earldomes of Gloceſter and Hertford came to the ſiſter of the ſaid Gilbert the third, who was ſlaine in the battell of Striueling againſt the Scots in the ſeuenth (or as others haue the eight) yeare of king Edward the ſecond, whome the Scots would gladlie haue kept for ranſome if they had knowne him: but he had forgotten to put on his cote of armes to ſhew what he was, after which he was brought into England and was buried at Tewkeſburie, vpon whoſe death the two earledomes of Gloceſter and Hertford were ſo diſperſed, that there was neuer anie to this daie, that iointlie ſucceeded or poſſeſſed them both. Thus hauing digreſſed from Gilbert the ſecond, in treating of his ſonne Gilbert the third, let vs againe returne to him. He beſides his ſonne Gilbert the third, had by his wife Ione thrée daughters; Elenor, firſt married to Hugh Spenſer, ſecond ſonne to Hugh Spenſer earle of Gloceſter, and after his death to William Zouch; Margaret married to Piers de Gaueſton earle of Cornewall, and after to Hugh Audeleie; and Elizabeth or Iſabell married in the yeare of our Lord 1308, being the firſt yeare of Edward the ſecond, to Iohn the ſonne of Richard earle of Vlſter. This Gilbert the ſecond, before the marriage of his ſecond wife, was on the fiftéenth kalends of Auguſt diuorſed from Alice his firſt wife, in the yeare of our redemption 1271, being the ſix and fiftith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third; and after in Weſtminſter church the laſt of Aprill married his ſecond wife, about the eightéenth yeare of Edward the firſt being the yeare of Chriſt 1290, which Gilbert the ſecond, being taken awaie by vntimelie death, departed this world in the yeare of our redemption 1295 (being the thrée and twentith of the reigne of the ſaid Edward the firſt) who was in word & déed, in commandement and authoritie the greateſt perſon of the kingdome, next to king Edward the firſt: for which cauſe he well deſerued to haue his ſepulture among his worthie anceſtors.

of Cornw

Edmund earle of Cornewall, of whome there is ſomewhat ſpoken before, being the ſonne of Richard king of Almaine, and earle of Cornewall brother to Henrie the third, married Margaret the daughter of Richard de Clare erle of Gloceſter, he was made protector of the Realme by Edward the firſt in the fouretéenth yeare (as ſome ſaie) or in the fiftéenth, as others ſaie (for there is ſo much diſagréement amongſt authors for the accounts of yeares, as it paſſeth anie one man to reconcile them in all points) when the ſaid king went into Aragon to reconcile the two kings of Arragon & Naples. He continued in this office in the yeare of Chriſt 1287, or 1228, as hath Treuet, being the ſixtéenth yeare of Edward the firſt, in which he ſubdued Riſe ap Merdach the Welſh prince, rebelling againſt Edward the firſt, and ouerthrew the caſtell of Druſillane (as hath the ſaid Nicholas Treuet) he was lord of Wallingford, did much coſt therevpon, and died without iſſue, as hath Matthew Weſtminſter, in the yeare of Chriſt 1300: but as hath Thomas Walſingham 1301, leauing the king of England his heire. Yet are there ſome pedegrées and other authors, and thoſe not the meaneſt, which ſaie that he had a daughter, Iſabell married to Morice Fitz Harding lord Barkleie: ſo that theſe authors, which ſaie that he died without iſſue, are to be vnderſtood of the iſſue male, & not of the heire generall: for they account him to die without iſſue, which leaueth no poſteritie to continue his title of honor. The which their meaning they make more plaine, in that they ſaie that after his iſſuleſſe death, the earledome came to the crowne. And here bicauſe there is mention made of Wallingford, I will ſet downe what Leland hath written touching the ſame, bicauſe I deſire to make common, and to preſerue all whatſoeuer monuments of Leland that come vnto my hands: thus therefore he writeth of Wallingford in his commentaries of England, written in the yeare of our redemption 1542, being the foure and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the eight in theſe words.

The towne of Wallingford hath béene a verie notable thing and well walled. The dich of the towne, and the creſt whereupon the wals ſtand, be yet manifeſtlie perceiued, and begin from the caſtell, going in compaſſe a good mile and more, and ſo continueth to Wallingford bridge, a large thing of ſtone ouer the Thames. There remaine yet the names of theſe ſtréets amongſt others. Thameſſtréet, Fiſhſtréet, Woodſtréet, Goldſmiths row. And by the patents and donation of Edmund earle of Cornewall and lord of the honour of Wallingford, it appéereth that there were fourtéene pariſh churches in Wallingford: and there be men yet aliue that can ſhew the places and churchyards where they ſtood, at this time there are but thrée pariſh churches. The towne and the caſtell was ſore defaced by the Danes warres, yet they méetlie floriſhed in the time of Richard king of the Romans earle of Cornewall, and brother to Henrie the third, he did much coſt vpon the caſtell which ioineth to the north gate of the towne, and hath thrée diches (as vpon the creſts of the ſame may appéere) large and déepe, about each of the two firſt diches (on the creſts of the ground caſt out) runneth an embatteled wall now ſore in ruine, and for the moſt part defaced. All the goodlie buildings, with the tower and dungeon, be within the third dich. There is alſo a collegiat chapell amongeſt the buildings within the third dich. Edmund earle of Cornewall ſon to Richard king of Romans was the firſt founder and indower of this college. Prince Edward the blacke (as one told me) augmented this college. There is a deane, foure prieſts, ſix clerkes, and foure choriſters. The late deane before doctor London that now is, builded a faire ſteeple of ſtone at the weſt end of the collegiat chapell, to the making whereof he defaced (as it is ſaid without licence) a peece of the kings lodging on the eaſt end of the chapell. The deane hath a faire lodging of timber within the caſtell, and to it is ioined a place for the miniſters of the chapell. Thus much Leland for Wallingford, & thus much I for Edmund earle of Cornewall and lord of Wallingford.

Edward prince of wales.

Edward of Carnaruan prince of Wales, ſonne to Edward the firſt, was in the yeare of our redemption 1295, being the fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the firſt, protector of England, in the abſence of his father in Flanders, who becauſe he was of tender yeares, had as tutors and gouernours appointed vnto him Richard biſhop of Durham (Eulogium hath the biſhop of London) William Montacute, with diuerſe other knights, as Reignold Greie, Iohn Giffard, & Alane Plunket, being wiſe, diſcreet and expert ſoldiers.

Piers de Gaueſtone rle of Cornewall.

Piers or Peter de Gaueſtone a Gaſcoine borne, whome king Edward the ſecond ſo tenderlie loued as that he preferred him before all men, was appointed gardian of the realme in the firſt yeare of the ſaid king Edward the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption 1308, when the king went into France and there aboad to marrie Iſabell daughter to Philip king of France, before that the ſaid Edward was crowned king of England, as hath Radulphus Higden. Of this Piers I will here ſaie little, bicauſe I haue ſpoken more largelie of him in my pantographie of England.

Iohn de Dro- nſford.

Iohn de Drokenſford biſhop of Bath and Wels, was in the yeare of our redemption 1313, being the ſixt yeare of king Edward the ſecond, made protector of the realme in the abſence of the ſaid king Edward the ſecond, and his wife queene Iſabell, who went into France to ſolemnize the coronation of Philip (ſonne to Philip king of France) who was at that inſtant created king of Nauarre. This Drokenſford was the fourteenth biſhop of Bath & Wels. Great contention was there betweene him and the deane and prieſts of that church. He ſucceeded in the biſhoprike Walter Houlſhaw. This Drokenſford held the biſhoprike about nineteene yeares, he beautified the ſame with manie goodlie buildings, procured manie priuileges vnto it, and greatlie exalted his kindred. He was buried at Welles before the high altar of ſaint Iohn Baptiſt.

Henrie Lacie earle of Lincolne,

Henrie Laſcie or Lacie earle of Lincolne, and of Saliſburie, baron of Halton and of Pontfrait, corruptlie called Pomefret, and conſtable of Cheſter, was made protector of the realme in the fift yeare of Edward the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption 1310, whileſt the king remained in the warres of Scotland. Which Henrie died ſhortlie after in the ſame yeare, and was buried in the new worke of Paules, who carried for his armes the purple lion cōtrarie to the cote his anceſtors had borne before. This man had doone great ſeruice in the warres in the time of Edward the firſt, he married Margaret the daughter and heire of William Longeſpee earle of Saliſburie, and had by hir a daughter named Alice, married to Thomas Plantagenet earle of Lancaſter, Leiceſter, and Darbie. This Henrie (as I haue learned of other and read in Leland) had iſſue a baſtard ſonne, and hauing amongſt manie other lordſhips the manour of Granteceſter beſides Cambridge, he gaue the ſame with other lands vnto that baſtard, and commanded that the ſame Lacie ſo ſet vp in Granteceſter, ſhould for himſelfe and his ſucceſſors euer name their ſonnes and heires by the names of Henrie, which hitherto hath beene religiouſlie obſerued amongſt them. And this was the originall of the houſes of the Lacies in Granteceſter, as Leland learned of him which was then heire of thoſe lands.

Gilbert de Clare earle of Gloceſter.

Gilbert de Clare the third earle of Gloceſter of that name, after the death of Henrie Lacie, was choſen gouernour of the realme (the king being ſtill in Scotland) during the time that the king ſhould make his abode in that countrie. Of this man ſe before in the diſcourſe of his father Gilbert the ſecond earle of Gloceſter and Hertford, and protector of the realme.

Edward prince of wales.

Edward prince of Wales and duke of Aquitane, comming out of France with Iſabell in the ſecond yeare of Edward the ſecond, his father was after his landing in England and the taking of his father made gardian of England vnder his father, which office he did not long continue: for depoſing his father from the kingdome in the yeare of Chriſt 1326 he aſſumed the crowne himſelfe in his fathers life.

Walter Reinolds archbiſhop of Canturburie,

Walter Reinolds archbiſhop of Canturburie was with others appointed gardian of England on this ſort. Edward the third as before atteining to the crowne in the yeare of our redemption 1327, or as ſome others more trulie ſaie 1326, being fourteene years of age did then begin his reigne. But bicauſe he was ſo yoong (not being of power or policie to weld ſo great a charge) it was decreed in this firſt yeare of his reigne, that twelue gouernors of the greateſt lords within [illegible] realme ſhould poſſeſſe the gouernement, vntill he came to riper yeares, whoſe names were as inſueth: Walter archbiſhop of Canturburie, the archbiſhop of Yorke, the biſhop of Wincheſter, the biſhop of Hereford, Henrie earle of Lancaſter, Thomas Brotherton earle marſhall, Edmund of Woodſtocke earle of Kent, Iohn earle of Warren, the lord Thomas Wake, the lord Henrie Perſie, the lord Oliuer de Ingham, and the lord Iohn Roſſe, who were ſworne of the kings councell and charged with the gouernement of the kingdome as they would anſwere for the ſame. But this ordinance continued not long, for in the ſecond yeare of this king, Iſabell the kings mother and the lord Roger Mortimer tooke the whole rule into their hands, in ſuch ſort that the king and his councellors were in all affaires of ſtate, and otherwiſe, onelie gouerned by their direction. Of this Walter Reinolds the archbiſhop, bicauſe he was ſometime chancellor, and ſometime treaſuror, is more mention made in the large volume of the liues of the chancellors.

Iohn of Eltham earle of Cornewall.

Iohn of Eltham earle of Cornewall ſonne to Edward the ſecond, had (in the fourth yeare of king Edward the third being the yeare of our redemption 1330) the gouernement of the realme committed vnto him, whileſt king Edward the third had paſſed the ſeas onelie fifteene horſſes in his companie, apparelled in clokes like vnto merchants, which office the ſaid Iohn of Eltham executed vntill the returne of the ſaid king, and before that alſo when the ſaid Edward the third, in the ſecond yeare of his reigne, did before this time go into France to doo his homage. He was made earle of Cornewall in the ſecond yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of Chriſt 1328, and died at Barwike, others ſaie at S. Iohns towne in Scotland, in the moneth of October 1336, being the tenth yeare of Edward the third, and was honorablie buried at Weſtminſter; for the ſolemnization of whoſe buriall the king came out of Scotland about the feaſt of the Epiphanie.

Edward the Blacke prince.

Edward the Blacke prince, eldeſt ſonne to Edward the third, being about the age of nine yeares, was in the twelfe yéere of his father, being the yeare of our redemption 1338, or as ſaith Matthew Parker 1337, made gardian of England in the abſence of his father being as then ſailed into Flanders to procure the Flemmings to aid him againſt the French king. Under which prince as ſome write (or rather as I for the time take it) equall in commiſſion to him it ſéemeth that John archbiſhop of Canturburie had the chéefeſt rule of the land, bicauſe that king Edward after his returne into England, which was about the fouretéenth or the fiftéenth of his reigne, charged the ſaid biſhop with certeine negligences which he vſed in collections of monie, whileſt he had the chiefe rule of the land, when he was in the wars of France. Wherefore the words of Matthew Parker in the life of the ſaid John Stratford (ſaieng that the king held a parlement, in which omnem regni curam & gubernationem archiepiſcopo cōmiſit) muſt néeds be intended that he had that charge vnder or equallie with the ſaid Blacke prince, as chiefeſt councellor to ſupport the tender yeares of his ſonne.

John Stratford.

After which alſo in the yeare of our redemption, as hath the ſame Matthew Parker 1342, being about the ſixtéenth of the ſaid Edward the third, the king committed the care & gouernement of the kingdome to the ſaid archbiſhop, whileſt the king was beyond the ſeas in the warres: for thus writeth the ſaid Parker, fol. 257. Ac paulo poſt nulla purgatione indicta (ſpeaking of the ſaid biſhop vniuſtlie accuſed to the king) aut recepta, omnibus penè parlamenti ordinibus pro archiepiſcopo deprecantibus, rex eum ſua ſponte legitimè purgatum & excuſatum pronuntiauit, eúmque multò magis charum quàm antè habuit, omnibúſque gerendis in Anglia rebus ſe in militia abſente præfecit. Of which archbiſhop being ſomtime chancellor and treaſuror of England ſhall be ſet downe a more large diſcourſe in my large booke of the liues of the chancellors.

Lionell duke of Clarence.

Lionell third ſonne to Edward the third, was in the ninth yere of the reigne of the ſaid king Edward the third, being the yeare in which the word became fleſh 1345, made gardian of England, in the abſence of his father, who as then was ſailed into the parts (beyond the ſeas) of Flanders. Of this man there is more ſpoken in my following treatiſe of the dukes of England.

Henrie lord Perſie.

Henrie lord Perſie, & Rafe lord Neuill, when Edward the third was ſailed into Normandie, were in the twentith yere of the reigne of the ſaid Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1346, appointed to be gardians of the realme in his abſence with the archbiſhop of Yorke, the biſhop of Lincolne, and Thomas Hatfield biſhop of Durham.

Thomas of woodſtocke.

Thomas of Woodſtocke being verie yoong was made cuſtos or gardian of England, in the yere that God tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant 1359, being the thrée & thirtith of the reigne of the ſaid king Edward the third, when he ſailed into France with a 1100 ſhips. Of this man is more ſpoken in my diſcourſe of the dukes of England, ſet downe in the time of quéene Elizabeth: and in my treatiſe of the coneſtables of England, ſet downe in the time of Henrie the eight pag. 867.

John of Gant duke of Lancaſter.

John of Gant duke of Lancaſter, fourth ſonne of Edward the third, bicauſe the king his father was féeble and ſicklie (being now about thrée ſcore & fiue yeares of age, though Bodinus in his Methodo hiſtoriæ ſaie that he died in his climactericall yeare of thrée ſcore and thrée: for the truth is, that the ſaid Edward the third was fourtéene yeares old when he began to reigne, and he reigned about one and fiftie yeares, which make of his age thrée ſcore and fiue yeares) but eſpeciallie for the ſorrow which the king inwardlie conceiued for the death of that worthie prince his ſon, commonlie ſurnamed the Blacke prince. This John of Gaunt (after the death of the ſaid Blacke prince, which died in the yeare of Chriſt 1376, being the fiftith yeare of the reigne of Edward the third, whoſe death was déemed to be haſtned by the ſaid John of Gaunt aſpiring to the crowne, the plat whereof though it tooke not effect in the life of the ſaid John, yet it was performed in his ſonne Henrie of Bullingbrooke, who depoſed Richard the ſecond) was appointed by his father Edward the third to haue the rule of the realme vnder him, the which he continued during his fathers life, which was not a full yeare after that he had made the ſaid John of Gaunt gouernour of England. After which death of king Edward the third, when Richard the ſecond, a child of eleuen yeares of age began his reigne, in the yeare of our redemption 1377, in the firſt yeare of the ſaid Richard the ſecond, after his coronation, the ſaid John of Gaunt duke of Lancaſter, & Edmund of Langleie earle of Cambridge brother to the ſaid John of Gaunt, were appointed to haue the gouernement of the kings perſon, and the adminiſtration of the common-wealth. But ſhortlie after, in the ſame yere of the king, in the yeare of our redemption 1378, the ſaid John of Gaunt gaue vp the ſame office. Of this man is more ſaid in my treatiſe of the dukes of England.

William Courtneie biſhop of London.

William Courtneie biſhop of London (but ſhortlie after his protectorſhip aduanced vnto the ſée of Canturburie, in the yeare of Chriſt 1381, about the ninth of Januarie, being about the fourth of Richard the ſecond, was made gouernor of the realme in this maner. After (as is before ſaid) that the duke of Lancaſter had wiſelie weied the fickle eſtate of the realme, and conſidered that by the euill gouernment of the nobilitie, and inconſtant mind of the yoong king, there muſt néeds fall a change of the eſtate, & doubting that if any thing ſucceeded otherwiſe than the nobles liked, the cauſe and negligence might be imputed to him, as one who chéeflie had the gouernment in his hands (and thanks howſoeuer the ſtate was ruled he looked for none) did in the end after a few moneths authoritie (wholie miſliking the maners of the court, which commonlie are not of the beſt in the minoritie of princes) ſurrender his protectorſhip, and obteined licence of the king to depart, and ſo got him quietlie to his caſtell of Kenelworth, permitting others to haue the whole ſwaie of the kingdome.

Notwithſtanding all which, in the ſecond yeare of Richard the ſecond, about the yeare of Chriſt 1379 being not altogither careleſſe of the kings well doing; this duke before his departing to Kenelworth, cauſed certeine graue perſons with his full conſent, to be ordeined, which ſhould haue the gouernement of the kings perſon, and adminiſtration of the common-wealth. The names of whome were, William Courtneie before mentioned, Edmund Mortimer earle of March, Rafe Ergume biſhop of Saliſburie, and William lord Latimer, with others, of whome for the moſt part the people had conceiued a good opinion: yet bicauſe the ſaid biſhop of Saliſburie, and the lord Latimer were aſſociat to the reſt, and of equall authoritie with them, the commons murmured greatlie againſt them. The cauſe for which they ſo miſliked the lord Latimer, was for that he had ſometimes bin too much fauouring to dame Alice Piers, concubine to king Edward the third, to whome the ſaid lord Latimer was chiefe chamberleine, & therefore was of him beſt beloued, which two perſons, the lord Latimer, and dame Alice, were by parlement in the fiftith yeare of Edward the third remoued from the king, for that they miſcounſelled him, but eſpeciallie ſith much miſchiefe grew in the realme by the ſame Alice Piers. For ſhe being now exalted in pride by ouermuch loue of K. Edward the third, would beyond the modeſtie and maner of women, ſit in iudgement with the kings iuſtices, be with the doctors in the conſiſtorie, turne ſentences to what ſide ſhe would, and require manie things diſhoneſt in themſelues, and diſhonourable to the king. Of which woman, an old written chronicle belonging to the houſe of Eueſham, hath deliuered to me theſe words: Alicia Piers regis concubina ſupra modum mulierum nimis & ſupergreſſa, ſui etiam ſexus & fragilitatis fœmineæ immemor, nunc iuxta iuſticiarios regios nunc in foro eccleſiaſtico iuxta doctores ſedendo, & pro defenſione cauſarum ſuadere, & etiam contra iura poſtulare minimè verebatur, vnde propter ſcandalum petierunt ab illo (which was the king) penitùs amoueri in parlemento tento anno Domini 1376 & 50 *Ed.*3. Thus that author.

And here before I go anie further with my protectors, bicauſe ſome curious heads that find not all theſe matters in the records of the tower, which they dailie turne with a churliſh hand, or elſe thinke that nothing maie be knowne out of the walles of their office, will ſéeme to ſéeke a knot in a ruſh, and ſaie that I in compaſſe of ſome few lines haue written a contrarietie, in ſaieng that Iohn of Gaunt thirſted after the kingdome, and for that cauſe haſtened the death of his elder brother prince Edward the blacke as Richard the third did the death of his brother George duke of Clarence, which intent could not poſſiblie be in Iohn of Gaunt, as appeareth by my owne following words: where I ſaie that he gaue ouer the protectorſhip of his nephue, bicauſe he would auoid all ſuſpicion of euill gouernement: which hée would neuer haue doone if he had ſo ment, that place being ſo apt for the execution of his purpoſe, and might giue occaſion to him that neuer ment anie ſuch matter before, to attempt it being in that place, as Richard duke of Yorke did attempt, but not performe it, in the time of Henrie the ſixt; and as Richard duke of Gloceſter, being in the ſame office of protectorſhip, did not onelie attempt it, but brought to perfection. Whereunto I anſwer, that all this is no contrarietie, but onelie a manifeſt ſhew and confirmation, the one part of my words to the other. For ſith he could not in the life of his father Edward the third before the crowning of king Richard the ſecond (as Richard the third did) atteine the crowne, he would not now attempt it (the king being once crowned, and in full poſſeſſion of the kingdome) ſo raſhlie and vnaduiſedlie (as did Richard duke of Yorke againſt Henrie, for which he was in the end ſlaine) leaſt that thereby his part might ſéeme to carie the face of a rebellion, as in truth it ſhould haue doone. For whoſoeuer either for colour of God, benefit to their countrie, or for whatſoeuer cauſe, lift vp the ſword againſt a crowned king, ſitting at the ſterne of gouernement, being one of the gods of the earth, the ſame muſt néeds tend vnto a rebellion, which Iohn of Gaunt would not ſéeme to execute, & for that cauſe leauing off his purpoſe at that time, he did in the end alſo leaue the whole matter to his ſon to performe, eſpeciallie ſith he afterward perceiued Richard the ſecond ſo much to fauor and further him with monie, munition, and men, to recouer the kingdome of Caſtile & Arragon in Spaine, in the right of the wife of the ſaid Iohn of Gaunt. To whom and to his wife (as hath Henrie Knighton) king Richard the ſecond gaue a ſeuerall crowne of gold to honour them withall, & to ſhew how intierlie he loued them when they both went into Spaine. And for theſe cauſes the ſaid Iohn of Gaunt refuſed the opportunitie of time & place in the king his nephues minoritie to execute it. But did he ceaſe it ſo? No. For that ſparke although it were a litle cooled, was not vtterlie quenched, bicauſe he haſtened the ſame in his ſon, whom he not onelie perſuaded, but furthered (after the baniſhment of his ſaid ſonne Henrie of Bullingbrooke by Richard the ſecond in the life of the ſaid Iohn of Gaunt) to returne into England, and after his death to chalenge by ſword the earldome of Lancaſter his right inheritance, and vnder the ſame to reuenge the death of the duke of Gloceſter and others: and by that means, when Richard the ſecond was out of the realme of England in Ireland, the ſaid Henrie Bullingbrooke ſonne of Iohn of Gaunt entered the realme, put downe the king, and got the crowne which his father ſought. Thus this much digreſſing from the protectors, and to returne to that courſe which I haue in hand, I will leaue the diſcourſe of policies to obteine kingdoms, bicauſe they be no balles for me to bandie, and follow on my former intent as méeter for my ſimplicitie.

Thomas Beauchampe earle of Warwike.

Thomas Beauchampe earle of Warwike was in the third yeare of Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption 1380, made protector in this ſort. In the parlement holden the ſame yeare, at the ſpeciall ſute of the lords, and of the commons, the biſhops and barons choſen (as you haue heard) before by Iohn of Gaunt to be protectors of the realme, were remoued, and the earle of Warwike eſpeciallie elected to that function, to remaine continuallie with the king as chéefe gouernor of his roiall perſon; & one that ſhould giue anſwer to all forreners repairing thither, vpon what cauſe ſoeuer their comming were; hauing further as ample gouernment of the kingdome giuen vnto him, as the other remoued gouernors had. Being placed in that office by the duke of Lancaſter, he died the ſixt ides of Aprill, in the yeare of Chriſt 1401, being the third yeare of Henrie the fourth. He maried Margaret, the daughter of William lord Ferrers of Grobie; by whome he had iſſue, Richard earle of Warwike.

Thomas Arundell biſhop of Elie.

Thomas Fitzalane otherwiſe called Arundell biſhop of Elie, the two and twentith that inioied that ſeat, being two and twentie yeares of age, and the ſon of Richard Fitzalane earle of Arundell & Warren, was with others made protector of England in this ſort. At a parlement holden at London in the tenth yeare of Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of Chriſt 1386, were certeine gouernors of the kingdome elected, becauſe the treaſure of the realme had béene imbeſiled & lewdlie waſted, nothing to the profit of the king and kingdome, by the couetous and euill gouernment of the depoſed officers, which were Michaell de la Poole earle of Suffolke lord chancellor, Iohn Fortham biſhop of Durham lord treaſuror, & diuerſe other perſons that ruled about the king.

Now the gouernors elected by this parlement were in number thirtéene; and by name Thomas Arundell biſhop of Elie, then made lord chancellor; Iohn Gilbert biſhop of Hereford made lord treaſuror; and Nicholas abbat of Waltham at that time made kéeper of the priuie ſeale; William Courtneie archbiſhop of Canturburie, Alexander Neuill archbiſhop of Yorke, Edmund Langleie duke of Yorke, Thomas of Woodſtocke duke of Gloceſter, William biſhop of Winchester, Thomas biſhop of Exceſter, Richard Fitzalane erle of Arundell, Iohn lord Deuereux, and Reinold lord Cobham of Starborow. Theſe were thus by parlement choſen to haue vnder the king the whole ouerſight and gouernment of the realme, as by their commiſſion in the ſtatutes of the tenth yeare of the ſaid Richard the ſecond it doth in the printed booke appeare.

Edmund of Langleie duke of Yorke.

Edmund Langleie duke of Yorke, vncle vnto Richard the ſecond, was in the eightéenth yeare of the ſaid Richard, being about the yeare of our redemption 1395, ordeined lord gardian of England, in the kings abſence in the realme of Ireland. This protector cauſed a parlement to be aſſembled at Weſtminſter: where he dealt ſo effectuallie, notwithſtanding the vntowardneſſe of the burgeſſes, that a tenth was granted by the cleargie, and a fiftéenth by the temporaltie; but not without proteſtation, that thoſe paiments were granted of a méere fréewill, for the loue they bare to the king, and to haue the affaires in Ireland to ſuccéed the better. After this, about foure yeares; king Richard the ſecond in the two and twentith yeare of his reigne, in the yeare of Chriſt 1399, making another viage into Ireland (being the laſt and moſt vnhappie that euer was to him, for before his returne he had in effect loſt his realme, which after his comming he loſt in déed) did againe in his abſence ſubſtitute this Edmund duke of Yorke as chéefe gouernor of England. Who in the abſence of the king, aſſembled a power of men againſt Henrie of Bullingbrooke, now entered into the land to challenge the dukedome of Lancaſter after the death of his father John of Gaunt, and vnder that colour to vſurpe the crowne. Which Edmund paſſing into Wales in the thrée and twentith yeare of Richard the ſecond, was receiued into the caſtell of Barkleie, & there remained vntill the comming of Henrie of Bullingbrooke. Whom when he perceiued (for the power which the ſaid duke of Lancaſter had aſſembled from all parts of the realme) that he was not of ſufficiencie to reſiſt; he came forth into the church that ſtood without the caſtell, and there fell to parlée with the duke of Lancaſter; after which he did neuer forſake the duke of Lancaſter, vntill he came to the crowne. Who, if he had faithfullie ſtood vnto his nephue, might perhaps haue ſaued vnto him both his crowne and life. Of this man is more ſaid in my treatiſe of the dukes of England.

Jone de Namures widow to Henrie the fourth.

Jone de Namures ſometime dutches of Britaine, (widow to Philip Montfort, as ſaith Hypodigma; but Walſingham in his hiſtorie calleth him John duke of Britaine; being alſo the widow of king Henrie the fourth) was ſubſtitute gouernor of the realme by hir ſon in law king Henrie the fift, king of England, in the third yeare of his reigne, being the yeare from the birth of the Meſſias 1415, when the ſaid Henrie the fift tooke his iournie into France to conquer the ſame. This woman in the ſeuenth yeare of Henrie the fift, which was in the yeare of Chriſt 1419, being ſuſpected (as ſaith Iohn Stow) to practiſe witchcraft againſt the king; was committed to the cuſtodie of John Wellam, or rather John Pelham, who appointed nine ſeruants to attend vpon hir, and brought hir to Peuenſeie caſtell to be gouerned vnder his prouidence. But ſhortlie after cléering hir ſelfe, ſhe was deliuered. This ladie died at Hauering at the bowre in Eſſex the ninth of Julie in the ſeuentéenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred thirtie and ſeuen, and was buried at Canturburie with hir huſband king Henrie the fourth.

John de Plantagenet duke of Bedford.

John duke of Bedford ſon to Henrie the fourth, & brother to K. Henrie the fift, was in the fourth yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Henrie, being the yeare of our redemption 1416, by parlement appointed regent of the realme, to inioie the ſame office ſo long as the king was imploied in the French wars. Which place he poſſeſſed accordinglie; and in the ninth yeare of the victorious prince, king Henrie the fift, being gardian of England, he, with Henrie Beauford biſhop of Wincheſter vncle to Henrie the fift, and Jaqueline duches of Holland remaining then in England, were godfathers, and godmother to Henrie, after king by the name of Henrie the ſixt, the ſon of Henrie the fift; Henrie Chichleie archbiſhop of Canturburie baptiſing the child. In the tenth and laſt yeare of Henrie the fift, this John with a ſtrong power conueied quéene Katharine wife to Henrie the fift, from Southampton into France. This man being duke of Bedford, earle of Richmond and of Kendall, coneſtable of England, and warden of the marches of Scotland, died the fourtéenth date of September at Rone in Normandie, who (hauing alſo béene regent of France, a moſt valiant gentleman, and one that kept the parts beyond the ſeas in great obedience to the crowne of England) had for his yearelie penſion 20000 crownes at the leaſt. After whoſe death all things went backeward, and the Engliſh loſt all that they had beyond the ſeas, Calis, & thoſe dominions onlie excepted.

This man (I ſaie) died in the yeare of our redemption 1435, being the thirtéenth yeare of the vnfortunat gouernment of the depoſed king Henrie the ſixt, and was honorablie buried at Rone in our ladie church there. Touching whome it ſhall not gréeue me to ſet downe the anſwer of a French king latelie in our age made to one of his nobilitie; ſaieng vnto the king (then being in the ſaid ladie church of Rone, and beholding the toome of this John of Bedford) that it were conuenient that the ſame toome were defaced and pulled downe; ſince he was the onelie man that wrought the greateſt damage that euer happened vnto France. To whom the king ſaid; Hold thy peace foole, God forbid that euer we ſhould doo ſuch reproch to him being dead; whome the proudeſt of our nation durſt not looke in the face when he was liuing. This duke John maried the ſecond yeare of Henrie the ſixt, in the yeare of Chriſt 1423, Anne the daughter of John duke of Burgognie, who died in the tenth yeare of Henrie the ſixt, in the yeare of Chriſt 1433, after which he maried Jaques daughter to Peter earle of S. Paule in the ſame yeare, and yet died without iſſue. Of this man is mention made in my former diſcourſe of the coneſtables of England, pag. 868.

Humfreie duke of Gloceſter.

Humfreie duke of Gloceſter brother to Henrie the fift, and vncle to Henrie the ſixt, was in the tenth and laſt yeare of Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our Lord 1422, made regent of England, vpon the remouing and departure of John duke of Bedford with quéene Katharine, wife to Henrie the fift into France. In which yeare (happening the lamentable death of that worthie prince king Henrie the fift) the ſaid Henrie vpon his death-bed appointed this Humfreie to be protector of the realme; which he did exerciſe in the time of the minoritie of Henrie the ſixt, from the time of his firſt enterance into the kingdome. Who at that time taking vpon him that function, called vnto him graue and wiſe councellors; with whoſe ſupport he might with better honor to the realme, and benefit to the ſubiects, rule the ſhip of this kingdome, ſailing in the dangerous waues of the kings infancie. By which meanes holding the ſterne thereof, directed by the courſe of iuſtice, he did moſt honorablie during his life diſcharge the dutie of ſo weightie an office. Who in the fourtéenth yeare of Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of our Lord 1439, did with fiue hundred ſaile land at Calis, and for eleuen daies ſpoiled the low countries and ſo by Calis returned againe into England. This man in the fiue & twentith yeare of king Henrie ſixt, being the yeare of Chriſt 1447, was in his caſtell of Vies in Wilſhire, & comming from thence to the parlement was lodged in the hoſpitall, and arreſted by John lord Beaumont high coneſtable of England. But on the foure and twentith daie of Februarie he died for ſorrow as ſome ſaid, and as Iohn Stow hath noted, bicauſe he might not come to his anſwer. Other write that he was murdered in the night by the quéens procurement, to the great griefe of the commons, and in time following to the vtter deſtruction of the king and the quéene. He was duke of Gloceſter, and alſo in the right of his wife duke of Holland and Zeland, earle of Penbroke, lord chamberleine of England, and protector of the realme, being highlie eſtéemed of learned men, himſelfe alſo not meanlie furniſhed with knowledge, hauing rare ſkill in aſtrologie, wherof beſide manie other things he compiled a ſingular treatiſe, obteining the name of Tabula directionum, touching whoſe death I haue read theſe verſes following in Iohn Whethamſted:

Aemula ſors varijs ſignanter honoribus altis
Cauſauit miſerè mala multos flere ruinæ,
Læſus erat Iulius, vndis merſus Ptolomeus,
Pulſus Tarquinius, exul factúſque Tydeus,
Dux nimis properè iam dictus tempora vitæ
Compleuit triſtis, heu indignatio regis
Cauſa fuit magna, maior detractio falſa,
Plebis & iunctæ fallacis & inſidioſæ,
Nam regis patruus, quamuis & proximus hæres,
Tunc fuerátque ſuus conſultor in ordine primus,
Vir prudénſque pius, vir doctus & ingenioſus,
Non tamen erubuit, nec pertimuit, ve pepercit
Hunc accuſare falsè de proditione,
Diſcere quódque ſuam clàm vellet tollere vitam
Et ſibi ſurripere violenter iura coronæ.
Diuitis argentum, proprium qui captat in vſum,
Deſiderat medium quo vindicet aptiùs ipſum,
Sic regem plures comitantes collaterales
Sectantur prædam, mediat fraus, dat dolus ipſam,
Fidior in regno regi duce non fuit iſto,
Plúſue fide ſtabilis aut maior amator honoris,
Et tamen vt prædo voto potiretur iniquo,
Fraudem conſuluit, cum fraude dolum ſociauit,
Sícque ducem falſi maculans cum proditione
Obtinuit votum, prædator erátque bonorum
Illius, & triſtis obijt dux criminis expers.

Which duke Humfrie was buried at ſaint Albons, dieng without iſſue, after he had married two wiues; whereof the firſt wife was Jacoba or Jaqueline (daughter and ſole heire of William of Bauier) being then the lawfull wife to John duke of Brabant then liuing, which wife this Humfrie married in England in the yéere of our redemption 1424 being the third yéere of king Henrie the ſixt, vpon which grew great warres, and Humfrie duke of Gloceſter challenged the combat of the duke of Burgognie, taking part with his couſine John duke of Brabant. But in the end the duke of Gloceſter left his wife at Mons & returned into England, and ſhée vnto Gaunt, and ſo into Holland, & the combat ſtaid by meanes of the duke of Bedford brother to the duke of Gloceſter. But after (as it ſéemeth) the duke of Gloceſter was diuorſed from this dutcheſſe, and then married Eleanor Cobham (whome he had tenderlie loued as his paramour before that) in the yéere of our redemption 1428, being the ſixt yéere of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt. This woman in the ninetéenth yéere of the ſaid Henrie the ſixt (vpon the taking of Henrie Bullingbrooke for practiſing necromancie, thereby to conſume the king) fled in the night to Weſtminſter for ſanctuarie, which cauſed hir to be ſuſpected of treaſon. Wherevpon Bullingbrooke confeſſing that he wrought the ſame at the procurement of the ſaid Eleanor, deſirous to know to what eſtate ſhe ſhould come vnto, the ſaid dame Eleanor did oftentimes for the ſame fact appéere before the biſhop, and in the end was conuicted. After which in the twentith of Henrie the ſixt ſhe did gréeuous penance therefore, and ſo eſcaped with hir life. And here becauſe I haue ſaid ſomewhat of Jaqueline dutcheſſe of Holland, I thinke it not amiſſe to adde a little more of hir, being a woman of great beautie, and deſire of change in performing the pleſures of the fleſh: wherefore I will ſet downe what I haue ſéene written vnder the pictures of hir and hir husband Francis in this ſort.

Thomas Beaufort duke of Excester.

Thomas Beaufort duke of Excester (appointed to that office by Henrie the fift on his death-bed) was with Henrie Beaufort biſhop of Wincheſter great vncle to king Henrie the ſixt in the yéere of our redemption 1422, being the firſt yéere of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt (then but nine months old) made protector and gardian of the perſon of the yoong king, to ſée him tenderlie and carefullie brought vp and inſtructed in all ſuch parts as were to be required in the perſon of a monarch. Which office he left about the fourth yéere of king Henrie the ſixt, and died on Newyéeres daie at his manor of Gréenwich in the ſaid fift yéere of Henrie the ſixt, being the yéere of our redemption ~~1446~~ 1426: he married Margaret the daughter of Thomas Neuill of Hornesbie.

Richard Beauchampe earle of Warwike.

Richard Beauchampe earle of Warwike ſon of the former Thomas Beauchampe, being beyond the ſeas, and there deputie for John duke of Bedford (being regent of France) did (whileſt the ſaid regent was come ouer into England) obteine manie caſtels in his deputieſhip; who being thus imploied in the forren warres, was in his abſence out of his countrie (for his ſingular wiſdome and valor) ordeined by the thrée eſtates of the realme of England in open parlement, to be gouernor of the perſon of the yoong king Henrie the ſixt, in the place of Thomas Beaufort duke of Excester latelie deceaſed: which Richard did not yet forthwith haſten his returne into England, but remained in France for a ſeaſon, inlarging the ſame of his martiall exploits. This his election to the protectorſhip of the kings perſon, was in the fiſt yéere of Henrie the ſixt, being the yéere of our redemption 1426. He died in the yéere of our Lord 1439, being the ſeuentéenth yéere of the depoſed king Henrie the ſixt, at Rone in Normandie the laſt daie of Maie, as hath Iohn Stow; and the fourth of October next following his corps was honorablie conueied, as well by land as by water from Rone to Warwike, and there honorablie buried in the college of our ladie church founded by his noble anceſtors. He maried two wiues, the firſt Eliſabeth daughter and heire of Thomas lord Barkleie, by whome he had thrée daughters, Margaret maried to Iohn lord Talbot earle of Shreweſburie, Eleanor maried to Thomas lord Roſſe, and Eliſabeth married to George Neuill lord Latimer. His ſecond wife was Iſabell the daughter and heire of Richard lord Spenſer, by whome he had iſſue Henrie duke of Warwike, and Anne married to Richard Neuill earle of Saliſburie.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Yorke.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Yorke, ſonne to Richard earle of Cambrige, and father to Edward the fourth king of England, notwithſtanding that he made challenge to the crowne againſt Henrie the ſixt, then in poſſeſſion thereof, as heire to the houſe of Yorke, and was to be preferred before the houſe of Lancaſter; and notwithſtanding that he was by parlement appointed to weare the crowne after the death of Henrie the ſixt: yet after all this, in the thrée and thirtith yéere of the ſame king, being the yéere of our redemption 1455 (ſuch was the imperfection of the king to gouerne) he was appointed protector of the realme, ruling the ſame at his owne diſpoſition. Which office he did not long inioie, and that moſt worthilie: for the next yéere after being the foure and thirtith of king Henrie the ſixt, and the yéere of our redemption 1456, he was depriued from the ſame, and quéene Margaret wife to Henrie the ſixt tooke againe the abſolute regiment into hir hands: which duke after in the nine and thirtith of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yéere of our redemption 1460, the thirtith daie of December, being lord of Wakefield, was there with his ſonne the earle of Rutland ſlaine at the battell commonlie called the battell of Wakefield; of which I haue read theſe verſes in Whethamſted once abbat of ſaint Albons:

This was doone 1561, counting the yeare to begin at Chriſtmas as ſome doo, or at Ianuarie as others doo.

Anno milleno centum quater quoque ſeno,

He maried Cicilie daughter to Rafe Neuill firſt earle of Weſtmerland, by whome he had iſſue Edward duke of Yorke, earle of March, and after king of England by the name of Edward the fourth: George Plantagenet duke of Clarence, Richard Plantagenet duke of Glocester, after king of England by the name of Richard the third: thrée daughters, Anne maried to Henrie Holland duke of Exceſter, Eliſabeth married to Iohn de la Poole duke of Suffolke, and Margaret maried to Charles duke of Burgognie.

George Plantagenet duke of Clarence.

George Plantagenet duke of Clarence, and coneſtable of England, ſonne of the foreſaid duke of Yorke, and brother to king Edward the fourth, with Richard Neuill earle of Warwike (who ſet vp and pulled downe kings at his pleaſure) were after the flight of Edward the fourth out of England into Burgognie to his brother in law (in the tenth yeare of the reigne of the ſaid king Edward, being the yeare of our redemption 1470, when Henrie the ſixt had by their means readepted the kingdome) made gouernors of the land, which office they inioied not long. For the ſaid Edward the fourth returning into England, in the eleuenth yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption 1471, reconciled to him the duke of Clarence, did againe put downe king Henrie the ſixt, and ſlue the ſaid earle of Warwike (flieng awaie) at Barnet field (on Eaſter day) by one of the men of his campe. After this, on the fiftéenth daie of Ianuarie began a parlement, in the eightéenth yere of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1478, where this duke of Clarence was atteinted of treaſon, and the eleuenth of March following he ended his life in a but of malmeſeie, and was buried at Teukeſburie beſide his wife, who being with child died by poiſon a little before him. Of this man ſée more in my diſcourſe of the coneſtables of England pag. 869.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Gloceſter.

Richard Plantagenet third ſonne to Richard duke of Yorke, was coneſtable of England and gouernour of the perſon of the king, of whome is more ſpoken in my diſcourſe of the coneſtables of England pag. 869. But here mentioning the coneſtables of England, I thinke it better now than not at all, to mention alſo ſome imperfection and default in my former diſcourſe of the ſaid coneſtables, ſet downe by me before in pag. 865. Which default of mine in that place grew by reaſon of ouermuch haſt, which I vſed in ſudden ſéeking for the ſame, whereby (according to the old prouerbe) I brought forth a blind whelpe. For in the former deſcription I haue omitted diuerſe the which were coneſtables of England, the names of which were Henrie the firſt in the life of his father, Nigellus, and Robert de Oilie, with others of that line in deſcent, which Nigellus I can not as yet learne to be anie other but Nigellus de Oilie, brother to Robert de Oilie that came in with the Conqueror, who gaue Oxfordſhire vnto the ſaid Robert.

A digreſſion concerning the coneſtables of England not mentioned before in pag. 865.

Nigellus de Oilie coneſtable of England.

Beſides which, if it ſhall ſéeme to anie that I haue in my former treatiſe raſhlie written I know not what, & that here I make Henrie the firſt coneſtable in his father the Conquerors time, & by contrarietie thereunto did before make Walter coneſtable alſo in the Conquerors and William Rufus his time: let them know that there is no contrarietie herein. For Walter might firſt be coneſtable, & then Henrie the firſt, and both they in the Conquerors time, this office being taken from the firſt, and giuen to the latter by the Conqueror. After whoſe death William Rufus might take it from his brother Henrie, bicauſe he would not make him too great in England, for doubt leaſt he might hereby put the crowne in hazard, being fauoured of the people as one borne in England, and for that cauſe might reſtore that office to Walter. Againe it maie be, that ſome men reading that I haue before ſet downe, that Mawd the empreſſe gaue the coneſtableſhip to Milo the ſon of Walter in the ſixt of king Stephan, and that king Stephan tooke that office from Milo in the firſt yere of his reigne, and gaue it to Walter Beauchampe, will condemne me therefore of like vnaduiſed writing: bicauſe it ſéemeth thereby that Stephan tooke it from Milo before that Milo had it. Which is not ſo, for I can proue with ſome reaſon and authoritie, that Milo had it a little before the death of king Henrie the firſt, and alſo after his death in part of the firſt yeare of king Stephan, being witneſſe to a déed by king Stephan, made and dated the firſt of his reigne, to which he ſubſcribed his name Milo Conſtabularius, After which, king Stephan might in that yeare take that office from him, and ſo he did. Which Mawd the empreſſe vnderſtanding, and finding Milo (now fallen from king Stephan) one which aſſiſted hir; ſhe the better to confront Stephan, gaue the coneſtableſhip to Milo (accounting hir ſelfe as queene) in the ſtet of Stephan.

This being thus ſpoken in defenſe of that which before I haue written pag. 868. let vs go to our other matter concerning the coneſtables not mentioned before in the ſaid diſcourſe, wherein I find my ſelfe in a maruellous laberinth (out of which I doubt that the beſt antiquaries cannot lowſe themſelues, no not he which thinketh and ſaith that he can controll all men, for I ſuppoſe he will be lame in this matter) how all theſe could be coneſtables, vnleſſe that in the time of Henrie the firſt, and of king Stephan, as it is moſt likelie, there was chopping & changing, putting in and taking out, ſetting vp and pulling downe one man in diuerſe yeares of one and the ſelfe ſame king: for king Stephan was ſometime a king, and ſomtime as no king, and then againe a king. And ſo likewiſe was it with Mawd the empreſſe at the ſame time, bearing hir ſelfe ſometime as queene, and then deiected as no queene. But be it as it will be, I will here ſet downe what I find in ancient charters and pedegrees touching the coneſtables of England not before mentioned, leauing the ſame to others (either to order for ſucceſſion of time, or to amend for truth of matter) who peraduenture reading theſe things, which I haue ſeene and will here ſet downe, can beſtow them in better order than I can, which I earneſtlie praie them to doo, whereby truth maie be brought to light and perfection; which as yet touching theſe coneſtables ſet downe in this place, ſeemeth to be obſcured and confuſed vntill the time that Roger Fitz Miles had that office: for from his time the ſame is without all controuerſie ſufficientlie knowne. Wherefore, here before I enter into the deſcent of the de Oilies, who were coneſtables of England, I will ſet downe a ſtrange note of three perſons witneſſes to a deed, dated Primo Stephani, anno Dom. 1136, who doo all ſubſcribe their names as coneſtables. Which charter being the ſame wherein king Stephan gaue the manor of Sudton or Sutton to the houſe of Wincheſter, the ſame was amongſt other witneſſes thus ſigned, Robertus de Veer conſtabularius, Milo conſtabularius, Brientius filius comitis conſtabularius: all who could not be coneſtables of England at one time. Wherfore ſauing correction I ſuppoſe that it is out of all controuerſie, that neither the firſt nor the laſt of theſe three were coneſtables of England, but of ſome other places, as of Douer or other caſtels. And ſo to that which I haue further to ſaie of the kings coneſtables in one deſcent and ſucceſſion of the de Oilies, being tearmed the kings coneſtables, both in ancient charters and pedegrees, whereof Nigellus before mentioned ſeemeth to be one.

This Nigellus was coneſtable of England in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred and one, being the firſt yeere of king Henrie the firſt, as may appeare by a deed of confirmation made by Henrie the firſt touching the cathedrall church of Norwich, whereof I thinke good to ſaie ſomewhat to bring in the proofe that this Nigellus was conſtable. This church was built for the moſt part in the time of William Rufus, by Herebert de Loſinga the firſt biſhop of Norwich, who tranſlated the ſee from Tetford vnto Norwich, in the yeare of Chriſt 1094, which church being finiſhed and conſecrated to the holie trinitie, was afterward confirmed by Henrie the firſt, and Mawd his wife, in the firſt yeare of the ſaid Henrie, being the yeare of our redemption 1101, to the charter whereof ſigned by king Henrie & Mawd his wife, were manie biſhops, noblemen and abbats witneſſes, amongſt whome are theſe two ſet downe; Nigellus Conſtabularius, and Rogerus Cancellarius, of which Nigellus thus writeth Leland in his commentaries on the ſong of the ſwan in the word Iſidis inſulæ: Erat Roberto frater Nigellus nomine, de quo fama non admodum multa refert, which I ſuppoſe is this Nigellus de Oilie the coneſtable, as I before ſaid.

The foundation of the cathedrall church of Norwich.

Robert de Oilie conſtable of England.

Robert de Oilie, ſonne of the ſaid Nigellus, did ſucceed his father, and was as may appeare by ſome authors (who tearme him accordinglie) great conſtable of England. This man togither with his wife Edith were the founders of the religious houſe of Oſneie, touching whome I ſhall not greeue to ſet downe what I haue gathered out of Leland and others. This Edith obteined of hir huſband to build a church in the Ile of Oſneie in Oxfordſhire, to our ſauiour Chriſt, about the yeare of our redemption 1129, being about the nine and twentith yeare of king Henrie the firſt, which church did after grow to be of great renowme and building, the occaſion of building whereof is ſet downe by others in this ſort. Edith being in great eſtimation with Henrie, firſt married the ſaid Robert de Oilie by the kings procurement, which Robert began the priorie of the blacke chanons of Oſneie by Oxford, amongſt the Iles made by the riuer of Iſis or Owſe. This Edith vſed oftentimes to walke out of Oxford caſtell with hir gentlewomen for to ſolace and recreate hir ſelfe. At what time at a certeine place, as often as ſhe came by the ſame, certeine pies aſſembled themſelues in a tree, where they chattered and as it were ſpake vnto hir. This ladie much maruelling at the matter, happening ſo continuallie at one time in one place after one order, and with one maner of foules, was manie times aſtoniſhed and feared therewith, eſteeming it a verie ſtrange wonder. Wher vpon ſhe ſent for one Radulph or Rafe a chanon of ſaint Frediſwide in Oxford, a man of vertuous life & hir confeſſor, aſking his counſell vpon the ſame. To whom he anſwered (after that he had ſeene the order of thoſe pies onelie chattering at hir comming thither) that ſhe ſhould build ſome church or monaſterie in that place. Wherevpon ſhe intreated hir huſband to build a priorie, and ſo he did, making that Radulph the firſt prior of that houſe. All which matter, that is the comming of Edith to Oſneie, Radulph wating on hir, and the tree with the pies were all extant (at the generall diſſolution of the abbeies in the time of Henrie the eight) to be ſeene painted on the north ſide of the high altar, in the arch of the wall ouer Ediths toome in Oſneie priorie, vpon which toome there laie a ſtone image of Edith in the habit of a voweſſe holding a hart in hir right hand. This Robert de Oilie was buried in Oſneie in the verie middle of the preſbiterie, vnder a flat marble ſtone; wherevpon was a flowred croſſe portraid, which Robert had iſſue Henrie de Oilie, baron of Hochnorton, & the kings coneſtable, which maried Margerie the daughter of Humfreie de Bohune, by whome that Henrie had iſſue Henrie de Oilie baron of Hochnorton, and the kings coneſtable which died without iſſue. Thus this much by waie of digreſſion, touching the coneſtables of England, left out in my former diſcourſe of thoſe officers. And ſo againe to the protectors.

The foundation of the abbeie of Oſneie or Owſneie in the yeare of Chriſt 1129, being about the thirtith yeare of Henrie the firſt, as ſome write.

Katharine queene of England.

Katharine the daughter of Ferdinando king of Spaine, and wife to king Henrie the eight, was (in the abſence of the ſaid king beyond the ſeas in the the warres of Turwine and Turneie) made regent of the realme, in the yeare of Chriſt 1513, and the fift yeare of king Henrie the eight, ſhe had beene the widow of Arthur prince of Wales, eldeſt ſonne vnto king Henrie the ſeauenth, and eldeſt brother to king

Henrie the eight, who after the death of the ſaid Arthur was by diſpenſation of the pope married to Henrie after king, by the name of Henrie the eight, being yonger brother of the ſaid Arthur, from which king Henrie ſhe was afterward not onelie diuorſed, in the one and twentith of his reigne, being the yeare of Chriſt 1529, but after by parlement alſo in the foure and twentith of the kings reigne, in the yeare of Chriſt 1532, diſgraded from the name of quéene, and from thenſefoorth appointed onlie to be called the princeſſe dowager of prince Arthur, about fiue yéers after which ſhe died on the eight of Ianuarie, being the yeare of our redemption 1535, which was the ſeauen and twentith yeare of king Henrie the eight, and was honourablie buried in the abbeie of Peterborow, for which cauſe afterward in the generall diſſolution of the abbeies, when all thoſe houſes were ſpoiled, this abbeie was not onelie for hir buriall there ſpared and not defaced, but alſo further honored with a greater title, and turned into a biſhoprike, by the ſaid king Henrie the eight.

Katharine Par, the daughter of ſir Thomas Par, lord of Kirkbie Kendall, and wife to king Henrie the eight, was by patent made protectreſſe of the realme of England, when king Henrie the eight went in perſon to the wars of Bullongne, on the thirtéenth of Iulie in the yeare of our redemption 1544, being the ſix & thirtith yeare of the triumphant reigne of the ſaid king. This ladie Katharine being the lord Latimers widow, was maried to the king at Hampton court, one the twelfe of Iulie being the fiue and thirtith yeare of his reigne, and the yeare of Chriſt 1543, who hauing no iſſue by the king, was after the kings death married to Thomas Seimer knight, lord Seimer of Sudleie and high admerall of England.

Edward Seimer knight, vicount Beauchampe earle of Hertford, & after duke of Summerſet, was protector of the kings perſon, and of the kingdome, in the firſt yeare of king Edward the ſixt, his nephue which was in the yeare of our redemption 1546, the king being then but nine yeares old. Of this man is more ſpoken in my following diſcourſe of all the dukes of England by creation or deſcent ſince the conqueſt, with which duke of Summerſet, the laſt in office of protectorſhip, Francis Thin knitteth vp this ſimple diſcourſe of the protectors of England of the kings perſon.

Doctor Rid leie preach before the king, merci and charit

Not long after the death of the ſaid duke of Summerſet and his complices, it chanced the reuerend father in God maiſter doctor Ridleie then biſhop of London, to preach before the kings maieſtie at Weſtminſter. In the which ſermon he made a fruitfull and godlie exhortation to the rich, to be mercifull vnto the poore, and alſo to moue ſuch as were in authoritie, to trauell by ſome charitable waie & meane, to comfort and reléeue them. Wherevpon the kings maieſtie being a prince of ſuch towardneſſe and vertue for his yeares, as England before neuer brought forth, and the ſame alſo being ſo well reteined and brought vp in all godlie knowledge, as well by his déere vncle the late protector, as alſo by his vertuous and learned ſcholemaiſters; was ſo carefull of the good gouernement of the realme, and chieflie to doo and prefer ſuch things as moſt ſpeciallie touched the honor of almightie God. And vnderſtanding that a great number of poore people did ſwarme in this realme, and chieflie in the citie of London, and that no good order was taken for them, did ſuddenlie and of himſelfe ſend to the ſaid biſhop as ſoone as his ſermon was ended, willing him not to depart, vntill that he had ſpoken with him (and this that I now write was the verie report of the ſaid biſhop Ridleie) who according to the kings commandement gaue his attendance. And ſo ſoone as the kings maieſtie was at leaſure, he called for him, and made him to come vnto him in a great gallerie at Weſtminſter, where (to his knowledge) and the king alſo told him ſo, there was preſent no mo perſons than they two, and therefore made him ſit downe in one chaire, and he himſelfe in another, which (as it ſéemed) were before the comming of the biſhop there purpoſelie ſet, & cauſed the biſhop (maugre his téeth) to be couered, and then entered communication with him in this ſort.

The verie re port of bish Ridleie, wh in we may s what frui followed by his ſermon: Ergo the hea ring of the word preach ed is profi ble.

A moſt noble and vertuous ſaieng of kin Edward to biſhop Ridl

Firſt giuing him moſt hartie thanks for his ſermon and good exhortation, he therein rehearſed ſuch ſpeciall things as he had noted, and that ſo manie, that the biſhop ſaid; Trulie, trulie (for that was commonlie his oth) I could neuer haue thought that excellencie to haue béene in his grace, that I beheld and ſaw in him. At the laſt, the kings maieſtie much commended him for his exhortation for the reliefe of the poore. But my lord (ſaith he) ye willed ſuch as are in authoritie to be carefull therof, and to deuiſe ſome good order for their reliefe, wherein I thinke you meane me, for I am in higheſt place, and therefore am the firſt that muſt make anſwere vnto God for my negligence, if I ſhould not be carefull therein, knowing it to be the expreſſe commandement of almightie God, to haue compaſſion of his poore and néedie members, for whome we muſt make an accompt vnto him. And trulie my lord, I am before all things moſt willing to trauell that waie, and I “ doubt nothing of your long and approued wiſedome

“ and learning, who hauing ſuch good zeale as wiſheth “ helpe vnto them, but that alſo you haue had ſome “ conference with others, what waies are beſt to be ta“ ken therein, the which I am deſirous to vnderſtand,
“ and therefore I praie you ſaie your mind.

The biſhop thinking leaſt of that matter, and being amazed to heare the wiſdome and earneſt zeale of the king, was (as he ſaid himſelfe) ſo aſtonied, that he could not well tell what to ſaie: but after ſome pauſe, ſaid that as he thought at this preſent for ſome entrance to be had, it were good to practiſe with the citie of London, bicauſe the number of the poore there are verie great, & the citizens are manie & alſo wiſe; and he doubted not but they were alſo both pitifull & mercifull, as the maior & his brethren, & other the worſhipfull of the ſaid citie. And that if it would pleaſe the kings maieſtie to direct his gratious letter vnto the maior of London, willing him to call vnto him ſuch aſſiſtants as he ſhould thinke méet, to conſult of this matter, for ſome order to be taken therein, he doubted not but good ſhould follow thereof. And he himſelfe promiſed the king to be one himſelfe that ſhould earneſtlie trauell therein.

The citizens of London moued to be aſſiſtants in this charitable action.

The king forthwith not onelie granted his letter, but made the biſhop tarie vntill the ſame was written, and his hand and ſignet ſet therevnto, and commanded the biſhop not onelie to deliuer the ſaid letter himſelfe, but alſo to ſignifie vnto the maior, that it was the kings ſpeciall requeſt and expreſſe commandement, that the maior ſhould therein trauell, and as ſoone as he might conuenientlie giue him knowledge how farre he had procéeded therein. The biſhop was ſo ioious of the hauing of this letter, and that he had now an occaſion to trauell in that good matter, wherein he was maruellous zealous, that nothing could more haue pleaſed and delighted him: therefore the ſame night he came to the maior of London, who then was ſir Richard Dobs knight, and deliuered the kings letter, and ſhewed his meſſage with effect.

The maior not onelie ioiouſlie receiued this letter, but with all ſpéed agréed to ſet forward this matter, for he alſo fauoured it verie much. And the next daie being mondaie, he deſired the biſhop of London to dine with him: and againſt that time, the maior promiſed that he would ſend for ſuch men, as he thought méeteſt to talke of this matter, and ſo he did. And ſent firſt for two aldermen and ſix commoners, and afterward were appointed more, to the number of foure and twentie. And in the end after ſundrie méetings (for by meanes of the good diligence of the biſhop it was well followed) they agréed vpon a booke that they had deuiſed, wherein firſt they conſidered of nine ſpeciall kinds and ſorts of poore people, and thoſe ſame they brought in theſe thrée degrées:

The readines of the lord maior to preferre this good déed.

Degrées of poore.

Thrée degrées of poore.
- The poore by impotencie.
- Poore by caſualtie.
- Thriftleſſe poore.

1 The poore by impotencie are alſo diuided into thrée kinds, that is to ſaie:
- 1 The fatherleſſe poore mans child.
- 2 The aged, blind, and lame.
- 3 The diſeaſed perſon, by leproſie, dropſie, &c.

2 The poore by caſualtie are of thrée kinds, that is to ſaie:
- 4 The wounded ſouldier.
- 5 The decaied houſholder.
- 6 The viſited with gréeuous diſeaſe.

3 The thriftles poore are thrée kinds in like wiſe, that is to ſaie:
- 7 The riotor that conſumeth all.
- 8 The vagabond that will abide in no place.
- 9 The idle perſon, as the ſtrumpet and others.

Chriſtes hoſpitall.

For theſe ſorts of poore were prouided thrée ſeuerall houſes. Firſt for the innocent and fatherleſſe, which is the beggers child, and is in déed the ſéed and bréeder of beggerie, they prouided the houſe that was late Graie friers in London, and now is called Chriſtes hoſpitall, where the poore children are trained in the knowledge of God, and ſome vertuous exerciſe to the ouerthrowe of beggerie. For the ſecond degrée is prouided the hoſpitall of ſaint Thomas in Southworke, & ſaint Bartholomew in weſt Smithfield, where are continnallie at leaſt two hundred diſeaſed perſons, which are not onelie there lodged and cured, but alſo fed and nouriſhed. For the third degrée they prouided Bridewell, where the vagabond and idle ſtrumpet is chaſtiſed and compelled to labour, to the ouerthrow of the vicious life of idlenes. They prouided alſo for the honeſt decaied houſholder, that he ſhould be relieued at home at his houſe, and in the pariſh where he dwelled by a wéekelie reliefe and penſion. And in like manner they prouided for the lazer to kéepe him out of the citie from clapping of diſhes, and ringing of bels, to the great trouble of the citizens, and alſo to the dangerous infection of manie, that they ſhould be relieued at home at their houſes with ſeuerall penſions.

S. Thomas hoſpitall.

Bridewell.

Reliefe for the decaied houſeholder and lazer.

Now after this good order taken, and the citizens by ſuch meanes as were deuiſed, willing to further the ſame, the report therof was made vnto the kings maieſtie: and his grace for the aduancement hereof, was not onelie willing to grant ſuch as ſhould be the ouerſéers and gouernors of the ſaid houſes a corporation and authoritie for the gouernement thereof: but alſo required that he might be accounted as the chiefe founder and patrone thereof. And for the furtherance of the ſaid worke, and continuall maintenance of the ſame, he of his méere mercie and goodneſſe granted, that where before certeine lands were giuen to the maintenance of the houſe of the Sauoie, founded by king Henrie the ſeuenth, for the lodging of pilgrims and ſtrangers, and that the ſame was now made but a lodging of loiterers, vagabonds, and ſtrumpets that laie all daie in the fields, and at night were harboured there, the which was rather the maintenance of beggerie, than the reliefe of the poore, gaue the ſame lands, being firſt ſurrendred into his hands by the maiſter and fellowes there (which lands were of the yearelie value of ſix hundred pounds) vnto the citie of London, for the maintenance of the foundation aforeſaid.

K. Edward the ſixt founder of the hoſpitals in Lōdon.

And for a further reliefe, a petition being made to the kings maieſtie for a licence to take in mortmaine, or otherwiſe without licence, lands to a certeine yearelie value, and a ſpace left in the patent for his grace to put in what ſumme it would pleaſe him; he looking on the void place, called for pen and inke, and with his owne hand wrote this ſumme, in theſe words (foure thouſand marks by yeare) and then ſaid in the hearing of his councell: Lord God I yéeld thée moſt hartie thanks, that thou haſt giuen mée life thus long, to finiſh this worke to the glorie of thy name. ” ” After which foundation eſtabliſhed, he liued not aboue two daies, whoſe life would haue béene wiſhed equall to the patriarchs, if it might haue pleaſed God ſo to haue protracted the ſame. But he was too good a prince for ſo bad a people, and therefore God remoued him, and tranſlated him to his owne kingdome, foreſéeing the euent of ſomething which in his ſecret counſell he had purpoſed, againſt a nation that knew not the benefit of the acceptable time of grace: wherein God by this péereleſſe princes means ment all good to this land, as might be gathered by the reformation of religion, wherin the kings care was excéeding great, as his deſire to eſtabliſh Gods glorie was zealous: according to that notable Sir william Cheſter. Iohn Calthrop draper.

But to returne where we left. By example of the charitable act of this vertuous yong king, ſir William Cheſter knight and alderman of London, and Iohn Calthrop citizen and draper of the ſaid citie, at their owne proper coſts and charges made the bricke walles and way on the backeſide that leadeth from the ſaid new hoſpitall, vnto the hoſpitall of ſaint Bartholomewes, and alſo couered and vauted the towne dich from Alderſgate to Newgate, which before was verie noiſome and contagious to the ſaid hoſpitall.

Richard Caſtel ſhoomaker.

This hoſpitall being thus erected and put in good order, there was one Richard Caſtell alias Caſteller, ſhoomaker, dwelling in Weſtminſter, a man of great trauell and labor in his facultie with his owne hands, and ſuch a one as was named the cocke of Weſtminſter, for that both winter and ſummer he was at his worke before foure of the clocke in the morning. This man thus trulie and painfullie labouring for his liuing, God bleſſed and increaſed his labours ſo abundantlie, that he purchaſed lands and tenements in Weſtminſter, to the yearelie value of fortie and foure pounds. And hauing no child, with the conſent of his wife (who ſuruiued him, & was a vertuous & good woman) gaue the ſame lands wholie to Chriſts hoſpitall aforeſaid, to the reliefe of the innocent and fatherleſſe children, and for the ſuccor of the miſerable, ſore and ſicke, harbored in the other hoſpitals about London, whoſe example God grant manie to follow.

I. Stow, 1053. A monſter.

¶The third of Auguſt, at Midlenton eleuen miles from Oxford, a woman brought forth a child which had two perfect bodies from the nauill vpward, and were ſo ioined togither at the nauill, that when they were laid in length, the one head & bodie was eaſtward, and the other weſt: the legs for both the bodies grew out at the midſt where the bodies ioined, and had but one iſſue for the excrements of both bodies: they liued eightéene daies, and were women children. The eight of Auguſt were taken at Quinborow thrée great fiſhes called dolphins: & the wéeke following at Blackewall were ſix more taken, and brought to London, the leaſt of them was more than anie horſſe.]

Great fiſhes.

Much about this ſeaſon there were thrée notable ſhips ſet forth and furniſhed for the great aduenture of the vnknowne voiage into the eaſt by the north ſeas. The great dooer and incourager of which voiage was Sebaſtian Gabato an Engliſhman, borne at Briſtow, but was the ſonne of a Genowaie. Theſe ſhips at the laſt arriued in the countrie of Moſcouia, not without great loſſe and danger, and namelie of their capteine, who was a worthie and aduenturous gentleman, called ſir Hugh Willoughbie knight, who being toſſed and driuen by tempeſt, was at the laſt found in his ſhip frozen to death and all his people. But now the ſaid voiage and trade is greatlie aduanced, and the merchants aduenturing that waie, are newlie by act of parlement incorporated and indued with ſundrie priuileges and liberties.

Sebaſtian Gabato.

Thrée mariages betwéene great eſtates.

About the beginning of the moneth of Maie next following, there were thrée notable mariages concluded, & ſhortlie after ſolemnized at Durham place. The firſt was betwéene the lord Gilford Dudleie, the fourth ſonne of the duke of Northumberland, and the ladie Iane, eldeſt daughter to Henrie duke of Suffolke, & the ladie Francis his wife, was the daughter of Marie ſecond ſiſter to king Henrie the eight, firſt maried to Lewes the French king, and after to Charles Brandon duke of Suffolke. The ſecond mariage was betwéene the lord Herbert, ſon and heire to William earle of Penbroke, and the ladie Katharine, ſecond daughter of the ſaid ladie Francis, by the ſaid Henrie duke of Suffolke. And the third was betwéene Henrie lord Haſtings, ſonne and heire to Francis earle of Huntington, and ladie Katharine yongeſt daughter to the forenamed duke of Northumberland.

The euill ſucceſſe to the knitting of theſe couples in mariage tended.

Theſe mariages were compaſſed & concluded chieflie vpon purpoſe to change & alter the order of ſucceſſion to the crowne, made in the time of king Henrie the eight, from the ſaid kings daughters, Marie and Elizabeth, and to conueie the ſame immediatlie after the death of king Edward to the houſe of Suffolke, in the right of the ſaid ladie Francis: wherein the ſaid yong king was an earneſt traueller in the time of his ſickeneſſe, & all for feare that if his ſiſter Marie, being next heire to the crowne, ſhould ſucceed, that ſhe would ſubuert all his lawes and ſtatutes made concerning religion, whereof he was moſt carefull: for the continuance whereof he ſought to eſtabliſh a méet order of ſucceſſion, by the aliance of great houſes by waie of marriage, which neuertheleſſe were of no force to ſerue his purpoſe. For tending to the diſheriting of the rightfull heirs, they proued nothing proſperous to the parties: for two of them were ſoone after made fruſtrate, the one by death, the other by diuorſe.

The kings feare fell out to be true.

The kings ſickeneſſe increaſeth.

In the meane while, the king became euerie daie more ſicke than other of a conſumption in his lungs, ſo as there was no hope of his recouerie. Whervpon thoſe that then bare chiefe authoritie in councell, with other prelats and nobles of the realme, called to them diuerſe notable perſons, learned as well in diuinitie as in the lawes of the land, namelie biſhops, iudges, & other, who fell to conſultation vpon this ſo weightie cauſe, and laſtly concluded vpon the deuiſe of king Edwards will, to declare the ſaid ladie Iane, eldeſt néece to king Henrie the eight, and wife to the ſaid lord Gilford, to be rightfull heire in ſucceſſion to the crowne of England, without reſpect had to the ſtatute made in the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the eight: the true meaning of which ſtatute they did impugne and ouerthrow by diuerſe ſubtill ſiniſter conſtructions of the ſame, to diſherit the ſaid kings daughters, to whome the ſucceſſion of the crowne of England of right apperteined, as well by the common lawes of this realme, as alſo by the ſaid ſtatute made in the ſaid fiue and thirtith yeare of king Henrie, as aforeſaid. To which new order of ſucceſſion, all the ſaid kings councell, with manie biſhops, lords, doctors and iudges of the realme ſubſcribed their names, without refuſall of anie, except ſir Iames Hales knight, one of the iuſtices of the common plées, who being called to this councell, would in no wiſe giue his aſſent, either by word or writing, as ye ſhall heare more in the hiſtorie of quéene Marie.

The death of king Edward the ſixt.

Now when theſe matters were thus concluded, and after confirmed by a number of hands, as aforeſaid, then the noble prince king Edward the ſixt, by long lingering ſickeneſſe and conſumption of his lungs aforeſaid, approched to his death, and departed out of this life the ſixt daie of Iulie, in the ſeuenth yeare of his reigne, and ſeuentéenth of his age, after he had reigned and noblie gouerned this realme ſix yeares, fiue moneths, and eight daies. And a little before his departing, lifting vp his eies to God, he praied as followeth.

The praier of king Edward the ſixt at his death.

LOrd God, deliuer me out of this miſerable and wretched life, take me among thy choſen: howbeit not my will, but thy will be doone. Lord I commit my ſpirit to thée, oh Lord thou knoweſt how happie it were for mée to be with thée: yet for thy choſens ſake if it be thy will, ſend me life and helth, that I maie trulie ſerue thée. Oh my Lord bleſſe thy people, and ſaue thine inheritance. Oh Lord God, ſaue thy choſen people of England. Oh my Lord God defend this realme from papiſtrie, and mainteine thy true religion, that I and my people maie praiſe thy holie name. And therewithall he ſaid, I am faint, Lord haue mercie vpon me, and take my ſpirit.

The commendation of king Edward.

Thus did this good yong king yéeld vp to God his ghoſt the ſixt daie of Iulie (as before is mentioned) whome if it had pleaſed God to haue ſpared with longer life, not vnlike it was, but he ſhould haue ſo gouerned this Engliſh common-wealth, that he might haue béene comparable with any of his noble progenitors: ſo that the loſſe of ſo towardlie a yong king, greatlie diſcomforted the whole Engliſh nation, that looked for ſuch a reformation in the ſtate of the common-wealth at his hands, as was to be wiſhed for of all good ſubiects: which bred ſuch a liking in them toward him, that euen among verie traitorous rebels his name yet was had in reuerence, although otherwiſe they neuer ſo much forgat their dutie both towards him and other, appointed to gouerne vnder him, through a malicious and moſt wilfull error; as if his tender yeares had not ſufficientlie warranted his roiall authoritie, but that the ſame had béene vſurped by others againſt his will and pleaſure.

Iohn Fox the Acts & Monuments nder the title Edward e ſixt.

The noble morie of ing Edward d his rare it.

And as he was intierlie beloued of his ſubiects, ſo with the like affection of kindnes he loued them againe; of nature and diſpoſition méeke, much inclined to clemencie, euer hauing a regard to the ſparing of life. There wanted in him no promptnes of wit, grauitie of ſentence, ripeneſſe of iudgement, as his age might beare, fauour and loue of religion was in him from his childhood, his ſkill and knowledge in ſciences, beſides his other excellent vertues, were ſuch, that to them he ſéemed rather borne than brought vp. It maie ſéeme verie ſtrange, that in his yong years (as maiſter Fox reporteth of him) he could tell and recite all the ports, hauens, and créekes, not within his owne realme onelie, but alſo in Scotland, and likewiſe in France, what comming in there was, how the tide ſerued in euerie of them; moreouer, what burthen, and what wind ſerued for the comming into each hauen: alſo of all his iuſtices, magiſtrates, & gentlemen that bare any authoritie within his realme, he knew their names, their houſkéeping, their religion and conuerſation what it was. He had a ſingular reſpect to iuſtice, a vertue moſt commendable in a prince, and chieflie to the diſpatch of poore mens ſutes. Hée perfectlie vnderſtood the Latine tong, the French, the Gréeke, Italian, and Spaniſh, neither was he ignorant (ſaith Cardanus) in Logike, in the principles of naturall philoſophie, or in muſicke.

To conclude, his towardlineſſe was ſuch in all heroicall vertues, noble gifts, and markable qualities conuenient for his princelie eſtate, that ſo much was hoped for in his roiall perſon (if he had liued till triall might haue béene had of the proofe) as was to be looked for in anie one prince that euer had rule ouer this noble realme.

I. Stow. 1058. K. Edwards death opened.

¶ The eight of Iulie, the lord maior of London was ſent for to the court, then at Gréenwich, and to bring with him ſix aldermen, as manie merchants of the Staple, and as manie merchant aduenturers, vnto whom by the councell was ſecretlie declared the death of king Edward, & alſo whom he had ordeined to the ſucceſſion of the crowne by his leters patents, to the which they were ſworne; and charged to kéepe it ſecret.] But now to procéed with the doings that followed. Immediatlie after the death of this ſo worthie a prince king Edward, the aforeſaid ladie Iane was proclamed quéene of this realme by the ſound of trumpet, that is to ſaie, the ninth daie of Iulie, at which proclamation were preſent the lords of the councell, the maior of London, with others.

Iohns head within Ludgate, who was accuſed by the ſaid Sanders his maiſter, was ſet vpon the pillorie in Cheape, with both his eares nailed, and cleane cut off, for words ſpeaking at time of the proclamation of ladie Iane. At the which execution was a trumpet blowne, and a herald read his offenſe, in preſence of one of the ſhiriffes, &c. About fiue of the clocke the ſame daie in the afternoone, Minion Sanders, maſter to the ſaid Gilbert Pot, and Iohn Owen a gunner, comming from the tower of London, by water in a wherrie, and ſhooting London bridge, towards the blacke friers, were drowned at ſaint Marie Locke, and the wherriemen ſaued by their ores.]

The ladie Marie, a little before lieng at Honeſdon in Hartfordſhire, hauing intelligence of the ſtate of the king hir brother, and of the ſecret practiſe againſt hir: by the aduiſe of hir fréends, with all ſpéed tooke hir iorneie toward hir houſe of Keningall in Norfolke, intending there to remaine, vntill ſhe could make hir ſelfe more ſtrong of hir fréends and alies, and withall wrote vnto the lords of the councell in forme as followeth.

A letter of the ladie Marie ſent to the lords of the councell, wherein ſhe claimeth the crowne now after the deceaſe of hir brother king Edward.

MY lords we gréet you well, and haue receiued ſure aduertiſement, that out deareſt brother the king our late ſouereigne lord is departed to Gods mercie: which newes, how they be wofull to our heart, he onelie knoweth, to whoſe will and pleaſure we muſt and doo humblie ſubmit vs, and all our wils. But in this ſo lamentable a caſe, that is to wit, now after his maieſties departure and death, concerning the crowne & gouernance of this realme of England, with the title of France, and all things thereto belonging that hath béene prouided by act of parlement, and the teſtament and laſt will of our deareſt father, beſides other circumſtances aduancing our right: you know, the realme, and the whole world knoweth, the rolles and records appeare by the authoritie of the king our ſaid father, and the king our ſaid brother, and the ſubiects of this relme, ſo that we verelie truſt that there is no true ſubiect that is, can, or would pretend to be ignorant thereof: and of our part we haue our ſelues cauſed, and as God ſhall aid and ſtrength vs, ſhall cauſe our right and title in this behalfe to be publiſhed and proclamed accordinglie. And albeit this ſo weightie a matter ſéemeth ſtrange, that the dieng of our ſaid brother vpon thurſdaie at night laſt paſt, we hitherto had no knowledge from you thereof: yet we conſider your wiſedomes and prudence to be ſuch, that hauing eftſoones amongſt you debated, pondered, and well weighed this preſent caſe with our eſtate, with your owne eſtate, the commonwealth, and all our honors, we ſhall and may conceiue great hope and truſt, with much aſſurance in your loialtie and ſeruice, and therfore for the time interpret and take things not to the worſt, and that ye yet will like noblemen worke the beſt. Neuertheleſſe, we are not ignorant of your conſultations to vndoo the prouiſions made for our preferment, nor of the great bands and prouiſions forcible, wherevnto ye be aſſembled and prepared, by whome, and to what end, God and you know, and nature can feare ſome euill. But be it that ſome conſideration politike, or whatſoeuer thing elſe hath moued you thereto, yet doubt you not my lords, but we can take all theſe your doings in gratious part, being alſo right readie to remit and fullie pardon the ſame, with that fréelie to eſchew bloudſhed & vengeance againſt all thoſe that can or will intend the ſame, truſting alſo aſſuredlie you will take and accept this grace and vertue in good part, as apperteineth, and that we ſhall not be inforced to vſe this ſeruice of other our true ſubiects and fréends, which in this our iuſt and rightfull caſe, God (in whome our whole affiance is) ſhall ſend vs. Wherefore my lords, we require you, and charge you, and euerie of you, that euerie of you of your allegiance which you owe to God and vs, and to none other, for our honour, and the ſuertie of our realme, onelie imploie your ſelues and forthwith vpon receit hereof cauſe our right and title to the crowne and gouernment of this realme, to be proclamed in our citie of London, and ſuch other places as to your wiſedoms ſhall ſéeme good, and as to this caſe apperteineth, not failing hereof, as our verie truſt is in you: and thus our letter ſigned with our owne hand ſhall be your ſufficient warrant in this behalfe. Yeuen vnder our ſignet at our manor of Keningall the ninth of Iulie 1553.

She certifieth the lords that ſhe knoweth what is intended againſt hir.

She chargeth the lords vpon their loialties to cauſe hir right to the regiment to be proclamed.

To this letter of the ladie Marie, the lords of the councell anſwered againe as followeth.

Madam, we haue receiued your letters the ninth of this inſtant, declaring your ſuppoſed title, which you iudge your ſelfe to haue to the imperiall crowne of this realme, and all the dominions thereto belonging. For anſwer wherof, this is to aduertiſe you, that forſomuch as our ſouereigne ladie quéene Iane is, after the death of our ſouereigne lord Edward the ſixt, a prince of moſt noble memorie, inueſted and poſſeſſed with the iuſt and right title of the imperiall crowne of this realme, not onelie by good order of old ancient good lawes of this realme; but alſo by our late ſouereigne lords letters patents, ſigned with his owne hand, and ſealed with the great ſeale of England, in preſence of the moſt part of the nobles, councellors, iudges, with diuers other graue and ſage perſonages, aſſenting and ſubſcribing to the ſame: we muſt therefore, as of moſt bound dutie and allegiance, aſſent vnto hir ſaid grace, and to none other, except we ſhould (which faithfull ſubiects cannot) fall into gréeuous and vnſpeakeable enormities. Wherefore we can no leſſe doo, but for the quiet both of the realme and you alſo, to aduertiſe you, that forſomuch as the diuorſe made betwéene the king of famous memorie king Henrie the eight, and the ladie Katharine your mother, was neceſſarie to be had, both by the euerlaſting lawes of God, and alſo by the eccleſiaſticall lawes, and by the moſt part of the noble and learned vniuerſities of chriſtendome, and confirmed alſo by the ſundrie acts of parlements, remaining yet in their force, and thereby you iuſtlie made illegitimate, and vnheritable to the crowne imperiall of this realme; and the rules, dominions, and poſſeſſions of the ſame: you will vpon iuſt conſideration hereof, and of diuers other cauſes lawfull to be alledged for the ſame, and for the iuſt inheritance of the right line, and godlie orders taken by the late king Edward the ſixt, and greateſt perſonages aforeſaid, ſurceaſe, by anie pretenſe to vex and moleſt anie of our ſouereigne ladie quéene Iane hir ſubiects, from the true faith and allegiance due vnto hir grace; aſſuring you, that if you will for reſpect ſhew your ſelfe quiet and obedient (as you ought) you ſhall find vs all, and ſeuerall, readie to doo you anie ſeruice that we with dutie may, and to be glad of your quietneſſe, to preſerue the common ſtate of this realme, wherein you may be otherwiſe gréeuous vnto vs, to your ſelfe, and to them. And thus we bid you moſt hartilie well to fare. From the tower of London this ninth of Iulie.

The lords aduertiſe the ladie Marie that the ladie Iane is quéene.

All theſe aforeſaid, except onelie the duke of Northumberland, and ſir Iohn Gates, were either by ſpeciall fauour, or ſpeciall or generall pardon, diſcharged for this offenſe againſt hir committed, after hir comming to be quéene. But now vpon the receit of this anſwer, vnderſtanding by hir fréends that ſhe could not lie in ſuertie at Keningall, being a place open & eaſie to be approched, ſhe remoued from thence vnto hir caſtell of Fremingham, ſtanding in a wood countrie, & not ſo eaſie to be inuaded by hir enimies. So ſoone as the councell heard of hir ſudden departure, and conſidering that all came not to paſſe as they ſuppoſed; they cauſed ſpéedilie a power of men to be gathered togither. And firſt they agréed that the duke of Suffolke father to the new made quéene, ſhould haue the conduct and leading of the armie.

¶But afterward it was deuiſed and decréed vpon further conſiderations, and by the ſpeciall means of the ladie Iane his daughter, who taking the matter heauilie, with wéeping teares, made requeſt to the whole councell, that hir father might tarrie at home in hir companie. Wherevpon the councell perſuaded with the duke of Northumberland, to take that voiage vpon him, ſaieng, that no man was ſo fit therefore: bicauſe that he had atchiued the victorie in Norffolke once alreadie, and was therefore ſo feared, that none durſt once lift vp their weapon againſt him: beſides that, he was the beſt man of warre in the realme, as well for the ordering of his campes and ſouldiers, both in battell and in their tents, as alſo by experience, knowlege and wiſdome; he could both animate his armie with wittie perſuaſions, and alſo pacifie and allaie his enimies pride with his ſtout courage, or elſe to diſſuade them (if néed were) from their enterpriſe. Finallie, ſaid they, this is the ſhort and the long, the quéene will in no wiſe grant, that hir father ſhall take it vpon him: wherefore (quoth they) we thinke it good, if it may pleaſe your grace, it lieth in you to remedie the matter. With theſe & the like perſuaſions the duke was allured to put himſelfe deſperatlie vpon hazzard;

Non morte horrenda non vllis territus armis.

Inſomuch that he reioined vpon their talke, and ſaid: Well then, ſith yée thinke it good, I and mine will go, not doubting of your fidelitie to the quéenes maieſtie, maieſtie, which now I leaue in your cuſtodie. So that might be ſent for both lords, knights, and other that ſhould go with him, and cauſed all things to be prepared accordinglie. Then went the councell in to the ladie Iane, and told hir of their concluſion, who humbile thanked the duke for reſeruing hir father at home, and beſéeched him to vſe his diligence: whereto he anſwered, that he would doo what in him laie. The morrow following, great preparation was made, the duke earlie in the morning called for his owne harnesſe, and ſaw it made readie at Durham place, where he appointed all his retinue to méet. The ſame daie carts were laden with munition and artillerie, and field péeces were ſet forward.

Carts laden with munitiō.

The ſame forenoone the duke moued eftſoones the councell to ſend their powers after him, as it was before determined, the ſame to méet with him at Newmarket, and they promiſed they would. He ſaid further to ſome of them: My lords, I and theſe other noble perſonages, with the whole armie that now go forth, as well for the behalfe of you & yours, as for the eſtabliſhing of the quéenes highneſſe, ſhall not onelie aduenture our bodies and liues amongſt the bloudie ſtrokes and cruell aſſaults of our aduerſaries in the open fields: but alſo we doo leaue the conſeruation of our ſelues, children, and families at home here with you, as altogither committed to your truth and fidelities: whome, if we thought ye would through malice, conſpiracie, or diſſention leaue vs your fréends in the briers, and betraie vs; we could as well ſundrie waies foreſée and prouide for our owne ſafegards, as anie of you by betraieng vs can doo for yours. But now vpon the onelie truſt and faithfulneſſe of your honors, whereof we thinke our ſelues moſt aſſured, we doo hazzard our liues. Which truſt and promiſe if yée ſhall violate, hoping thereby of life and promotion: yet ſhall not God count you innocent of our blouds, neither acquite you of the ſacred and holie oth of allegiance, made fréelie by you to this vertuous ladie the quéenes highneſſe, who by your and our intiſement is rather of force placed therein, than by hir owne ſéeking and requeſt. Conſider alſo, that Gods cauſe, which is the preferment of his word, & feare of papiſts entrance, hath béene (as ye haue here before alwaies laid) the originall ground whervpon ye euen at the firſt motion granted your good wils and conſents therevnto, as by your handwritings appeareth; and thinke not the contrarie, but if ye meane deceit, though not forthwith, yet hereafter God will reuenge the ſame.

I can ſaie no more, but in this troubleſome time wiſh you to vſe conſtant hearts, abandoning all malice, enuie, and priuat affections. And therewithall the firſt courſe for the lords came vp, wherefore the duke ſhut vp his talke with theſe words. I haue not ſpoken to you in this ſort vpon anie miſtruſt I haue of your truths, of which alwaies I haue euer hitherto conceiued a truſtie confidence, but I haue put you in remembrance thereof, what chance of variance ſo euer might grow amongſt you in mine abſence: and this I praie you, wiſh me not worſſe good ſpéed in this iorneie, than yée would haue to your ſelues. My lord, ſaith one of them, if yée miſtruſt anie of vs in this matter, your grace is farre deceiued, for which of vs can waſh his hands cleane thereof? And if we ſhould ſhrinke from you as from one that were culpable, which of vs can excuſe himſelfe to be giltleſſe? Therefore herein your doubt is too farre caſt. I praie God it be (quoth the duke) let vs go to dinner: and ſo they ſat downe. After dinner the duke went in to the quéene, where his commiſſion was by that time ſealed, for his lieutenantſhip of the armie, and then tooke his leaue of hir, and ſo did certeine other lords alſo.

The concluſion of the ... talke ... the lords.

Then as the duke came through the councell chamber, he tooke his leaue of the earle of Arundell, who praied God be with his grace, ſaieng he was ſorie it was not his chance to go with him and beare him companie, in whoſe preſence he could find in his heart to ſpend his bloud euen at his féet. Then the earle of Arundell tooke Thomas Louell the dukes boie by the hand, and ſaid; Farewell gentle Thomas with all my heart. Then the duke, with the lord marqueſſe of Northampton, the lord Greie, and diuerſe other tooke their barge, and went to Durham place, and to White hall, where that night they muſtered their men: and the next daie in the morning the duke departed with the number of ſix hundred men, or thereabouts. And as they rode through Shordich, ſaid the duke to the lord Greie; The people preaſe to ſée vs, but not one ſaith God ſpéed vs. The ſame daie ſir Iohn Gates and other went out after the duke.]

The earle of Arundell profeſſeth himſelfe ſorie that he goeth not with the duke of Northumberland.

Now as the duke went forward on his waie (with his commiſſion from the whole councell, and his warrant vnder the broad ſeale of England, without miſtruſt of that which after fortuned to his owne deſtruction, as in the hiſtorie of quéene Marie ſhall appeare, accompanied with no ſmall number of lords and gentlemen, hauing notwithſtanding his times preſcribed, and his iourneies appointed by the councell, to the intent he would not ſeeme to doo any thing but vpon warrant) what a doo there was, what ſtirring on euerie ſide, what ſending, what riding, and poſting, what letters, meſſages, & inſtructions went to and fro, what talking among the ſouldiers, what hartburning among the people, what faire pretenſes outwardlie, inwardlie what priuie practiſes there were, what ſpeeding and ſending forth ordinance out of the tower, yea euen the ſame daie that quéene Marie at euen was proclaimed quéene, what rumors, and comming downe of ſouldiers as there was from all quarters, a world it was to ſée, and a proceſſe to declare, enough to make (as ſaith maſter Fox) a whole volume, euen as big as an Ilias.

Much a do on all ſides during this ſtir broched betwéene the duke and the ladie Marie.

The greateſt helpe that made for the ladie Marie, was the ſhort iourneies of the duke, which by commiſſion were aſſigned vnto him before, as aboue is mentioned: and happilie not without the politike forecaſt of ſome in fauour of the ladie Marie: for the longer the duke lingered in his voiage, the ladie Marie the more increaſed in puiſſance, the hearts of the people being mightilie bent vnto hir. Wherevpon ſhe in the meane time remaining at Fremingham, and hearing of this preparation againſt hir, gathered togither ſuch power of the noblemen & other hir fréends in that countrie, as ſhe could get. And firſt of all, the noblemen that came vnto hir aid, were the earles of Suſſex, Bath, and Oxford, the lord Wentworth, ſir Thomas Cornewallis, ſir Henrie Ierningham, ſir William Walgraue, with diuerſe other gentlemen and commons of the counties of Norffolke and Suffolke. Here (as maſter Fox noteth) the Suffolke men being the firſt that reſorted to hir, promiſed hir their aid and helpe to the vttermoſt of their powers, ſo that ſhe would not go about to alter the religion which hir brother had eſtabliſhed, and was now vſed and exerciſed through the realme. To this condition ſhe agréed, with ſuch promiſe, as no man would haue doubted that anie innouation of matters in religion ſhould haue followed, by hir ſufferance or procurement during hir reigne: but how ſoone ſhée forgat that promiſe, it ſhall ſhortlie after plainelie appeare.

The old prouerbe verefied Delaie bréedeth danger.

Suffolke men the firſt that reſorted to the ladie Marie.

In this meane ſeaſon, the lord Windſor, ſir Edmund Peckham, ſir Robert Drurie, and ſir Edward Haſtings, raiſed the commoners of the ſhire of Buckingham; vnto whome ſir Iohn Williams, which afterward was lord Williams of Thame, Aſſiſtants to the ladie Marie.

and ſir Leonard Chamberleine, with the chéefe power of Oxfordſhire. And out of Northamptonſhire came ſir Thomas Treſham, and a great number of gentlemen out of diuerſe parts, whoſe names were too long to rehearſe. Theſe capteins with their companies being thus aſſembled in warlike manner, marched forward towards Norffolke to the aid of the ladie Marie, and the further they went, the more their power increaſed.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S. pag. 1062.

Aid by wind and wether for quéene Marie that was bent againſt hir.

¶ About this time ſix ſhips well manned, that were appointed to lie before Yarmouth, and to haue taken the ladie Marie if ſhe had fled that waie, were by force of weather driuen into the hauen; where one maiſter Ierningham was raiſing power on the ladie Maries behalfe, who hearing thereof, came thither. Wherevpon the capteins tooke a bote and went to the ſhips, but the ſailers and ſouldiers asked maiſter Ierningham what he would haue, and whether he would haue their capteins or no, and he ſaid yea. Marrie ſaid they, ye ſhall haue them or we will throw them into the bottome of the ſea. But the capteins ſaid forthwith, that they would ſerue quéene Marie willinglie, and ſo brought forth their men, and conueied with them their great ordinance. Of the comming of theſe ſhips the ladie Marie was wonderfull ioious, & afterward doubted little the dukes puiſſance: but when newes thereof was brought to the tower, each man there began to draw backward: and ouer that, word of a greater miſcheefe was brought to the tower: that is to ſaie, that the noblemens tenants refuſed to ſerue their lords againſt quéene Marie.

The duke of Northumberland writeth for more ſuccours.

The duke thought long for his ſuccors, and wrote ſomewhat ſharpelie to the councell at the tower in that behalfe, as well for lacke of men as munition, but a ſlender anſwer had he againe. And from that time forward, certeine of the councell, to wit, the erle of Penbroke, and ſir Thomas Cheineie lord warden, and other, ſought to get out of the tower to conſult in London, but could not. On the ſixtéenth of Iulie, being ſundaie, doctor Ridleie biſhop of London, by commandement of the councell, preached at Paules croſſe, where he vehementlie perſuaded the people in the title of the ladie Iane, late proclamed quéene, and inueied earneſtlie againſt the title of ladie Marie, &c. The ſame ſixtéenth of Iulie, the lord treaſuror was gone out of the tower to his houſe in London at night, and forthwith about ſeauen of the clocke the gates of the tower vpon a ſudden were ſhut vp, and the keies borne vp to the ladie Iane, which was for feare of ſome packing in the lord treaſuror: but he was fetched againe to the tower about twelue of the clocke in the night.]

Doctor Ridleie perſuadeth the people in the title of quéene Iane, &c.

The lords of the councell ſuſpecting that all would go againſt them, proclaimed the ladie Marie quéene.

The lords of the councell, being in this meane while at London, after they vnderſtood how the better part of the realme were inclined, and hearing euerie daie newes of great aſſemblies, began to ſuſpect the ſequell of this enterpriſe. So that prouiding for their owne ſuertie, without reſpect of the duke (who now was at Burie) they fell to a new councell, and laſtlie by aſſent made proclamation at London in the name of the ladie Marie, by the name of Marie quéene of England, France, & Ireland, defender of the faith, & of the churches of England & Ireland ſupreme head. Of which proclamation, after the duke of Northumberland, being then at Burie, was aduertiſed by letters of diſcomfort from the councell, he incontinentlie, according to the new order receiued from them, returned with his power againe to Cambridge. Now ſo ſudden change of minds forthwith appeared in his armie, that they which before ſéemed moſt forward in that quarell, began firſt to flie from him, & ſo euerie man ſhifting for himſelfe, he that late before was furniſhed of ſuch multitude of ſouldiers, was ſuddenlie forſaken of all ſauing a few, whoſe perils were ioined with his.

Learned men that liued in the reigne of king Edward.

But now before I proceed anie further in the hiſtorie of quéene Marie, who was now receiued and proclamed quéene, as then to ſucceed hir brother, I will ſpeake ſomewhat of the learned men that wrote & publiſhed anie pamphlets or treatiſes in his daies, as in déed there were manie: but for that the more part of them died in quéene Maries time, or in the quéenes maieſties time that now is, or elſe are yet liuing, I doo omit thoſe here, meaning to ſpeake of them hereafter, if God ſhall permit, as occaſion maie ſerue. For the reſidue that ended their liues in this kings daies, theſe I find: Dauid Clapham a lawyer and well ſéene in the Latine tong, wrote ſundrie treatiſes; Robert Talbot a prebendarie of Norwich, verie ſkilfull in antiquities; Edward Hall a counſellor in the common law, but excellentlie ſéene in hiſtories, wrote a notable chronicle of the vnion of the two houſes of Yorke & Lancaſter.

Furthermore Richard Tracie of Todington in Glouceſterſhire, an eſquier, and verie well learned, ſonne to William Tracie; doctor Ioſeph an excellent preacher; George Ioie a Bedfordſhire man, that wrote diuerſe treatiſes concerning diuinitie, and died either in the laſt yeare of king Edward, or in the beginning of quéene Maries reigne, as appeareth by maſter Bale; Alexander Barkleie a Scot, a notable poet, and a good rhetorician, departed this life in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and two; William Hugh a Yorkeſhireman, wrote, beſides other things, a notable treatiſe called the troubled mans medicine, he deceaſſed by the burſting of a veine, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and nine; Thomas Sternehold borne in Southhampton, turned into Engliſh méeter ſeuen & thirtie pſalmes choſen forth of Dauids pſalter. Of ſtrangers that liued and died here in this kings daies, excellentlie learned, and renowmed for ſuch treatiſes as they publiſhed to the world, Martine Bucer and Paulus Fagius are moſt famous. To end now with this part of the booke concerning king Edward, I haue thought good to ſet downe Ierom Cardans verſes, written as an epitaph of him (and recorded by maſter Fox in his hiſtorie) as here followeth:

Carmen epitaphicum Cardani in obitum regis Edwardi.

Flete nefas magnum, ſed toto flebilis orbe

Thus farre the good and vertuous yoong prince Edward the ſixt, ſucceſſor to Henrie the eight of moſt famous memorie.

Marie the eldeſt daughter of king Henrie the eight ſucceſſor to Edward the ſixt.

Quéene Marie proclamed.

MArie eldeſt daughter of K. Henrie the eight, by the ladie Katharine of Spaine, his firſt wife, and ſiſter vnto king Edward the ſixt, by the fathers ſide, began hir reigne the ſixt daie of Iulie, which daie the king hir brother died, and ſhe was proclamed at London (as is before remembred in the end of the hiſtorie of king Edward the ſixt) the nineteenth daie of the ſame moneth, in the yeare of our Lord 1553: after the creation of the world 5520, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of Charles the fift, emperor of Almaine, in the ſeuenth yéere of Henrie the ſecond of that name K. of France, & in the eleuenth of Marie quéene of Scotland. The twentith of Iulie the duke of Northumberland being come backe to Cambridge, heard that the proclamation of quéene Marie was come thither, whereof he being aduertiſed, called for a trumpetter and an herald; but none could be found. Wherevpon he riding into the market place with the maior, and the lord marques of Northampton, made the proclamation himſelfe, and threw vp his cap in token of ioy. ¶ Within an houre after he had letters from the councell (as he ſaid) that he ſhould forthwith diſmiſſe his armie, and not come within ten miles of London: for if he did, they would fight with him, the rumor whereof was no ſooner abroad, but euerie man departed. And ſhortlie after, the duke was arreſted in the kings college by one maiſter Sleg ſargeant at arms.

Abr.Fl. ex I.S.pag.1064.

The duke ſubmitteth himſelfe, and is arreſted by the earle of Arundell.

At the laſt, letters were brought from the councell at London, that all men ſhould go each his waie. Wherevpon the duke ſaid to them that kept him; Ye doo me wrong to withdraw my libertie, ſée you not the councels letters without exception, that all men ſhould go whither they would? At which words they that kept him and the other noblemen, ſet them at libertie, and ſo continued they for that night: inſomuch that the earle of Warwike was readie in the morning to haue rode awaie. But then came the erle of Arundell from the quéene to the duke into his chamber, who went out to méet him. Now as ſoone as he ſaw the earle of Arundell, he fell on his knées, and deſired him to be good to him for the loue of God: Conſider (ſaith he) I haue doone nothing but by the conſents of you and all the whole councell. My lord (quoth the earle of Arundell) I am ſent hither by the quéens maieſtie, and in hir name I doo arreſt you. And I obeie it my lord (quoth he) I beſéech you my lord of Arundell (quoth the duke) vſe mercie towards me, knowing the caſe as it is. My lord (quoth the earle) ye ſhould haue ſought for mercie ſooner, I muſt doo according to commandement; herwith he committed the charge of him and the others to the gard and gentlemen that ſtood by.] The lord marques after this went to quéene Marie. On the fiue & twentith daie of the ſaid moneth, the duke of Northumberland, with Francis earle of Huntington; Iohn earle of Warwike ſon and heire to the ſaid duke, and two other of his yonger ſons, the lord Ambroſe and the lord Henrie Dudleie, ſir Andrew Dudleie, Sir Iohn Gates capteine of the gard to king Edward the ſixt, ſir Henrie Gates brethren, ſir Thomas Palmer knights, and doctor Sands were brought to the tower by the earle of Arundell. But as they entered within the tower gate, the earle of Arundell diſcharged the lord Haſtings, taking him out of the tower with him. On the ſix & twentith of Iulie, the lord marques of Northampton, the biſhop of London, the lord Robert Dudleie, and ſir Robert Corbet were brought from the quéenes campe vnto the tower. The eight and twentith of Iulie, the duke of Suffolke was committed to the tower, but the one and twentith of the ſame moneth he was ſet at libertie by the diligent ſute of the ladie Francis grace his wife.

The lord Haſtings diſcharged out of the tower.

Duke of Suffolke committed to the tower.

Quéene Marie commeth to London.

After that quéene Marie was thus with full conſent of the nobles and commons of the realme proclamed quéene, ſhe being then in Northfolke, at hir caſtell of Framingham, repaired with all ſpeed to the citie of London: and the third daie of the ſaid moneth of Auguſt ſhe came to the ſaid citie, and ſo to the tower, where the ladie Iane of Suffolke (late afore proclamed quéene) with hir huſband the lord Gilford, a little before hir comming, were committed to ward, & there remained almoſt after fiue moneths. And by the waie, as the quéene thus paſſed, ſhe was ioifullie ſaluted of all the people, without anie miſliking; ſauing that it was much feared of manie, that ſhe would alter the religion ſet forth by king Edward hir brother, whereof then were giuen iuſt occaſions: becauſe (notwithſtanding diuerſe lawes made to the contrarie) ſhe had dailie maſſe and Latine ſeruice ſaid before hir in the tower. Yea it was doubted in like ſort, that ſhe would both adnull and innouat certeine lawes and decrées eſtabliſhed by the yoong prince hir predeceſſor: which ſhe did in déed, as one hath left teſtified in a memoriall of hir ſucceſſion (but little vnto hir commendation) ſaieng:

At Maria Eduardi regni ſuccedit habenis,
Confirmans iterùm regno papalia iura,
Conciliòque nouas leges ſancire vocato
Molitur, latas à fratre peroſa priores.

Priſoners diſcharged.

At hir entrie into the tower there were preſented to hir certeine priſoners; namelie, Thomas duke of Norffolke, who in the laſt yeare of king Henrie the eight (as you haue heard) was ſuppoſed to be attainted of treaſon: but in the parlement of this firſt yeare of quéene Marie, the ſaid ſuppoſed attaindour was by the authoritie and act of parlement, for good and apparant cauſes alleged in the ſaid act, declared to be vtterlie fruſtrat and void. Alſo Edward Courtneie ſon and heire to Henrie marques of Exceſter, coſine germane to king Henrie the eight, and Cutbert Tunſtall biſhop of Durham, with other perſons of great calling; but ſpeciallie Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, whom ſhe not onlie releaſed out of impriſonment, but alſo immediatlie aduanced and preferred to be lord chancellor of England, reſtoring him alſo to his former eſtate and biſhoprike, and remoued from the ſame one doctor Poinet, who a little before was placed therein by the gift of king Edward the ſixt.

Stephan Gardiner made lord chancellor.

Edward Courtneie created earle of Deuonſhire.

Biſhops reſtored, and others depriued.

Why Ridleie was more rigorouſlie handled than the reſt.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S. pag. 1067.

The buriall of king Edward.

And touching Edward Courtneie, ſhe not onelie aduanced him to the earldome of Deuonſhire, but alſo to ſo much of his fathers poſſeſſions as there remained in hir hands; whereby it was then thought of manie, that ſhe bare affection to him by the waie of marriage: but it came not ſo to paſſe (for what cauſe I am not able to giue anie reaſon) but ſurelie the ſubiects of England were moſt deſirous thereof. Vpon the receiuing of this new queene, all the biſhops which had béene depriued in the time of king Edward the ſixt hir brother, for the cauſe of religion; were now againe reſtored to their biſhopriks; and ſuch other as were placed in king Edward his time, remoued from their ſées, and others of contrarie religion placed. Amongeſt whom, Edmund Bonner doctor of the lawes, late afore depriued from the ſée of London, and committed priſoner to the Marſhalſea by order of king Edwards councell, was with all fauour reſtored to his libertie and biſhoprike. Maiſter Nicholas Ridleie doctor in diuinitie, late before aduanced to the ſame ſée by the ſaid king, was haſtilie diſplaced, and committed priſoner to the tower of London. The cauſe why ſuch extremitie was vſed towards the ſaid biſhop Ridleie, more than to the reſt, was for that in the time of ladie Iane, he preached a ſermon at Pauls croſſe by the commandement of king Edwards councell, wherein he diſſuaded the people, for ſundrie cauſes, from receiuing the ladie Marie as queene. ¶ On the ninth of Auguſt in the afternoone, the queene held an obſequie in the tower for king Edward, the dirge being ſong in Latine, and on the morrow a maſſe of Requiem, whereat the quéene with hir ladies offered. The ſame daie the corps of king Edward was buried at Weſtminſter, the lord treaſuror, the earle of Penbroke, and the earle of Shrewesburie being chéefe mourners, with diuerſe other noble men and others. Doctor Daie biſhop of Chicheſter preached at the ſaid buriall, and all the ſeruice with a communion was in Engliſh. Thus was finiſhed the ſolemne funerall of that good prince, at whoſe birth there were not ſo manie reioiſing hearts, but at his death there were by infinit ods manie more weeping eies, & ſad ſpirits: whoſe tender bodie, though pined with ſickneſſe, & conſumed with rottenneſſe, maie perhaps leaue for ſucceeding ages no relike to gaze vpon; yet the memorie of his name ſhall be euer gréene. For he was, as one trulie ſaith of him:

Ille erat Europæ Phœnix, quem funere acerbo
(Vt flos vere nouo viridanti carpitur horto)
Suſtulit ante diem mors immatura Britannis,
Inuidet hæc terris pietatem & iura colentes.]

Doctor Borne a chapleine of biſhop Bonner.

A dagger throwne at the preache

The thirteenth of Auguſt doctor Bonner reſtored now to his biſhoprike againe, appointed one late a chapleine of his called doctor Borne to preach at Paules croſſe, who was then promoted to the queens ſeruice, & not long after was made biſhop of Bath. The ſaid doctor taking occaſion of the goſpell of that daie, ſpake ſomewhat largelie in the iuſtifieng of biſhop Bonner, being preſent at the ſermon, which biſhop (as the ſaid preacher then openlie ſaid) for a ſermon made vpon the ſame text, and in the ſame place the ſame daie foure yéeres afore paſſed, was moſt vniuſtlie caſt into the vile dungeon of the Marſhalſea among théeues, and there kept during the time of king Edwards reigne. This matter being ſet forth with great vehemencie, ſo much offended the eares of part of the audience, that they brake ſilence, and began to murmur and throng togither, in ſuch ſort as the maior and aldermen with other of the wiſer ſort then preſent feared much an vprore. During which muttering, one more feruent than his fellowes threw a dagger at the preacher: but who it was, came not to knowlege. By reaſon of which outrage the preacher withdrew himſelfe from the pulpit, and one maiſter Bradford at the requeſt of the preachers brother and others ſtanding there, tooke the place, and ſpake ſo mildlie to the people, that with few words he appeaſed their furie: and after the ſaid maiſter Bradford and maiſter Rogers, although men of contrarie religion, conueied the ſaid preacher into Paules ſchoole, and there left him ſafelie.

The preach at Paules croſſe defended by the gard.

The duke Northumb lād arreign

The next ſundaie following, for feare of a like tumult or worſe, order was taken that the queens gard ſhould be preſent in place to defend the preacher with weapons. Wherevpon the wiſer men perceiuing ſuch a number of weapons, and that great perill was not vnlike to inſue, by ſuch appéerance of late not accuſtomed, would not be preſent at the ſermon, by reaſon whereof there was left a ſmall auditorie. Wherefore afterward there was a commandement giuen by the lord maior, that the ancients of the companies ſhould be preſent at the next ſermon in their liueries, and ſo they were, whereby all became quiet. The eighteenth of Auguſt next following, the duke of Northumberland, the lord marqueſſe of Northampton, and the earle of Warwike, ſon and heire to the ſaid duke, were brought into Weſtminſter hall, and there arreigned of high treaſon before Thomas duke of Norffolke high Steward of England.

The duke requeſt to vnderſtand th opinion of t court in tw points.

The duke of Northumberland at his comming to the barre, vſed great reuerence towards the iudges: and proteſting his faith and allegiance to the quéenes maieſtie, whome he confeſſed gréeuouſlie to haue offended, he ſaid that he meant not to ſpeake anie thing in defenſe of his fact, but would firſt vnderſtand th'opinion of the court in two points. Firſt whether a man dooing anie act by authoritie of the princes councell, & by warrant of the great ſeale of England, & dooing nothing without the ſame, maie be charged with treaſon for any thing which he might doo by warrant thereof? Secondlie, whether anie ſuch perſons as were equally culpable in that crime, and thoſe by whoſe letters and commandements he was directed in all his dooings might be his iudges, or paſſe vpon his triall as his péeres? Whereunto was anſwered, that as concerning the firſt, the great ſeale which he laid for his warrant, was not the ſeale of the lawfull quéene of the realme, nor paſſed by authoritie: but the ſeale of an vſurper, and therefore could be no warrant to him. And to the ſecond it was alledged, that if anie were as déeplie to be touched in that caſe as himſelfe, yet ſo long as no atteindor were of record againſt them, they were neuertheleſſe perſons able in law to paſſe vpon anie triall, and not to be chalenged therefore, but at the princes pleaſure. After which anſwer the duke vſing few words, declared his earneſt repentance in the caſe (for he ſaw that to ſtand vpon vttering anie reaſonable matter, as might ſéeme, would little preuaile) and he mooued the duke of Norffolke to be a meane vnto the quéene for mercie, and without further anſwer confeſſed the indictment, by whoſe example the other priſoners arreigned with him, did likewiſe confeſſe the indictments produced againſt them, and therevpon had iudgement.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S.pag.1069.
The duke of Northumberlands foure requeſts after his iudgment.

¶ Now when iudgement was giuen, the duke ſaid; I beſéech you my lords all to be humble ſuters to the quéenes maieſtie, and to grant me foure requeſts, which are theſe: firſt, that I maie haue that death which noble men haue had in times paſt, and not the other: ſecondarilie, that hir maieſtie will be gratious to my children which maie hereafter doo good ſeruice, conſidering that they went by my commandement who am their father, and not of their owne frée willes: thirdlie, that I may haue appointed to me ſome learned man for the inſtruction and quieting of my conſcience: and fourthlie, that ſhe will ſend two of the councell to commune with me, to whome I will declare ſuch matters as ſhall be expedient for hir and the common-weale: and thus I beſéech you all to praie for me.

The ninetéenth of Auguſt, ſir Andrew Dudleie, ſir Iohn Gates, and ſir Henrie Gates brethren, and ſir Thomas Palmer knights, were arreigned at Weſtminſter; and confeſſing their indictments, had iudgement, which was pronounced by the marqueſſe of Wincheſter high treaſuror of England that ſate that daie as chiefe iuſtice. On the twentith of Auguſt doctor Watſon chapleine to the biſhop of Wincheſter preached at Pauls croſſe, by the quéenes appointment, & for feare of the like tumult as had béene not long before, certeine lords of the councell repaired to the ſermon, as the lord treaſuror, the lord priuie ſeale, the earle of Bedford, the earle of Penbroke, the lord Wentworth, the lord Rich, and ſir Henrie Gerningam capteine of the gard with two hundred of the gard, which ſtood about the preacher with halberts. Alſo the maior had warned the companies of the citie to be preſent in their liueries, which was well accepted of the quéenes councell: and the ſermon was quietlie ended.

Preacher at Paules croſſe garded.

On the two and twentith of Auguſt Iohn duke of Northumberland was beheaded on the tower hill, whoſe bodie with the head was buried in the tower, by the bodie of Edward late duke of Sumerſet. So that there lieth before the high altar two dukes betwéene two quéenes, to wit, the duke of Summerſet & the duke of Northumberland betwéene quéene Anne and quéene Katharine, all foure beheaded. At the ſame time and place alſo was likewiſe beheaded ſir Iohn Gates, and ſir Thomas Palmer, which ſir Iohn Gates in that place vſed few words, but laid downe his head without anie kercher, and had the ſame ſtriken off at thrée blowes. Sir Thomas Palmer, as ſoone as he came to the ſcaffold, tooke euerie man by the hand, and deſired them to praie for him: then putting off his gowne, he leaned vpon the eaſt raile, and ſaid theſe words in effect.

Sir Iohn Gates and ſir Thomas Palmer beheaded.

The effect of ſuch words as ſir Thomas Palmer vttered on the ſcaffold at his death.

My maiſters (quoth he) God ſaue you all. It is not vnknowne vnto you wherefore I come hither, which I haue worthilie well deſerued at Gods hands: for I know it to be his diuine ordinance, by this meanes to call me to his mercie, and to teach me to know my ſelfe, what I am, and wherevnto we are all ſubiect: I thanke his mercifull goodneſſe, for hée hath cauſed me to learne more in one little darke corner in yonder tower, than euer I learned by anie trauell in ſo manie places as I haue béene. For there (I ſaie) I haue ſéene God, what he is, & how vnſearchable his woonderous works are, & how infinit his mercies be: I haue ſéene there my ſelfe throghlie, and what I am, nothing but a lumpe of ſin, earth, duſt, and of all vileneſſe moſt vileſt: I haue ſéene there and know what the world is, how vaine, deceitfull, tranſitorie, and ſhort it is; how wicked and lothſome the works thereof are in the ſight of Gods maieſtie; how he neither regardeth the manaces of the proud men and mightie ones, neither deſpiſeth the humbleneſſe of the poore & lowlie which are in the ſame world: finallie, I haue ſéene there what death is, how nie hanging ouer all mens heds, and yet how vncerteine the time, and how vnknowne to all men, and how little it is to be feared. And ſhould I feare death or be ſad therefore? Haue I not ſéene two die before mine eies? Yea and within the hearing of mine eares? No, neither the ſprinkling of the bloud, nor the ſheading thereof, nor the bloudie ax it ſelfe ſhall make me afraid. And now taking my leaue of the ſame, I praie you all to praie for me. Come on good fellow (quoth he) art thou he that muſt doo the déed? I forgiue thée with all my hart; & then knéeling downe, & laieng his hed on the blocke, he ſaid; I will ſée how méet the blocke is for my necke, I praie thée ſtrike not yet, for I haue a few praiers to ſaie; and that doone, ſtrike on Gods name, good leaue haue thou.

His praiers ended, and deſiring ech man to praie for him, he laid downe his head againe, and ſo the executioner forthwith tooke it from him at one ſtroke. On the thrée and twentith of Auguſt the quéene deliuered the great ſeale to doctor Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, and made him lord chancellor. The ſeauen and twentith of Auguſt, the ſeruice began in Latine to be ſoong in Pauls church in London. The ſixt and twentith of Auguſt in the euening the notableſt ſhip in England called the great Harrie was burnt at Woolwich by negligence of the mariners, ſhe was of burthen a thouſand tuns. The firſt of September the quéene demanded a preſt of the citie of London of twentie thouſand pounds, to be repaied againe within fouretéene daies after Michaelmaſſe next folowing, which ſum was leuied of the aldermen and one hundred & twentie commoners. The fourth of September was proclamed certeine new coins of gold and ſiluer, a ſouereigne of gold of thirtie ſhillings, the halfe ſouereigns fiftéene ſhillings, an angell at ten ſhillings, the halfe angell fiue ſhillings. Coronation of quéene Marie, hir pompe and traine.

Who rode before and after hir.

The ladie Elizabeth and the ladie Anne of Cleue.

¶ On the ſeuen and twentith of September quéene Marie came to the tower by water, accompanied with the ladie Elizabeth hir ſiſter, and other ladies, before whoſe arriuall there was ſhot a great peale of guns. The laſt of September quéene Marie rode through the citie of London towards Weſtminſter, ſitting in a chariot of cloth of tiſſue, drawne with ſix horſſes all trapped with the like cloth of tiſſue. She ſate in a gowne of purple veluet, furred with powdered ermins, hauing on hir head a kall of cloth of tinſell, béeſet with pearle and ſtone, and aboue the ſame vpon hir head a round circlet of gold, béeſet ſo richlie with pretious ſtones, that the value thereof was ineſtimable, the ſame kall and circle being ſo maſſie and ponderous, that ſhe was faine to beare vp hir head with hir hand, and the canopie was borne ouer hir chariot. Before hir rode a number of gentlemen & knights, then iudges, then doctors, then biſhops, then lords, then the councell, after whome followed the knights of the Bath in their robes, the biſhop of Wincheſter lord chancellor, and the marques of Wincheſter lord high treaſuror, next came the duke of Norffolke, and after him the earle of Oxford, who bare the ſword before hir, the maior of London in a gown of crimſin veluet bare the ſcepter of gold, &c. After the quéenes chariot ſir Edward Haſtings led hir horſſe in his hand: then came another chariot hauing a couering of cloth of ſiluer all white, and ſix horſſes trapped with the like: therein ſate the ladie Elizabeth, and the ladie Anne of Cleue: then ladies and gentlewomen riding on horſſes trapped with red veluet, and their gownes and kirtles likewiſe of red veluet; after them folowed two other chariots couered with red ſattin, and the horſſes betrapped with the ſame, and certeine gentlewomen betwéene euerie of the ſaid chariots riding in crimſin ſattin, their horſſes betrapped with the ſame; the number of the gentlewomen ſo riding were ſix and fortie, beſides them in the chariots.

A pagiant made by ſtrangers.

The conduit in Cornewall ran wine.

At Fanchurch was a coſtlie pageant made by the Genowaies: at Gracechurch corner there was an other pageant made by the Eaſterlings. At the vpper end of Graceſtréet there was an other pageant made by the Florentins verie high, on the top whereof there ſtood foure pictures, and in the middeſt of them and moſt higheſt, there ſtood an angell all in gréene, with a trumpet in his hand: and when the trumpetter (who ſtood ſecretlie in the pageant) did ſound his trumpet, the angell did put his trumpet to his mouth, as though it had béene the ſame that had ſounded, to the great maruelling of manie ignorant perſons: this pageant was made with thrée thorough faires or gates, &c. The conduit in Cornehill ran wine, and beneath the conduit a pageant made at the charges of the citie, and an other at the great conduit in Cheape, and a founteine by it running wine. The ſtandard in Cheape new painted, with the waits of the citie aloft theron plaieng. The croſſe in Cheape new waſhed and burniſhed.

A Dutchman on the weathercocke of Paules.

An other pageant at the little conduit in Cheape next to Paules was made by the citie, where the aldermen ſtood, & when the quéene came againſt them, the recorder made a ſhort propoſition to hir, and then the chamberleine preſented to hir in the name of the maior and the citie, a purſe of cloth of gold, and a thouſand marks of gold in it: then ſhe rode forth, and in Paules church-yard againſt the ſchoole, one maſter Heiwood ſat in a pageant vnder a vine, and made to hir an oration in Latine & Engliſh. Then was there one Peter a Dutchman that ſtood on the weathercocke of Paules ſtéeple, holding a ſtreamer in his hand of fiue yards long, and wauing thereof, ſtood ſometimes on the one foot, and ſhooke the other, and then knéeled on his knées, to the great maruell of all people. He had made two ſcaffolds vnder him, one aboue the croſſe, hauing torches and ſtreamers ſet on it, and an other ouer the ball of the croſſe likewiſe ſet with ſtreamers & torches, which could not burne, the wind was ſo great: the ſaid Peter had ſixtéene pounds thirtéene ſhillings foure penſe giuen him by the citie for his coſts and paines, and for all his ſtuffe.

A pageant wherein the quériſters of Paules plaid on vials.

Quéene Marie crowned quéene by Stephan Gardiner.

Then was there a pageant made againſt the deane of Paules gate, where the quériſters of Paules plaied on vials and ſong. Ludgate was newlie repared, painted, and richlie hanged, with minſtrels plaieng and ſinging there. Then was there an other pageant at the conduit in Fléetſtréet, and the temple barre was newlie painted and hanged. And thus ſhe paſſed to Whitehall at Weſtminſter, where ſhe tooke hir leaue of the lord maior, giuing him great thanks for his pains, and the citie for their coſt. On the morrow, which was the firſt daie of October, the quéene went by water to the old palace, and there remained till about eleuen of the clocke, and then went on foot vpon blew cloth, being railed on either ſide, vnto ſaint Peters church, where ſhe was ſolemnlie crowned and annointed by Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter (for the archbiſhops of Canturburie and Yorke were then priſoners in the tower) which coronation and other ceremonies and ſolemnities then vſed according to the old cuſtome, was not fullie ended till it was nigh foure of the clocke at night that ſhe returned from the church, before whom was then borne thrée ſwords ſheathed, & one naked. The great ſeruice that daie done in Weſtminſter hall at dinner by diuerſe noblemen, would aſke long time to write. The lord maior of London & twelue citizens kept the high cupboord of plate as butlers: and the quéene gaue to the maior for his fée a cupboord of gold with a couer weieng ſeuentéene ounces.]

A pardon with exceptions.

At the time of this quéenes coronation, there was publiſhed a generall pardon in hir name, being interlaced with ſo manie exceptions, as they that néeded the ſame moſt, tooke ſmalleſt benefit thereby. In which were excepted by name no ſmall number, not onelie of biſhops and other of the cleargie, namelie the archbiſhops of Canturburie and Yorke, the biſhop of London, but alſo manie lords, knights, and gentlemen of the laitie, beſide the two chiefe iuſtices of England called ſir Edward Montacute, and ſir Roger Cholmeleie, with ſome other learned men in the law, for counſelling, or at the leaſt conſenting to the depriuation of quéene Marie, and aiding of the foreſaid duke of Northumberland, in the pretenſed right of the before named ladie Iane, the names of which perſons ſo being excepted, I haue omitted for ſhortneſſe ſake.

Commiſſioners.

A parlement.

As ſoone as this pardon was publiſhed, and the ſolemnitie of the feaſt of the coronation ended, there were certeine commiſſioners aſſigned to take order with all ſuch perſons as were excepted out of the pardon, and others, to compound with the quéene for their ſeuerall offenſes. Which commiſſioners ſat at the deane of Paules his houſe, at the weſt end of Paules church, and there called before them the ſaid perſons apart, and from ſome they tooke their fées and offices granted before by king Edward the ſixt, and yet neuertheleſſe putting them to their fines: and ſome they committed to ward, depriuing them of their ſtates and liuings: ſo that for the time, to thoſe that taſted thereof, it ſéemed verie grieuous. God deliuer vs from incurring the like danger of law againe. The fift daie of October next following, the quéene held hir hie court of parlement at Weſtminſter, minſter, which continued vntill the one and twentith daie of the ſaid moneth.

Treaſon. Fellonie. Premunire.

In the firſt ſeſſion of which parlement, there paſſed no more acts but one, and that was, to declare queene Marie lawfull heire in deſcent to the crowne of England by the common lawes, next after hir brother king Edward; and to repeale certeine cauſes of treaſon, fellonie, and premunire, conteined in diuers former ſtatutes: the which act of repeale was, for that cardinall Poole was eſpeciallie looked for (as after ye ſhall heare) for the reducing of the church of England to the popes obedience: and to the end that the ſaid cardinall now called into England from Rome, might hold his courts legantine without the danger of the ſtatutes of the premunire, made in that caſe, whereinto cardinall Wolſeie (when he was legat) had incurred to his no ſmall loſſe, and to the charge of all the clergie of England, for exerciſing the like power: the which act being once paſſed, forthwith the queene repaired to the parlement houſe, and gaue there vnto hir roiall aſſent, and then proroged the parlement vnto the foure and twentith daie of the ſaid moneth. In which ſecond ſeſſion were confirmed and made diuerſe and ſundrie ſtatutes concerning religion, whereof ſome were reſtored, and other repealed.

The parlement proroged.

Sir James Hales in trouble for religion.

Sée before pag.1083.

At this time manie were in trouble for religion, and among others, ſir James Hales knight, one of the iuſtices of the common plées, which iuſtice being called among other by the councell of king Edward to ſubſcribe to a deuiſe made for the diſheriting of quéene Marie, and the ladie Elizabeth hir ſiſter, would in no wiſe aſſent to the ſame, though moſt of the other did: yet that notwithſtanding, for that he at a quarter ſeſſions holden in Kent, gaue charge vpon the ſtatutes of king Henrie the eight, and king Edward the ſixt, in derogation of the primaſie of the church of Rome, aboliſhed by king Henrie the eight, he was firſt committed priſoner to the Kings bench, then to the Counter, & laſt to the Fléet, where, whether it were thorough extreame feare, or elſe by reaſon of ſuch talke as the warden of the Fléet vſed vnto him, of more trouble like to inſue, if he perſiſted in his opinion (or for what other cauſe, God knoweth) he was ſo mooued, troubled, and vexed, that he ſought to rid himſelfe out of this life, which thing he firſt attempted in the Fléet, by wounding himſelfe with a penknife, well néere to death. Neuertheleſſe afterward being recouered of that hurt, he ſéemed to be verie conformable to all the quéenes procéedings, and was therevpon deliuered of his impriſonment, and brought to the quéenes preſence, who gaue him words of great comfort: neuertheleſſe his mind was not quiet (as afterward well appeared) for in the end he drowned himſelfe in a riuer not halfe a mile from his dwelling houſe in Kent, the riuer being ſo ſhalow, that he was faine to lie groueling before he could diſpatch himſelfe, whoſe death was much lamented. For beſide that he was a man wiſe, vertuous, and learned in the lawes of the realme, he was alſo a good and true miniſter of iuſtice, whereby he gat him great fauour and eſtimation among all degrées.

More temptations in afflictions, against which we are to praie for patience.

He drowneth himſelfe.

A publike diſputation about the reall preſence in the ſacrament.

During the aforeſaid parlement, about the eightéenth daie of October, there was kept at Paules church in London a publike diſputation, appointed by the quéenes commandement, about the preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the altar, which diſputation continued ſix daies, doctor Weſton then being prolocutor of the conuocation, who vſed manie vnſéemelie checks & tawnts againſt the one part, to the preiudice of their cauſe. By reaſon whereof the diſputers neuer reſolued vpon the article proponed, but grew dailie more and more into contention, without anie fruit of their long conference, and ſo ended this diſputation, with theſe words ſpoken by doctor Weſton prolocutor: It is not the quéens pleaſure that we ſhould herein ſpend anie longer time, ” and ye are well inough, for you haue the word, and ” we haue the ſword. But of this matter ye maie read more in the booke of the monuments of the church. At this time was cardinall Poole ſent for to Rome by the quéene, who was verie deſirous of his comming, as well for the cauſes before declared, as alſo for the great affection that ſhe had to him, being hir néere kinſman, and conſenting with hir in religion.

John Fox.

Cardinall Poole ſent for home.

This meſſage was moſt thankefullie receiued at Rome, and order taken to ſend the ſaid cardinall thither with great expedition: but before his comming, quéene Marie had married Philip prince of Spaine, as after ſhall appeare. But here to touch ſomewhat the comming of the ſaid cardinall. When he was arriued at Calis, there was conference had amongeſt the councellors of the quéene for the maner of his receiuing: ſome would haue had him verie honourablie met and interteined, as he was in all places where he had before paſſed, not onelie for that he was a cardinall, and a legat from the pope; but alſo for that he was the quéenes néere kinſman, of the houſe of Clarence. Neuertheleſſe, after much debating, it was thought méeteſt, firſt, for that by the lawes of the realme (which yet were not repealed) he ſtood attainted by parlement, and alſo for that it was doubtfull how he being ſent from Rome, ſhould be accepted of the people, who in fiue and twentie yeares before, had not béene much acquainted with the pope or his cardinals, that therefore (vntill all things might be put in order for that purpoſe) he ſhould come without anie great ſolemnitie vnto Lambeth, where (in the archbiſhops houſe) his lodging was prepared.

The councell diuided about the receiuing of the cardinall.

The third of Nouember next following, Thomas Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie (notwithſtanding that he had once refuſed plainelie to ſubſcribe to king Edwards will, in the diſheriting of his ſiſter Marie, and alledging manie reaſons and arguments for the legitimation of both the kings ſiſters) was in the Guildhall in London arreigned and attainted of treaſon, namelie for aiding the duke of Northumberland with horſſe and men againſt the quéene, as aforeſaid. At the ſame time alſo, the ladie Iane of Suffolke (who for a while was called quéene Iane) and the lord Gilford hir huſband, the lord Ambroſe and lord Henrie Dudleie ſonnes to the duke of Northumberland, were likewiſe arreigned and attainted, and therevpon led backe againe to the tower. In the beginning of Ianuarie next following, Charles the fift emperor ſent into England an honorable ambaſſage, amongeſt whome was the Conte de Aiguemont admerall of the low countries, with Charles Conte de la Laing, Iohn de Montmorancie lord of Curriers, and the chancellor Nigre, with full commiſſion to conclude a mariage betwéene Philip prince of Spaine his ſonne & heire, and quéene Marie (as you haue heard) which ambaſſage tooke ſuch place, that ſhortlie after all things were finiſhed accordinglie.

Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie arreigned of treaſon.

Ambaſſadors from the emperour.

¶ On the fouretéenth of Ianuarie, doctor Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter lord chancellour of England, in the chamber of preſence at Weſtminſter, made to the lords, nobilitie, and gentlemen, an oration verie eloquent, wherein he declared that the quéenes maieſtie, partlie for amitie, and other weightie conſiderations had, after much ſute on the emperours and prince of Spaines behalfe made, determined by the conſent of the councell and nobilitie, to match hir ſelfe with the ſaid prince in moſt godlie and lawfull matrimonie; and declared further, that ſhe ſhould haue for hir ioynter thirtie thouſand ducats by the yeare, with all the low countrie of Flanders, and that the iſſue (if there happened anie) betwéene them two lawfullie begotten, ſhould be heire as well to the kingdome of Spaine, as alſo to the ſaid low countrie. He ſaid therefore that they were all bound to thanke God, that ſo noble, worthie, and famous a prince would vouchſafe ſo to humble himſelfe, as in this marriage to take vpon him rather as a ſubiect, than otherwiſe. For the quéene & hir councell ſhould rule all things as ſhe did before, and that there ſhould be of the councell no ſtranger, neither to haue cuſtodie of any forts or caſtels, &c: nor to beare anie rule or office in the quéenes houſe, or elſe-where in all England, with diuerſe other articles there by him rehearſed. Wherefore he ſaid the quéenes pleaſure and requeſt was, that like good ſubiects for hir ſake, they would moſt louinglie receiue him with reuerence, ioie, and honour. On the next daie, the lord maior of London with his bretheren the aldermen, were ſent for to the court, and to bring with them fortie of the head commoners of the citie, vnto whome before the councell, the lord chancellor made the like oration, deſiring them to behaue themſelues like good ſubiects with all humbleneſſe and reioiſing.]

Ab.Fl. ex I.S. pag.1077.

Stephan Gardiner maketh an oration to the lords of the councell &c: touching the quéenes marriage.

Gardiner commendeth the king of Spaine.

But this marriage was not well thought of by the commons, nor much better liked of manie of the nobilitie, who for this, and for the cauſe of religion, conſpired to raiſe war, rather than to ſée ſuch change of the ſtate. Of the which conſpiracie though there were manie confederats; yet the firſt that ſhewed force therein, was one ſir Thomas Wiat a knight in Kent, who in verie déed was driuen to preuent the time of the purpoſed enterpriſe by this hap. Diuerſe of the partakers in this conſpiracie, being withdrawne from London (where they had deuiſed their drift) home into their countries (amongſt whome the ſaid ſir Thomas Wiat was one) it fell out, that whileſt he was returned into Kent, where his lands and liuings chieflie laie, a gentleman of that ſhire, one to the ſaid ſir Thomas Wiat moſt déere, was by the councell for other matters committed to the Fléet. Wherevpon he verelie ſuſpecting his ſecrets were betraied, had no other ſhift (as he tooke it) but to put on armour, and to begin the attempt, before the time appointed with his complices. And herevpon giuing intelligence of his determination to his aſſociats, as well at London, as elſe-where, on the thurſdaie next following, being the fiue and twentith of Ianuarie at Maidſtone, being accompanied with maſter Thomas Iſleie and others, publiſhed a proclamation againſt the quéenes marriage, deſiring all his neighbors, fréends, and Engliſhmen to ioine with him and others, to defend the realme in danger to be brought in thraldome vnto ſtrangers: and herewith he gat him to Rocheſter, and met with ſir George Harper by the waie, that was one appointed afore to ioine with him in that quarrell. They brake vp the bridge at Rocheſter, and fortified the eaſt part of the towne, & ſtaid there abiding the comming of more ſtrength, and in the meane while ſuffered all paſſengers to paſſe quietlie thorough the towne to London, or to the ſea, taking nothing from them, but onelie their weapons.

Wiat publiſheth a proclamation at Maidſtone.

He commeth to Rocheſter.

Sir George Harper.

In the meane while, ſir Henrie Iſleie, Anthonie Kneuet eſquier, and his brother William Kneuet were buſie in weſt Kent to raiſe the people there; and likewiſe in eaſt Kent there were other that were of the ſame confederacie, which ſet forth the like proclamations at Milton, Aſhford, and other towns there in that part of the ſhire: and thus in each part of Kent in a maner was great ſtir. But yet ſuch was the diligence and warie circumſpection of Iohn Twine at that preſent maior of Canturburie, for that he miſliked their diſordered attempts, that there was not any of that citie knowne to ſtir, or go forth to ioine themſelues with the ſaid ſir Thomas Wiat, or with anie other of his confederats: and yet verelie the more part of the people in all other parts of that ſhire were maruellouſlie affected to the ſaid ſir Thomas Wiats quarrell, doubting that which might follow of the quéenes matching hir ſelfe thus with a ſtranger. At Milton when a gentleman of thoſe parts named Chriſtopher Roper, went about to reſiſt them that ſet forth this proclamation, he was taken and conueied to Rocheſter vnto maſter Wiat. Likewiſe maiſter Tucke and maiſter Dorrell iuſtices of peace, were fetched out of their owne houſes, & likewiſe brought to Rocheſter, where they with the ſaid Roper were kept as priſoners.

Chriſtopher Roper taken.

Maiſter Dorrell & maiſter Tucke taken.

Sir Thomas Wiat writeth to ſir Robert Southwell.

Sir Thomas Wiat had written vnto ſir Robert Southwell ſhiriffe of Kent, to moue him in (reſpect of the preſeruation of the common-wealth now in danger to be ouerrun of ſtrangers, through the pretenſed marriage, if it ſhould go forward) to ioine with him and others, in ſo neceſſarie a cauſe for the diſappointing of the ſame marriage, and to worke ſo with the lord of Aburgauennie, with whom he might do much, that it might pleaſe him alſo to ioine with them. But as well the ſaid ſir Robert Southwell, as the ſaid lord of Aburgauennie, and one George Clerke aſſembled themſelues with ſuch power as they might make againſt the ſaid ſir Thomas Wiat and his adherents; and comming to Malling on the ſaturdaie, being the market daie & ſeuen and twentith of Ianuarie, the ſaid ſir Robert Southwell hauing penned an exhortation to diſſuade the people, and to bring them from hauing anie liking to Wiats enterpriſe, did read the ſame openlie vnto all the people there aſſembled, in confuting, reprouing, and refelling the proclamations ſet forth by ſir Thomas Wiat and his adherents.

The ſhiriffe of Kent and the lord of Aburgauennie aſſemble a power againſt Wiat.

On the other part, ſir Henrie Iſleie, Anthonie Kneuet, and his brother William Kneuet being at Tunbridge, proclamed the ſhiriffe, the lord of Aburgauennie, & George Clerke gentleman, traitors to God, the crowne, and the common-welth, for raiſing the quéenes ſubiects, to defend the moſt wicked & diuelliſh enterpriſe of certeine of thẽ wicked & peruerſe councellors. And this they pronounced in their owne names & in the names of ſir Thomas Wiat, ſir George Harper, and of all the faithfull gentlemen of Kent, & truſtie commoners of the ſame. This done, they marched to Seuennocke, mening from thence to paſſe to Rocheſter. But in the meane time the foreſaid 27 of Ianuarie, there came from the quéene an herald & a trumpetter to ſir Thomas Wiat, but he was not ſuffered to paſſe the bridge, and ſo did his meſſage at the bridge end, in the hearing of ſir Thomas Wiat and diuerſe others. The effect of his meſſage was, to offer pardon to ſo manie as within foure and twentie houres would depart to their houſes, and become quiet ſubiects.

An herald ſent to Wiat.

Sir Thomas Cheineie lord warden ſent alſo vnto Wiat, with words of contempt and defiance, deſirous in déed to haue béene dooing with him, if hée had not miſtruſted his owne people, which he ſhould haue brought againſt him, as thoſe that fauoured ſo greatlie Wiats cauſe, that they would haue béene loth to haue ſéene him take anie foile. And that ſir Thomas Wiat knew well inough, and therefore deſired nothing more than to haue him come forth, vnderſtanding that he wanted no friends, as well about him, as all other that would take in hand to repreſſe him with force gathered in that ſhire. The lord of Aburgauennie, the ſhiriffe Warram Sentleger, and diuerſe other gentlemen that were aſſembled at Malling, laie there within foure miles of Rocheſter on ſaturdaie at night, & hauing aduertiſement that ſir Henrie Iſleie, the two Kneuets, and certeine other, with fiue hundred Weldiſhmen, being at Seuennocke, meant earlie in the morning to march towards Rocheſter for the aid of Wiat againſt the duke of Norffolke, that was come to Grauesend with fiue hundred white cotes Londoners, and certeine of the gard: and further that the ſaid ſir Henrie Iſleie and the Kneuets meant in their waie to burne and ſpoile the houſe of George Clerke gentleman: they departing with fiue hundred gentlemen & likewiſe yeomen, verie earlie that ſundaie in the morning, marched out in order till they came to Wrotham heath, where they might eaſilie heare the ſound of their aduerſaries drums, and thereupon followed after them with all ſpéed, till they came to a place called Barrow gréene, through which laie the right readie waie from Seuennocke towards maiſter Clerks houſe. Here the lord of Aburgauennie ſtaied for the comming of his enimies, and vnderſtanding they were at hand, placed his men in order, thinking to giue or take the ouerthrow. But they vpon their approch, miſliking (as it ſhould ſéeme) thẽ match, ſhranke aſide as ſecretlie as they could, by a bywaie, and were ſo farre gone before the lord of Aburgauennie vnderſtood thereof by his eſpials, as for doubt of ouertaking them afore their comming to Rocheſter, he was driuen to make ſuch haſt for the ouertaking of them, as diuerſe of his footmen were farre behind at the onſet giuing.

Wrotham heath.

Barrow gréene.

The firſt ſight that the lord of Aburgauennie could haue of them, after they forſooke their purpoſed waie, was as they aſcended Wrotham hill, directlie vnder Yallam maiſter Pechams houſe, where they thinking to haue great aduantage by the winning of the hill, diſplaied their enſignes, thinking they had béene out of danger. But the Lord of Aburgauennie made ſuch haſt after them, that ouertaking them at a field in the pariſh of Wrotham, a mile diſtant from the verie top of the hill, called Blacke ſoll field, after ſome reſiſtance with ſhot and arrowes, and proffer of onſet made by their horſſemen, they were put to flight, and chaſed for the ſpace of foure miles, euen to Hartleie wood. Thréeſcore of them were taken priſoners, and ſome on both ſides were wounded, as commonlie commeth to paſſe in an ordinarie and priuat fraie: how then is it poſſible, that a ſkirmiſh ſhould be vnſeaſoned with ſlaughter and bloudſhed, ſpeciallie in a ſedition or inſurrection, which is the plague of all common-wealths, as the poet ſaith:

The ſkirmiſh.

Sir Henrie Iſleie fled into Hampſhire, Anthonie Kneuet made ſuch ſhift, that he got that night vnto Rocheſter; and the ſame time ſir George Harper departing from ſir Thomas Wiat, and comming to the duke of Norffolke, ſubmitted himſelfe vnto his grace, & the duke receiued him. Which duke (as before ye haue partlie heard) being ſent with fiue hundred Londoners, and certeine of the gard for his better defenſe, to go againſt the Kentiſhmen thus aſſembled with ſir Thomas Wiat, was come downe to Grauesend, ſet forth from thence on mondaie the nine and twentith daie of Ianuarie, about ten of the clocke in the forenoone, marching towards Stroud on this ſide of Rocheſter, & about foure of the clocke in the after noone of the ſame daie, he arriued at Stroud neare vnto Rocheſter, hauing with him ſir Henrie Jerningham capteine of the gard, ſir Edward Braie, ſir Iohn Fog, knights, Iohn Couert, Roger Appleton, eſquiers, Maurice Griffith the biſhop of Rocheſter, Thomas Swan gentleman, with certeine of the gard, and others, to the number of two hundred or thereabout, beſides Bret and other fiue capteins, who with their bands taried behind at ſpittle hill néere vnto Stroud, whileſt the duke went to Stroud to ſée the placing of the ordinance, which being readie charged & bent vnto the towne of Rocheſter, and perceiuing by ſir Thomas Wiat and his men by hanging out their enſignes, little to regard him, the duke commanded one of the péeces to be fired and ſhot off into Rocheſter, and as the gunner was firing the péece, ſir Edward Braies eldeſt ſon came in all haſt to the duke, and told him how the Londoners would betraie him.

The duke of Norffolke arriueth at Stroud.

Herewith turning backe, he might behold how Bret, and the other capteins of the white cotes with their bands being vpon the hill, and at his backe, made great and lowd ſhouts ſundrie times, crieng, We are all Engliſhmen, we are all Engliſhmen: faſhioning themſelues in araie, readie bent with their their weapons to ſet vpon the duke, if he had made anie reſiſtance: wherevpon the duke willed the péeces that were bent againſt Rocheſter, to be turned vpon Bret and his fellowes. But vpon further conſideration the ſhot was ſpared, and the dukes grace, with the capteine of the gard, conſidering with wofull hearts their chiefe ſtrength thus turned againſt them; and being thus inuironed both behind and before with enimies, ſhifted themſelues awaie, as did alſo their companie. Sir Thomas Wiat accompanied with two or thrée, and not manie mo, came forth halfe a mile from Rocheſter, to méet Bret and the other capteins, amongſt whom was ſir George Harper, notwithſtanding his former ſubmiſſion to the duke. Their méeting verelie ſéemed right ioifull both in geſture and countenance, & therewith hauing ſaluted each other, they entered all togither into Rocheſter. The lord of Aburgauennie & the ſhiriffe were greatlie abaſhed when they vnderſtood of this miſhap, for they doubted that ſuch as were euill diſpoſed before, would not be greatlie amended thereby. The ſhiriffe being then at Maidſtone, haſted to come to Malling, where the lord of Aburgauennie laie, and vpon his comming thither, he tooke aduiſe to ride in poſt to the councell, to know their minds how they would direct them. Sir Thomas Wiat and his aſſociats were greatlie recomforted with this new ſupplie added to their ſtrength, by the reuolting thus of the Londoners: and verelie it bred no ſmall hope in all their hearts that wiſhed well to his enterpriſe, that he ſhould the better atteine vnto the hoped end of his purpoſe. But it pleaſed God otherwiſe, who neuer proſpereth anie that attempt ſuch exploits without publike and lawfull authoritie.

The duke with the capteine of the gard, &c: put to their ſhifts.

The ſhiriffe of Kent rideth to the councell.

In this meane while, the duke of Suffolke being perſuaded to ioine with other in this quarell, as he that doubted (as no ſmall number of true Engliſhmen then did) leaſt the pretended mariage with the Spaniſh king ſhould bring the whole nobilitie and people of this realme into bondage and thraldome of ſtrangers, after he was once aduertiſed that ſir Thomas Wiat had preuented the time of their purpoſed enterpriſe, he ſecretlie one euening departed from Shéene, and rode with all ſpéed into Leiceſterſhire, where in the towne of Leiceſter and other places, hée cauſed proclamation to be made in ſemblable wiſe, as ſir Thomas Wiat had done, againſt the quéenes match which ſhe meant to make with the ſaid king of Spaine: but few there were that would willinglie hearken thereto. But now ye muſt vnderſtand, that before his comming downe, he was perſuaded that the citie of Couentrie would be opened vnto him, the more part of the citizens being throughlie bent in his fauour, in ſo neceſſarie a quarell, for defenſe of the realme againſt ſtrangers, as they were then perſuaded.

The duke of Suffolke goeth downe into Leiceſterſhire.

The citie of Couentrie.

But howſoeuer it chanced, this prooued not altogither true: for whether through the miſliking which the citizens had of the matter, or through negligence of ſome that were ſent to ſollicit them in the cauſe, or chieflie (as ſhould ſéeme to be moſt true) for that God would haue it ſo, when the duke came with ſix or ſeuen ſcore horſſemen well appointed for the purpoſe, preſenting himſelfe before the citie in hope to bée receiued, hée was kept out. For the citizens through comfort of the erle of Huntington that was then come downe, ſent by the quéene to ſtaie the countries from falling to the duke, and to raiſe a power to apprehend him, had put themſelues in armor, and made all the prouiſion they could to defend the citie againſt the ſaid duke. Wherevpon perceiuing himſelfe deſtitute of all ſuch aid as he looked for among his friends in the two ſhires of Leiceſter and Warwike, he got him to his manour of Aſtleie, diſtant from Couentrie fiue miles, where appointing his companie to diſperſe themſelues, and to make the beſt ſhift each one for his owne ſafegard that he might, and diſtributing to euerie of them a portion of monie, according to their qualities, and his ſtore at that preſent, he and the lord Iohn Greie his brother beſtowed themſelues in ſecret places there within Aſtleie parke; but through the vntruſtineſſe of them, to whoſe truſt they did commit themſelues (as hath béene crediblie reported) they were betraied to the earle of Huntington, that then was come to Couentrie, and ſo apprehended they were by the ſaid earle, and afterwards brought vp to London.

The duke of Suffolke kept out of Couentrie.

The duke of Suffolke apprehended.

The duke had meant at firſt to haue rid awaie (as I haue crediblie heard) if promiſe had béene kept by one of his ſeruants, appointed to come to him to be his guide; but when he either feining himſelfe ſicke, or being ſicke in déed, came not, the duke was conſtreined to remaine in the parke there at Aſtleie, hoping yet to get awaie after that the ſearch had béene paſſed ouer, and the countrie once in quiet. Howſoeuer it was, there he was taken, as is ſaid, togither with his brother the lord Iohn Greie; but his brother the lord Thomas got awaie in deed at that time, meaning to haue fled into Wales, & there to haue got to the ſea ſide, ſo to tranſport himſelfe ouer into France, or into ſome other forren part. But in the borders of Wales he was likewiſe apprehended through his great miſhap, and follie of his man that had forgot his capcaſe with monie behind him in his chamber one morning at his inne; and comming for it againe, vpon examination what he ſhould be, it was miſtruſted that his maiſter ſhould be ſome ſuch man, as he was in déed, and ſo was ſtaied, taken, and brought vp to London, where he ſuffered; as after ſhall appeare.

The lord Iohn Greie taken.

The lord Thomas Greie taken.

But now to returne vnto ſir Thomas Wiat. After that the Londoners were reuolted to him, as before ye haue heard; the next daie being tueſdaie the thirtith of Ianuarie, he marched forth with his bands, and ſix péeces of ordinance (which they had gotten of the quéenes) beſides their owne. And firſt they came to Cowling caſtell, an hold of the lord Cobhams, foure miles diſtant from Rocheſter, and not much out of the waie towards London, whither they were now fullie determined to go, in hope of friends which they truſted to find within and about the citie. At their comming to Cowling, knowing that the lord Cobham was within the caſtell, they bent their ordinance againſt the gate, breaking it with ſundrie ſhots, and burning it vp with fier, made a waie through it. The ſaid lord Cobham defended the place as ſtoutlie as he might, hauing but a few againſt ſo great a number, and ſo little ſtore of munition for his defenſe: he himſelfe yet diſcharged his gun at ſuch as approched the gate right hardilie, and in that aſſault two of his men were ſlaine. After this aſſault, and talke had with the lord Cobham, ſir Thomas Wiat marched to Graueſend, where he reſted that night.

Cowling caſtell.

The lord Cobham.

The next daie he came to Dartford with his bands, and laie there that night, whither came to him ſir Edward Haſtings maiſter of the quéenes horſſe, and ſir Thomas Cornwallis knights, both being of the quéenes priuie councell, and now ſent from hir vnto ſir Thomas Wiat, to vnderſtand the cauſe of his commotion. When he vnderſtood they were come, he tooke with him certeine of his band to the weſt end of the towne, where he had lodged his ordinance. And at the lighting downe of ſir Edward Haſtings and his aſſociat, ſir Thomas Wiat hauing a partiſan in his hand, aduancing himſelfe ſomewhat afore ſuch gentlemen as were with him, traced néere them:

to whome the maiſter of the horſſe ſpake in ſubſtance as followeth. The quéenes maieſtie requireth to vnderſtand the verie cauſe wherefore you haue thus gathered togither in armes hir liege people, which is the part of a traitor, and yet in your proclamations and perſuaſions, you call your ſelfe a true ſubiect, which can not ſtand togither. I am no traitor quoth Wiat, and the cauſe wherefore I haue gathered the people, is to defend the realme from danger of being ouerrun with ſtrangers, which muſt follow, this mariage taking place.

Wiats requeſts.

Why, quoth the quéenes agents, there be no ſtrangers yet come, who either for power or number ye néed to ſuſpect. But if this be your onelie quarrell, becauſe ye miſlike the mariage; will ye come to communication touching that caſe, and the quéene of hir gratious goodneſſe is content ye ſhall be heard. I yéeld thereto, quoth ſir Thomas Wiat: but for my ſuertie I will rather be truſted than truſt, and therefore demanded, as ſome haue written, the cuſtodie of the tower, and hir grace within it; alſo the diſplacing of ſome councellors about hir, and to haue other placed in their roomes. There was long & ſtout conference betwéene them, in ſo much that the maiſter of the horſſe ſaid: Wiat, before thou ſhalt haue thy traitorous demand granted, thou ſhalt die, and twentie thouſand with thée. And ſo the ſaid maiſter of the horſſe, and ſir Thomas Cornewallis, perceiuing they could not bring him to that point they wiſhed, returned to the court, aduertiſing the quéene what they had heard of him. The ſame daie being the firſt of Februarie, proclamation was made in London by an herald, to ſignifie that the duke of Suffolkes companie of horſſemen were ſcattered, and that he himſelfe and his brethren were fled. Alſo that ſir Peter Carew, and ſir Gawen Carew knights, and William Gibs eſquire, which being parties to the conſpiracie of the ſaid duke, with ſir Thomas Wiat & others, were likewiſe fled. True it was that ſir Peter Carew, perceiuing himſelfe in danger to be apprehended, about the thrée and twentith of Ianuarie laſt paſt fled out of the realme, and eſcaped into France: but the other taried behind and were taken.

Proclamation that the duke of Suffolke and others were fled.

The emperors ambaſſadors flée from Wiat.

Moreouer, on this firſt daie of Februarie being Candlemas euen, the emperors ambaſſadors, of whome ye haue heard before, hearing of Wiats haſtie approching thus towards London, ſped themſelues awaie by water, and that with all haſt. The quéene then lieng at hir palace of White hall beſide Weſtminſter, and hearing of hir enimies ſo néere, was counſelled for hir ſafegard to take the tower of London, whereunto ſhe would by no meanes be perſuaded. Neuertheleſſe, to make hir ſelfe more ſtronger of friends in the citie, ſo ſoone as the ſaid ambaſſadors were departed, ſhe came to the Guildhall in London: againſt which time, order was taken by the lord maior, that the chiefe citizens in their liueries ſhould be there preſent. After that the quéene had taken hir place in the ſaid hall, and ſilence made, ſhe with verie good countenance vttered in effect this oration following.

Quéene Maries oration to the Londoners.

I Am (quoth ſhée) come vnto you in mine owne perſon, to tell you that which alreadie you doo ſée and know, that is, how traitorouſlie & ſeditiouſlie a number of Kentiſh rebels haue aſſembled themſelues togither againſt both vs and you. Their pretenſe (as they ſaid at the firſt) was onelie to reſiſt a mariage determined betwéene vs and the prince of Spaine. To the which pretended quarrell, and to all the reſt of their euill contriued articles ye haue béene made priuie. Since which time, we haue cauſed diuerſe of our priuie councell to reſort eftſoones to the ſaid rebels, and to demand of them the cauſe of their continuance in their ſeditious enterpriſe. By whoſe anſwers made againe to our ſaid councell, it appeared that the mariage is found to be the leaſt of their quarrell. For they now ſwaruing from their former articles, haue bewraied the inward treaſon of their hearts, as moſt arrogantlie demanding the poſſeſſion of our perſon, the kéeping of our tower, and not onelie the placing & diſplacing of our councellors; but alſo to vſe them & vs at their pleaſures.

Demands are pretended to be ſent from M. Wiat and his companie to quéene Marie.

Now louing ſubiects, what I am, you right well know. I am your quéene, to whome at my coronation when I was wedded to the realme, and to the lawes of the ſame (the ſpouſall ring whereof I haue on my finger, which neuer hitherto was, nor hereafter ſhall be left off) ye promiſed your allegiance and obedience vnto me. And that I am the right and true inheritor to the crowne of this realme of England; I not onelie take all chriſtendome to witneſſe, but alſo your acts of parlement confirming the ſame. My father (as ye all know) poſſeſſed the regall eſtate by right of inheritance, which now by the ſame right deſcended vnto me. And to him alwaies ye ſhewed your ſelues moſt faithfull and louing ſubiects, and him obeied and ſerued as your liege lord & king: and therefore I doubt not but you will ſhew your ſelues likewiſe to me his daughter. Which if you doo, then maie you not ſuffer anie rebell to vſurpe the gouernance of our perſon, or to occupie our eſtate, eſpeciallie being ſo preſumptuous a traitor as this Wiat hath ſhewed himſelfe to be; who muſt certeinlie, as he hath abuſed my ignorant ſubiects to be adherents to his traitorous quarrell: ſo dooth he intend by colour of the ſame, to ſubdue the lawes to his will, and to giue ſcope to the raſcall and forlorne perſons, to make generall hauocke and ſpoile of your goods. And this further I ſay vnto you in the word of a prince, I cannot tell how naturallie a mother loueth hir children, for I was neuer the mother of anie; but certeinlie a prince and gouernor may as naturallie and as earneſtlie loue ſubiects, as the mother dooth hir child. Then aſſure your ſelues, that I being your ſoueraigne ladie & quéene, doo as earneſtlie and as tenderlie loue and fauour you. And I thus louing you, cannot but thinke that ye as hartilie and faithfullie loue me againe: and ſo louing togither in this knot of loue and concord, I doubt not, but we togither ſhall be able to giue theſe rebels a ſhort and ſpéedie ouerthrow.

How he pretended the ſpoile of their goods it appeareth in that he comming to Southworke, did hurt neither man, woman, nor child, neither in bodie nor in a pennie of their goods.

And as concerning the caſe of my intended marriage, againſt which they pretend their quarrell, ye ſhall vnderſtand that I entred not into the treatie thereof without aduiſe of all our priuie councell; yea, and by aſſent of thoſe to whome the king my father committed his truſt, who ſo conſidered & weighed the great commodities that might inſue thereof, that they not onlie thought it very honorable, but expedient, both for the wealth of our realme, and alſo of all our louing ſubiects. And as touching my ſelfe (I aſſure you) I am not ſo deſirous of wedding, neither ſo preciſe or wedded to my will, that either for mine owne pleaſure I will chooſe where I luſt, or elſe ſo amorous as néeds I muſt haue one. For God I thanke him (to whome be the praiſe thereof) I haue hitherto liued a virgine, and doubting nothing but with Gods grace ſhall as well be able ſo to liue ſtill. But if as my progenitors haue done before, it might pleaſe God that I might leaue ſome fruit of my bodie behind me to be your gouernour, I truſt you would not onelie reioiſe thereat, but alſo I know it would be to your great comfort. And certeinlie if I either did know or thinke, that this marriage ſhould either turne to the danger or loſſe of anie of you my louing ſubiects, or to the detriment or impairing of anie part or parcell of the roiall eſtate of this realme of England, I would neuer conſent therevnto, neither would I euer marrie while I liued. And in the word of a quéene I promiſe and aſſure you, that if it ſhall not probablie appéere before the nobilitie and commons in the high court of parlement, that this marriage ſhall be for the ſingular benefit and commoditie of all the whole realme; that then I will abſteine, not onelie from this marriage, but alſo from anie other, whereof perill maie inſue to this moſt noble realme. Wherefore now as good & faithfull ſubiects plucke vp your harts, and like true men ſtand faſt with your lawfull prince againſt theſe rebelles, both our enimies and yours, and feare them not: for aſſure you that I feare them nothing at all, & I will leaue with you my lord Howard, and my lord treaſuror to be your aſſiſtants, with my lord maior, for the defenſe and ſafegard of this citie from ſpoile and ſaccage, which is onelie the ſcope of this rebellious companie.

Quéene Marie excuſeth hir mariage.

The promiſe of quéene Marie touching hir marriage.

Wiat marched to Detford ſtrand.

After this oration ended, the citizens ſéeming well ſatiſfied therewith, the quéene with the lords of the councell returned to White hall from whence ſhe came: and forthwith the lord William Howard was aſſociate with the lord maior of London, whoſe name was ſir Thomas White for the protection and defenſe of the citie. And for more ſuertie, as well of hir owne perſon, as alſo of hir councellors and other ſubiects, ſhe prepared a great armie to méet with the ſaid rebelles in the field, of which armie William Herbert earle of Penbroke was made generall, which earle with all ſpéed requiſite in ſuch a caſe, prepared all things neceſſarie to ſuch a ſeruice belonging. The ſame daie ſir Thomas Wiat hauing with him fouretéene enſignes, conteining about foure thouſand men, although they were accounted to be a farre greater number, marched to Detford ſtrand, eight miles from Detford, and within foure miles of London; where vpon ſuch aduertiſement as he receiued by ſpiall, of the quéens being in the Guildhall, & the order of the people to hir wards, he remained that night & the next whole daie; diuerſe of his owne companie doubting by his longer tarrieng there than in other places, and vpon other preſumptions which they gathered, that he would haue paſſed the water into Eſſex.

Wiat ſuffereth his priſoners to go abrode vpon their word.

Wiat cōmeth into Southworke.

His priſoners Chriſtopher Roper, George Dorrell, and Iohn Tucke eſquiers, who were kept ſomewhat ſtrict, for that they ſéemed ſicklie, and finding within the towne no conuenient harborough or attendance, were licenced by ſir Thomas Wiat, vpon promiſe of their worſhips to be true priſoners, to prouide for themſelues out from the towne, where they beſt might. But they breaking promiſe with him, ſought waies to eſcape and come no more at him. On ſaturdaie following verie earlie Wiat marched to Southworke, where approching the gate at London bridge foot, he called to them within to haue it opened: which he found not ſo readie as he looked for. After he had béene a little while in Southworke, and began to trench at the bridge foot, and ſet two péeces of ordinance againſt the gate, diuerſe of his ſoldiors went to Wincheſter place, where one of them (being a gentleman) began to fall to rifling of things found in the houſe. Wherewith ſir Thomas Wiat ſéemed ſo much offended, that he threatned ſore to hang him euen preſentlie there vpon the wharfe, and ſo as he made others to beléeue he meant to haue doone, if capteine Bret and others had not intreated for him.

Sir Thomas Wiats deſperat attempt.

The lord William Howard lord admerall of England, being appointed by the quéens commiſſion capteine generall, with the lord maior ſir Thomas White, watched at the bridge that night with thrée hundred men, cauſed the draw bridge to be hewen downe into the Thames, made rampiers and fortifications there, fenſing the ſame with great ordinance. Wiat yet aduentured the breaking downe of a wall out of an houſe ioining to the gate at the bridge foot, whereby he might enter into the leads ouer the gate, & came downe into the lodge about eleuen of the clocke in the night, where he found the porter in a ſlumber, and his wife with other waking, and watching ouer a cole; but beholding Wiat, they began ſuddenlie to ſtart as greatlie amazed. Whiſt quoth Wiat, as you loue your liues ſit ſtill, you ſhall haue no hurt. Glad were they of that warrant, and ſo were quiet, and made no noiſe. Wiat and a few with him went forth as farre as the draw bridge: on the other ſide whereof he ſaw the lord admerall, the lord maior, ſir Andrew Iud, and one or two others in conſultation for ordering of the bridge, wherevnto he gaue diligent héed and eare a good while, and was not ſéene.

Wiat and his complices fall into conſultation.

This doone, he returned and ſaid to ſome of his companie; This place ſirs is too hot for vs. And herevpon falling in counſell what was beſt to doo: ſome gaue aduiſe that it ſhould be good to returne to Gréenewich, and ſo to paſſe the water into Eſſex, whereby their companie (as they thought) ſhould increaſe, and then aſſaie to enter into London by Aldgate: and ſome were of opinion, that it were better to go to Kingſton vpon Thames, and ſo further weſt. Other there were, among which ſir Thomas Wiat himſelfe was chiefe, would haue returned into Kent to méet with the lord of Aburgauenie, the lord Warden, the ſhiriffe, ſir Thomas Moile, ſir Thomas Kempe, ſir Thomas Finch, and others that were at Rocheſter, comming on Wiats backe, with a great companie well appointed, perſuading himſelfe (whether truelie or not I know not) that he ſhould find among them more friends than enimies. But whether his deſire to returne into Kent grew vpon hope he had to find aid there, or rather to ſhift himſelfe awaie, it was doubted of his owne companie; and ſome of them that knew him well (except they were much deceiued) reported not long before their execution, that his deſire to returne into Kent, was onelie to ſhift himſelfe ouer the ſea.

The lord warden of the cinque ports being willing to followe after Wiat.

Wiat at his wits end.

The lord Warden being at Rocheſter (as yée haue heard) well furniſhed both with horſſe and men, perfectlie appointed to no ſmall number, was willing to haue followed after Wiat, and to haue ſhewed his good will againſt him in the quéens quarrell: but yet vpon deliberation had, & aduiſe taken with others that were there with him, he thought good firſt to vnderſtand the quéenes pleaſure how to procéed in his dealings; and héervpon he rode poſt to the quéene himſelfe, leauing the lord of Aburgauennie and the reſt of the gentlemen with his and their bands behind till his returne. On ſundaie the fourth of Februarie, the lord admerall cauſed a ſtrong ward of thrée hundred men to be kept on the bridge till eight of the clocke at night, and then (for their reléefe) entred the watch of other thrée hundred: ſo that the bridge was thus garded both daie and night with thrée hundred men in armor. It troubled Wiat and all his companie verie ſore, to ſée that London did ſo ſtiffelie ſtand and hold out againſt them: for in the aſſiſtance which they looked to haue had of that citie, all their hope of proſperous ſpéed conſiſted. But now that they ſaw themſelues greatlie diſappointed therein, they meant yet to ſet all on a hazard. And ſo the ſixt of Februarie being Shrouetueſdaie, afore ſix of the clocke in the morning, they departed out of Southworke, marching directlie towards Kingſtone ten miles diſtant from London, ſtanding vpon the Thames, where they arriued about foure of the clocke in the after noone: and finding thirtie foot or thereabout of the bridge taken awaie, ſauing the poſts that were left ſtanding; Wiat practiſed with two mariners to ſwim ouer, and to conueie a barge to him, which the mariners through great promiſes of preferment accordinglie did, wherein Wiat and certeine with him were conueied ouer: who in the meane time that the number of ſoldiors baited in the towne, cauſed the bridge to be repared with ladders, planks and beames, the ſame being tied togither with ropes and boords, ſo as by ten of the clocke in the night it was in ſuch plight, that both his ordinance and companies of men might paſſe ouer without perill. And ſo about eleuen of the clocke in the ſame night, Wiat with his armie paſſing ouer the bridge without either reſiſtance or perill, & before it could be once knowne at the court, marched toward London, meaning (as ſome haue written) to haue bin at the court gate before daie that morning. Neuertheles, before he came within ſix miles of the citie ſtaieng for a péece of his great artillerie which was diſmounted by the waie, his comming was diſcouered before daie: wherby the erle of Penbroke generall of the quéenes armie was with his men in good order of battell in S. Iames field beſide Weſtminſter, two or thrée houres yer Wiat could rech thither.

The earle of [illegible]

The earle hauing vnderſtanding by his eſpials, what waie Wiat would march, placed his armie in this order. Firſt, in a field on the weſt ſide of ſaint Iames were all his men of armes, and demilances; ouer againſt whome in the lane next to the parke, were placed all the light horſſemen. All which bands of horſſemen were vnder the charge of the lord Clinton, being marſhall of the field. The great artillerie was planted in the middeſt and higheſt place of the cauſeie next to the houſe of ſaint Iames, with certeine field péeces lieng on the flanks of ech battell. After that both the armies were in ſight, and that the great artillerie began to thunder from either ſide without harme (as it happened to either of both) Wiat perceiuing that he could not come vp the fore right waie without great diſaduantage, when he was come to the parke corner, he leauing the cauſeie, ſwarued, and tooke the nether waie towards ſaint Iames. Which being perceiued by the quéenes horſſemen, who laie on either ſide of him, they gaue a ſudden charge, and diuided his battell aſunder hard behind Wiats enſignes, whereby ſo manie as were not paſſed before with Wiat, were forced to flie backe towards Brainford: and certeine of his companie which eſcaped the charge, paſſed by the backeſide of ſaint Iames towards Weſtminſter, and from thenſe to the court: and finding the gates ſhut againſt them, ſtaid there a while, and ſhot off manie arrowes into the windowes, and ouer into the garden, neuertheleſſe without anie hurt there that was knowne. Wherevpon the ſaid rebels, ouer whom one Kneuet was capteine, perceiuing themſelues to be too few to doo anie great feat there, departed from thenſe to follow Wiat, who was gone before toward London: and being on their waie at Charingcroſſe, were there incountered by ſir Henrie Ierningham capteine of the quéenes gard, ſir Edward Braie maſter of the ordinance, and ſir Philip Paris knights, which were ſent by the order of the earle of Penbroke with a band of archers, and certeine field péeces for the reſcue of the court, who incountered the ſaid rebels at Charingcroſſe aforeſaid, after they had diſchaged their field péeces vpon them, ioined with thoſe rebels, halfe armed, and halfe vnarmed, at the puſh of the pike, & verie ſoone diſperſed their power; whereof ſome fled into the lane toward ſaint Giles, & ſome on the other ſide by a brewhouſe towards the Thames. In this conflict, which was the chiefe triall of that daie, there was not found ſlaine to the number of twentie of thoſe rebels. Which happened by reaſon that vpon their ioining with the quéens ſoldiors, the one part could not be diſcerned from the other, but onelie by the mire and durt taken by the waie, which ſtacke vpon their garments comming in the night: wherefore the crie on the quéenes part that daie was; Downe with the daggle tailes.

But now to returne to Wiat, of whome ye heard before, who being come to the parke corner, and perceiuing the perill apparant, if he ſhould haue marched ſtraight vpon the earls battels, which were ranged on either ſide of the cauſeie, did therefore politikelie turne from the great cauſeie, marching along the wall of the houſe of ſaint Iames towards London: which could not haue béene without his no little loſſe of manie of his traine, if thoſe that had the charge on that ſide the field, had béene as forward in ſeruice as the earle with his battell, and the horſſemen before ſhewed themſelues to be. Neuertheleſſe Wiat following his purpoſed enterpriſe, which was to haue entered into London, where he hoped of great aid, marched on with the ſmall companie that was left him, as far as a common inne called the Bell ſauage, néere to Ludgate, beléeuing to haue found ſome readie there to haue receiued him; wherin his hope was much deceiued, finding the ſaid gate faſt ſhut, and ſtronglie garded with a number as well of moſt honeſt citizens, as alſo of other bands of the quéenes aſſured friends. Wherevpon Wiat, who comming towards the citie, made himſelfe ſure of his enterpriſe, now deſperat of the ſame, was faine to turne his face, retiring backe againe to Temple-barre, where he with the reſt of his retinue determined (as it ſéemed) to trie their laſt fortune.

Wiat marcheth alongſt the wall of ſaint Iames towards London.

The earle of Penbroke (who all this while kept his force togither in the field) hearing of Wiats approch to London, ſent to him an herald called Clarenceaux, with great communication to deſiſt from his rebellious enterpriſe. Which herald did his meſſage accordinglie, albeit that ſome ſaid he promiſed the ſaid Wiat his pardon: which ſhould not ſéeme to be true, as well for that the herald had no ſuch commiſſion, as alſo that it was not like, that the ſaid Wiat being then diſarmed of all his forces, would haue refuſed mercie in ſuch a caſe. For true it is, that he with a verie few of his forlorne fellowſhip, not manie aboue the number of one hundred perſons, ſtood ſtill as men amazed at the gate of the Temple-barre, till ſuch time as ſir Maurice Barkleie knight, by chance riding towards London vpon his horſſe, with footcloth, without anie armour, finding the ſaid Wiat there, perſuaded him to repaire to the court, and to yéeld himſelfe to the quéene. Whoſe aduiſe he followed, and incontinent mounted vp on the ſaid ſir Maurice horſſe behind him, and ſo road to the court voluntarilie to yéeld himſelfe priſoner.

An herald ſent to Wiat willing him to deſiſt from his enterpriſe.

Sir Thomas Wiat ſubmitteth himſelfe to the quéene.

This comming of Wiat to the court being ſo little looked for, was great cauſe of reioiſing to ſuch as of late before ſtood in great feare of him. But more than maruell it was to ſée that daie, the inuincible heart and conſtancie of the quéene hir ſelfe, who being by nature a woman, and therefore commonlie more fearefull than men be, ſhewed hir ſelfe in that caſe more ſtout than is credible. For ſhe, notwithſtanding all the fearefull newes that were brought to hir that daie, neuer abaſhed. Inſomuch that when one or two noblemen being hir capteins, The ſtout courage of quéene Marie.

came in all haſt to tell hir (though vntrulie) that hir battels were yéelded to Wiat. She nothing mooued thereat, ſaid it was their fond opinion that durſt not come néere to ſée the triall, ſaieng further, that ſhe hir ſelfe would enter the field to trie the truth of hir quarrell, and to die with them that would ſerue hir, rather than to yéeld one iot vnto ſuch a traitor as Wiat was, and prepared hir ſelfe accordinglie.

Proclamation that none ſhould kéepe in his houſe anie of Wiats faction.

But by the apprehenſion of Wiat that voiage tooke none effect: for after his comming to the court he was immediatlie committed to the Tower. As ſoone as the taking of Wiat was knowne, the armie (whereof mention is made before that laie in ſaint Iames field) was diſcharged, and euerie man licenced to depart to his home. And foorthwith proclamation was made, as well in the citie of London as in the ſuburbs of the ſame, that none vpon paine of death ſhould kéepe in his or their houſes anie of Wiats faction; but ſhould bring them foorth immediatlie before the lord maior, and other the quéenes iuſtices. By reaſon of which proclamation a great multitude of their ſaid poore caitifs were brought foorth, being ſo manie in number, that all the priſons in London ſufficed not to receiue them: ſo that for lacke of place they were faine to beſtow them in diuerſe churches of the ſaid citie. And ſhortlie after were ſet vp in London for a terrour to the common ſort (bicauſe the white cotes being ſent out of the citie, as before ye haue heard, reuolted from the quéens part to the aid of Wiat) twentie paire of gallowes, on the which were hanged in ſeuerall places to the number of fiftie perſons, which gallowes remained ſtanding there a great part of the ſummer following to the great griefe of good citizens, and for example to the commotioners.

Wiat ſent to the tower.

Sir Thomas Bridges lieutenant of the tower.

The zeale of the lieutenant ſheweth it ſelf by his hot language.

¶As for the principals of this faction, namelie Thomas Wiat, William Kneuet, Thomas Cobham, two brethren named Mantels, and Alexander Bret were brought by ſir Henrie Ierningam by water to the tower priſoners, where ſir Philip Denie receiued them at the bulworke, & as Wiat paſſed by he ſaid; Go traitor, there was neuer ſuch a traitor in England. To whom ſir Thomas Wiat turned, and ſaid, I am no traitor, I would thou ſhouldeſt well know thou art more traitor than I, it is not the point of an honeſt man to call me ſo, and ſo went foorth. When he came to the tower gate, ſir Thomas Bridges lieutenant tooke in through the wicket, firſt Mantell, and ſaid: Ah thou traitor, what haſt thou and thy companie wrought? But he holding downe his head ſaid nothing. Then came Thomas Kneuet, whom maiſter chamberleine gentleman porter of the tower tooke in. Then came Alexander Bret, whome ſir Thomas Pope tooke by the boſome, ſaieng: Oh traitor, how couldeſt thou find in thy heart to worke ſuch a villanie, as to take wages, and being truſted ouer a band of men, to fall to hir enimies, returning againſt hir in battell. Bret anſwered Yea; I haue offended in that caſe. Then came Thomas Cobham, whome ſir Thomas Poines tooke in, and ſaid, Alas maiſter Cobham, what wind headed you to worke ſuch treaſon? And he anſwered, Oh ſir I was ſeduced. Then came in ſir Thomas Wiat, whom ſir Iohn Bridges tooke by the collar and ſaid, Oh thou villen & vnhappie traitor, how couldeſt thou find in thy hart to worke ſuch deteſtable treaſon to the quéenes maieſtie, who gaue thée thy life and liuing once alreadie, although thou diddeſt before this time beare armes in the field againſt hir, and now to yéeld hir battell, &c. If it were not (ſaith he) but that the law muſt paſſe vpon thee, I would ſticke thée through with my dagger. To the which Wiat holding his arms vnder his ſide, and looking grieuouſlie with a grim looke vpon the lieutenant, ſaid; It is no maiſterie now: and ſo paſſed on. Thomas Wiat had on a ſhirt of maile, with ſléeues verie faire, theron a veluet caſſocke, and a yellow lace, with the windlace of his dag hanging thereon, and a paire of boots on his legs, and on his head a faire hat of veluet, with a broad bone-worke lace about it. William Kneuet, Thomas Cobham, and Bret, were the like apparelled.

The duke of Suffolke and the lord Greie brought to the tower.

Sir Henrie Iſleie.

On the morrow and the next daie following were brought into the tower priſoners, George Cobham, ſir William Cobham, Anthonie Kneuet, Hugh Booth, Thomas Vane, Robert Rudſtone, ſir George Harper, Edward Wiat, Edward Fog, George Moore, and Cutbert Vaughan. The tenth of Februarie, the earle of Huntington and other gentlemen, and to the number of thrée hundred horſemen, brought to the tower as priſoners the duke of Suffolke, and the lord Iohn Greie his brother from Couentrie, where the duke had remained thrée daies after his taking in the houſe and cuſtodie of Chriſtopher Warren alderman there. The eleuenth daie ſir Henrie Iſleie who had fled, was brought into the tower in an old fréeſe cote, an old paire of hoſen, all his apparell not worth foure ſhillings. The ſame daie came in two of the Culpepers, one Cromar, & Thomas Rampton the duke of Suffolks ſecretarie.

The lord Gilford Dudleie executed on the tower.

The behauiour of the ladie Iane led to execution.

The twelfe of Februarie being mondaie, about ten of the clocke, there went out of the tower to the ſcaffold on the tower hill, the lord Gilford Dudleie, ſonne to the duke of Northumberland, huſband to the ladie Iane Greie daughter to the duke of Suffolke; and without the bulworke gate, maiſter Thomas Offleie one of the ſhiriffes of London receiued him and brought him to the ſcaffold, where after a ſmall declaration he knéeled downe and ſaid his praiers. Then holding vp his eies & hands to heauen with teares, at the laſt he deſired the people to praie for him, & after he was beheaded. His bodie being laid in a cart, and his head in a cloth, was brought into the chappell within the tower, where the ladie Iane, whoſe lodging was in maiſter Patridges houſe, did ſée his dead carcaſſe taken out of the cart, as well as ſhe did ſée him before aliue going to his death: a ſight (as might be ſuppoſed) to hir worſe than death. By this time was there a ſcaffold made vpon the gréene ouer againſt the white tower, for the ladie Iane to die vpon, who being nothing at all abaſhed neither with feare of hir owne death, which then approched, neither with the ſight of the dead carcaſſe of hir huſband when he was brought into the chappell, came foorth, the lieutenant leading hir, with countenance nothing abaſhed, neither hir eies anie thing moiſtened with teares, with a booke in hir hand, wherein ſhe praied vntill ſhe came to the ſaid ſcaffold. Whereon when ſhe was mounted, this noble yoong ladie as ſhe was indued with ſingular gifts both of learning and knowledge, ſo was ſhe as patient and mild as anie lambe at hir execution: and a little before hir death vttered theſe words.]

The words of the ladie Iane at hir death, on a ſcaffold vpon the greene ouer againſt the white tower.

GOod people I am come hither to die, and by a law I am condemned to the ſame. My offenſe againſt the quéenes highnes was onelie in conſent to the deuice of other, which now is déemed treaſon; but it was neuer of my ſéeking, but by counſell of thoſe who ſhould ſéeme to haue further vnderſtanding of things than I, which knew little of the law, and much leſſe of the titles to the crowne. But touching the procurement and deſire therof by me, or on my behalfe, I doo waſh my hands in innocencie thereof before God, and the face of all you (good chriſtian people) this daie. And therwith ſhe wrong hir hands wherin ſhe had hir booke. Then (ſaid ſhe) I praie you all good chriſtian people, to beare me witneſſe that I die a true chriſtian woman, & that I looke to be ſaued by none other meanes, but onelie by the mercie of God, in the bloud of his onelie ſonne Ieſus Chriſt; & I confeſſe that when I did know the word of God, I neglected the ſame, & loued my ſelfe and the world, and therefore this plague and puniſhment is iuſtlie & worthilie happened vnto me for my ſins, & yet I thanke God of his goodneſſe, that he hath giuen me a time and reſpit to repent. And now good people while I am aliue, I praie you aſſiſt me with your praiers.

Then knéeling downe, ſhe ſaid the pſalme of Miſerere mei Deus, in Engliſh, and then ſtood vp and gaue hir maid (called miſtreſſe Ellin) hir gloues and handkercher, and hir booke ſhe alſo gaue to maiſter Bridges then lieutenant of the tower, and ſo vntied hir gowne; and the executioner preſſed to helpe hir off with it, but ſhe deſired him to let hir alone, and turned hir toward hir two gentlewomen, who helped hir off therewith, and with hir other attires, and they gaue hir a faire handkercher to put about hir eies. Then the executioner knéeled downe and aſked hir forgiueneſſe, whom ſhe forgaue moſt willinglie. Then he willed hir to ſtand vpon the ſtraw, which doone, ſhe ſaw the blocke, & then ſhe ſaid; I praie you diſpatch me quicklie. Then ſhe knéeled downe, ſaieng; Will you take it off before I laie me downe? Wherevnto the executioner anſwered, No madame. Then tied ſhe the handkercher about hir eies, and féeling for the blocke, ſhe ſaid; Where is it, where is it? One of the ſtanders by guided hir therevnto, and ſhe laid downe hir head vpon the blocke, and then ſtretched forth hir bodie, and ſaid; Lord into thy hands I commend my ſpirit, and ſo finiſhed hir life. ¶ This was the end of the lord Gilford and the ladie Iane, whoſe deaths were the more haſtened for feare of further troubles and ſturs for hir title, like as hir father had attempted.]

The executioner aſked the ladie Iane rgiueneſſe.

John Fox.

Thus (as ſaith maiſter Fox) were beheaded two innocents, in compariſon of them that ſat vpon them: for they did but ignorantlie accept that which the others had willinglie deuiſed, and by open proclamation conſented to take from others, and giue to them. And verelie how vnwilling ſhe was to take it vpon hir, there are yet liuing that can teſtifie. Iudge Morgan now that gaue the ſentence againſt hir, ſhortlie after fell mad, and in his rauing cried continuallie to haue the ladie Iane taken awaie from him, and ſo ended his life. ¶ Touching this ladie Iane in the high commendation of hir godlie mind, I find this report in maiſter Foxes appendix to his Acts and Monuments, namelie that being on a time when ſhe was verie yoong at Newhall in Eſſex at the ladie Maries, was by one ladie Anne Wharton deſired to walke, and they paſſing by the chapell, the ladie Wharton made low curtſie to the popiſh ſacrament hanging on the altar. Which when the ladie Iane ſaw maruelled why ſhe did ſo, and aſked hir whether the ladie Marie were there or not? Vnto whome the ladie Wharton anſwered no, but ſhe ſaid that ſhe made hir curtſie to him that made vs all. Why quoth the ladie Iane, how can he be there that made vs all, and the baker made him? This hir anſwer comming to the ladie Maries eare, ſhe did neuer loue hir after, as is credible reported, but eſtéemed hir as the reſt of that chriſtian profeſſion. In further witneſſe of which good ladies diſpoſition (both to God and the world) beſides the verſes of certeine learned men extant to hir praiſe, theſe following were found written by hir owne hand with a pin:

Iudge Morgan fell mad.

Vpon ſaturdaie being the ſeuentéenth of Februarie the duke of Suffolke was arreigned at Weſtminſter, and there condemned to die by his péeres, the earle of Arundell being that daie chiefe iudge. Where ſome haue written that he ſhould at his laſt going downe into the countrie make proclamation in his daughters name, that is not ſo: for whereas he ſtood vp in Leiceſter, when at his commandement the proclamation was there made againſt the quéenes mariage with the prince of Spaine, &c: maſter Damport then maior of that towne ſaid to him: My lord I truſt your grace meaneth no hurt to the quéenes maieſtie. No ſaith he maiſter maior (laieng his hand on his ſword) he that would hir anie hurt, I would this ſword were through his hart, for ſhe is the mercifulleſt prince, as I haue trulie found hir, that euer reigned, in whoſe defenſe I am & will be readie to die at hir foot. ¶ On mondaie the ninetéenth of Februarie, the lord Cobhams thrée ſonnes, and foure other men were brought to Weſtminſter, the yoongeſt of the Cobhams, to wit maiſter Thomas Cobham was condemned with the other foure men, but the other two Cobhams came not to the barre. ¶ On the wedneſdaie the one and twentith of Februarie the lord Thomas Greie that had béene taken (as before ye haue heard) in Wales, was brought togither with ſir Iames Croft through London to the tower, by a number of horſſemen.

The duke of Suffolke.

Iohn Fox.

Vpon the fridaie the thrée and twentith of Februarie, about nine of the clocke, the duke of Suffolke was brought forth of the tower vnto the ſcaffold on the tower hill. And in his comming thither, there accompanied him doctor Weſton, as his ghoſtlie father: notwithſtanding (as it ſhould ſéeme) againſt the will of the ſaid duke. For when the duke went vp the ſcaffold, the ſaid Weſton being on his left hand, preſſed to go vp with him. The duke with his hand put him downe againe off the ſtaires, and Weſton taking hold of the duke forced him downe likewiſe. And as they aſcended the ſecond time, the duke againe put him downe. Then Weſton ſaid, that it was the quéenes pleaſure he ſhould ſo doo: therewith the duke caſting his hands abrode, aſcended vp the ſcaffold, and pauſed a prettie while after, and then he ſaid.

The duke of Suffolke beheaded.

Doctor Weſton.

The duke of Suffolks words to the people at the time of his death.

MAiſters, I haue offended the quéene and hir lawes, and thereby am iuſtlie condemned to die, and am willing to die, deſiring all men to be obedient; and I praie God that this my death maie be an example to all men: beſéeching you all to beare mée witneſſe that I die in the faith of Chriſt, truſting to be ſaued by his bloud onelie (and by none other trumperie) the which died for me, and for all them that doo trulie repent, & ſtedfaſtlie truſt in him. And I doo repent, deſiring you all to pray to God for me, that when ye ſée my breath depart from me, you will praie to God that he maie receiue my ſoule. And then hée deſired all men to forgiue him, ſaieng that the quéene had forgiuen him.

Then maiſter Weſton declared with a lowd voice that the quéenes maieſtie had forgiuen him. Then diuers of the ſtanders by ſaid with audible voice; Such forgiuenes God ſend thée, meaning doctor Weſton. Then the duke knéeled vpon his knées, and ſaid the pſalme Miſerere mei Deus, vnto the end, holding vp his hands, and looking vp to heauen. And when he had ended the pſalme, he ſaid; In manus tuas Domine commendo ſpiritum meum. Then he aroſe and ſtood vp, and deliuered his cap and ſcarffe to the executioner, and therewith the executioner knéeled downe: and aſked the duke forgiueneſſe, and the duke ſaid, God forgiue thée, and I doo: and when thou dooſt thine office, I praie thée doo it quicklie, and God haue mercie to thée. Then ſtood there a man and ſaid, My lord, how ſhall I doo for the monie that you doo owe me? And the duke ſaid, Alas good fellow, I praie thée trouble me not now, but go thy waie to my officers. Then he knit a kercher about his face, and knéeled downe and ſaid, Our father which art in heauen, &c: vnto the end: and then he ſaid, Chriſt haue mercie vpon me, and laid downe his head on the blocke: and the executioner tooke the axe, and at the firſt chop ſtroke off his head, and held it vp to the people, according to the common cuſtome of execution.

The duke of Suffolke deſcribed.

Such was the end of this duke of Suffolke, a man of high nobilitie by birth, and of nature to his friend gentle and courteous, more eaſie in déed to be led than was thought expedient, of ſtomach neuertheleſſe ſtout and hardie, haſtie and ſoone kindled, but pacified ſtreight againe, and ſorie if in his heat ought had paſſed him otherwiſe than reaſon might ſéeme to beare, vpright and plaine in his priuat dealings, no diſſembler, nor well able to beare iniuries, but yet forgiuing & forgetting the ſame, if the partie would ſéeme but to acknowlege his fault, and ſeeke reconcilement. Bountifull he was and verie liberall, ſomwhat learned himſelfe, and a great fauourer of thoſe that were learned, ſo that to manie he ſhewed himſelfe a verie Mecœnas: as frée from couetouſneſſe, as void of pride and diſdainefull hautineſſe of mind, more regarding plaine meaning men, than clawbacke flatterers. And this vertue he had, he could patientlie heare his faults told him, by thoſe whome he had in credit for their wiſdome and faithfull meaning toward him, although ſometime he had the hap to reforme himſelfe thereafter. Concerning his laſt offenſe for the which he died, it is to be ſuppoſed, he rather tooke in hand that vnlawfull enterpriſe through others perſuaſions, than of his owne motion for any malicious ambition in himſelfe.

Great pitie that ſo manie good gifts concurring ſhould ſuffer diſgrace.

But now to let this duke reſt with God, we will procéed with the ſtorie. The ſame daie (or as ſome haue noted the day before) a number of priſoners had their pardon, and came through the citie with their halters about their necks. They were in * number aboue two hundred. Vpon the ſaturdaie, the eight and twentith of Februarie, ſir William Sentlow was committed as priſoner to the maiſter of the horſſe to be kept. This ſir William was at this time one of the ladie Elizabeths gentlemen. Vpon the ſundaie being the fiue and twentith of Februarie, ſir Iohn Rogers was committed to the tower. Vpon the tueſdaie in the ſame wéeke being the ſeuen & twentith of Februarie, certeine gentlemen of Kent were ſent into Kent to be executed there. Their names were theſe: the two Mantels, two Kneuets, and Bret: with theſe maiſter Rudſton alſo, and certeine other were condemned, and ſhould haue béene executed, but they had their pardon.

* The number of them that thus had their pardon were 240.

Gentlemen ſent into Kent to be executed.

Execution.

Sir Henrie Iſleie knight, Thomas Iſleie his brother, and Walter Mantell, ſuffered at Maidſton, where Wiat firſt diſplaied his banner. Anthonie Kneuet and his brother William Kneuet, with another of the Mantels, were executed at Seuenocke: Bret at Rocheſter was hanged in chains. On ſaturdaie the third of March, ſir Gawen Carew, and maiſter Gibs were brought thorough London to the tower, with a companie of horſſemen. The fiftéenth daie of March next following, the ladie Elizabeth the quéenes ſiſter, and next heire to the crowne, was apprehended at hir manour of Aſhridge, for ſuſpicion of Wiats conſpiracie. And from thence (being that time verie ſicke) with great rigour brought priſoner to London. On the ſundaie after being the ſeuentéenth of March, ſhe was commited to the tower, where alſo the lord Courtneie earle of Deuonſhire (of whome before is made mention) was for the like ſuſpicion committed priſoner.

Ladie Elizabeth and lord Courtneie priſoners in the tower.

Abr.Fl. ex Ioh.Foxi ma tyrologio.

¶ Touching the impriſonment of the foreſaid ladie Elizabeth, & the lord Courtneie, thou ſhalt note here for thy learning (good reader) a politike point of practiſe in Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, not vnworthie to be conſidered. This Gardiner being alwaies a capitall enimie to ladie Elizabeth, & thinking now by the occaſion of maiſter Wiat to picke out ſome matter againſt the lord Courtneie, and ſo in the end to intangle the ladie Elizabeth, deuiſed a peſtilent practiſe of conueiance, as in the ſtorie here following maie appeare. The ſtorie is this. The ſame daie that ſir Thomas died, he deſired the lieutenant to bring him to the preſence of the lord Courtneie, who there before the lieutenant and the ſhiriffes, knéeling downe vpon his knées, beſought the lord Courtneie to forgiue him, for that he had falſelie accuſed both the ladie Elizabeth and him: and ſo being brought from thence vnto the ſcaffold to ſuffer, there openlie in the hearing of all the people cleared the ladie Elizabeth, and the lord Courtneie, to be frée and innocent from all ſuſpicion of that commotion. At which confeſſion, doctor Weſton there ſtanding by, cried to the people, ſaieng: Beléeue him not (good people) for he confeſſed otherwiſe before vnto the councell.

A point of practiſe of Stephā Ga diner again the ladie E lizabeth.

Doctor W againſt the la die Eliza

After the execution doone of ſir Thomas Wiat, which was the eleuenth daie of Aprill, word was brought immediatlie to the lord maior ſir Thomas White a little before dinner, how maiſter Wiat had cleared the ladie Elizabeth and lord Courtneie, and the words alſo which doctor Weſton ſpake vnto the people. Whereunto the lord maior anſwering; Is this true quoth he? Said Weſton ſo? In ſooth I neuer tooke him otherwiſe but for a knaue. Vpon this the lord maior ſitting downe to dinner (who dined the ſame daie at the Bridgehouſe) commeth in ſir Martine Bowes with the recorder, newlie come from the parlement houſe, who hearing of the maior and ſhiriffes this report of Wiats confeſſion, both vpon the ſcaffold and alſo in the tower, maruelled thereat, declaring how there was another tale contrarie to this, told the ſame daie in the parlement houſe, which was, that ſir Thomas Wiat ſhould deſire the lord Courtneie to confeſſe the truth, ſo as he had doone before.

The lord m iors iudgem of D. We

Vpon this it followed not long after, that a certeine prentiſe dwelling in ſaint Laurence lane, named Cut, as he was drinking with one Denham a plaiſterer being one of quéene Maries ſeruants, amongſt other talke, made mention how ſir Thomas

Wiat had cleared the ladie Elizabeth, and the lord Courtneie, to be no conſenters to his riſing. Which words being brought to Gardiner (by what meanes I know not) incontinent vpon the ſame, ſir Andrew Iud was ſent by the ſaid biſhop to the lord maior, commanding him to bring the ſaid prentiſe to the Starchamber, which was accuſed of theſe words, that he ſhould ſaie that Wiat was conſtreined by the councell to accuſe the ladie Elizabeth, & the lord Courtneie. Which fellow when he was come to the Starchamber, the aforeſaid Gardiner letting paſſe other matters that were in hand, began to declare to the whole multitude, how miraculouſlie almightie God had brought the quéens maieſtie to the crowne, the whole realme in a maner being againſt hir, and that he had brought this to paſſe for this ſingular intent & purpoſe, that this realme being ouerwhelmed with hereſies, ſhe might reduce the ſame againe to the true catholike faith. And where ſhe tooke the ladie Elizabeth into hir fauour, and loued hir ſo tenderlie, and alſo the lord Courtneie, who of long time had béene deteined in priſon, and by hir was ſet at libertie, and receiued great benefits at hir hands; and notwithſtanding all this, they had conſpired moſt vnnaturallie and traitorouſlie againſt hir with that heinous traitor Wiat, as by the confeſſion of Wiat (ſaid he) and the letters ſent to and fro maie plainlie appeare: yet there was ſome in the citie of London, which reported that Wiat was conſtreined by the councell to accuſe the ladie Elizabeth, and the lord Courtneie, & yet you my lord maior (quoth he) haue not ſéene the ſame puniſhed.

Cut prentiſe in London brought before Stephan Gardiner.

Stephã Gardiners tale in the Starchamber againſt the ladie Elizabeth.

The partie is here, ſaid the lord maior. Take him with you (ſaid Gardiner) and puniſh him according to his deſert, and ſaid further: My lord, take héed to your charge, the citie of London is a whirlepoole and a ſinke of all euill rumors, there they be bred, and from thence ſpred into all parts of this realme. There ſtood by the ſame time the lord Shandois, who being then lieutenant of the tower, and now hearing the biſhop thus ſpeake, to ſooth his tale, came in with theſe words as followeth: My lords (quoth he) this is a truth that I ſhall tell you, I being lieutenant of the tower when Wiat ſuffered, he deſired me to bring him to the lord Courtneie; which when I had doone, he fell downe vpon his knees before him in my preſence, and deſired him to confeſſe the truth of himſelfe, as he had doone before, and to ſubmit himſelfe vnto the quéenes mercie. And thus much of this matter I thought to declare, to the intent that the reader perceiuing the procéedings of the biſhop in the premiſſes, & comparing the ſame with the true teſtimonie of Wiat himſelfe, and with the teſtimonie of the ſhiriffes, the which were preſent the ſame time when ſir Thomas Wiat aſked the lord Courtneie forgiueneſſe, maie the better iudge of the whole caſe and matter for the which the ladie Elizabeth and the lord Courtneie were ſo long in trouble.]

The Lord Shandois falſe report in the Starchamber, againſt the ladie Elizabeth and lord Courtneie.

On ſaturdaie next following being Eaſter euen, and the foure and twentith of March, the lord marques of Northampton, the lord Cobham, and ſir William Cobham his ſonne and heire, were deliuered out of the tower, where they had remained for a time, being committed thither vpon ſome ſuſpicion about Wiats rebellion: as diuerſe others were, wherof manie were put to death, as C.O. reporteth:

Nunc iſtos læſæ nunc illos quæſtio torquet
Maieſtatis, habet multos cuſtodia clauſos
Firma viros, atro pars plurima deditur Orco.

Not long after, quéene Marie partlie offended with the Londoners, as fauorers of Wiats conſpiracie, and partlie perceiuing the more part of them nothing inclined towards hir procéedings in religion, which turned manie of them to loſſe, ſummoned a parlement to be holden at Oxford, as it were to gratifie that citie, which with the vniuerſitie, towne, and countrie, had ſhewed themſelues verie forward in hir ſeruice; but ſpeciallie in reſtoring of the religion called catholike: for which appointed parlement there to be holden, great prouiſion was made, as well by the quéens officers, as by the townesmen & inhabitants of the countrie round about. But the quéens mind in ſhort ſpace changed, and the ſame parlement was holden at Weſtminſter in Aprill next following, wherein the quéene proponed two ſpeciall matters, the one for the mariage to be had betwéene hir and the prince Philip of Spaine: the other, for the reſtoring againe of the popes power and iuriſdiction in England. As touching hir mariage, it was with no great difficultie agréed vpon; but the other requeſt could not be eaſilie obteined.

A parlement ſummoned at Oxford but not holden.

Howbeit, it was to be wiſhed, euen to the diſappointing of that mariage (if God in counſell had ſo prouided) that the whole bodie of the parlement had béene ſemblablie affected, as it is ſaid, that all the nations of the world were, when the ſunne would néeds be maried. Againſt which purpoſe of the ſun the people of all regions aſſembling, humblie beſought Iupiter to caſt in a blocke and impediment againſt that wedding. But Iupiter demanding of them why they would not haue the ſun maried; one ſtepping vp made anſwer for the reſt, and ſaid: Thou knoweſt well enough Iupiter that there is but one ſun, and yet he burneth vs all: who, if he be maried & haue children, as the number of ſuns muſt néeds increaſe; ſo muſt their heat and feruentneſſe be multiplied, whereby a generall deſtruction of all things in their kind will inſue. Hereupon that match was ouerthrowne. But God aboue ruling by prouidence all things here beneath, had purpoſed this coniunction; ſo that it was not in the power of man to withſtand or interrupt it: howbeit it was his pleaſure (to what end himſelfe beſt knoweth) to curſſe it with barrenneſſe, as he did the quéene hir ſelfe with a ſhort and vnpeaceable reigne (full of ſedition and bloudſhed) as our Engliſh poet noteth:

All nations in the world againſt the mariage of the ſun, and why.

On the tenth daie of Aprill following, Thomas Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie, Nicholas Ridleie biſhop of London, and Hugh Latimer once biſhop of Worceſter, who had béene long priſoners in the tower, were now conueied from thence, and caried to Windſore, and afterward to the vniuerſitie of Oxford, there to diſpute with the diuines and learned men of the contrarie opinion. Two daies after their comming to Oxford, which was the twelfe daie of the ſaid moneth, diuerſe learned men of both the vniuerſities were ſent in commiſſion from the conuocation (which during this parlement was kept in Pauls church in London) to diſpute with thoſe priſoners in certeine articles of religion. The names of them that were in commiſſion were theſe following. Of Oxford, doctor Weſton prolocutor, Cole, Chadſeie, Pie, Harpeſfield, Smith. Of Sir Thomas Wiat arreigned.

Sir Thomas Wiat (of whome mention is made before) was about this time brought from the tower to Weſtminſter, and there arreigned of high treaſon: the earle of Suſſex, ſir Edward Haſtings, and ſir Thomas Cornwallis, with others being his iudges. The effect of whoſe indictment among other things ſpeciallie was; that he the fourtéenth daie of Februarie laſt before, with force of armed multitude and enſignes diſplaied, had at Brainford raiſed open warres againſt our ſoueraigne ladie the quéene, traitorouſlie pretending and practiſing to depriue hir of hir crowne and dignitie; and the queſtion was demanded of him, whether he was guiltie or no? Whereat he ſtaied, and beſought the iudges that he might firſt aſke a queſtion, before he anſwered directlie to the point, and he was licenced ſo to doo. The queſtion was, that if he ſhould confeſſe himſelfe guiltie, whether the ſame ſhould not be preiudiciall vnto him, ſo as he by that confeſſion ſhould be barred from vttering ſuch things as he had more to ſay? Whereunto it was anſwered by the court; Maiſter Wiat (ſaid they) ye ſhall haue both leaue and leaſure to ſaie what you can.

The effect of Wiats indictment.

Wiat anſwereth not directlie to the queſtion guiltie or vnguiltie.

Then my lords (quoth he) I muſt confeſſe my ſelfe guiltie, and in the end the truth of my caſe muſt inforce me. I muſt acknowledge this to be a iuſt plague for my ſins, which moſt gréeuouſlie I therefore haue committed againſt God, who ſuffered me thus brutiſhlie & beaſtlie to fall into this horrible offenſe of the law. Wherefore all you lords & gentlemen, with other here preſent, note well my words, lo here & ſée in me the ſame end which all other commonlie had, which haue attempted the like enterpriſe from the beginning. For peruſe the chronicles through, & you ſhall ſée that neuer rebellion attempted by ſubiects againſt their prince and countrie, from the beginning did euer proſper, or had euer better ſucceſſe, except the caſe of king Henrie the fourth: who although he became a prince, yet in his act was but a rebell, for ſo muſt I call him: & though he preuailed for a time, yet was it not long but that his heires were depriued, and thoſe that had right againe reſtored to the kingdome and crowne, and the vſurpation ſo ſharplie reuenged afterward in his bloud, as it well appeared, that the long delaie of Gods vengeance was ſupplied with more gréeuous plagues in the third and fourth generation. For the loue of God all you gentlemen that be here preſent, remember and be taught as well by examples paſt, as alſo by this my preſent infelicitie and moſt wretched caſe. Oh moſt miſerable, miſchiefous, brutiſh & beſtlie furious imaginations of mine! I was perſuaded that by the mariage of the prince of Spaine, the ſecond perſon of this realme, and next heire to the crowne, ſhould haue béene in danger; and that I being a frée borne man, ſhould with my countrie haue béene brought into the bondage and ſeruitude of aliens and ſtrangers. Which brutiſh beaſtlie opinion then ſéemed to me reaſon, and wrought in me ſuch effects, that it led me headlong into the practiſe of this deteſtable crime of treaſon.

A rebels report touching rebellion.

Wiats exhortation to loialtie by his owne example.

But now being better perſuaded, and vnderſtanding the great commoditie & honor which the realme ſhould receiue by this marriage: I ſtand firme and faſt in this opinion, that if it ſhould pleaſe the quéene to be mercifull vnto me, there is no ſubiect in this land that ſhould more trulie and faithfullie ſerue hir highnes than I ſhall; nor no ſooner die at hir graces féet in defenſe of hir quarrell. I ſerued hir highneſſe againſt the duke of Northumberland, as my lord of Arundell can witneſſe. My grandfather ſerued moſt truelie hir graces grandfather, and for his ſake was ſet vpon the racke in the tower. My father alſo ſerued king Henrie the eight to his good contentation, and I alſo ſerued him, and king Edward his ſon. And in witneſſe of my bloud ſpent in his ſeruice, I carrie a name. I alledge not all this to ſet forth my ſeruice by waie of merit, which I confeſſe but dutie: but to declare to the whole world, that by abuſing my wits, in purſuing my miſaduiſed opinion, I haue not onelie ouerthrowne my houſe, and defaced all the well doings of me and my anceſtors (if euer there were anie) but alſo haue béene the cauſe of mine owne death and deſtruction. Neither doo I alledge this to iuſtifie my ſelfe in anie point, neither for an excuſe of mine offenſe: but moſt humblie ſubmit my ſelfe to the quéenes maieſties mercie and pitie, deſiring you my lord of Suſſex, and you maiſter Haſtings, with all the reſt of this honorable bench, to be meanes to the quéenes highneſſe for hir mercie, which is the greateſt treaſure that maie be giuen to anie prince from God, ſuch a vertue as God hath appropriate to himſelfe. Which if hir highneſſe vouchſafe to extend vnto me, ſhe ſhall beſtow it on him, who ſhall be moſt glad to ſerue truelie, and not refuſe to die in hir quarrell. For I proteſt before the iudge of all iudges, I neuer meant hurt againſt hir highneſſe perſon.

Wiat altereth his mind touching the quéenes mariage.

The fruits of rebellion by Wiats confeſſion.

Then ſaid the quéenes attornie; Maiſter Wiat you haue great cauſe to be ſorie, and repent for your fault, whereby you haue not onelie vndoone your ſelfe and your houſe, but alſo a number of other gentlemen, who being true men might haue ſerued their prince and countrie: yet if you had gone no further, it might haue béene borne withall the better. But being not ſo contented to ſtaie your ſelfe, you haue ſo procured the duke of Suffolke (a man ſoone trained to your purpoſe) and his two brethren alſo: by meanes whereof without the quéenes greater mercie, you haue ouerthrowne that noble houſe. And yet not ſo ſtaied, your attempt hath reached as far as in you laie to the ſecond perſon of the realme, in whom next to the quéenes highneſſe reſteth all our hope and comfort, wherby hir honor is brought in queſtion, and what danger will folow, and to what end it will come God knoweth: of all this you are the author. Wiat anſwered; As I will not in anie thing iuſtifie my ſelfe, ſo I beſéech you, I being in this wretched eſtate, not to ouercharge me, nor to make me ſéeme to be that I am not. I am loth to touch anie perſon by name; but that I haue written I haue written. Then ſaid the iudge; Maiſter Wiat, maiſter attornie hath well mooued you to repent your offenſes, and we for our parts wiſh you the ſame.

The quéenes attornie ſpeaketh to Wiat.

Wiats anſwer to the quéenes attornie.

The iudge ſpeaketh.

Then ſaid ſir Edward Haſtings maiſter of the quéens horſſe; Maiſter Wiat, doo ye remember when I and maiſter Cornwallis were ſent vnto you from the quéenes highneſſe to demand the cauſe of your enterpriſe, and what you required? Were not theſe your demands, that the quéenes grace ſhould go to the tower, and there remaine; and you to haue the rule of the tower and hir perſon, with the treaſure in kéeping, and ſuch of hir councell as you would require to be deliuered into your hands, ſaieng that you would be truſted and not truſt? Which words when Wiat had confeſſed, then ſaid the quéenes ſollicitor; Your preſumption was ouer great, & your attempt Maiſter Coꝛ all late mai ter of the olles ſpeak th.

tempt in this caſe hath purchaſed you perpetuall infamie, and ſhall be called Wiats rebellion, as Wat Tilers was called Wat Tilers rebellion. Then ſaid the attorneie; Maiſter Wiat, were you not priuie to a deuiſe whereby the quéene ſhould haue béene murthered in a place where ſhe ſhould walke? I do not burthen you to confeſſe this, for thus much I muſt ſaie on your behalfe, that you miſliked that deuiſe? That deuiſe (ſaid Wiat) was the deuiſe of William Thomas, whome euer after I abhorred for that cauſe.

William Thomas meant to murther quéene Marie.

Then was a letter ſhewed, which Wiat being in Southworke had written to the duke of Suffolke, that he ſhould méet him at Kingſtone bridge, and from thenſe to accompanie him to London, although he came with the fewer number. Wiat at the firſt did not ſéeme to remember anie ſuch letter; but when it was ſhewed him, he confeſſed his hand. Then was it demanded of him among other things, whie he refuſed the quéenes pardon when it was offered him. My lords (quoth he) I confeſſe my fault and offenſe to be moſt vile and heinous, for the which firſt I aſke God mercie, without the which I cannot challenge anie thing, ſuch is my offenſe alreadie committed. And therefore I beſéech you to trouble me with no more queſtions, for I haue deliuered all things vnto hir grace in writing. And finallie here I muſt confeſſe, that of all the voiages wherein I haue ſerued, this was the moſt deſperat and painfull iorneie that euer I made. And where you aſked whie I receiued not the quéenes pardon when it was offered vnto me; Oh vnhappie man! What ſhall I ſaie? When I was entred into this diuelliſh & deſperat aduenture, there was no waie but wade through with that I had taken in hand: for I had thought that other had béene as farre forward as my ſelfe, which I found farre otherwiſe. So that being bent to kéepe promiſe with all my confederats, none kept promiſe with me; for I like a moile went through thicke and thin with this determination, that if I ſhould come to anie treatie, I ſhould ſéeme to betraie all my friends.

Wiats confeſſion.

Wiat is ſorie that he refuſed the quéenes pardon when it was offred.

But whereto ſhould I ſpend anie more words? I yéeld my ſelfe wholie vnto the quéenes mercie, knowing well that it is onelie in hir power to make me (as I haue deſerued) an open example to the world with Wat Tiler; or elſe to make me participant of that pitie which ſhe hath extended in as great crimes as mine; moſt humblie beſéeching you all to be means for me to hir highneſſe for mercie, which is my laſt and onelie refuge. The will of God be doone on me. Vpon this confeſſion without further triall, he receiued the iudgement accuſtomed in caſes of treaſon, which was to be hanged, drawne and quartered. And the eleuenth of Aprill next folowing he was brought to the Tower hill, and there was pardoned of his drawing and hanging, but had his head ſtricken off, and his bodie cut in foure quarters, and ſet vp in diuerſe places about the citie, but his head was ſet vpon the gallowes at Haie hill beſide Hide parke.

The execution of ſir Thomas Wiat.

Now here by the waie is to be noted, that he being on the ſcaffold readie to ſuffer, declared that the ladie Elizabeth and ſir Edward Courtneie earle of Deuonſhire, whome he had accuſed before (as it ſéemed) were neuer priuie to his doings, as farre as he knew, or was able to charge them. And when doctor Weſton, being then his confeſſor told him that he had confeſſed the contrarie vnto the councell, he anſwered thus; That I ſaid then, I ſaid, but that which I ſaie now is true. This was the end of Wiat and his conſpiracie; as alſo the like hath béene of others attempting anie rebellion. For as their enterpriſe being, according to the proper qualitie thereof, conſidered, is flat againſt Gods ordinance, who hath ordeined magiſtracie to be reuerenced of inferiors: ſo it is vnlikelie to bring other than infortunatneſſe, and ſhamefull ouerthrowes vnto the attempters; in whome although will want not to compaſſe anie worke; yet force failing, they miſſe the marke, & all bicauſe raſhneſſe giueth them a falſe aime. Wherefore to conclude this tragicall diſcourſe of Wiat, it were to be wiſhed that the ſage and ſafe counſell of Cato were put in common practiſe of all men, which is, to vndertake & do nothing aboue their ſtrength:

Quod potes, id tentes, operis ne pondere preſſus,
Succumbat labor, & fruſtra tentata relinquas.

The ſeuenth daie of Aprill next following, ſir Nicholas Throckmorton knight was brought from the tower to Guildhall in London, and there arreigned of high treaſon, as adherent and principall counſellor to the ſaid Wiat and the duke of Suffolke, and the reſt in the fore remembred conſpiracie againſt the quéene. But he ſo ſtoutlie, and therwithall ſo cunninglie anſwered for himſelfe, as well in cléering of his cauſe, as alſo in defending & auoiding ſuch points of the lawes of the realme, as were there alleaged againſt him, that the queſt which paſſed vpon his life & death found him not giltie. With which verdict the iudges and councellors there preſent were ſo much offended, that they bound the iurie in the ſumme of fiue hundred pounds a péece, to appeare before the councell in the Starchamber, at a daie appointed. And according to their bond, they appeared there before the ſaid councell vpon Wedneſdaie, being the one and twentith of Aprill, and ſaint Marks daie; from whenſe after certeine queſtioning, they were committed to priſon, Emanuell Lucar and maſter Whetſton to the tower, and the other to the Fléet.

Sir Nicholas Throckmorton arreigned of high treaſon cléereth himſelfe.

But now forſomuch as a copie of the order of ſir Nicholas Throckmortons arreignement hath come to my hands, and that the ſame maie giue ſome light to the hiſtorie of that dangerous rebellion, I haue thought it not impertinent to inſert the ſame: not wiſhing that it ſhould be offenſiue to anie, ſith it is in euerie mans libertie to weie his words vttered in his owne defenſe, and likewiſe the doings of the queſt in acquitting him, as maie ſéeme good to their diſcretions, ſith I haue deliuered the ſame as I haue found it, without preiudicing anie mans opinion, to thinke thereof otherwiſe than as the cauſe maie moue him.

The order of the arreignement of ſir Nicholas Throckmorton knight, in the Guildhall of London the ſeuenteenth daie of Aprill 1554, expreſſed in a dialog for the better vnderſtanding of euerie mans part.

Sir Thomas White knight lord maior of London, the earle of Shrewesburie, the earle of Derbie, ſir Thomas Bromleie knight lord chiefe iuſtice of England, ſir Nicholas Hare knight maſter of the rolles, ſir Francis Englefield knight maſter of the court of wards and liberties, ſir Richard Southwell knight one of the priuie councell, ſir Edward Walgraue knight one of the priuie councell, ſir Roger Cholmeleie knight, ſir William Portman knight one of the iuſtices of the Kings bench, ſir Edward Sanders knight one of the iuſtices of the common pleés; maſter Stanford & maſter Dier ſergeants, maſter Edward Griffin attournie generall, maſter Sendall and Peter Tichbourne clearks of the crowne. Firſt, after proclamation made, and the commiſſion read, the lieutenant of the tower, maſter Thomas Bridges, brought the priſoner to the barre: then ſilence was commanded, and Sendall ſaid to the priſoner ner as followeth.

Hendall. Nicholas Throckmorton knight hold vp thy hand, thou art before this time indicted of high treaſon, &c: that thou then and there didſt falſelie and traitorouſlie, &c: conſpire and imagine the death of the quéenes maieſtie, &c: and falſelie and traitorouſlie diddeſt leuie warre againſt the quéene within hir realme, &c: and alſo thou waſt adherent to the quéenes enimies within hir realme, giuing to them aid and comfort, &c: and alſo falſelie and traitorouſlie diddeſt conſpire and intend to depoſe and depriue the quéene of hir roiall eſtate, and ſo finallie deſtroie hir, &c: and alſo thou diddeſt falſelie and traitorouſlie deuiſe and conclude to take violentlie the tower of London, &c. Of all which treaſons and euerie of them in maner & forme, &c: art thou giltie or not giltie?

Throckmorton. Maie it pleaſe you my lords and maiſters, which be authoriſed by the quéenes commiſſion to be iudges this daie, to giue me leaue to ſpeake a few words, which doth both concerne you and me, before I anſwer to the inditement, and not altogither impertinent to the matter, and then plead to the inditement.

Bromleie. No, the order is not ſo, you muſt firſt plead whether you be giltie or no.

Throckmorton. If that be your order and law, iudge accordinglie to it.

Hare. You muſt firſt anſwer to the matter wherewith you are charged, and then you maie talke at your pleaſure.

Throckmorton. But things ſpoken out of place, were as good not ſpoken.

Bromleie. Theſe be but delaies to ſpend time, therefore anſwer as the law willeth you.

Throckmorton. My lords I praie you make not ſo much haſt with me, neither thinke not long for your dinner, for my caſe requireth leaſure, and you haue well dined when you haue done iuſtice trulie. Chriſt ſaid, Bleſſed are they that hunger and thirſt for righteouſneſſe.

Bromleie. I can forbeare my dinner as well as you, and care as little as you peraduenture.

Shrewſburie. Come you hither to checke vs Throckmorton? We will not be ſo vſed, no no, I for mine owne part haue forborne my breakefaſt, dinner, and ſupper to ſerue the quéene.

Throckmorton. Yea my good lord I know it right well, I meant not to touch your lordſhip, for your ſeruice and pains is euidentlie knowne to all men.

Southwell. Maſter Throckmorton, this talke néedeth not, we know what we haue to doo, and you would teach vs our duties, you hurt your matter: go to, go to.

Throckmorton. Maſter Southwell, you miſtake me, I meant not to teach you, nor none of you, but to remember you of that I truſt you all be well inſtructed in; and ſo I ſatiſfie my ſelfe, ſith I ſhall not ſpeake, thinking you all know what you haue to doo, or ought to know: ſo I will anſwer to the inditement, and doo plead not giltie to the whole, and to euerie part thereof.

Hendall. How wilt thou be tried?

Throckmorton. Shall I be tried as I would, or as I ſhould?

Bromleie. You ſhall be tried as the law will, and therefore you muſt ſaie by God and by the countrie.

Throckmorton. Is that your law for me? It is not as I would, but ſith you will haue it ſo, I am pleaſed with it, and doo deſire to be tried by faithfull iuſt men, which more feare God than the world.

What time the atturnie went forthwith to maſter Cholmeleie, and ſhewed him the ſhiriffes returne, who being acquainted with the citizens, knowing the corruptions and dexterities of them in ſuch caſes, noted certeine to be challenged for the quéene (a rare caſe) and the ſame men being knowne to be ſufficient and indifferent, that no exceptions were to be taken to them, but onelie for their vpright honeſties: notwithſtanding, the atturnie prompting ſergeant Dier, the ſaid ſergeant challenged one Bacon, and an other citizen peremptorilie for the quéene. Then the priſoner demanded the cauſe of the chalenge. The ſergeant anſwered; We néed not to ſhew you the cauſe of the chalenge for the quéene. Then the inqueſt was furniſhed with other honeſt men, that is to ſaie, Whetſton & Lucar, ſo the priſoner vſed theſe words.

Throckmorton. I truſt you haue not prouided for me this daie, as in times paſt I knew an other gentleman occupieng this wofull place was prouided for. It chanced one of the iuſtices vpon gelouſie of the priſoners acquitall, for the goodneſſe of his cauſe, ſaid to an other of his companions a iuſtice, when the iurie did appeare: I like not this iurie for our purpoſe, they ſéeme to be too pitifull and too charitable to condemne the priſoner. No no, ſaid the other iudge (to wit Cholmeleie) I warrant you, they be picked fellowes for the nonce, he ſhall drinke of the ſame cup his fellowes haue done. I was then a looker on of the pageant as others be now here: but now wo is me, I am a plaier in that wofull tragedie. Well, for theſe and ſuch other like the blacke oxe hath of late troden on ſome of their féet: but my truſt is, I ſhall not be ſo vſed. Whilſt this talke was, Cholmeleie conſulted with the atturnie about the iurie, which the priſoner eſpied, and then ſaid as here inſueth; Ah ah maſter Cholmeleie, will this foule packing neuer be left?

Cholmleie. Whie what doo I, I praie you M. Throckmorton? I did nothing I am ſure, you doo picke quarrels to me.

Throckmorton. Well maſter Cholmeleie if you doo well, it is better for you, God helpe you.

Throckmorton. And it may pleaſe you maſter ſergeant and the others my maſters of the quéenes learned councell, like as I was minded to haue ſaid a few words to the commiſſioners, if I might haue had leaue for their better remembrance of their duties in this place of iuſtice, and concerning direct indifferencie to be vſed towards me this daie: ſo by your patience I doo thinke good to ſaie ſomewhat to you, and to the reſt of the quéenes learned councell, appointed to giue euidence againſt me. And albeit you and the reſt by order be appointed to giue euidence againſt me, and interteined to ſet forth the depoſitions and matter againſt me; yet I praie you remember I am not alienate from you, but that I am your chriſtian brother; neither you ſo charged, but you ought to conſider equitie; nor yet ſo priuileged, but that you haue a dutie of God appointed you how you ſhall doo your office; which if you excéed, will be gréeuouſlie required at your hands. It is lawfull for you to vſe your gifts which I know God hath largelie giuen you, as your learning, art, and eloquence, ſo as thereby you doo not ſeduce the minds of the ſimple and vnlearned iurie, to credit matters otherwiſe than they be. For maſter ſergeant, I know how by perſuaſions, inforcements, preſumptions, applieng, implieng, inferring, coniecturing, deducing of arguments, wreſting and excéeding the law, the circumſtances, the depoſitions and confeſſions that vnlearned men may be inchanted to thinke and iudge thoſe that be things indifferent, or at the worſt but ouerſights to be great treaſons; ſuch power orators haue, & ſuch ignorance the vnlearned haue. Almightie God by the mouth of his prophet dooth conclude ſuch aduocates be curſſed, ſpeaking theſe words: Curſſed be he that dooth his office craftilie, corruptlie, and maliciouſlie. And conſider alſo, that my bloud ſhall be required at your hands, and puniſhed in you and yours, to the third and fourth generation. Notwithſtanding, you and the iuſtices excuſe alwaies ſuch erronious doings, when they be after called in queſtion by the verdict of the twelue men: but I aſſure you, the purgation ſerueth you as it did Pilat, and you waſh your hands of the bloudſhed, as Pilat did of Chriſts. And now to your matter.

Stanford. And it pleaſe you my lords, I doubt not to prooue euidentlie and manifeſtlie, that Throckmorton is worthilie and rightlie indicted and arreigned of theſe treaſons, and that he was a principall deuiſer, procurer, and contriuer of the late rebellion; and that Wiat was but his miniſter. How ſaie you Throckmorton, did not you ſend Winter to Wiat into Kent, and did deuiſe that the tower of London ſhould be taken, with other inſtructions concerning Wiats ſturre and rebellion?

Throckmorton. Maie it pleaſe you that I ſhall anſwer particularlie to the matters obiected againſt me, in aſmuch as my memorie is not good, and the ſame much decaied ſince my gréeuous impriſonment, with want of ſléepe, and other diſquietneſſe: I confeſſe I did ſaie to Winter that Wiat was deſirous to ſpeake with him, as I vnderſtood.

Stanford. Yea ſir, and you deuiſed togither of the taking of the tower of London, and of the other great treaſons.

Throckmorton. No, I did not ſo, prooue it.

Stanford. Yes ſir, you met with Winter ſundrie times as ſhall appeare, and in ſundrie places.

Throckmorton. That granted, prooueth no ſuch matter as is ſuppoſed in the indictment.

Winters confeſſion read by Stanford. Stanford read Winters confeſſion, which was of this effect, that Throckmorton met with Winter one daie in tower ſtréet, and told him, that ſir Thomas Wiat was deſirous to ſpeake with him, and Winter demanded where Wiat was, Throckmorton anſwered at his houſe in Kent, not farre from Gillingham, as I heard ſaie, where the ſhips lie. Then they parted at that time, and ſhortlie after, Throckmorton met with Winter, vnto whome Winter ſaid; Maſter Wiat dooth much miſlike the comming of the Spaniards into this realme, and feareth their ſhort arriuall héere, in as much as dailie he heareth thereof, dooth ſée dailie diuerſe of them arriue here, ſcattered like ſouldiors; and therefore he thinketh good the tower of London ſhould be taken by a ſleight, before the prince came, leaſt that péece be deliuered to the Spaniards. How ſaie you Throckmorton to it? Throckmorton anſwered; I miſlike it for diuerſe reſpects. Euen ſo doo I ſaid Winter. At another time Throckmorton met me the ſaid Winter in Paules, when he had ſent one to my houſe, to ſéeke me before, and he ſaid to me; You are admerall of the fléet that now goeth into Spaine. I anſwered Yea. Throckmorton ſaid, When will your ſhips be redie? I ſaid within ten daies. Throckmorton ſaid, I vnderſtand you are appointed to conduct and carrie the lord priuie ſeale into Spaine, and conſidering the danger of the Frenchmen, which you ſaie arme them to the ſea apace, me thinke it well doone, you put my ſaid lord and his traine on land in the weſt countrie to auoid all dangers. Throckmorton ſaid alſo, that Wiat changed his purpoſe for taking the tower of London. I ſaid I was glad of it, & as for the Frenchmen, I care not much for them, I will ſo handle the matter, that the quéenes ſhips ſhall be (I warrant you) in ſafegard. Another time I met with maſter Throckmorton, when I came from the emperours ambaſſadors, vnto whome I declared, that the emperour had ſent me a faire chaine, and ſhewed it vnto Throckmorton, who ſaid; For this chaine you haue ſold your countrie. I ſaid it is neither French king nor emperour that can make me ſell my countrie, but I will be a true Engliſhman. Then they parted. This is the ſumme of the talke betwixt Throckmorton and Winter.

Stanford. Now my maſters of the iurie, you haue heard my ſaiengs confirmed with Winters confeſſion. How ſaie you Throckmorton, can you denie this, if you will, you ſhall haue Winter iuſtifie it to your face.

Throckmorton. My lords, ſhall it pleaſe you that I ſhall anſwer.

Bromleie. Yea, ſaie your mind.

Throckmorton. I may trulie denie ſome part of this confeſſion, but bicauſe there is nothing materiall greatlie, I ſuppoſe the whole be true, and what is herein depoſed, ſufficient to bring me within the compaſſe of the indictment?

Stanford. It appeareth that you were of counſell with Wiat, in as much as you ſent Winter downe to him, who vttered vnto him diuerſe traitorous deuiſes.

Throckmorton. This is but coniecturall, yet ſith you will conſtrue it ſo maliciouſlie, I will recompt how I ſent Winter to Wiat, and then I praie you of the iurie iudge better than maſter ſergeant dooth. I met by chance a ſeruant of maſter Wiats, who demanded of me for Winter, and ſhewed me, that his maſter would gladlie ſpeake with him: and ſo without anie further declaration, deſired me if I met Winter to tell him maſter Wiats mind, and where he was. Thus much for the ſending downe of Winter.

Attorneie. Yea ſir, but how ſaie you to the taking of the tower of London, which is treaſon?

Throckmorton. I anſwer, though Wiat thought méet to attempt ſo dangerous an enterpriſe, and that Winter informed me of it, you cannot extend Wiats deuiſes to be mine, and to bring me within the compaſſe of treaſon. For what maner of reſoning or proofe is this, Wiat would haue taken the tower, Ergo Throckmorton is a traitor? Winter dooth make my purgation in his owne confeſſion, euen now red as it was by maſter ſergeant, though I ſaie nothing: for Winter dooth auow there, that I did much miſlike it. And bicauſe you ſhall the better vnderſtand that I did alwaies not alow theſe maſter Wiats deuiſes, I had theſe words to Winter, when he informed me of it; I thinke maſter Wiat would no Engliſhman hurt and this enterpriſe cannot be doone without the hurt and ſlaughter of both parties. For I know him that hath the charge of the péece, & his brother, both men of good ſeruice, the one had in charge a péece of great importance, Bullongne I meane, which was ſtoutlie aſſailed, & notwithſtanding he made a good accompt of it for his time: the like I am ſure he will doo by this his charge. Moreouer, to accompt the taking of the tower, is verie dangerous by the law. Theſe were my words to Winter. And beſides, it is verie vnlike that I of all men would confederate in ſuch a matter againſt the lieutenant of the tower, whoſe daughter my brother hath married, and his houſe and mine alied togither by mariage ſundrie times within theſe few yeares, Hare. But how ſaie you to this, that Wiat and you had conference togither ſundrie times at Warners houſe, and in other places?

Throckmorton. This is a verie generall charge to haue conference, but whie was it not as lawfull for me to confer with Wiat as with you, or anie other man? I then knew no more by Wiat, than by anie other. And to proue to talke with Wiat was lawfull and indifferent, the laſt daie that I did talke with Wiat, I ſaw my lord of Arundell, with other noble men and gentlemen, talke with him familiarlie in the chamber of preſence.

Hare. But they did not conſpire nor talke of anie ſturre againſt the Spaniards as you did pretend, & meant it againſt the queene, for you, Croſts, Rogers, and Warner did oftentimes deuiſe in Warners houſe about your traitorous purpoſes, or elſe what did you ſo often there?

Throckmorton. I confeſſe I did miſlike the queenes mariage with Spaine, and alſo the comming of the Spaniards hither, and then me thought I had reaſon to doo ſo: for I did learne the reaſons of my miſliking of you maſter Hare, maſter Southwell, and others in the parlement houſe, there I did ſee the whole conſent of the realme againſt it; and I a hearer, but no ſpeaker, did learne my miſliking of thoſe matters, confirmed by manie ſundrie reaſons amongſt you: but as concerning anie ſturre or vprore againſt the Spaniards, I neuer made anie, neither procured anie to be made; and for my much reſort to maſter Warners houſe, it was not to conferre with maſter Wiat, but to ſhew my freendſhip to my verie good lord the marqueſſe of Northampton, who was lodged there when he was inlarged.

Stanford. Did not you Throckmorton tell Winter that Wiat had changed his mind for the taking of the tower, wherby it appeared euidentlie that you knew of his doings?

Throckmorton. Truelie I did not tell him ſo, but I care not greatlie to giue you that wepon to plaie you withall, now let vs ſee what you can make of it.

Stanford. Yea ſir, that prooueth that you were priuie to Wiats mind in all his deuiſes and treaſons, & that there was ſending betwixt you and Wiat from time to time.

Throckmorton. What maſter ſergeant? Dooth this proue againſt me, that I knew Wiat did repent him of an euill deuiſed enterpriſe? Is it to know Wiats repentance ſinne? No, it is but a veniall ſinne, if it be anie it is not deadlie. But where is the meſſenger or meſſage that Wiat ſent to me touching his alteration, and yet it was lawfull inough for me to heare from Wiat at that time, as from anie other man, for anie act that I knew he had doone.

Dier. And it may pleaſe you my lords, and you my maſters of the iurie, to proue that Throckmorton is a principall doer in this rebellion, there is yet manie other things to be declared: among other, there is Croſts confeſſion, who ſaith, that he and you, and your complices, did manie times deuiſe about the whole matters, and he made you priuie to all his determinations, and you ſhewed him that you would go into the weſt countrie with the earle of Deuon, to ſir Peter Caroe, accompanied with others.

Throckmorton. Maſter Croſts is yet liuing, and is heere this daie, how happeneth it he is not brought face to face to iuſtifie this matter, neither hath beene of all this time? Will you know the truth? Either he ſaid not ſo, or he will not abide by it, but honeſtlie hath reformed himſelfe. And as for knowing his deuiſes, I was ſo well acquainted with them, that I can name none of them, nor you neither as matter knowne to me.

Attourneie. But whie did you aduiſe Winter to land my lord priuie ſeale in the weſt countrie?

Throckmorton. He that told you that my mind was to land him there, dooth partlie tell you a reaſon whie I ſaid ſo, if you would remember as well the one as the other: but bicauſe you are ſo forgetfull, I will recite wherefore. In communication betwixt Winter and me, as he declared to me that the Spaniards prouided to bring their prince hither, ſo the Frenchmen prepared to interrupt his arriuall: for they began to arme to the ſea, and had alreadie certeine ſhips on the weſt coaſt (as he hard.) Vnto whom I ſaid, that peraduenture not onelie the queenes ſhips vnder his charge might be in ieopardie, but alſo my lord priuie ſeale, and all his traine; the Frenchmen being well prepared to meet with them, and therefore for all euents it were good you ſhould put my ſaid lord in the weſt countrie in caſe you eſpie anie ieopardie. But what dooth this proue to the treaſons, if I were not able to giue conuenient reaſons to my talke?

Stanford. Marie ſir now commeth the proofes of your treaſons, you ſhall heare what Cutbert Vaughan ſaith againſt you.

Vaughans confeſſion was read by Stanford.

Then ſergeant Stanford did-read Vaughans confeſſion, tending to this effect. That Vaughan comming out of Kent, met with Throckmorton at maſter Warners houſe, who after he had doone commendations from Wiat to him, deſired to know where Croſts was. Throckmorton anſwered, either at Arundell houſe where he lodgeth, or in Paules. Then Vaughan deſired to know how things went at London, ſaieng; Maſter Wiat & we of Kent doo much miſlike the marriage with Spaine, and the comming of the Spaniards for diuerſe reſpects: howbeit, if other countries miſlike them as Kent dooth, they ſhall be but hardlie welcome, and ſo they parted. Shortlie after Throckmorton met with Vaughan in Paules, vnto whome Throckmorton declared with ſundrie circumſtances, that the Weſterne men were in a readineſſe to come forwards, and that ſir Peter Caroe had ſent vnto him euen now, and that he had in order a good band of horſſemen, and an other of footmen. Then Vaughan demanded what the earle of Deuonſhire would doo: Throckmorton anſwered he will mar all, for he will not go hence, and yet ſir Peter Caroe would meet him with a band, both of horſſemen and footmen, by the waie at Andeuer for his ſafegard, and alſo he ſhould haue beene well accompanied from hence with other gentlemen, yet all this will not mooue him to depart hence. Moreouer, the ſaid erle hath (as is ſaid) diſcouered all the whole matter to the chancellor, or elſe it is come out by his tailor, about the trimming of a ſhirt of male, and the making of a cloke. At another time, Vaughan ſaith, Throckmorton ſhewed him that he had ſent a poſt to ſir Peter Caroe, to come forward with as much ſpeed as might be, and to bring his force with him. And alſo Throckmorton aduiſed Vaughan to will maſter Wiat to come forward with his power: for now was the time, in as much as the Londoners would take his part if the matter were preſented to them. Vaughan ſaid alſo, that Throckmorton & Warner ſhould haue ridden with the ſaid earle weſtward. Moreouer the ſaid Vaughan depoſed, that Throckmorton ſhewed him in talke of the earle of Penbroke, that the ſaid earle would not fight againſt them, though he would not take their parts. Alſo Vaughan ſaid, that Throckmorton ſhewed him that he would ride downe into Barkeſhire to ſir Francis Englefields houſe, there to meet his eldeſt brother, to mooue him to take his part. And this was the ſum of Cutbert Vaughans confeſſion.

Stanford. How ſaie you? Dooth not here appeare euident matter to proue you a principall, who not onelie gaue order to ſir Peter Caroe and his adherents, for their rebellious acts in the weſt countrie, but alſo procured Wiat to make his rebellion, appointing him and the others alſo, when they ſhould attempt their enterpriſe, and how they ſhould order their doings tings from time to time. Beſides all this euident matter, you were ſpeciallie appointed to go awaie with the earle of Deuon as one that would direct all things, and giue order to all men. And therefore Throckmorton ſith this matter is ſo manifeſt, and the euidence ſo apparant, I would aduiſe you to confeſſe your fault, & ſubmit your ſelfe to the quéenes mercie.

Bromleie. How ſaie you, will you confeſſe the matter, and it will be beſt for you?

Throckmorton. No, I will neuer accuſe my ſelfe vniuſtlie, but in as much as I am come hither to be tried, I praie ye let me haue the law fauourablie.

Attourneie. It is apparant that you laie at London as a factor, to giue intelligence as well to them in the weſt, as to Wiat in Kent.

Throckmorton. How proue you that, or who dooth accuſe me but this condemned man?

Attourneie. Whie will you denie this matter? You ſhall haue Vaughan iuſtifie his whole confeſſion here before your face.

Throckmorton. It ſhall not néed, I know his vnſhamfaſtneſſe, he hath aduowed ſome of this vntrue talke before this time to my face, and it is not otherwiſe like, conſidering the price, but he will doo the ſame againe.

Attourneie. My lord and maſters, you ſhall haue Vaughan to iuſtifie this héere before you all, and confirme it with a booke oth.

Throckmorton. He that hath ſaid and lied, will not being in this caſe ſticke to ſweare and lie.

¶Then was Cutbert Vaughan brought into the open court.]

Sendall. How ſaie you Cutbert Vaughan, is this your owne confeſſion, and will you abide by all that is here written?

Vaughan. Let me ſée it and I will tell you.

¶Then his confeſſion was ſhewed him.]

Attourneie. Bicauſe you of the iurie the better may credit him, I praie you my lords let Vaughan be ſworne.

¶Then was Vaughan ſworne on a booke to ſaie nothing but the truth.]

Vaughan. It may pleaſe you my lords and maſters, I could haue béene well content to haue choſe ſeauen yeares impriſonment, though I had béene a frée man in the law, rather than I would this daie haue giuen euidence againſt ſir Nicholas Throckmorton; againſt whome I beare no diſpleaſure: but ſith I muſt néeds confeſſe my knowledge, I muſt confeſſe all that is there written is true. How ſaie you maſter Throckmorton, was there anie diſpleaſure betwéene you and me, to moue me to ſaie aught againſt you?

Throckmorton. None that I know. How ſaie you Vaughan, what acquaintance was there betwéene you and me, and what leters of credit or token did you bring me from Wiat, or anie other, to moue me to truſt you?

Vaughan. As for acquaintance, I knew you as I did other gentlemen: and as for letters, I brought you none other but commendations from maſter Wiat, as I did to diuerſe other of his acquaintance at London.

Throckmorton. You might as well forge the commendations as the reſt: but if you haue doone with Vaughan my lords, I praie you giue me leaue to anſwer.

Bromleie. Speake and be ſhort.

Throckmorton. I ſpeake generallie to all that be here preſent, but ſpeciallie to you of my iurie, touching the credit of Vaughans depoſitions againſt me, a condemned man, and after to the matter: and note I praie you the circumſtances, as ſomewhat materiall to induce the better. Firſt I praie you remember the ſmall familiaritie betwixt Vaughan and me, as he hath aduowed before you, and moreouer, to procure credit at my hand, brought neither letter nor token from Wiat, nor from anie other to me, which he alſo hath confeſſed here: and I will ſuppoſe Vaughan to be in as good condition as anie other man here, that is to ſaie, an vncondemned man: yet I referre it to your good iudgement, whether it were like that I, knowing onelie Vaughans perſon from an other man, and hauing none other acquaintance with him, would ſo frankelie diſcouer my mind to him in ſo dangerous a matter. How like (I ſaie) is this; when diuerſe of theſe gentlemen now in captiuitie, being my verie familiars, could not depoſe anie ſuch matter againſt me, and neuertheleſſe vpon their examinations haue ſaid what they could? And though I be no wiſe man, I am not ſo raſh as to vtter to an vnknowne man (for ſo I may call him in compariſon) a matter ſo dangerous for me to ſpeake, and him to heare. But bicauſe my truth and his falſhood ſhall the better appeare vnto you, I will declare his inconſtancie in vttering this his euidence. And for my better credit, it may pleaſe you maſter Southwell, I take you to witneſſe, when Vaughan firſt iuſtified this his vniuſt accuſation againſt me before the lord Paget, the lord Chamberleine, you maſter Southwell, and others, he referred the confirmation of this his ſurmiſed matter, to a letter ſent from him to ſir Thomas Wiat, which letter dooth neither appeare, nor anie teſtimonie of the ſaid maſter Wiat againſt me touching the matter: for I doubt not ſir Thomas Wiat hath béen examined of me, and hath ſaid what he could directlie or indirectlie. Alſo Vaughan ſaith, that yoong Edward Wiat could confirme this matter, as one that knew this pretended diſcourſe betwixt Vaughan and me, and thereupon I made ſute that Edward Wiat might either be brought face to face to me, or otherwiſe be examined.

Southwell. Maſter Throckmorton you miſtake your matter, for Vaughan ſaid, that Edward Wiat did know ſome part of the matter, and alſo was priuie of the letter that Vaughan ſent ſir Thomas Wiat.

Throckmorton. Yea ſir, that was Vaughans laſt ſhift, when I charged him before the maſter of the horſſe and you, with his former allegations touching his witneſſe, whome when he eſpied would not doo ſo lewdlie as he thought, then he vſed this alteration. But where be Edward Wiats depoſitions of anie thing againſt me? Now it appeareth neither his firſt nor his laſt tale to be true. For you know maſter Bridges, and ſo dooth my lord your brother, that I deſired twice or thrice Edward Wiat ſhould be examined, and I am ſure, and moſt aſſured he hath béene willed to ſaie what he could, and here is nothing depoſed by him againſt me, either touching anie letter or other conference. Or where is Vaughans letter ſent by ſir Thomas Wiat concerning my talke?

But now I will ſpeake of Vaughans preſent eſtate in that he is a condemned man, whoſe teſtimonie is nothing worth by anie law. And bicauſe falſe witneſſe is mentioned in the goſpell, treating of accuſation, hearke I praie you what S. Ierome ſaith, expounding that place. It is demanded whie Chriſts accuſers be called falſe witneſſes, which did report Chriſts words not as he ſpake them. They be falſe witneſſes ſaith S. Ierome, which doo ad, alter, wreſt, double, or doo ſpeake for hope to auoid death, or for malice to procure another mans death: for all men maie eaſilie gather he cannot ſpeake truelie of me, or in the caſe of another mans life, where he hath hope of his owne by accuſation. Thus much ſpeaketh S. Ierome of falſe witneſſe. By the ciuill law there be manie exceptions to be taken againſt ſuch teſtimonies: but bicauſe we be not gouerned by that law, neither haue I my triall by it, it ſhall be ſuperfluous to trouble you therewith, & therefore you ſhall heare what your owne law dooth ſaie. There was a ſtatute made in my late ſoueraigne lord & maſter his time, touching accuſation, and theſe be the words.

Be it enacted, that no perſon nor perſons, &c: ſhalbe indicted, arreigned, condemned, or conuicted for anie offenſe of treaſon, petit treaſon, miſpriſion of treſon, for which the ſame offendor ſhall ſuffer anie pains of death, impriſonment, loſſe or forfeiture of his goods, lands, &c: vnleſſe the ſame offendor be accuſed by two ſufficient & lawfull witneſſes, or ſhall willinglie without violence confeſſe the ſame. And alſo in the firſt yeare of his reigne, it is thus ratified as inſueth.

That no perſon nor perſons ſhall be indicted, arreigned, condemned, conuicted or attainted of the treaſons or offenſes aforeſaid, or for anie other treaſons that now be, or hereafter ſhall be; vnleſſe the ſame offendor or offendors be therof accuſed by two lawfull and ſufficient accuſers, which at the time of the arreignement of the parties ſo accuſed (if they be then liuing) ſhall be brought in perſon before the ſaid partie accuſed, and auow and mainteine that they haue to ſaie againſt the ſaid partie, to proue him giltie of the treaſons or offenſe conteined in the bill of indictment laid againſt the partie arreigned, vnleſſe the ſaid partie arreigned ſhall be willing without violence to confeſſe the ſame. Here note (I praie you) that our law doth require two lawfull and ſufficient accuſers to be brought face to face, and Vaughan is but one, and the ſame moſt vnlawfull and inſufficient. For who can be more vnlawfull and inſufficient, than a condemned man, and ſuch one as knoweth to accuſe me is the meane to ſaue his owne life? Remember (I praie you) how long & how manie times Vaughans execution hath beene reſpited, and how often he hath beene coniured to accuſe (which by Gods grace he withſtood vntill the laſt houre) what time perceiuing there was no waie to liue, but to ſpeake againſt me or ſome other (his former grace being taken awaie) did redeeme his life moſt vniuſtlie and ſhamefullie, as you ſee.

Hare. Why ſhould he accuſe you more than anie other, ſeeing there was no diſpleaſure betwixt you, if the matter had not beene true?

Throckmorton. Bicauſe he muſt either ſpeake of ſome man, or ſuffer death, and then he did rather chooſe to hurt him whom he leaſt knew, & ſo loued leaſt, than anie other well knowen to him, whome he loued moſt. But to you of my iurie I ſpeake ſpeciallie, and therefore I praie you note what I ſaie. In a matter of leſſe weight than triall of life and land, a man maie by the law take exceptions to ſuch as be impaneled, to trie the controuerſies betwixt the parties: as for example. A man maie chalenge that the ſhiriffe is his enimie, and therfore hath made a parciall returne; or bicauſe one of the iurie is the ſhiriffe my aduerſaries ſeruant: and alſo in caſe my aduerſaries villen or bondman be impaneled, I may lawfullie chalenge him, bicauſe the aduerſarie part hath power ouer his villens lands and goods, and hath the vſe of his bodie for ſeruile office: much more I may of right take exception to Vaughans teſtimonie, my life and all that I haue depending therupon, and the ſame Vaughan being more bound to the queenes highneſſe my aduerſarie (that wo is me therefore) but ſo the law doth here ſo terme hir maieſtie, than anie villen is to his lord: for hir highneſſe hath not onlie power ouer his bodie, lands, and goods, but ouer his life alſo.

Stanford. Yea, the exception are to be taken againſt the iurie in that caſe, but not againſt the witneſſe or accuſer, & therefore your argument ſerueth litle for you.

Throckmorton. That is not ſo, for the vſe of the iurie, and the witneſſe and the effect of their doings doth ſerue me to my purpoſe, as the law ſhall diſcuſſe. And thus I make my compariſon. By the ciuill law the iudge doth giue ſentence vpon the depoſitions of the witneſſe, & by your law the iudge doth giue iudgement vpon the verdict of the iurie; ſo as the effect is both one to finiſh the matter, triall in law, as well by the depoſitions of the witneſſe, as by the iuries verdict, though they varie in forme and circumſtance: and ſo Vaughans teſtimonie being credited, may be the materiall cauſe of my condemnation, as the iurie to be induced by his depoſitions to ſpeake their verdict, and ſo finallie therevpon the iudge to giue ſentence. Therefore I may vſe the ſame exceptions againſt the iurie, or anie of them, as the principall meane that ſhall occaſion my condemnation.

Bromlee. Why doo you denie, that euerie part of Vaughans tale is vntrue?

Attourn. You may ſee he will denie all, and ſaie there was no ſuch communication betwixt them.

Throckm ton, I confeſſe ſome part of Vaughans confeſſion to be true, as the name, the places, the time, and ſome part of the matter.

Attourn. So you of the iurie may perceiue the priſoner doth confeſſe ſome thing to be true.

Throckm ton. As touching my ſending to ſir Peter Caroe, or his ſending to me, or concerning my aduiſe to maiſter Wiat to ſtir or to repaire hither, or touching the earle of Deuonſhire parting hence, and my going with him, and alſo concerning the matter of the erle of Penbroke, I doo aduow and ſaie that Vaughan hath ſaid vntrulie.

Southwel As for my lord of Penbroke, you neede not excuſe the matter, for he hath ſhewed himſelfe cleere in theſe matters like a noble man, and that we all know.

Hare. Why what was the talke betwixt Vaughan and you ſo long in Paules, if theſe were not ſo, and what meant your oft meetings?

Throckm ton. As for our often meetings, they were of no ſet purpoſe, but by chance, & yet no oftener than twiſe. But ſithence you would know what communication paſſed betwixt vs in Paules church, I will declare. We talked of the incommodities of the marriage of the queene with the prince of Spaine, and how grieuous the Spaniards would be to vs here. Vaughan ſaid, that it ſhould be verie dangerous for anie man, that trulie profeſſed the goſpell to liue here, ſuch was the Spaniards crueltie, and eſpeciallie againſt chriſtian men. Wherevnto I anſwered it was the plague of God iuſtlie come vpon vs; and now almightie God dealt with vs as he did with the Iſraelites, taking from them for their vnthankefulneſſe their godlie kings, & did ſend tyrants to reigne ouer them. Euen ſo he handled vs Engliſhmen, which had a moſt godlie & vertuous prince to reigne ouer vs, my late ſouereigne lord and maiſter king Edward, vnder whome we might both ſafelie and lawfullie profeſſe Gods word, which with our lewd doings, demeanor, and liuing, we handled ſo irreuerentlie, that to whip vs for our faults he would ſend vs ſtrangers, yea ſuch verie tyrants to exerciſe great tyrannie ouer vs, and did take awaie the vertuous and faithfull king from amongſt vs: for euerie man of euerie eſtate did colour his naughtie affections with a pretenſe of religion, and made the goſpell a ſtalking horſſe to bring their euill deſires to effect. This was the ſumme of our talke in Paules ſomewhat more dilated.

Stanfo That it may appeere yet more euidentlie how Throckmorton was a principall dooer and counſellor in this matter, you ſhall heare his owne confeſſion of his owne hand writing. ¶ The clearke began to read, Throckmorton deſired maiſter Stanford to read it, and the iurie well to marke it. Then maiſter Stanford did read the priſoners owne confeſſion to this effect: that Throckmorton had conference with Wiat, Caroe, Croftes, Rogers, and Warner, as well of the queenes marriage with the prince of Spaine, as alſo of religion, and did particularlie conferre with euerie the forenamed, of the matters aforeſaid. Moreouer, with ſir Thomas Wiat the priſoner ner talked of the brute that the Weſterne men ſhuld much miſlike the comming of the Spaniards into this realme, being reported alſo that they intended to interrupt their arriuall here. And alſo that it was ſaid, that they were in conſultation about the ſame at Exceſter. Wiat alſo did ſaie, that ſir Peter Caroe could not bring the ſame matter to good effect, nor that there was any man ſo meet to bring it to good effect, as the erle of Deuonſhire, & ſpeciallie in the weſt parts, inſomuch as they drew not all by one line.

Then Throckmorton aſked how the Kentiſhmen were affected to the Spaniards? Wiat ſaid; The people like them euill inough, and that appeered now at the comming of the countie of Egmount, for they were readie to ſtur againſt him and his traine, ſuppoſing it had bin the prince. But ſaid Wiat, ſir Robert Southwell, maiſter Baker, and maiſter Moile, and their affinitie, which be in good credit in ſome places of the ſhire, will for other malicious reſpects hinder the libertie of their countrie. Then Throckmorton ſhould ſaie; Though I know there hath beene an vnkindneſſe betwixt maiſter Southwell and you for a monie matter, wherein I trauelled to make you friends, I doubt not, but in ſo honeſt a matter as this is, he will for the ſafegard of his countrie ioine with you, and ſo you may be ſure of the lord Aburgauennie & his force. Then Wiat ſaid, It is for another matter than for monie that we diſagree, wherein he hath handled me and others verie doublie & vnneighborlie; howbeit, he can doo no other, neither to me, nor to anie other man, & therefore I forgiue him. Item, with ſir Peter Caroe, Throckmorton had conference touching the impeachment of the landing of the ſaid prince, and touching prouiſion of armour and munition as inſueth, that is to ſaie, that ſir Peter Caroe told Throckmorton that he truſted his countriemen would be true Engliſhmen, and would not agree to let the Spaniards to gouerne them. Item, the ſaid ſir Peter Caroe ſaid, the matter importing the French king, as it did, he thoght the French king would worke to hinder the Spaniards comming hither, with whome the ſaid ſir Peter did thinke good to practiſe for armour, munition, and monie.

Then Throckmorton did aduiſe him to beware that he brought anie Frenchmen into the realme forceable, inaſmuch as he could as euill abide the Frenchmen after that ſort as the Spaniards. And alſo Throckmorton thought the French king vnable to giue aid to vs, by meanes of the great conſumption in their owne warres. Maiſter Caroe ſaid; As touching the bringing in of the Frenchmen, he meant it not, for he loued neither partie, but to ſerue his owne countrie, and to helpe his countrie from bondage: declaring further to Throckmorton, that he had a ſmall barke of his owne to worke his practiſe by, & ſo he ſaid, that ſhortlie he intended to depart to his owne countrie, to vnderſtand the deuotion of his countrimen. Item Throckmorton did ſaie, he would for his part hinder the cōming in of the Spaniards as much as he could by perſuaſion. Item to ſir Edward Warner, he had and did bemone his owne eſtate, and the tyrannie of the time extended vpon diuerſe honeſt perſons for religion, and wiſhed it were lawfull for all of ech religion to liue ſafelie acording to their conſcience; for the law (Ex officio) will be intollerable, & the clergies diſcipline now maie rather be reſembled to the Turks tyrannie, than to the teaching of chriſtian religion. ¶ This was the ſumme of the matter which was read in the foreſaid confeſſion, as maters moſt greeuous againſt the priſoner.] Then Throckmorton ſaid; Sithence maiſter ſergeant you haue read and gathered the place (as you thinke) that maketh moſt againſt me, I praie you take the pains, and read further, that hereafter whatſoeuer become of me, my words be not peruerted and abuſed to the hurt of ſome others, and eſpeciallie againſt the great perſonages, of whom I haue beene ſundrie times (as appeareth by my anſwers) examined, for I perceiue the net was not caſt onelie for little fiſhes, but for the great ones, Iuxta adagium.

Stanford.

It ſhall be but loſſe of time, and we haue other things to charge you withall, and this that you deſire dooth make nothing for you.

Dier.

And for the better confirmation of all the treaſons obiected againſt the priſoner, and therein to proue him guiltie, you of the iurie ſhall heare the duke of Suffolks depoſitions againſt him, who was a principall, and hath ſuffered accordinglie. ¶ Then the ſaid ſergeant read the dukes confeſſion touching the priſoner, amounting to this effect, that the lord Thomas Greie did informe the ſaid duke, that ſir Nicholas Throckmorton was priuie to the whole deuiſes againſt the Spaniards, & was one that ſhould go into the weſt countrie with the earle of Deuonſhire.]

Throckmorton.

But what dooth the principall authour of this matter ſaie againſt me, I meane the lord Thomas Greie who is yet liuing? Why be not his depoſitions broght againſt me, for ſo it ought to be, if he can ſaie anie thing? Will you know the truth? Neither the lord Thomas Greie hath ſaid, can ſaie, or will ſaie anie thing againſt me, notwithſtanding the duke his brothers confeſſion and accuſation, who hath affirmed manie other things beſides the truth. I ſpeake not without certeine knowledge: for the lord Thomas Greie being my priſon-felow for a ſmall time, informed me, that the duke his brother had miſreported him in manie things, amongſt others in matters touching me, which he had declared to you maiſter Southwell, and other the examinors not long ago. I am ſure if the lord Thomas could, or would haue ſaid anie thing, it ſhould haue beene here now. And as to the dukes confeſſion, it is not materiall: for he dooth referre the matter to the lord Thomas report, who hath made my purgation.

The atturnie.

And it pleaſe you my lords, and you my maiſters of the iurie, beſides theſe matters touching Wiats rebellion, ſir Peter Caroes treaſons and confederating with the duke of Suffolke, and beſides the priſoners conſpiracie with the earle of Deuonſhire, with Crofts, Rogers, Warner, and ſundrie others in ſundrie places, it ſhall manifeſtlie appeare vnto you, that Throckmorton did conſpire the queenes maieſties death, with William Thomas, ſir Nicholas Arnold, and other traitors intending the ſame, which is the greateſt matter of all others, and moſt to be abhorred. And for proofe hereof, you ſhall heare what Arnold ſaith. ¶ Then was ſir Nicholas Arnolds confeſſion read, ſaieng that Throckmorton ſhewed to him, riding betwixt Hinam and Croſſelaund in Glouceſterſhire, that Iohn Fitz Williams was verie much diſpleaſed with William Thomas.

Attournie.

William Thomas deuiſ[illegible] that Iohn Fitzwilliams ſhould kill the queene, and Throckmorton knew of it, as appeareth by Arnolds confeſſion.

Throckmorton.

Firſt I denie that I ſaid anie ſuch thing to maiſter Arnold, and though he be an honeſt man, he may either forget himſelfe, or deuiſe meanes how to vnburthen himſelfe of ſo weightie a matter as this is; for he is charged with the mater as principall. Which I did perceiue when he charged me with his tale, and therefore I doo blame him the leſſe, that he ſeeketh how to diſcharge himſelfe, vſing me as a witneſſe, if he could ſo transferre the deuiſe to William Thomas. But trulie I neuer ſpake anie ſuch words vnto him. And for my better declaration, I did ſee Iohn Fitzwilliams here euen now, who can teſtifie, that he neuer ſhewed me of any diſpleſure betwixt them, and as I know nothing of the diſpleaſure betwixt them, ſo I know nothing of the cauſe: I pray you my lords let him be called to depoſe in this matter what he can. Then John Fitzwilliams drew to the barre, and preſented himſelfe to depoſe his knowledge in the matter in open court.

The atturnie. I praie you my lords ſuffer him not to be ſworne, neither to ſpeake, we haue nothing to doo with him.

Throckmorton. Why ſhould he not be ſuffered to tell truth? And why be ye not ſo well contented to heare truth for me as vntruth againſt me?

Hare. Who called you hither Fitzwilliams, or commanded you to ſpeake? You are a verie buſie officer.

Throckmorton. I called him, and doo humblie deſire that he maie ſpeake, and be heard as well as Vaughan; or elſe I am not indifferentlie vſed, eſpeciallie ſeeing maiſter attourneie dooth ſo preſſe this matter againſt me.

Southwell. Go your waies Fitzwilliams, the court hath nothing to doo with you: peraduenture you would not be ſo readie in a good cauſe. Then John Fitzwilliams departed the court, and was not ſuffered to ſpeake.

Throckmorton. Sithence this gentlemans declaration may not be admitted, I truſt you of the iurie can perceiue, it was not for anie thing he had to ſaie againſt me, but contrariwiſe that it was feared he would ſpeake for me. And now to maiſter Arnolds depoſitions againſt me, I ſaie I did not tell him anie ſuch words, ſo as if it were materiall, there is but his yea and my naie. But bicauſe the words be not ſore ſtrained againſt me, I praie you maiſter atturneie why might not I haue told maiſter Arnold, that John Fitzwilliams was angrie with William Thomas, and yet know no cauſe of the anger? It might be vnderſtand, to diſagree oftentimes. Who dooth confeſſe that I know anie thing of William Thomas deuiſe touching the queenes death? I will anſwer, No man. For maiſter Arnold dooth mention no word of that matter, but of the diſpleaſures betwixt them. And to ſpeake that, dooth neither proue treaſon, nor knowledge of treaſon. Is here all the euidence againſt me that you haue to bring me within the compaſſe of the indictment?

Stanford. Me thinke the matters confeſſed by others againſt you, togither with your owne confeſſion, will weie ſhrewdlie. But how ſaie you to the riſing in Kent, and to Wiats attempt againſt the queens roiall perſon at hir palace?

Bromleie. Why doo you not read Wiats accuſation to him, which dooth make him partener to his treaſons?

Southwell. Wiat hath greeuouſlie accuſed you, and in manie things that others haue confirmed.

Throckmorton. Whatſoeuer Wiat hath ſaid of me in hope of his life, he vnſaid it at his death. For ſince I came into this hall, I heard one ſaie (but I know him not) that Wiat vpon the ſcaffold did not onelie purge my ladie Elizabeth hir grace, and the erle of Deuonſhire, but alſo all the gentlemen in the tower, ſaieng they were all ignorant of the ſturre and commotion. In which number I take my ſelfe.

Hare. Notwithſtanding he ſaid, all that he had written and confeſſed to the councell, was true.

Throckmorton. Naie ſir, by your patience, maiſter Wiat ſaid not ſo, that was maiſter doctors addition.

Southwell. It appeareth you haue had good intelligence.

Throckmorton. Almightie God prouided that reuelation for me this daie ſince I came hither: for I haue bin in cloſe priſon theſe eight and fiftie daies, where I heard nothing but what the birds told me, which did flie ouer my head. And now to you of my iurie I ſpeake ſpeciallie, whome I deſire to marke attentiuelie what ſhall be ſaid. I haue beene indicted, as it appeareth, and now am arreigned of compaſſing the queenes maieſties death, of leuieng war againſt the queene, of taking the tower of London, of depoſing and depriuing the queene of hir roiall eſtate, and finallie to deſtroie hir, and of adherente to the queenes enimies. Of all which treaſons, to proue me guiltie, the queens learned councell hath giuen in euidence theſe points materiall; that is to ſaie: for the compaſſing or imagining the queenes death, and the deſtruction of hir roiall perſon, ſir Nicholas Arnolds depoſitions, which is, that I ſhould ſaie to the ſaid ſir Nicholas in Glocceſterſhire, that maiſter John Fitzwilliams was angrie with William Thomas.

Whereunto I haue anſwered, as you haue heard, both denieng the matter: and for the proofe on my ſide, doo take exceptions, becauſe there is no witneſſe but one. And neuertheleſſe, though it were granted, the depoſitions proue nothing concerning the queenes death. For leuieng of warre againſt the queene, there is alleged my conference with ſir Thomas Wiat, ſir James Crofts, ſir Edward Rogers, ſir Edward Warner. Againſt the mariage with Spaine, and the comming of the Spaniards hither, which talke I doo not denie in ſort as I ſpake it, and ment it: and notwithſtanding the malicious gathering this daie of my conference, proueth yet no leuieng of warre. There is alſo alleged for proofe of the ſame article, ſir James Crofts confeſſion, which (as you remember) implieth no ſuch thing, but generall talke againſt the mariage with Spaine. And of my departing weſtward with the earle of Deuon, which the ſaid James dooth not auow, & therefore I praie you conſider it as not ſpoken. There is alſo for proofe of the ſaid article, the duke of Suffolks confeſſion, with whome I neuer had conference; and therefore he auouched the tale of his brothers mouth, who hath made my purgation in thoſe matters; and yet if the matter were proued, they be not greatlie materiall in law. There is alſo alleged for the further proofe of the ſame article, and for depoſing and depriuing the queene of hir roiall eſtate, and for my adhering to the queenes enimies, Cutbert Vaughans confeſſion, whoſe teſtimonie I haue ſufficientlie diſproued by ſundrie authorities and circumſtances, and principallie by your owne law, which dooth require two lawfull and ſufficient witneſſes to be brought face to face. Alſo for the taking of the tower of London, there is alleged Winters depoſitions, which vttereth my miſliking, when he vttered vnto me ſir Thomas Wiats reſolution and deuiſe for attempting of the ſaid peece. And laſt of all, to inforce theſe matters, mine owne confeſſion is ingreeued againſt me, wherein there dooth appeare neither treaſon, neither concelement of treaſon, neither whiſpering of treaſon, nor procurement of treaſon.

And forſomuch as I am come hither to be tried by the law, though my innocencie of all theſe points materiall obiected, be apparant to acquit me, whereto I doo principallie cleaue: yet I will for your better credit and ſatiſfactions, ſhew you euidentlie, that if you would beleeue all the depoſitions laid againſt me, which I truſt you will not doo, I ought not to be attainted of the treaſon compriſed within my indictment, conſidering the ſtatute of repeale the laſt parlement, of all treaſons, other than ſuch as be declared in the fiue and twentith yeare of king Edward the third, both which ſtatutes, I pray you my lords, maie be read here to the inqueſt.

Bromleie. No ſir, there ſhall be no bookes brought at your deſire, we doo all know the law ſufficientlie without booke.

Throckmorton. Doo you bring me hither to trie me by the law, & will not ſhew me the law? What is your knowlege of the law to theſe mens ſatiſfactions, which haue my triall in hand? I praie you my lords, and my lords all, let the ſtatutes be read, as well for the queene, as for me.

anford. My lord chiefe iuſtice can ſhew the law, and will, if the iurie doo doubt of anie point.

rockmor- You know it were indifferent that I ſhould know and heare the law whereby I am adiudged, and forasmuch as the ſtatute is in Engliſh, men of meaner learning than the iuſtices can vnderſtand it, or elſe how ſhould we know when we offend?

re. You know not what belongeth to your caſe, and therefore we muſt teach you: it apperteineth not to vs to prouide bookes for you, neither ſit we here to be taught of you, you ſhould haue taken better heed to the law before you had come hither.

hrockmor- Becauſe I am ignorant, I would learne, and therefore I haue more need to ſee the law, and partlie as well for the inſtructions of the iurie, as for my own ſatiſfaction, which mee thinke were for the honor of this preſence. And now if it pleaſe you my lord chiefe iuſtice, I doo direct my ſpeech ſpeciallie to you. What time it pleaſed the queenes maieſtie, to call you to this honorable office, I did learne of a great perſonage of hir highneſſe priuie councell, that amongſt other good inſtructions, hir maieſtie charged and inioined you to miniſter the law and iuſtice indifferentlie without reſpect of perſons. And notwithſtanding the old error amongſt you, which did not admit anie witneſſe to ſpeake, or anie other matter to be heard in the fauor of the aduerſarie, hir maieſtie being partie; hir highneſſe pleaſure was, that whatſoeuer could be brought in the fauor of the ſubiect, ſhould be admitted to be heard. And moreouer, that you ſpeciallie, & likewiſe all other iuſtices, ſhould not perſuade themſelues to ſit in iudgement otherwiſe for hir highneſſe, than for hir ſubiect. Therefore this maner of indifferent proceeding being principallie inioined by Gods commandement, which I had thought partlie to haue remembred you & others here in commiſſion, in the beginning, if I might haue had leaue; and the ſame alſo being commanded you by the queens owne mouth: me thinke you ought of right to ſuffer me to haue the ſtatutes read openlie, and alſo to reiect nothing that could be ſpoken in my defenſe; and in thus dooing, you ſhall ſhew your ſelues worthie miniſters, and fit for ſo worthie a miſtreſſe.

Bromleie. You miſtake the matter, the queene ſpake thoſe words to maiſter Morgan chiefe iuſtice of the common plees: but you haue no cauſe to complaine, for you haue beene ſuffered to talke at your pleaſure.

Hare. What would you doo with the ſtatute booke? The iurie dooth not require it, they haue heard the euidence, and they muſt vpon their conſcience trie whether you be guiltie or no, ſo as the booke needeth not; if they will not credit the euidence ſo apparant, then they know not what they haue to doo.

Cholmleie. You ought not to haue anie books read here at your appointment, for where dooth ariſe anie doubt in the law, the iudges ſit here to informe the court, and now you doo but ſpend time.

The atturnie. I pray you my lord chiefe iuſtice repeat the euidence for the queene, and giue the iurie their charge, for the priſoner will keepe you here all daie.

Bromleie. How ſaie you? Haue you anie more to ſaie for your ſelfe?

Throckmorton. You ſeeme to giue and offer me the law, but in verie deed I haue onelie the forme and image of the law; neuertheleſſe, ſith I cannot be ſuffered to haue the ſtatutes red openlie in the booke, I will by your patience geſſe at them as I maie, and I praie you to helpe me if I miſtake, for it is long ſince I did ſee them. The ſtatute of repeale made the laſt parlement, hath theſe words: Be it enacted by the queene, that from henceforth none act, deed, or offenſe, being by act of parlement or ſtatute made treaſon, petit treaſon, or miſpriſion of treaſon, by words, writing, printing, ciphering, deeds, or otherwiſe whatſoeuer, ſhall be taken, had, deemed, or adiudged treaſon, petit treaſon: but onelie ſuch as be declared or expreſſed to be treaſon, in or by an act of parlement made in the fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the third, touching and concerning treaſons, and the declaration of treaſons, and none other. Here may you ſee, this ſtatute dooth referre all the offenſes aforeſaid, to the ſtatute of the fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the third, which ſtatute hath theſe words touching and concerning the treaſons that I am indicted and arreigned of, that is to ſaie: Whoſoeuer dooth compaſſe or imagine the death of the king, or leuie warre againſt the king in his realme, or being adherent to the kings enimies within this realme, or elſewhere, and be thereof probablie attainted by open deed by people of their condition; ſhall be adiudged a traitor. Now I praie you of my iurie which haue my life in triall, note well what things at this daie be treaſons, and how theſe treaſons muſt be tried and decerned; that is to ſay, by open deed, which the lawes dooth at ſome time terme (Ouert act.) And now I aſke notwithſtanding my indictment, which is but matter alleged, where dooth appeare the open deed of anie compaſſing or imagining the queenes death? Or where dooth appeare anie open deed of being adherent to the queens enimies, giuing to them aid and comfort? Or where dooth appeare anie open deed of taking the tower of London?

Bromleie. Why doo not you of the queenes learned councell anſwer him? Me thinke, Throckmorton, you need not haue the ſtatutes, for you haue them meetlie perfectlie.

Stanford. You are deceiued to conclude all treaſons in the ſtatute of the fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the third; for that ſtatute is but a declaration of certeine treaſons, which were treaſons before at the common law. Euen ſo there dooth remaine diuerſe other treaſons at this daie at the common law, which be expreſſed by that ſtatute, as the iudges can declare. Neuertheleſſe, there is matter ſufficient alleged and proued againſt you, to bring you within the compaſſe of the ſame ſtatute.

Throckmorton. I praie you expreſſe thoſe matters that bring me within the compaſſe of the ſtatute of Edward the third. For the words be theſe: And be thereof attainted by open deed: By people of like condition.

Bromleie. Throckmorton you deceiue your ſelfe, and miſtake theſe words; By people of their condition. For thereby the law dooth vnderſtand the diſcouering of your treaſons. As for example: Wiat and the other rebels, attainted for their great treaſons, alreadie declare you to be his and their adherent, in as much as diuerſe & ſundrie times you had conference with him and them about the treaſon, ſo as Wiat is now one of your condition, who (as all the world knoweth) hath committed an open traitorous fact, Throckmorton. By your leaue my lord, this is a verie ſtrange and ſingular vnderſtanding. For I ſuppoſe the meaning of the law-makers did vnderſtand theſe words: By people of their condition; of the ſtate and condition of thoſe perſons which ſhould be on the inqueſt to trie the partie arreigned, guiltie or not guiltie, and nothing to the bewraieng of the offenſe by another mans act, as you ſaie. For what haue I to doo with Wiats acts, that was not nigh him by one hundred miles?

The atturnie. Will you take vpon you to ſkill better of the law than the iudges? I doubt not but you of the iurie will credit as it becommeth you.

Cholmleie. Concerning the true vnderſtanding of theſe words: By people of their condition, my lord chiefe iuſtice here hath declared the truth, for Wiat was one of your condition, that is to ſaie, of your conſpiracie.

Hare. You doo not denie, Throckmorton, but that there hath beene conference and ſending betweene Wiat and you: and he and Winter dooth confeſſe the ſame, with others, ſo as it is plaine; Wiat may be called one of your condition.

Throckmorton. Well, ſéeing you my iudges rule the vnderſtanding of theſe words in the ſtatute, by people of your condition, thus ſtrangelie againſt me: I will not ſtand longer vpon them. But where dooth appeare in me an open déed wherevnto the treaſon is ſpeciallie referred?

Bromleie. If thrée or foure doo talke, deuiſe, and conſpire togither of a traitorous act to be doone, and afterwards one of them dooth commit treaſon, as Wiat did, then the law dooth repute them, and euerie of them as their acts, ſo as Wiats acts doo implie and argue of your open déed: and ſo the law dooth terme it and take it.

Throckmorton. Theſe be maruellous expoſitions and woonderfull implications, that another mans act whereof I was not priuie, ſhould be accounted mine: for Wiat did purge me that I knew nothing of his ſtirre.

Hare. Yea ſir, but you were a principall procurer and contriuer of Wiats rebellion, though you were not with him when he made the ſtirre. And as my lord here hath ſaid, the law alwaies dooth adiudge him a traitor, which was priuie, and dooth procure treaſon, or anie other man to commit treaſon, or a traitorous act, as you did Wiat and others: for ſo the Ouert act of thoſe which did it by your procurement, ſhall in this caſe be accounted your open deed. We haue a common caſe in the law, if one by procurement ſhould diſſeize you of your land, the law holdeth vs both wrong dooers, & giueth remedie as well againſt the one as the other.

Throckmorton. For Gods ſake applie not ſuch conſtructions againſt me, and though my preſent eſtate dooth not mooue you, yet it were well you ſhould conſider your office, and thinke what meaſure you giue to others, you your ſelues I ſaie ſhall aſſuredlie receiue the ſame againe. The ſtate of mortall life is ſuch, that men know full little what hangeth ouer them. I put on within theſe xij. moneths ſuch a mind, that I moſt wofull wight was as vnlike to ſtand here, as ſome of you that ſit there. As to your caſe laſt recited, wherby you would conclude; I haue remembred and learned of you maiſter Hare, and you maiſter Stanford in the parlement houſe, where you did ſit to make lawes, to expound and explane the ambiguities and doubts of law ſincerelie, and that without affections. There I ſaie I learned of you, and others my maiſters of the law, this difference betwixt ſuch caſes as you remembred one euen now, and the ſtatute whereby I am to be tried. There is a maxime or principle in the law, which ought not to be violated, that no penall ſtatute maie, ought, or ſhould be conſtrued, expounded, extended, or wreſted, otherwiſe than the ſimple words and nude letter of the ſame ſtatute dooth warrant and ſignifie. And amongeſt diuerſe good and notable reaſons by you there in the parlement houſe debated (maiſter ſergeant Stanford) I noted this one, whie the ſaid maxime ought to be inuiolable. You ſaid, conſidering the priuate affections manie times both of princes and miniſters within this realme, for that they were men, and would and could erre, it ſhould be no ſecuritie, but verie dangerous to the ſubiect, to refer the conſtruction and extending of penall ſtatutes to anie iudges equitie (as you termed it) which might either by feare of the higher powers be ſeduced, or by ignorance and follie abuſed: and that is an anſwer by procurement.

Bromleie. Notwithſtanding the principall (as you alledge it) and the preciſeneſſe of your ſticking to the bare words of the ſtatute, it dooth appéere and remaine of record in our learning, that diuerſe caſes haue béene adiudged treaſon, without the expreſſe words of the ſtatute, as the quéenes learned councell there can declare.

The attor It dooth appéere the priſoner did not onelie intiſe or procure Wiat, Caro, Rogers, and others, to commit their traitorous act, and there dooth his open facts appéere, which Vaughans confeſſion dooth witneſſe, but alſo he did mind ſhortlie after to aſſociat himſelfe with thoſe traitors; for he minded to haue departed with the earle of Deuonſhire weſtward.

Throckmorton. My innocencie concerning theſe matters I truſt ſufficientlie appéereth by my former anſwers, notwithſtanding the condemned mans vniuſt accuſation. But becauſe the true vnderſtanding of the ſtatute is in queſtion, I ſaie procurement, and ſpeciallie by words onelie, is without the compaſſe of it, and that I doo learne and prooue by the principle which I learned of maiſter Stanford.

Stanford. Maiſter Throckmorton, You and I maie not agrée this daie in the vnderſtanding of the law, for I am for the quéene, and you are for your ſelfe; the iudges muſt determine the matter.

Bromleie. He that dooth procure another man to commit a felonie or a murther, I am ſure you know well enough the law dooth adiudge the procurer there a felon or a murtherer; and in caſe of treaſon it hath béene alwaies ſo taken and reputed.

Throckmorton. I doo and muſt cleaue to my innocencie, for I procured no man to commit treſon: but yet for my learning I deſire to heare ſome caſe ſo ruled when the law was as it is now. I doo confeſſe it, that at ſuch time there were ſtatutes prouided for the procurer, counſellor, aider, abetter, and ſuch like, as there were in king Henrie the eights time; you might lawfullie make this cruell conſtruction, and bring the procurer within the compaſſe of the law. But theſe ſtatutes being repealed, you ought not now ſo to doo: and as to the principall procurer in felonie and murther, it is not like as in treaſon; for the principall and acceſſaries in felonie and murther be triable and puniſhable by the common law: and ſo in thoſe caſes the iudges maie vſe their equitie, extending the determination of the fault as they thinke good: but in treſon it is otherwiſe, the ſame being limited by ſtatute, which I ſaie and aduow is reſtreined from anie iudges conſtruction, by the maxime that I recited.

Happie by Throckmorton that the ſtatutes then repe

Stanford. Your lordſhips doo know a caſe in Richard the thirds time, where the procurer, to counterfeit falſe monie, was iudged a traitor, and the law was as it is now.

Hare. Maiſter ſergeant dooth remember you Throckmorton of an experience before our time, that the law hath béene ſo taken: and yet the procurer was not expreſſed in the ſtatute, but the law hath béene alwaies ſo taken.

Throckmorton. I neuer ſtudied the law, whereof I doo much repent me: yet I remember, whileſt penall ſtatutes were talked of in the parlement houſe, you the learned men of the houſe remembred ſome caſes contrarie to this laſt ſpoken of. And if I miſſreport them, I praie you helpe me. In the like caſe you ſpeake of concerning the procurer to counterfeit falſe monie; at one time the procurer was iudged a felon, and at another time neither felon nor traitor: ſo as ſome of your predeceſſors adiudged the procurer no traitor in the ſame caſe, but leaned to their principall, though ſome other extend their conſtructions too large. And here is two caſes with me, for one againſt me.

Becauſe

Bromleie. Becauſe you replie vpon the principall, I will remember where one taking the great ſeale of England from one writing, and putting it to another, was adiudged a traitor in Henrie the fourths time, and yet his act was not within the expreſſe words of the ſtatute of Edward the third. There be diuerſe other ſuch like caſes that maie be alledged and need were.

Throckmorton. I praie you my lord chiefe iuſtice call to your good remembrance, that in the ſelfe ſame caſe of the ſeale, iuſtice Spilman, a graue & well learned man, ſince that time, would not condemne the offendor, but did reprooue that former iudgement by you laſt remembred, as erronious.

Stanford. If I had thought you had béene ſo well furniſhed in booke caſes, I would haue béene better prouided for you.

Throckmorton. I haue nothing but I learned of you ſpeciallie maiſter ſergeant, and of others my maiſters of the law in the parlement houſe, & therefore I maie ſaie with the prophet (Salutem ex inimicis noſtris.)

Southwell. You haue a verie good memorie.

The attornie. If the priſoner maie auoid his treaſons after this maner, the quéenes ſuretie ſhall be in great ieopardie. For Iacke Cade the blacke ſmith, and diuerſe other traitors, ſometime alledging the law for them, ſometime they méant no harme to the king, but againſt his councell, as Wiat, the duke of Suffolke, and theſe did againſt the Spaniards, when there was no Spaniards within the realme. The duke and his brethren did miſtake the law, as you doo: yet at length did confeſſe their ignorance, and ſubmitted themſelues: and ſo were you beſt to doo.

Throckmorton. As to Cade and the blacke ſmith, I am not ſo well acquainted with their treaſons as you be: but I haue read in the chronicle, they were in the field with a force againſt the prince, whereby a manifeſt act did appéere. As to the duke of Suffolkes doings, they apperteine not to me. And though you would compare my ſpéech and talke againſt the Spaniards to the dukes acts, who aſſembled a force in armes, it is euident they differ much. I am ſorie to ingréeue anie other mans doings, but it ſerueth me for a péece of my defenſe, and therefore I wiſh that no man ſhould gather euill of it; God forbid that words and acts be thus confounded.

The attornie. Sir William Stanleie vſed this ſhift that the priſoner vſeth now; he ſaid he did not leuie warre againſt king Henrie the ſeauenth, but ſaid to the duke of Buckingham, that in a good quarrell he would aid him with fiue hundred men; and neuertheleſſe Stanleie was for thoſe words atteinted, who (as all the world knoweth) had before that time ſerued the king verie faithfullie and trulie.

Throckmorton. I praie you maiſter attorneie doo not conclude againſt me by blind contraries. Whether you alledge Stanlies caſe trulie or no, I know not. But admit it be as you ſaie, what dooth this prooue againſt me? I promiſed no aid to maiſter Wiat nor to anie other. The duke of Buckingham leuied warre againſt the king, with whome Stanleie was confederat ſo to doo as you ſaie.

The attornie. I praie you my lords that be the quéens commiſſioners, ſuffer not the priſoner to vſe the quéenes learned councell thus, I was neuer interrupted thus in my life, nor I neuer knew anie thus ſuffered to talke, as this priſoner is ſuffered; ſome of vs will come no more at the barre & we be thus handled.

Bromleie. Throckmorton you muſt ſuffer the quéenes learned councell to ſpeake, or elſe we muſt take order with you, you haue had leaue to talke at your pleaſure.

Hare. It is prooued that you did talke with Wiat againſt the comming of the Spaniards, and deuiſed to interrupt their arriuall: and you promiſed to doo what you could againſt them: wherevpon Wiat being incoraged by you, did leuie a force, and attempted warre againſt the quéenes roiall perſon.

Throckmorton. It was no treaſon nor no procurement of treaſon, to talke againſt the comming hither of the Spaniards, neither was it treaſon for me to ſaie I would hinder their comming hither as much as I could (vnderſtanding me rightlie as I meane it) yea though you would extend it to the worſt, it was but words, it was not treaſon at this daie as the law ſtandeth. And as for Wiats doing, they touch me nothing; for at his death when, it was no time to report vntruelie, he purged me.

Bromleie. By ſundrie caſes remembred here by the queenes learned councell (as you haue heard) that procurement which did appeare none otherwiſe but by words and thoſe you would make nothing, hath béene of long time, and by ſundrie well learned men in the lawes adiudged treaſon. And therefore, your procurement being ſo euident as it is, we maie lawfullie ſaie it was treaſon, bicauſe Wiat performed a traitorous act.

Throckmorton. As to the ſaid alleaged forepreſſidents againſt me, I haue recited as manie for me, and I would you my lord chiefe iuſtice ſhould incline your iudgments rather after the example of your honourable predeceſſors, iuſtice Markam, and others, which did eſchue corrupt iudgements, iudging directlie and ſincerelie, after the law & the principles in the ſame, than after ſuch men as ſwaruing from the truth, the maxime, and the law, did iudge corruptlie, malicioußlie, and affectionatlie.

Bromleie. Iuſtice Markam had reaſon to warrant his doings: for it did appeare, a merchant of London was arreigned and ſlanderoußlie accuſed of treaſon for compaſſing and imagining the kings death, he did ſaie he would make his ſonne heire of the crowne, and the merchant meant it of a houſe in Cheapſide at the ſigne of the crowne, but your caſe is not ſo.

Throckmorton. My caſe dooth differ I grant, but ſpeciallie bicauſe I haue not ſuch a iudge: yet there is an other cauſe to reſtreine theſe your ſtrange and extraordinarie conſtructions: that is to ſaie, a prouiſo in the latter end of the ſtatute of Edward the third, hauing theſe words: Prouided alwaies, if anie other caſe of ſuppoſed treaſon ſhall chance hereafter to come in queſtion or triall before anie iuſtice, other than is in the ſaid ſtatute expreſſed, that then the iuſtice ſhall forbeare to adiudge the ſaid caſe, vntill it be ſhewed to the parlement to trie whether it ſhould be treaſon or felonie. Here you are reſtreined by expreſſe words to adiudge anie caſe, that is not manifeſtlie mentioned before, and vntill it be ſhewed to the parlement.

Pirtman. That prouiſo is vnderſtood of caſes that maie come in triall which hath béene in vre, but the law hath alwaies taken the procurer to be a principall offendor.

Sanders. The law alwaies in caſes of treaſon dooth account all principals and no acceſſaries as in other offenſes, and therefore a man offending in treaſon, either by couert act or procurement, wherevpon an open déed hath inſued, as in this caſe, is adiudged by the law a principall traitor.

Throckmorton. You adiudge (me thinke) procurement verie hardlie, beſides the principall, and beſides the good prouiſo, and beſides the good example of your beſt and moſt godlie learned predeceſſors, the iudges of the realme, as I haue partlie declared, and notwithſtanding this grieuous racking & extending of this word procurement, I am not in the danger of it, for it dooth appeare by no depoſition that I procured neither one or other to attempt anie act.

Stanford. The iurie haue to trie whether it be ſo or no, let it weie as it will.

Hare.

I know no meane ſo apparant to trie procurement as by words, & that meane is probable inough againſt you, as well by your owne confeſſion, as by other mens depoſitions.

Throckmorton.

To talke of the quéenes marriage with the prince of Spaine, and alſo the comming hither of the Spaniards, is not to procure treſon to be doone: for then the whole parlement houſe, I meane the common houſe did procure treaſon. But ſith you will make no difference betwixt words and acts, I praie you remember a ſtatute made in my late ſoueraigne lord and maſters time, king Edward the ſixt, which apparantlie expreſſed the difference. Theſe be the words: Whoſoeuer dooth compaſſe or imagine to depoſe the king of his roiall eſtate by open preaching, expreſſe words or saiengs, ſhall for the firſt offenſe looſe and forfet to the king all his and their goods and cattels, and alſo ſhall ſuffer impriſonment of their bodies at the kings will and pleaſure. Whoſoeuer, &c: for the ſecond offenſe ſhall looſe & forfet to the king the whole iſſues and profits of all his or their lands, tenements and other hereditaments, benefices, prebends, and other ſpirituall promotions. Whoſoeuer, &c: for the third offenſe, ſhall for tearme of life or liues of ſuch offendor or offendors, &c: and ſhall alſo forfet to the kings maieſtie, all his or their goods and cattels, and ſuffer during his or their liues perpetuall impriſonment of his or their bodies. But whoſoeuer, &c: by writing, ciphering, or act, &c: ſhall for the firſt offenſe be adiudged a traitor, and ſuffer the paines of death. Here you maie perceiue how the whole realme and all your iudgements hath before this vnderſtood words and acts diuerſelie and apparantlie. And therfore the iudgements of the parlement did aſſigne diuerſitie of puniſhments, bicauſe they would not confound the true vnderſtanding of words & déeds, appointing for compaſſing and imagining by word, impriſonment: and for compaſſing and imagining by open déed, paines of death.

Bromleie.

It is agréed by the whole bench, that the procurer and the adherent be déemed alwaies traitors, when as a traitorous act was committed by anie one of the ſame conſpiracie: and there is apparant proofe of your adhering to Wiat, both by your owne confeſſion and other waies.

Throckmorton.

Adhering and procuring be not all one, for the ſtatute of Edward the third dooth ſpeake of adhering, but not of procuring; & yet adhering ought not to be further extended, than to the quéenes enimies within hir realme, for ſo the ſtatute dooth limit the vnderſtanding. And Wiat was not the quéenes enimie, for he was not ſo reputed when I talked with him laſt, and our ſpeech implied no enimie, neither tended to anie treaſon, or procuring of treaſon: and therefore I praie you of the iurie note, though I argue the law, I alleage mine innocencie, as the beſt part of my defenſe.

Hare.

Your adhering to the quéenes enimies within the realme, is euidentlie prooued: for Wiat was the quéenes enimie within the realme, as the whole realme knoweth it, and he hath confeſſed it both at his arreignement and at his death.

Throckmorton.

By your leaue, neither Wiat at his arreignement nor at his death, did confeſſe that he was the quéenes enimie when I talked laſt with him; neither was he reputed nor taken in fouretéene daies after, vntill he aſſembled a force in armes, what time I was at your houſe maſter Englefield, where I learned the firſt intelligence of Wiats ſtirre. And I aſke you who dooth depoſe that there paſſed anie maner of aduertiſement betwixt Wiat and me, after he had diſcouered his doings, and ſhewed himſelfe an enimie? If I had béene ſo diſpoſed, who did let me that I did not repaire to Wiat, or to ſend to him, or to the duke of Suffolke either, who was in mine owne countrie, and thither I might haue gone and conuaied my ſelfe with him, vnſuſpected for my departing homewards.

Englefield.

It is true that you were there at my houſe, accompanied with others your brethren, and to my knowledge, ignorant of theſe matters.

Bromleie.

Throckmorton, you confeſſed you talked with Wiat and others againſt the comming of the Spaniards, and of the taking of the tower of London, wherevpon Wiat leuied a force of men againſt the Spaniards he ſaid, and ſo you ſaie all: but in déed it was againſt the quéene, which he confeſſed at length: therefore Wiats acts doo prooue you counſellor and procurer, howſoeuer you would auoid the matter.

Throckmorton.

My thinke you would conclude againſt me with a miſhapen argument in logike, and you will giue me leaue, I will make an other.

Stanford.

The iudges ſit not here to make diſputations, but to declare the law, which hath béene ſufficientlie doone, if you would conſider it.

Hare.

You haue heard reaſon and the law, if you will conceiue it.

Throckmorton.

Oh mercifull God, oh eternall father, which ſéeſt all things, what maner of procéedings are theſe? To what purpoſe ſerueth the ſtatute of repeale the laſt parlement, where I heard ſome of you here preſent, and diuerſe other of the quéenes learned councell, grieuouſlie inueie againſt the cruell & bloudie lawes of king Henrie the eight, and againſt ſome lawes made in my late ſoueraigne lord and maſters time, king Edward the ſixt. Some termed them Dracos lawes, which were written in bloud: ſome ſaid they were more intollerable than anie laws that Dionyſius or anie other tyrant made. In concluſion, as manie men, ſo manie bitter tearmes and names thoſe lawes had. And moreouer, the preface of the ſame ſtatute dooth recite, that for words onelie, manie great perſonages, and others of good behauiour, haue béene moſt cruellie caſt awaie by theſe former ſanguinolent thirſtie lawes, with manie other ſuggeſtions for the repeale of the ſame. And now let vs put on indifferent eies, and throughlie conſider with our ſelues, as you the iudges handle the conſtructions of the ſtatute of Edward the third, with your equitie and extentions, whether we be not in much worſe caſe now than we were when thoſe cruell laws yoked vs. Theſe lawes albeit they were grieuous and captious, yet they had the verie propertie of a law after ſaint Paules deſcription. For thoſe lawes did admoniſh vs, and diſcouer our ſinnes plainelie vnto vs, & when a man is warned, he is halfe armed. Theſe lawes, as they be handled, be verie baits to catch vs, & onlie prepared for the ſame, and no laws: for at the firſt ſight they aſcerteine vs we be deliuered from our old bondage, and by the late repeale the laſt parlement, we liue in more ſecuritie. But when it pleaſeth the higher powers to call anie mans life and ſaiengs in queſtion, then there be conſtructions, interpretations, and extentions reſerued to the iuſtices and iudges equitie, that the partie triable, as I am now, ſhall find himſelfe in much worſe caſe than before when thoſe cruell lawes ſtood in force. Thus our amendment is from Gods bleſſing into the warme ſunne. But I require you honeſt men which are to trie my life, conſider theſe opinions of my life, iudges be rather agréeable to the time, than to the truth: for their iudgements be repugnant to their owne principle, repugnant to their godlie and beſt learned predeceſſors opinions, repugnant I ſaie to the prouiſo in the ſtatute of repeale made in the laſt parlement.

The attornie.

Maſter Throckmorton quiet your ſelfe, and it ſhall be the better for you.

Throckmorton. Maiſter atturnie, I am not ſo vnquiet as you be, and yet our caſes are not alike: but bicauſe I am ſo tedious to you, and haue long troubled this preſence, it maie pleaſe my lord chiefe iuſtice to repeat the euidence wherewith I am charged, and my anſwers to all the obiections, if there be no other matter to laie againſt me.

¶ Then the chiefe iuſtice remembred particularlie all the depoſitions and euidences giuen againſt the priſoner, and either for want of good memorie, or good will, the priſoners anſwers were in part not recited: whereupon the priſoner craued indifferencie, and did helpe the iudges old memorie with his owne recitall.]

Sendall. My maiſters of the iurie, you haue to inquire whether ſir Nicholas Throckmorton knight, here priſoner at the barre, be giltie of theſe treaſons, or anie of them, whereof he hath beene indicted and this daie arreigned, yea or no. And if you find him giltie, you ſhall inquire what lands, tenements, goods, and cattels he had at the daie of his treaſons committed, or at anie time ſince: and whether he fled for the treaſons or no, if you find him not giltie.

Throckmorton. Haue you ſaid what is to be ſaid?

Sendall. Yea for this time.

Throckmorton. Then I praie you giue me leaue to ſpeake a few words to the iurie. The weight and grauitie of my cauſe hath greatlie occaſioned me to trouble you here long, and therefore I mind not to interteine you here long with anie prolix oration: you perceiue notwithſtanding this daie great contention betwixt the iudges and the queenes learned councell on the one partie, and me the poore and wofull priſoner on the other partie. The triall of our whole controuerſie, the triall of my innocencie, the triall of my life, lands, and goods, and the deſtruction of my poſteritie for euer, doth reſt in your good iudgements. And albeit manie this daie haue greatlie inueied againſt me, the finall determination thereof is transferred onelie to you. How grieuous & horrible the ſhedding of innocents bloud is in the ſight of almightie God, I truſt you doo remember. Therefore take heed (I ſaie) for Chriſts ſake, doo not defile your conſciences with ſuch heinous & notable crimes. They be grieuouſlie and terriblie puniſhed, as in this world and vale of miſerie vpon the childrens children to the third and fourth generation, and in the world to come with euerlaſting fire and damnation. Lift vp your minds to God, and care not too much for the world, looke not backe to the fleſhpots of Aegypt, which will allure you from heauenlie reſpects, to worldlie ſecuritie, and can thereof neither make you anie ſuertie. Beleeue I praie you, the queene and hir magiſtrats be more delighted with fauourable equitie, than with raſh crueltie. And in that you be all citizens, I will take my leaue of you with S. Paules farewell to the Epheſians, citizens alſo you be, whom he tooke to record that he was pure from ſheding anie bloud, a ſpeciall token & doctrine left for your inſtruction, that euerie of you maie waſh his hands of innocents bloud ſhed, when you ſhall take your leaue of this wretched world. The holie ghoſt be amongeſt you.

Sendall. Come hither ſergeant, take the iurie with you, and ſuffer no man to come at them, but to be ordered as the law appointeth, vntill they be agreed vpon their verdict.

Throckmorton. It may pleaſe you my lords and maiſters which be commiſſioners, to giue order that no perſon haue acceſſe or conference with the iurie, neither that any of the queenes learned councell be ſuffered to repaire to them, or to talke with anie of them, vntill they preſent themſelues here in open court, to publiſh their verdict.

¶ Vpon the priſoners ſute on this behalfe, the bench gaue order that two ſeargeants were ſworne to ſuffer no man to repaire to the iurie, vntill they were agreed according vnto order. Whervpon then the priſoner was by commandement of the bench withdrawne from the barre, and the court adiourned vntill three of the clocke at afternoone, at which houre the commiſſioners returned to the Guildhall, and there did tarie vntill the iurie were agreed vpon the verdict. And about fiue of the clocke, their agreement being aduertiſed to the commiſſioners, the ſaid priſoner, ſir Nicholas Throckmorton was againe brought to the barre, where alſo the iurie did repaire; and being demanded whether they were agreed vpon their verdict, anſwered vniuerſallie with one voice, Yea. Then it was asked who ſhould ſpeake for them: they anſwered, Whetſton the foreman.]

Sendall. Nicholas Throckmorton knight, hold vp thy hand.

Throckmorton. Then the priſoner did ſo vpon the ſummons.

Sendall. You that be of the iurie, looke vpon the priſoner.

Iurie. The iurie did as they were inioined.

Sendall. How ſaie you, is maiſter Throckmorton knight there priſoner at the bar, giltie of the treaſons whereof he hath beene indicted and arreigned in maner and forme, yea or no?

Whetſton. No.

Sendall. How ſaie you, did he flie vpon them?

Whetſton. No, we find no ſuch thing.

Throckmorton. I had forgotten to anſwer that queſtion before, but you haue found according to truth: and for the better warrantie of your doings, vnderſtand that I came to London, and ſo to the queenes councell vnbrought, when I vnderſtood they demanded for me: & yet I was almoſt an hundred miles hence, where if I had not preſumed vpon my truth, I could haue withdrawne my ſelfe from catching.

Bromleie. How ſaie you the reſt of you, is Whetſtons verdict all your verdicts?

Iurie. The whole inqueſt anſwered Yea.

Bromleie. Remember your ſelues better, haue you conſidered ſubſtantially the whole euidence in ſort as it was declared & recited; the matter dooth touch the queenes highneſſe, and your ſelues alſo, take good heed what you doo.

Whetſton. My lord, we haue throughlie conſidered the euidence laid againſt the priſoner, and his anſwers to all theſe matters, and accordinglie we haue found him not giltie agreeable to all our conſciences.

Bromleie. If you haue doone well, it is the better for you.

Throckmorton. It is better to be tried, than to liue ſuſpected. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſraell, for he hath viſited and redeemed his people, and hath raiſed vp a mightie ſaluation for vs in the houſe of his ſeruant Dauid. And it may pleaſe you my lord cheefe iuſtice, forſomuch as I haue bene indicted and arreigned of ſundrie treaſons, and haue according to the law put my triall to God and my countrie, that is to ſaie, to theſe honeſt men which haue found me not giltie, I humblie beſeech you to giue me ſuch benefit, acquitall and iudgement, as the law in this caſe dooth appoint.

¶ When the priſoner had ſaid theſe words the commiſſioners conſulted togither.]

Throckmorton. Maie it pleaſe you my lord cheefe iuſtice to pronounce ſentence for my diſcharge.

Bromleie. Whereas you doo aske the benefit that the law in ſuch caſe dooth appoint, I will giue it you; to wit, that where you haue beene indicted of ſundrie high treaſons, & haue beene heere this daie before the queenes commiſſioners and iuſtices arreigned of the ſaid treaſons, whervnto you haue pleaded not giltie, and haue for triall therein put your ſelfe on God & your countrie, and they haue found you not giltie, the court dooth award that you be cleerlie diſcharged, paieng your fœs. Notwithſtanding maſter lieutenant take him with you againe, for there are other matters to charge him withall.

Throckmorton.

It maie pleaſe you my lords & maſters of the Q. highneſſe priuie councell, to be on my behalfe humble ſutors to hir maieſtie, that like as the law this daie (God be praiſed) hath purged me of the treaſons wherewith I was moſt dangerouſlie charged: ſo it might pleaſe hir excellent maieſtie to purge me in hir priuat iudgement, and both forgiue & forget my ouerraſh boldneſſe, that I vſed in talke of hir highnes marriage with the prince of Spaine, matters too far aboue my capacitie, and I verie vnable to conſider the grauitie thereof, a matter impertinent for me a priuat perſon to talke of, which did apperteine to hir highneſſe priuie councell to haue in deliberation. And if it ſhall pleaſe hir highneſſe of hir bountifull liberalitie, to remit my former ouerſights, I ſhall thinke my ſelfe happie for triall of the danger that I haue this daie eſcaped, and maie thereby admoniſh me to eſchue things aboue my reach, and alſo to inſtruct me to deale with matters agréeable to my vocation. And God ſaue the quéens maieſtie, and grant the ſame long to reigne ouer vs. And the ſame Lord be praiſed for you the magiſtrats, before whome I haue had my triall this daie indifferentlie by the law, and you haue procéeded with me accordinglie; & the grace of God be amongſt you now and euer. ¶ There was no anſwer made by anie of the bench to the priſoners ſute, but the atturnie did ſpeake theſe words.]

The atturnie.

And it pleaſe you my lords, forſomuch as it ſéemeth theſe men of the iurie, which haue ſtrangelie acquited the priſoner of his treſons whereof he was indicted, will forthwith depart the court, I praie you for the quéene, that they, and euerie of them maie bée bound in a recogniſance of fiue hundred pounds a péece, to anſwer to ſuch matters as they ſhall bée charged with in the quéenes behalfe, whenſoeuer they ſhall be charged or called.

Whetſton.

I praie you my lords be good to vs, and let vs not be moleſted for diſcharging our conſciences trulie. We be poore merchantmen, and haue great charge vpon our hands, & our liuings doo depend vpon our trauels, therefore it maie pleaſe you to appoint vs a certeine day for our appearance, for perhaps ſome of vs maie be in forren parties about our buſineſſe.

¶ Thus much for ſir Nicholas Throckmortons arreignement, wherein is to be conſidered, that the repealing of certeine ſtatutes in the laſt parlement, was the chiefe matter he had to alledge for his aduantage: whereas the repealing of the ſame ſtatutes was meant notwithſtanding for an other purpoſe (as before you haue partlie heard) which ſtatutes, or the effect of the chiefe branches of them haue béene ſince that time againe reuiued, as by the bookes of the ſtatutes it maie better appeare, to the which I referre the reader.]

The lord Tho. Greie beheaded.

The eight and twentith of Aprill, the lord Thomas Greie, brother to the duke of Suffolke, was beheaded at the tower hill, a proper gentleman, and one that had ſerued right valiantlie both in France and Scotland, in the daies of the late kings Henrie and Edward.

Upon ſaturdaie the eight and twentith of Aprill, ſir James Crofts and maiſter William Winter were brought from the tower to the Guildhall in London, where ſir James Crofts was arreigned: but bicauſe the daie was farre ſpent, maiſter Winter was not arreigned, but caried backe againe to the tower with the ſaid ſir James Crofts.

William Thomas arreigned & condemned.

William Thomas, of whome mention is made before in the hiſtorie of ſir Thomas Wiat, with certeine other, were arreigned and condemned for the conſpiring of the murther and killing of the quéene vpon the ſudden: and for that offenſe, the ſaid William Thomas was the eightéenth daie of Maie, drawne, hanged, and quartered at Tiburne.

The ladie Eliſabeth deliuered out of the tower.

The ninetéenth daie of Maie next following, the ladie Eliſabeth ſiſter to quéene Marie, was deliuered out of the tower, and committed to the cuſtodie of ſir John Williams knight, afterward lord Williams of Tame, by whome hir grace was more courteouſlie intreated than ſome would haue wiſhed. Wherefore ſhortlie after ſhe was committed to the manour of Woodſtocke, vnder the cuſtodie of ſir Henrie Beningfield of Oxeborough in the countie of Norffolke, knight, at whoſe hands ſhe found not the like courteſie, who (as it is well knowne) vſed his office more like a gailor than a gentleman, and with ſuch rigour as was not méet to be ſhewed to ſuch an eſtate, which extremitie of crueltie to a perſon of great dignitie notwithſtanding hir innocencie, is verie well noted by C. O. in Eirenarchia ſiue Eliſabetha, where he ſaith:

But here is to be noted, not ſo much the vnciuill nature of the man, as the ſingular lenitie, and gratious clemencie of that gentle and vertuous princeſſe, who afterward (as ſhall appeare) comming to the poſſeſſion of the crowne as hir rightfull inheritance, was at that time ſo farre from reuenge of iniuries receiued, that whereas diuerſe princes haue requited much leſſe offenſes with loſſe of life, ſhe neuer touched him either with danger of life, or loſſe of lands or goods, nor neuer procéeded further than to diſcharge him of the court: which manie thought was the thing that pleaſed him beſt.

Quéene Eliſabeths words to Beningfield hir butcherlie kéeper in the time of hir duresse.

At whoſe departing from hir preſence, ſhe vſed onelie theſe words, or the like in ſenſe: God forgiue you that is paſt, and we doo: and if we haue anie priſoner whome we would haue hardlie handled and ſtreitlie kept, then we will ſend for you.

The fiue and twentith of Maie, the erle of Deuonſhire was brought out of the tower at thrée of the clocke in the morning, ſir Thomas Treſham knight, and maiſter Chamberlaine of Suffolke, with certeine of the gard, being appointed to attend on him to Fodringham caſtell in Northamptonſhire, where he was aſſigned to remaine vnder cuſtodie of the ſaid ſir Thomas Treſham and others.

This was called the ſpirit in the wall: ſhee had laine whiſtling in a ſtrange whiſtle made for that purpoſe, which was giuen hir by one Drakes: then were there diuerſe companions confederat with hir, which putting themſelues amongſt the preaſe, tooke vpon them to interpret what the ſpirit ſaid, expreſſing certeine ſeditious words againſt the queene, the prince of Spaine, the maſſe, and confeſſion, &c.]

The prince of Spains preparation to come into England.

The Engliſh ambaſſadors meet him at S. Iames of Cõpoſtella.

But now in this meane while that theſe things thus paſſed here in England, the prince of Spaine prepared for his hither comming, vnto whome had beene ſent the earle of Bedford lord priuie ſeale, and the lord Fitzwaters, accompanied with diuerſe noble men and gentlemen, who arriuing at the Corone in Galiſia, were receiued verie honorablie. And forſomuch as the prince was then at vale Dolido, diſtant from thence neere hand an hundred leagues, they were deſired to ſtaie there for their better eaſe, till he might haue conuenient oportunitie to repaire thither: which neuertheleſſe he could not doo ſo ſoone as he pretended to haue deſire thereto, as well by reaſon of the ſickeneſſe of his ſiſter, the princes Dowager of Portugall, as by other weightie affaires. But being at length rid of ſuch incumbers, & come into Galiſia, the Engliſh ambaſſadors met him at ſaint Iames de Compoſtella. And after he had in preſence of a great number of noble men and gentlemen there ratified the contract, and ſworne to obſerue the couenant, he departed towards Corone, where within a few daies after he imbarked, and accompanied with the number of an hundred and fiftie ſaile, directed his courſe toward England.

The arriuall of the prince of Spaine in Southamptõ.

He is receiued of the nobilitie and lords.

The lord admerall hauing continuallie beene abroode on the ſeas for the ſpace of three moneths or more, with a nauie of eight and twentie ſhips and other veſſels, accompanied alſo with the viceadmerall of the low countries, that had vnder his gouernance fourteene ſhips of the emperours, met with the ſaid prince the nineteenth of Iulie, about the Needles, and from thence accompanied him vnto Southampton, where he arriued the morrow after the twentith of Iulie, the earle of Arundell lord ſteward of the queens houſe being ſent from hir to preſent to him the George and the garter of the order (of the which fellowſhip he was at the laſt chapiter holden by the confreers choſen one of the companie) met him vpon the water, and at his comming to land, preſented the ſaid George and garter vnto him. At his landing he was receiued by the lord treaſuror, the biſhop of Lincolne, the lord Saint-Iohn, and others, by whom he was firſt conueied to the church, and from thence to his lodging.

He commeth to winchester where the queene was reſident of purpoſe to interteine him.

After his landing, the lord chancellor accompanied with diuerſe gentlemen, was ſent from the queene to bid him welcome on hir behalfe; & ſo was he viſited by diuerſe noble perſonages whileſt he remained at Southampton, ſent thither for that purpoſe. And he on the other part ſent diuerſe on his noble men to viſit hir maieſtie on his behalfe. Mondaie the three & twentith of Iulie, he departed from Southampton towards Wincheſter, whither ſhee was the ſaturdaie before remooued from Biſhops Waltham. On the waie he was accompanied, beſide the noblemen & gentlemen of his owne traine, with the marques of Wincheſter, the earles of Arundell, Darbie, Worceter, Bedford, Rutland, Penbroke, Surrie: the lords Clinton, Cobham, Willoughbie, Darcie, Matrauers, Talbot, Strange, Fitzwaren, and North, with manie other noblemen and gentlemen, and their traines, to the number of two thouſand horſſes. At his comming to the church in Wincheſter, the lord chancellor accompanied with the biſhops of Durham, Elie, London, Lincolne, Chicheſter, and diuerſe other prelats, were readie to receiue him. After he had made his praiers, he was conueied to his lodging prepared for him in the deans houſe.

The queens lodging in the biſhops palace.

The mariage ſolemnized and what ſtates of Italie & Spaine were preſent at it.

The names of the noble men that came ouer from Spaine with the prince.

The queene hir ſelfe was lodged in the biſhops palace, whither his highneſſe the next daie came, and was receiued by hir in the hall, in moſt courteous & louing maner. And after ſuch ſalutations & talke ended, as was thought conuenient for the time, he returned to his lodging, where he continued all that night: and the next daie being the fiue and twentith of Iulie, the mariage was openlie ſolemnized. At the which were preſent, the ambaſſadors of the emperor, the king of Romans, the king of Bohem, of Venice, Florence, Ferrare, and Sauoie, with certeine agents of other ſtates in Italie. As for the ſhot of ordinance, the diuerſe kinds of muſicke, the ſumptuous and coſtlie apparell, trappers, and other furniture, readie prouided againſt the receiuing of him, with other ceremonies vſed aſwell about the mariage, as in other places where he was to be receiued, were ſuerlie ſuch, and euerie thing doone in ſuch good order, as better for ſuch a purpoſe might not lightlie be deuiſed. Nobles of Spaine were, the duke of Alua, the duke of Medina celi, the admerall of Caſtilla, the marques of Bergues, the marques of Piſcara, the marques of Saria, the marques of Valli, the marques of Aguillar, the earle of Egmund, the earle of Horne, the earle of Feria, the earle of Chinchon, the earle of Oliuares, the earle of Saldana, the earle of Modica, the earle of Fuenteſalida, the earle of Landriano, the earle of Caſtellar, Don Ruigomes, the biſhop of Cuenca, Don Iohn de Benauides; and diuerſe others.

An abſtract of the conditions of this mariage betweene both the princes.

But now forſomuch as ſome would happilie be deſirous to know the conditions of this memorable mariage betwixt theſe two high princes, the conſequence whereof might haue prooued of ſo great importance, although by the queens deceaſe the effect was made void, I haue thought good to recite in briefe the chiefe articles thereof.

He to be intituled king during the matrimonie, &c.

1 It was couenanted that he ſhould enioy the title and name of king, during the matrimonie, and ſhould aid hir highneſſe (being his wife) in the adminiſtration of hir realmes and dominions; but yet he ſhould permit and ſuffer hir to haue the whole diſpoſition of all benefices, offices, lands, reuenues, and fruits of the ſaid realmes and dominions, and that the ſame ſhould be beſtowed vpon ſuch as were hir naturall borne ſubiects, and that all matters of the ſaid realmes and dominions ſhould be treated and handled in the ſame toongs, wherein of old they haue beene woont to be treated.

She to be intituled to his dominions during the mariage.

2 That the queene by vertue of the ſaid mariage ſhould be admitted into the ſocietie of the realmes and dominions of the ſaid prince of Spaine, as well ſuch as he now preſentlie hath; as ſuch other alſo as during the matrimonie may come to him.

Hir dowrie if ſhe ſuruiued him.

3 And for hir dowrie, in caſe ſhe outliued him, ſhe was appointed to receiue yeerlie three ſcore thouſand pounds, after the value of fortie groats Flemmiſh monie the pound, to be allotted vpon all the realms, lands, and patrimoniall dominions of his father the emperor, that is to ſaie, fortie thouſand pounds to be aſſigned vpon the realms of Spaine, Caſtile, and Aragon, according to the cuſtome of thoſe realms. The other twentie thouſand pounds were appointed vpon the dukedoms, earledoms, and dominions of Brabant, Flanders, Henalt, Holland, and other patrimoniall lands and inheritances of the ſaid emperor in the low countries of Germanie; in like maner as the ladie Margaret of England, ſometime wife and widow of the lord Charles, ſometime duke of Burgogne, had and receiued of the ſame. And if anie parcell or parcels thereof be alienated, then in lieu thereof, other lands ſhould be in due forme aſſigned forth for hir to enioy, lieng neere to the reſidue of hir dower.

Touching the iſſue of hir bodie male or female.

4 The iſſue that ſhould chance to come of this mariage, touching the right of the mothers inheritance in the realme of England, and the other realmes and dominions depending of the ſame, aſwell the males as females ſhould ſucceed in them, according to the laws, ſtatutes, and cuſtoms of the ſame.

Touching the prince of Spaines diſpoſing of his lands after his deceaſe.

5 And as touching the lands that the ſaid prince of Spaine ſhall leaue behind him, firſt there ſhould be reſerued vnto his eldeſt ſonne the lord Charles of Auſtrich, infant of Spaine, and to the children and heires of him deſcending, as well females as males all and ſingular their rights, which to the ſaid prince doo either then, or thereafter ſhould belong, or ſhould at anie time be deuolued to him in the realmes of Spaine, of both the Sicils, in the dukedome of Millaine, and other lands and dominions in Lumbardie and Italie, which neuertheleſſe ſhall be burdened and charged with the foreſaid dower of fortie thouſand pounds. And if it fortuned the ſaid lord Charles to die, and the iſſue of his bodie to faile, then the eldeſt ſon of this matrimonie ſhould ſucceed, and be admitted vnto the ſaid right, according to the nature, lawes, and cuſtoms of thoſe realmes and dominions. The ſame eldeſt ſon ſhould alſo ſucceed in all the dukedoms, earledoms, dominions, and patrimoniall lands belonging vnto the ſaid emperor father to the ſaid prince of Spaine, as well in Burgogne, as in the low countries, in the dukedoms of Brabant, Luxenburgh, Gelderland, Zutphane, Burgongne, Freeſeland, in the countries of Flanders, Arthois, Holland, Zeland, Namure, and the land beyond the Iſles, and all other whatſoeuer therevnto belonging.

Touching the lord Charles and his deſcendents if heire male came by this mariage.

6 But if the ſaid lord Charles, or they that ſhould come of him, remaine in life; and that there be anie male child by this matrimonie: the ſaid lord Charles and his deſcendents ſhould then be excluded from the ſaid lands and patrimoniall dominions of the low countries, and of Burgongne, and the ſame ſhould deſcend vnto the ſaid eldeſt ſon borne of this matrimonie. And to the other children borne thereof, as well males as females, a conuenient portion and dower ſhould be allotted in the realme of England, and dominions depending of the ſame, and in the ſaid lands & patrimoniall dominions of the low countries: and neither the eldeſt ſonne of this matrimonie, nor the ſons begotten in the ſame, ſhould pretend anie right in the realme of Spaine, or in the dominions of the ſame, and reſerued to the ſaid lord Charles the infant, otherwiſe than by their fathers and grandfathers diſpoſition.

What is to be done if heire male faile, and there be none but iſſue female.

7 Moreouer, if it fortune no iſſue male to be borne of this matrimonie, but onelie females, in that caſe the eldeſt female ſhould with full right ſucceed in the ſaid lands and dominions of the low countries, ſo as neuertheleſſe ſhe being minded to chooſe to husband anie noble man not borne in England, or in the low countries, without the conſent of the ſaid lord Charles the infant, in that caſe the right of the ſucceſſion ſhould remaine to the ſaid lord Charles, in the ſaid dominions of the low countries, Burgongne, and their appurtenances. And yet neuertheleſſe in that caſe, both ſhe and the other daughters alſo deſcending of this matrimonie, ſhall be indowed of their fathers lands & poſſeſſions aſwell in Spaine, as in the low countries.

What for want of iſſ by the lord Charles.

8 And for want of the ſaid lord Charles, and iſſue of him, and none but daughters remaining of this mariage, the eldeſt daughter in that caſe ſhould ſucceed, not onelie in the lands of the low countries; but alſo in the realmes of Spaine, England, and the reſt, after the nature, the lawes, and cuſtoms of the ſame.

A prouiſo touching ſucceſſion.

9 Herewith was a prouiſo accorded, that whatſoeuer he or ſhe ſhould be that ſhould ſucceed in them, they ſhould leaue to euerie of the ſaid realms, lands, and dominions, whole and entire their priuileges, rites and cuſtoms, and gouerne the ſame by the naturall borne of the ſame realmes, dominions, and lands, &c.

Touching a perpetuall league & bon of fraternitie, &c.

10 Finallie, that betweene the ſaid emperor, the prince and his ſucceſſors, their realmes, and the ſaid queene, it was concluded, that from thenſeforth there ſhould be an entire & ſincere fraternitie, vnitie, and moſt ſtrict confederacie for euer, &c: ſo as they ſhould mutuallie aid ech other in all things, according to the ſtrength, forme, & effect of the latter tretiſe of a ſtrict amitie, bearing date at Weſtminſter in the yeere 1542: the declaration of which treatie beareth date at Vtright, the ſixteenth of Ianuarie, in the yeare 1546.

In another treatiſe were theſe articles following compriſed.

No ſtranger to be admitted to anie office, &c. in England.

FIrſt, that the prince of Spaine ſhould not promote, admit, or receiue vnto anie office, adminiſtration, or benefice in the realme of England, or dominions to the ſame belonging, anie ſtranger, or perſons not borne vnder the ſubiection of the ſaid queene.

Engliſhmen to attend at the court.

2 That he ſhould receiue into his houſhold and court, gentlemen and yeomen of the ſaid realme of England in a conuenient number, eſteeming, interteining, and nouriſhing them as his proper ſubiects, & bring none with him in his retinue that will doo anie wrong to the ſubiects of the ſaid realme; & if they doo, he to correct them with condigne puniſhment, and to ſee them expelled his court.

The ſtate in no point to be innouated.

3 That he ſhall doo nothing whereby anie thing be innouated in the ſtate and right either publike or priuat, or in the lawes and cuſtoms of the ſaid realme of England, or the dominions therevnto belonging; but ſhall keepe to all eſtates and orders their rights and priuileges.

The queene not to be caried out of hir owne territories.

4 That he ſhall not leade awaie the queene out of the borders of hir graces realme, vnleſſe ſhe hir ſelfe deſire it; or carrie the children that may be borne of this matrimonie out of the ſame realme, vnleſſe it be otherwiſe thought good by the conſent and agreement of the nobilitie of England.

The prince of Spaines title to end with the queenes death.

5 And in caſe no children being left, the ſaid queene doo die before him, he ſhall not challenge anie right at all in the ſaid kingdome, but without impediment ſhall permit the ſucceſſion therof to come vnto them to whome it ſhall belong, by the right and lawes of the realme.

The iewels, &c: of the land not to be caried out, alienated, vſurped, &c.

6 Item that he ſhall not beare nor carrie ouer out of the ſaid realme, the iewels and pretious things of eſtimation. Neither ſhall he alienat or doo awaie anie whit of the appurtenances of the ſaid realme of England, or ſuffer anie part of them to be vſurped by his ſubiects, or anie other. But ſhall ſee that all and ſingular places of the realme, and ſpeciallie the forts and frontires of the ſame be faithfullie kept and preſerued to the vſe and profit of the ſaid realme, and by the naturall borne of the ſame.

No ſhips, guns, ordinance, &c: to be remoued, conueied, &c: out of the land.

7 He ſhall not ſuffer anie ſhip, guns, ordinance whatſoeuer of warre or defenſe, to be remoued or conueied out of the ſame realme: but ſhall contrariwiſe cauſe them diligentlie to be kept and viewed when need requireth; and ſhall ſo prouide that the ſame maie be alwaies readie in their ſtrength and force for defenſe of the realme.

Peace to be mainteined in this realme without medling in other foren nations warres.

8 Item the realme of England by occaſion of this matrimonie, ſhall not directlie nor indirectlie be intangled with the warre that is betwéene the emperor father to the ſaid prince of Spaine, and Henrie the French king; but he the ſaid prince (as much as in him maie lie) on the behalfe of the ſaid realme of England, ſhall ſée the peace betwéene the ſaid realmes of France and England obſerued, and ſhall giue no cauſe of anie breach, by which couenant the latter treatiſe of a ſtrict amitie ſhould not be in anie point derogated, but the ſame ſtill to remaine in the former force, &c.

The emperors gift to the prince his ſonne.

But now to returne where we left. At the time of the ſolemnization of the foreſaid marriage holden at Wincheſter (as before ye haue heard) the emperors ambaſſadors being preſent, openlie pronounced, that in conſideration of that marriage, the emperor had giuen and granted to the ſaid prince his ſonne the kingdome of Naples and Ieruſalem, with diuerſe other ſeats and ſegniories. The ſolemnitie of that marriage ended, the king of heralds called Garter, openlie in the church in the preſence of the king, the quéene, & the lords as well of England as Spaine, all the people being preſent, ſolemnelie proclamed the title and ſtile of thoſe two princes, as followeth: Philip and Marie by the grace of God king and quéene of England, France, Naples, Ieruſalem, and Ireland, defendors of the faith, princes of Spaine and Sicilie, archdukes of Auſtrich, dukes of Millaine, Burgundie, and Brabant, counties of Haſpurge, Flanders, and Tiroll. The proclamation being ended, the trumpets blew, and the king with the quéene came forth of the church hand in hand and two ſwords borne before them, and ſo returned to their palace.

The title of eſtate belonging both to Philip and Marie proclamed by the herald.

¶ By this time report had ſufficientlie ſounded abrode all that happened, ſpeciallie the ſolemnities executed about this roiall marriage; whereby ſome ſuppoſed that this land would haue become a golden world, and that ſuch amitie would haue inſued betwéene both nations, as nothing ſhould diſſolue. But others were of a contrarie opinion, ſuppoſing (as it came to paſſe indéed) that the peoples minds would be alienated and eſtranged from the diſpoſition whereto they were addicted in king Edwards daies, and that manie would become heauie hearted vpon heare-ſaie of this coniunction; much more penſiſe & grieued at the meditation of the miſeries which were like immediatlie to follow; as C. O. noteth in diſcourſing on this matter, ſaieng as here followeth:

Succedit regi defuncto, ſceptra capeſcens
Fœmina, cui nomen Maria eſt, ſoror vna duarum
Ex ſtirpe Henrici: quæ paucis nupta diebus
Poſt homini externo conſanguineóque Philippo,
Coniugio tali ſubtriſtes reddidit Anglos,
Námque duas gentes raró coaleſcere cernas
Vnanimes patria plerunque & amore diremptas.

Iohn Fox in the Acts and Monuments.

Of this marriage (ſaith maiſter Fox) as the papiſts chieflie ſéemed to be verie glad, ſo diuerſe of them after diuerſe ſtudies, did ſhew forth their inward affections: ſome made interludes and pageants, and ſome drew forth genealogies, deriuing his pedegrée from Edward the third, and Iohn of Gant; ſome made verſes. Amongſt all other maiſter White then biſhop of Lincolne in his poeticall veine, being dronken with ioie of the marriage, ſpued out certeine verſes; the copie whereof we haue here inſerted, to impart vnto common knowlege.

King Philip ſtalled at Windſor.

But to procéed. As ſoone as the feaſting & ſolemnitie of the ſaid marriage was ended, the king and quéene departed from Wincheſter, and by eaſie iournies came to Windſore caſtell, where the fift of Auguſt being ſundaie, he was ſtalled according to the order of the garter, and there kept S. Georges feaſt himſelfe in his roiall eſtate, and the earle of Suſſex was alſo the ſame time ſtalled in the order. At which time an herald tooke downe the armes of England at Windſore, and in the place of them would haue ſet the armes of Spaine, but he was commanded to ſet them vp againe by certeine lords. The ſeuenth of Auguſt was made a generall hunting with a toile raiſed of foure or fiue miles in length, so that manie a déere that day was brought to the quarrie. The eleuenth of Auguſt they remoued to Richmond, and from thence the 27 of the ſame moneth they came by water to London, landing at the biſhop of Wincheſters houſe, through which they paſſed both to Southworke parke, and ſo to Suffolke place, where they lodged that night: and the next daie being ſaturdaie and the nineteenth of Auguſt, they being accompanied with a great number of nobles and gentlemen, rode from thence ouer the bridge, and paſſed through London vnto Weſtminſter.

A generall hunting.

The king and quéene come through London to Weſtminſter.

¶ Now as the king came to London bridge, & as he entred at the drawbridge, was a vaine great ſpectacle ſet vp, two images repreſenting two giants, one named Corineus, and the other Gogmagog holding betwéene them certeine Latine verſes, which for the vaine oſtentation of flatterie I ouerpaſſe. And as they paſſed ouer the bridge, there was a number of ordinance ſhot at the tower, ſuch as by old mens report the like hath not béene heard or ſéene theſe hundred yéeres. From London bridge they paſſed to the conduit in Gratious ſtréet, which was finelie painted, and among other things, the nine worthies, whereof king Henrie the eight was one. He was painted in harneſſe hauing in one hand a ſword, and in the other hand a booke, whereupon was written Verbum Dei, deliuering the ſame booke (as it were) to his ſonne king Edward, who was painted in a corner by him. But hereupon was no ſmall matter made, for the biſhop of Wincheſter lord chancellor, ſent for the painter, and not onelie called him knaue for painting a booke in king Henries hand, and ſpeciallie for writing thereupon Verbum Dei: but alſo ranke traitor & villen, ſaieng to him that he ſhould rather haue put the booke into the quéenes hand (who was alſo painted there) for that ſhe had reformed the church and religion, with other things according to the pure and ſincere word of God indéed. The painter anſwered and ſaid, that if he had knowne that that had béene the matter wherefore his lordſhip ſent for him, he could haue remedied it, and not haue troubled his lordſhip.

Fiue Philips

The biſhop anſwered and ſaid, that it was the quéenes maieſties will and commandement, that he ſhould ſend for him; and ſo commanding him to wipe out the booke and Verbum Dei too: he ſent him home. So the painter departed, but fearing leaſt he ſhould leaue ſome part either of the booke, or of Verbum Dei, in king Henries hand: he wiped awaie a péece of his fingers withall. Here I paſſe ouer and cut off other gauds and pageants of paſtime ſhewed vnto him in paſſing through London, with the flattering verſes ſet vp in Latine, wherin were blazed out in one place the fiue Philips, as the fiue worthies of the world, Philip of Macedonia, Philip the emperor, Philippus Audax, Philippus Bonus, Philip prince of Spaine and king of England. In another poetrie king Philip was reſembled by an image repreſenting Orpheus, and all Engliſh people reſembled to brute and ſauage beaſts following after Orpheus harpe, and danſing after king Philips pipe. Not that I reprehend the art of the Latine verſes, which was fine and cunning; but that I paſſe ouer the matter, hauing other grauer things in hand, and therefore paſſe ouer alſo the ſight at Paules church ſide, of him that came downe vpon a rope tied to the batlements with his head before, neither ſtaieng himſelfe with hand or foot: which ſhortlie after coſt him his life.

The erecting vp of the rood at Paules.

Biſhop Boners god the rood of Paules ſet vp with Te Deum.

But one thing by the waie I cannot let paſſe, touching the yong floriſhing rood newlie ſet vp againſt this preſent time, to welcome king Philip into Paules church. The ſetting vp of which rood was this, and may make as good a pageant as the beſt. Anno 2. Mariæ Boner in his roialtie, and all his prebendaries about him in Paules quéere, the rood laid along vpon the pauement, and alſo all the doores of Paules being ſhut, the biſhop with other ſaid and ſong diuers praiers by the rood: that being doone they annointed the rood with oile in diuers places, and after the annointing crept vnto it and kiſſed it. After that they tooke the ſaid rood and weied him vp and ſet him in his old accuſtomed place, and all the while they were dooing thereof, the whole quéere ſang Te Deum, and when that was ended, they rang the bels, not onlie for ioy, but alſo for the notable and great fact they had doone therein.

Salutation to the rood of Paules.

Not long after this, a merrie fellow came into Paules, and ſpied the rood with Marie and Iohn new ſet vp, wherto (among a great ſort of people) he made low curtſie & ſaid: Sir, your maiſterſhip is welcome to towne, I had thought to haue talked further with your maiſterſhip, but that ye be héere clothed in the quéenes colours. I hope ye be but a ſommers bird, for that ye be dreſſed in white & gréene, &c. The prince thus being in the church of Paules, after doctor Harpeſfield had finiſhed his oration in Latine, ſet forward through Fléetſtréet, & ſo came to White hall, where he with the quéene remained foure daies after, and from thence remooued vnto Richmond. After this, all the lords had leaue to depart into their countries, with ſtrict commandement to bring all their harneſſe and artillerie into the tower of London with all ſpéed. Now remained there no Engliſh lord at the court but the biſhop of Wincheſter.

A proclamation for the auoiding of maiſterleſſe men out of the citie of London.

From Richmond they remooued to Hampton court, where the hall doore within the court was continuallie ſhut, ſo that no man might enter, vnleſſe his errand were firſt knowne: which ſéemed ſtrange to Engliſhmen that had not béene vſed thereto. The ſeuentéenth daie of September, was a proclamation in London, that all vagabonds and maiſterleſſe men, as well ſtrangers as Engliſhmen, ſhould depart the citie within fiue daies: and ſtrictlie charging all inholders, vittelers, tauerners, and alehouſekéepers, with all other that ſold vittels, that they (after the ſaid fiue daies) ſhould not ſell anie meat, drinke, or anie kind of vittels or reléefe to anie ſeruingman whatſoeuer, vnleſſe he brought a teſtimoniall from his maiſter to declare whoſe ſeruant he was, & were in continuall houſhold with his ſaid maiſter, vpon paine to runne in danger of the law if they offend herein.]

Death of the Duke of Norfolke.

A Spaniard hanged. Iohn Stow.

Eight of maſter Throckmortons iurie appeare in the ſtarchamber.

In September, the duke of Norffolke departed this life at Fremingham caſtell in Norffolke, and there was honorablie buried among his anceſtors. ¶The 26 of October, a Spaniard was hangd at Charingcroſſe for killing an Engliſhman, there was offered for his life by other ſtrangers 500 crownes, but all that would not ſtaie iuſtice.] On fridaie the ſame 26 of October, thoſe honeſt men that had béene of Throckmortons queſt, being in number eight (for the other foure were deliuered out of priſon, for that they ſubmitted themſelues, and ſaid they had offended like weaklings, not conſidering truth to be truth, but of force for feare ſaid ſo) theſe eight men I ſaie (whereof maiſter Emanuell Lucar and maiſter Whetſton were chéefe) were called before the councell in the Starrechamber, where they affirmed that they had doone all things in that matter according to their knowledge, and with good conſciences, euen as they ſhould anſwer before GOD at the daie of iudgement. Where maiſter Lucar ſaid openlie before all the lords that they had doone in the matter like honeſt men, and true and faithfull ſubiects: and therefore they humblie beſought my lord chancellor and the other lords, to be meanes to the king and quéenes maieſties, that they might be diſcharged and ſet at libertie: and ſaid that they were all contented to ſubmit themſelues to their maieſties, ſauing and reſeruing their truth, conſciences, and honeſties.

The hard iudgement of the lords againſt theſe eight honeſt men.

The L. Iohn Greie ſet at libertie.

Further extremitie againſt Throckmortons queſt.

The lords taking their words in maruellous euill part, iudged them worthie to paie exceſſiue fines. Some ſaid they were worthie to paie 1000 pounds a péece. Other ſaid that Lucar and Whetſton were worthie to paie a thouſand marks a péece, and the reſt fiue hundred pounds a péece. In concluſion, ſentence was giuen by the lord chancellor that they ſhould paie a thouſand marks a péece, he that paid leaſt; and that they ſhould go to priſon againe, and there remaine till further order were taken for their puniſhment. The thirtith of October being tueſdaie, the lord Iohn Greie was deliuered out of the tower, and ſet at libertie. Vpon ſaturdaie the tenth of Nouember, the ſhiriffes of London had commandement to take an inuentarie of each one of their goods, which were of maiſter Throckmortons queſt, & to ſeale vp their dores, which was done the ſame daie.

Maiſter Whetſton, and maiſter Lucar, and maiſter Bightlie, were adiudged to paie two thouſand pounds a péece, and the reſt a thouſand marks a péece, to be paid within one fortnight after. From this paiment were exempted thoſe foure which confeſſed a fault, & therevpon had ſubmitted themſelues, whoſe names are theſe: maiſter Loe, maiſter Pointer, maiſter Beſwicke, and maiſter Cater. The 12 of Nouember being mondaie, the parlement began at Weſtminſter, to the beginning whereof both the king and quéene rode in their parlement robes, hauing two ſwords borne before them. The earle of Penbroke bare his ſword, and the earle of Weſtmerland bare the quéenes. They had two caps of maintenance likewiſe borne before them: whereof the earle of Arundell bare the one, and the earle of Shrewesburie the other. During this parlement, cardinall Poole landed at Douer vpon wedneſdaie, being the 21 of Nouember, who being receiued with much honor in all other countries through which hée had paſſed, was receiued here at the firſt, with no great ſhew, for the cauſes aboue mentioned. The ſame daie on the which he arriued, an act paſſed in the parlement houſe, for his reſtitution in bloud, vtterlie repealing (as falſe and moſt ſlanderous) that act made againſt him in K. Henrie the eights time. And on the next daie being thurſdaie and the 22 of Nouember, the king and quéene both came to the parlement houſe to giue their roiall aſſent, and to eſtabliſh this act againſt his comming. On ſaturdaie the foure and twentith of Nouember, he came to the court, and after went to Lambeth where his lodging was prepared.

A parlement whereat the king & quéene are preſent.

Cardinall Poole arriueth at Douer.

An act for the reſtitution in bloud of cardinall Poole.

On wedneſdaie following in the after noone, he came into the parlement houſe, being at that preſent kept in the great chamber of the court of the White hall, for that the quéene by reaſon of ſickneſſe was not able to go abrode (where the king and quéene ſitting vnder the cloth of eſtate, and the cardinall ſitting on the right hand, with all the other eſtates of the realme being preſent) and the knights and burgeſſes of the common houſe being alſo called thither, the biſhop of Winchester being lord chancellor, ſpake in this maner. My lords of the vpper houſe, and you my maiſters of the nether houſe, here is preſent the right reuerend father in God, my lord cardinall Poole, legat A Latere, come from the apoſtolike ſée of « Rome, as ambaſſador to the king and quéenes maie« ſties, vpon one of the weightieſt cauſes that e« uer happened in this realme, and which apperteineth « to the glorie of God, and your vniuerſall benefit; the « which ambaſſage, their maieſties pleaſure is to bée « ſignified vnto you all by his owne mouth, truſting « that you will receiue and accept it in as beneuolent « and thankefull wiſe, as their highneſſe haue done, « and that you will giue attentiue and inclinable eare « vnto his grace, who is now readie to declare the ſame. So ſoone as the lord chancellor had ended his tale, the cardinall began and made a long & ſolemne oration, the which for ſhortneſſe ſake I haue collected into theſe few articles, remitting the reader to maiſter Foxes Acts and Monuments, where they ſhall find the ſame wholie and entierlie as by him it was vttered.

Cardinall Poole commeth into the parlement houſe.

The words of the biſhop of Winchester then lord chancellor.

Rich. Grafton.

The effect of the cardinals oration in the aſſemblie of parlement.

1 First, he yéelded moſt heartie thanks to the king and quéene, and next vnto the whole parlement; that of a man exiled & baniſhed from this commonweale, they had reſtored him againe to be a member of the ſame, and to the honour of his houſe and familie, and of a man hauing no place, neither here nor elſewhere within the realme, to haue admitted him into a place where to ſpeake, and to be heard.

2 Secondlie, that his eſpeciall comming was for the reſtitution of this realme to the ancient eſtate, and to declare that the ſée apoſtolike hath a ſpeciall care of this realme aboue all other: and chieflie for that this Iland firſt of all other prouinces of Europe, receiued the light of Chriſts religion from the ſée of Rome.

He ſheweth the ſpeciall cauſe of his comming into England.

3 Thirdlie, he exhorted that though the realme had ſwarued from the catholike vnitie, that yet being better informed, we ought to returne into the boſome of the church, moſt open to receiue all penitents. For the perſuaſion wherof he brought a number of old examples, what perill and hurt hath happened vnto them that haue ſwarued and gone from the church of Rome, namelie Græce and Germanie.

He exhorteth to a generall returne into the boſome of the church.

4 Fourthlie, how much we are bound to God for the king and quéens maieſties, and how miraculouſlie God had ſaued and defended our quéene from hir enimies in moſt dangerous times: and alſo that hée hath prouided to ioine with hir in mariage, ſuch a noble prince as king Philip was, & one of hir owne religion.

He declareth how wonderfullie god had preſerued Q. Marie.

5 Fiftlie, he exhorted them all to obedience of theſe two princes, and to call vpon God for iſſue to be had betwéene them, adding that king Philips father the emperour, had amongſt other princes trauelled moſt for the reſtitution of the peace and vnitie of the church. But as almightie God ſaid vnto Dauid, though he had a mind and will to build his temple: yet bicauſe he had ſhed bloud, he ſhould not build it. And ſo bicauſe the emperour hath had ſo manie warres, and ſhed ſo much bloud: therefore hée could not atteine to bring perfect peace to the church. But trulie (ſaid he) this gratious prince king Philip his ſonne, as I conceiue, is appointed of God to it, conſidering now the calling of him to be ioined with ſo catholike a princeſſe, as is the quéene of this realme, one without all doubt ſent likewiſe of God, for the reſtoring of the ſaid realme to the vnitie of the church, from whence it hath erred and gone aſtraie, as it doth and maie manifeſtlie appeare.

He exhorteth to obedience and treateth of reſtoring this realme to the vnitie of the church.

6 Sixtlie, he proteſted that his commiſſion was not to preiudice anie perſon, for he came not to deſtroie, but to build; he came to reconcile, and not to condemne; he came not to compell, but to call againe; he came not to call anie thing in queſtion alreadie done: but his commiſſion was of grace and clemencie to all ſuch as would receiue it. For touching all matters paſt, and done, they ſhould be caſt into the ſea of forgetfulneſſe, and neuer more to bée thought vpon.

He proteſteth that he ment the preiudice of no man, &c.

7 Finallie (ſaid he) the meane whereby to receiue this high benefit, is firſt to reuoke and repeale all ſuch lawes as are impediments, blocks and barres to this moſt gratious reconciliation. For like as he himſelfe had no place to ſpeake there, before ſuch lawes were abrogated and remooued as ſtood in his waie: euen ſo they could not receiue the grace offered from the ſée apoſtolike, vntill theſe like impediments of lawes made againſt the ſée of Rome, were vtterlie aboliſhed and repealed. And ſo in concluſion aduertiſed them, firſt for the glorie of God, and next for the conſeruation and ſuertie of the wealth and quietneſſe of the whole realme, that they ſhould earneſtlie trauell therein, and that then he would make them participants of the benefit of his commiſſion.

He ſheweth the meanes of procuring the foreſaid reconciliation.

The next daie the whole court of parlement drew out the forme of a ſupplication, and the next daie following, when the king, the quéene, and the cardinall, with all the nobles and commons were aſſembled againe in the great chamber of the White hall aforeſaid, the biſhop of Winchester there ſhewed what the parlement had determined concerning the cardinals requeſt, and then offered to the king and quéene the ſaid ſupplication, to be by them preſented to the cardinall. Wherein would be noted the readineſſe of the aſſemblie to ſubmit themſelues to antichriſtian ſlauerie: but omitting to giue iudgement, marke their ſupplication, the copie whereof followeth.

A ſupplication exhibited to cardinall Poole by the parlement.

WE the lords ſpirituall and temporall, and commons in this preſent parlement aſſembled, repreſenting the whole bodie of the realme of England and dominions of the ſame, in the name of our ſelues particularlie, and alſo of the ſaid bodie vniuerſallie, offer this our moſt humble ſupplication to your maieſties, to this end and effect; that the ſame by your gratious interceſſion and meane maie be exhibited to the moſt reuerend father in God the lord cardinall Poole legat, ſent ſpeciallie hither from our moſt holie father pope Julie the third, and the ſee apoſtolike of Rome. Wherin we doo declare our ſelues verie ſorie and repentant of the long ſchiſme and diſobedience happening in this realme, and the dominions of the ſame, againſt the ſee apoſtolike, either by making, agreeing, or executing of anie lawes, ordinances or commandements againſt the primaſie of the ſame ſee, or otherwiſe dooing or ſpeaking that might impugne or preiudice the ſame. Offering our ſelues, and promiſing by this our ſupplication, that for a token & knowledge of our ſaid repentance, we be and ſhall be euer readie, vnder and with the authorities of your maieſties, to the vttermoſt of our power, to doo that ſhall lie in vs, for the abrogation and repealing of all the ſaid lawes and ordinances, made and enacted to the preiudice of the ſee apoſtolike, as well for our ſelues as for the whole bodie whome we repreſent. Whervpon we humblie beſeech your maieſties, as perſons vndefiled in offenſe of his bodie towards the ſaid ſee, which neuertheleſſe God by his prouidence hath made ſubiect to you, ſo to ſet forth this our humble ſute, as we the rather by your interceſſion maie obteine from the ſee apoſtolike, by the ſaid moſt reuerend father, as well particularlie as generallie, abſolution, releaſe, and diſcharge from all dangers of ſuch cenſures and ſentences as by the lawes of the church we be fallen into. And that we maie as children repentant, be receiued into the boſome and vnitie of Chriſts church: ſo as this noble realme, with all the members thereof, maie in this vnitie & perfect obedience to the ſee apoſtolike, and popes for the time being, ſerue God and your maieſties to the furtherance and aduancement of his honour and glorie, Amen.

This ſupplication was exhibited to the king and queene.

Promiſe in ſigne of repentance to make full amends by being recõciled to the catholike church

This ſupplication being firſt openlie read, the ſame was by the chancellor deliuered to the king and queene, with petition to them, to exhibit the ſame to the lord cardinall. And the king and queene riſing out of their ſeats, and dooing reuerence to the cardinall, did deliuer the ſame vnto him. The cardinall perceiuing the effect thereof to anſwer to his expectation, did receiue it moſt gladlie at their maieſties hands. And then, after that hee had in few words giuen thanks vnto God, and declared what great cauſe hee had to reioiſe aboue all others, that his comming from Rome into England had taken ſuch moſt happie ſucceſſe; then he cauſed his commiſſion to bee read (wherby it might appeare he had authoritie from the pope to abſolue them) which commiſſion was verie long and large. And that being doone, and all the parlement on their knees, this cardinall, by the popes authoritie, gaue them abſolution in maner following.

The king and queene exhibit the ſupplicatiõ to Poole the proud prelat.

An abſolution pronounced by cardinall Poole to the parlement houſe.

OUr lord Jeſus Chriſt, which with his moſt pretious bloud hath redeemed and waſhed vs from all our ſins and iniquities, that he might purchaſe vnto himſelfe a glorious ſpouſe without ſpot or wrinkle, and whom the father hath appointed head ouer all his church; he by his mercie abſolue you. And we by the apoſtolike authoritie giuen vnto vs by the moſt holie lord pope Julius the third (his vicegerent in earth) doo abſolue and deliuer you, and euerie of you, with the whole realme, and the dominions thereof, from all hereſie and ſchiſme, and from all and euerie iudgements, cenſures and paines for that cauſe incurred. And alſo wee doo reſtore you againe to the vnitie of our mother the holie church, as in our letters of commiſſion more plainelie ſhall appeare.

Pope Julie the third gaue cardinall Poole his authoritie apoſtolike.

After this generall abſolution receiued, the king and the queene, and all the lords with the reſt, went into the kings chappell, and there ſang Te Deum with great ioy and gladneſſe, for this new reconciliation. The report whereof with great ſpeed flew to Rome, as well by the French kings letters, as alſo by the cardinals. Wherevpon the pope cauſed ſolemne proceſſions to be made in Rome, namelie one, wherein he himſelfe with all his cardinals were preſent, paſſing with as great ſolemnitie and pompe as might be, giuing thanks to God with great ioy, for the conuerſion of England to his church. At what time alſo he not a little commended the diligence of cardinall Poole, and the deuotion of the king and queene. And on Chriſtmas euen next following, he ſet forth by his buls a generall pardon to all ſuch as did reioiſe in the ſame reconciliation.

Solemne proceſſion at Rome for the new reconcilement of England to the catholike church.

The eight and twentith of Nouember next following, it was commonlie reported, that the queene was quicke with child, & therefore commandement was giuen by Edmund Bonner then biſhop of London (and as it was ſaid not without the commandement of the councell) that there ſhould be made in moſt ſolemne manner one generall proceſſion in London, wherein the maior, and all the companies of the citie were in their liueries, at whoſe returne to the church of Pauls, there was ſong verie ſolemnlie Te Deum for ioy therof. The ſame daie at this proceſſion was preſent ten biſhops with all the prebendaries of Paules. The copie of the councels letter implieng the aforeſaid commandement touching the generall proceſſion here followeth, Ad perpetuam rei memoriam.

A report that the queene was with child.

A copie of a letter ſent from the councell vnto Edmund Bonner biſhop of London, concerning queene Marie conceiued with child.

AFter our hartie commendations vnto your good lordſhip. Whereas it hath pleaſed almightie God amongſt other his infinit benefits of late moſt gratiouſlie powred vpon vs and this whole realme, to extend his benediction vpon the queens maieſtie in ſuch ſort, as ſhe is conceiued & quicke of child; wherby (hir maieſtie being our naturall liege ladie, queene and vndoubted inheritor of this imperiall crowne) good hope of certeine ſucceſſion in the crowne is giuen vnto vs, and conſequentlie, the great calamities, which (for want of ſuch ſucceſſion might otherwiſe haue fallen vpon vs & our poſteritie) ſhall by Gods grace be well auoided, if we thankefullie acknowledge this benefit of almightie God, indeuoring our ſelues with earneſt repentance to thanke, honor, & ſerue him as we be moſt bounden. Theſe be not onelie to aduertiſe you of theſe good news, to be by you publiſhed in all places within your dioces; but alſo to praie and require you, that both your ſelfe doo giue God thanks with vs for this his eſpeciall grace, and alſo giue order that thanks maie be openlie giuen by ſinging of Te Deum in all the churches within your ſaid dioces; and that likewiſe all prieſts and other eccleſiaſticall miniſters, in their maſſes and other diuine ſeruices, may continuallie praie to almightie God, ſo to extend his holie hand ouer his maieſtie, the kings highneſſe and this whole realme, as this thing being by his omnipotent power gratiouſlie thus begun, may by the ſame be well continued and brought to good effect, to the glorie of his name. Whereunto albeit we doubt not ye would of your ſelfe haue had ſpeciall regard without theſe our letters: yet for the earneſt deſire we haue to haue this thing doone out of hand, & diligentlie continued, we haue alſo written theſe our letters, to put you in remembrance: & ſo bid your lordſhip moſt hartilie well to fare. From Weſtminſter the 27 of Nouember. 1554.

If Queene Marie were quicke with child on the 28. of the moneth of Nouember and afterward did labour in the moneth of Iune, then went ſhe almoſt ſeuen moneths quicke with child.

Vpon this letter of the councels ſent to biſhop Bonner (ſignifieng the good news of quéene Marie to be not onelie conceiued, but alſo quicke with child, which was in the moneth of Nouember, the eight and twentith daie) it is out of count what great talke began at this time to riſe in euerie mans mouth, with buſie preparation and much adoo, eſpeciallie among ſuch as ſéemed in England to carrie Spaniſh hearts in Engliſh bodies. In number of whome here is not to be forgotten, nor defrauded of his condigne commendation for his worthie affection toward his prince and hir iſſue, one ſir Richard Southwell, who being the ſame time in the parlement houſe, when as the lords were occupied in other affaires and matters of importance, ſuddenlie ſtarting vp for fulneſſe of ioy, burſt out in theſe words following: Tuſh my maiſters (quoth he) what talke ye of theſe matters? I would haue you take ſome order for our yoong maiſter that is now comming into the world apace, leaſt he find vs vnprouided, &c. By the which words both of him, and alſo by the foreſaid letters of the councell, and the common talke abroad, it may appeare what an aſſured opinion was then conceiued in mens heads of quéene Marie, to be conceiued and quicke with child. Inſomuch that at the ſame time, and in the ſame parlement, there was eftſoones a bill exhibited, and an act made vpon the ſame, the words whereof for the more euidence, I thought here to exemplificat.

The words of ſir Richard Southwell in the parlement houſe for his yoong maiſter.

The words of the act.

Albeit we the lords ſpirituall & temporall, & the commons in this preſent parlement aſſembled, haue firme hope & confidence in the goodnes of almightie God, that like as he hath hitherto miraculouſlie preſerued the quéenes maieſtie from manie great imminent perils and dangers; euen ſo he will of his infinit goodneſſe giue hir highneſſe ſtrength, the rather by our continuall praiers to paſſe well the danger of deliuerance of child, wherewith it hath pleaſed him (to all our great comforts) to bleſſe hir: yet for ſo much as all things of this world be vncerteine, and hauing before our eies the dolorous experience of this inconſtant gouernment during the time of the reigne of the late king Edward the ſixt, doo plainlie ſée the manifold inconueniences, great dangers and perils that maie inſue to this whole realme, if foreſight be not vſed to preuent all euill chances, if they ſhould happen. For the eſchewing hereof, we the lords ſpirituall and temporall, & the commons in this preſent parlement aſſembled; for and in conſideration of a moſt ſpeciall truſt and confidence that we haue and repoſe in the kings maieſtie, for and concerning the politike gouernment, order, and adminiſtration of this realme in the time of the yoong yéeres of the iſſue or iſſues of hir maieſties bodie to be borne, if it ſhould pleaſe God to call the quéenes highneſſe out of this preſent life, during the tender yeares of ſuch iſſue or iſſues (which God forbid) according to ſuch order & maner as hereafter in this preſent act his highneſſe moſt gratious pleaſure is, ſhould be declared and ſet foorth, haue made our humble ſute by the aſſent of the quéens highneſſe, that his maieſtie would vouchſafe to accept & take vpon him the rule, order, education & gouernment of the ſaid iſſue or iſſues to be borne as is aforeſaid, vpon which our ſute being of his ſaid maieſtie moſt gratiouſlie accepted, it hath pleaſed his highnes, not onlie to declare, that like as for the moſt part his maieſtie verely truſteth that almightie God (who hath hitherto preſerued the quéens maieſtie) to giue this realme ſo good an hope of certeine ſucceſſion in the blood roiall of the ſame realm, will aſſiſt hir highnes with his graces and benedictions to ſée the fruit of hir bodie well brought forth, liue and able to gouerne (whereof neither all this realme, ne all the world beſides, ſhould or could receiue more comfort than his maieſtie ſhould & would) yet if ſuch chance ſhould happen, his maieſtie at our humble deſires is pleaſed & contented not onlie to accept & take vpon him the cure and charge of the education, rule, order, and gouernment of ſuch iſſues, as of this moſt happie mariage ſhall be borne betwéens the quéenes highnes and him: but alſo during the time of ſuch gouernment, would by all waies & meanes ſtudie, trauell and imploie himſelfe to aduance the weale, both publike & priuat, of this realme & dominions thereto belonging, according to the ſaid truſt in his maieſtie repoſed, with no leſſe good will & affection than if his highnes had béene naturallie borne among vs. In conſideration whereof, be it enacted by the king & the quéens moſt excellent maieſties, by aſſent of the lords ſpirituall and temporall, & the commons in this preſent parlement aſſembled, and by the authoritie of the ſame, &c: as it is to be ſéene in the act more at large ratified and confirmed at the ſame parlement, to the ſame intent and purpoſe.

Order taken by parlement for quéene Maries child.

Truſt diſappointed.

Thus much out of the act and ſtatute I thought to rehearſe, to the intent the reader maie vnderſtand, not ſo much how parlements maie ſometimes be deceiued (as by this child of quéene Marie may appéere) as rather what cauſe we Engliſhmen haue to render moſt earneſt thanks vnto almightie God, who ſo mercifullie againſt the opinion, expectation, and working of our aduerſaries, hath helped and deliuered vs in this caſe: which otherwiſe might haue opened ſuch a window to the Spaniards, to haue entred and repleniſhed this land, that peraduenture by this time Engliſhmen ſhould haue inioied no great quiet in their owne countrie. The Lord therefore make vs

Parlements maie be deceiued.

perpetuallie mindfull of his benefits, Amen.

The praiers of the papiſts of what litle effect they are with God.

Thus we ſee then how man doth purpoſe, but God diſpoſeth as pleaſeth him. For all this great labor, prouiſion, and order taken in the parlement houſe for their yong maiſter long looked for, comming ſo ſurelie into the world; in the end appeared neither yong maiſter nor yong maiſtreſſe that anie man yet to this daie can heare of. Furthermore as the labor of the laie ſort was herein deluded, ſo no leſſe ridiculous it was to behold what little effect the praiers of the popes churchmen had with almightie God, who trauelled no leſſe with their proceſſions, maſſes, and collects, for the happie deliuerance of this yong maiſter to come, as here followeth to be ſeene.

A praier made by doctor Weſton deane of Weſtminſter, dailie to be ſaid for the queenes deliuerance.

A praier for queene Marie and hir child, turned out of Latine into Engliſh.

O Moſt righteous Lord God, which for the offenſe of the firſt woman, haſt threatned vnto all women a common, ſharpe, and ineuitable malediction, and haſt inioined them that they ſhould conceiue in ſinne; and being conceiued, ſhould be ſubiect to manie and greeuous torments, and finallie be deliuered with the danger and ieopardie of their life: we beſeech thee for thine exceeding great goodneſſe and botomleſſe mercie, to mitigate the ſtrictnes of that law. Aſſwage thine anger for a while, and cheriſh in the boſome of thy fauor and mercie our moſt gratious queene Marie, being now at the point of hir deliuerance. So helpe hir, that without danger of hir life, ſhe maie ouercome the ſorow, and in due ſeaſon bring foorth a child, in bodie beautifull and comelie, in mind noble and valiant. So that afterward ſhe forgetting the trouble, maie with ioie, laud and praiſe the bountifulneſſe of thy mercie; and togither with vs, praiſe and bleſſe both thee and thy holie name world without end. This (O Lord) we deſire thee, we beſeech thee, and moſt hartilie craue of thee. Heare vs (O Lord) and grant vs our petition. Let not the enimies of thy faith and of thy church ſaie; Where is their God?

A ſolemne praier made for king Philip and queene Maries child, that it maie be a male child, welfauored and wittie, &c.

A deuout praier made by the catholikes for queene Marie being great and quicke with child.

O Moſt mightie Lord God, which regardeſt the praier of the humble, and deſpiſeſt not their requeſt, bow downe from thine high habitation of the heauens, the eies of thy mercie vnto vs wretched ſinners, bowing the knees of our harts, and with manie and deepe ſighs bewailing our ſinnes and offenſes humblie with eies intent, and hands diſplaied, praieng and beſeeching thee, with the ſhield of thy protection, to defend Marie thy ſeruant and our queene, who hath none other helper but thee, and whome through thy grace thou haſt willed to be conceiued with child; and at the time of hir trauell gratiouſlie with the helpe of thy right hand deliuer hir, and from all danger with the child in hir conceiued, mercifullie preſerue. It hath ſeemed good in thy ſight (mercifull father) by thy ſeruant Marie to worke theſe wonders, that is to ſaie; in hir hands to vanquiſh and ouerthrow the ſtout enimie, and to deliuer vs thy people out of the hands of * heretikes, infidels, enimies to thee, and to the croſſe of thy beloued ſonne Ieſus Chriſt, that of thy ſeruant thou mighteſt ſpeake in farre countries. Therefore for theſe wonderfull workes which thou doeſt to thy ſeruants, thou art magnified Lord God for euer, & we thy people bleſſe thee the God of heauen, which haſt wrought vpon vs this great mercie, and haſt excluded from vs the heretike, the enimie of truth, and the perſecutor of thy church. We know, we know that we haue grieuouſlie (Lord) ſinned, that we haue beene deceiued by vanitie, and that we haue forſaken thee our God. Our iniquities be multiplied on our head, and our ſinnes be increaſed vp to heauen, and we our ſelues haue offended, and our princes and our prieſts: for theſe our ſinnes haue deſerued an hypocrit to our prince, our ſinnes haue deſerued a tyrant to our gouernor that ſhould bring our life vnto bitterneſſe. We be not worthie to haue ſo gentle and mercifull a queene, ſo godlie a ruler, and finallie ſo vertuous a prince. At the verie beginning of whoſe reigne, a new light, as it were of Gods religion, ſeemed to vs for to ſpring and ariſe. The Iews did bleſſe the widow Iudith with one voice; ſaieng Thou art the glorie of Ieruſalem, thou art the ioie of Iſraell, thou art the honor of our people, for that thou haſt loued chaſtitie, and thou ſhalt be bleſſed for euer.

* The papiſts call the proteſtants heretikes and enimies to the croſſe of Chriſt, euen as Achab called Elias the diſturber of Iſraell, when he was onelie the diſturber himſelfe.

Queene Marie compared of the papiſts to queene Iudith.

Marke how forgetting his praier he falleth to the praiſing of queene Marie.

And we the Engliſh people with one agreeable conſent doo crie: Thou Marie art the glorie of England, our ioie, the honour of thy people, for that thou haſt imbraced chaſtitie: thine hart is ſtrengthened, for the hand of our Lord hath comforted thee, and therefore thou ſhalt be bleſſed for euer. But bow downe, O moſt mercifull father thine eare, and open thine eies, and behold our affliction, and our humble confeſſion. Thou knoweſt Lord, that againſt Philip, not by humane, but by thy ordinance our king, and againſt thy ſeruant Marie by thy prouidence our queene, the reſtorers and mainteiners of thy teſtament, and of the faith and moſt conſtant defenders of thy church; thou knoweſt (I ſaie) that againſt theſe our two gouernors (the enimies of thy holie teſtament, and of the church thy ſpouſe) be moſt ranke rebels, and ſpitefull murmurers, walking after their luſts, whoſe mouth ſpeaketh words of pride, to the end they maie ſet vp the kingdome of heretikes and ſchiſmatikes. By the power of their hands they would change thy promiſes, and deſtroie thine inheritance, and ſtop and ſhut vp the mouths of them that praiſe thee, and extinguiſh the glorie of thy catholike church and altar.

The teſtament ſetteth vp onelie the glorie of Chriſt.

If the changing of Gods promiſes, deſtroieng his inheritance, ſtopping the mouths of Gods people if contentions, warres, and ſchiſmes be tokens of heretikes, who ſo great heretikes as the papiſts be?

It is manifeſt and plaine, how manie contentions, how manie conſpiracies & ſeditions, how great warres, what tumults, how manie and how great troubleſome vexations, how manie hereſies and ſchiſmes (for theſe be the moſt readie deuiſes and euident tokens of heretikes) for our ſinnes doo hang ouer vs, if thy ſeruant be taken from this life: for we acknowledge that our Lord is omnipotent, who hath pitched his dwelling place in the middeſt of his people, to the intent to deliuer vs out of the hands of our enimies. Turne therefore thy countenance vnto vs, ſhew vnto vs, O Lord, thy face. Puniſh vs for our ſinnes according to thy will and pleaſure, onelie now deliuer vs. We bowing the knees of our heart, beſeech thee that thou wilt not reſerue vnto vs puniſhment for euer, and we ſhall praiſe thee, all the daies of our life. Heare our crie, and the praier of thy people, and open to them the treaſure of thy mercie, thy gratious fauour, the ſpring of liuelie water. Thou that haſt begun, make in the hand of thy ſeruant a perfect worke. Suffer not, we praie thee, the faithleſſe rebels to ſaie of thy ſeruant and hir councellors, that they haue deuiſed matters which they can not performe. And grant vnto thy ſeruant an happie and an eaſie trauell. For it is not impoſſible to thy power, nor indecent to thy iuſtice, nor vnwonted vnto thy mercie.

Thou Lord that art the ſearcher of hearts and thoughts, thou knoweſt that thy ſeruant neuer luſted after man, neuer gaue hir ſelfe to wanton companie, nor made hir ſelfe partaker with them that walke in lightneſſe: but ſhe conſented to take an huſband with thy feare, and not with hir luſt. Thou knoweſt that thy ſeruant tooke an huſband, not for carnall pleaſure, but onelie for the deſire and loue of poſteritie, wherein thy name might be bleſſed for euer and euer. Giue therefore vnto thy ſeruants Philip our king, & Marie our quéene, a male iſſue, which maie ſit in the ſeat of thy kingdome. Giue vnto our quéene thy ſeruant, a little infant in faſhion and bodie comelie and beautifull, in pregnant wit notable and excellent.

It is not beſt ſuch one to be granted vnto you, for being like Abraham, Ioſeph, Moſes, and Salomon, he maie chance ſmell out your corrupt doctrine, and to deteſt your bloudie tyrannie, &c.

Grant the ſame to be in obedience like Abraham, in hoſpitalitie like Lot, in chaſtitie and brotherlie loue like Ioſeph, in meekeneſſe and mildneſſe like Moſes, in ſtrength and valiantneſſe like Samſon. Let him be found faithfull as Dauid after thy heart. Let him be wiſe among kings as the moſt wiſe Salomon. Let him be like Iob, a ſimple and an vpright man, fearing God and eſchewing euill. Let him finallie be garniſhed with the comelineſſe of all vertuous conditions, and in the ſame let him wax old and liue, that he maie ſée his childrens children to the third and fourth generation. And giue to our ſoueraigne lord and ladie, king Philip and quéene Marie, thy bleſſing and long life vpon earth. And grant that of them maie come kings and quéenes which maie ſtedfaſtlie continue in faith, loue, and holineſſe. And bleſſed be their ſéed of our God, that all nations maie know thou art onelie God in all the earth, which art bleſſed for euer and euer, Amen.

Cardinall Poole commeth to Pauls croſſe with great pompe.

The ſecond daie of December being ſundaie, cardinall Poole came to Pauls church in London with great pompe, hauing before him a croſſe, two pillers and two pollaxes of ſiluer, and was there ſolemnlie receiued by the biſhop of Wincheſter, chancellor of England, who met him with proceſſion. And ſhortlie after, king Philip came from Weſtminſter by land, being accompanied with a great number of his nobles. And the ſame daie, the biſhop of Wincheſter preached at Pauls croſſe, in the which ſermon he declared, that the king and quéene had reſtored the pope to his right of primaſie; & that the thrée eſtates aſſembled in parlement, repreſenting the whole bodie of the realme, had ſubmitted themſelues to his holineſſe, and to his ſucceſſors for euer. And in the ſame alſo, he greatlie praiſed the cardinall, and ſet forth the paſſing high authoritie that he had from the ſée of Rome, with much other glorious matter, in the commendation of the church of Rome, which he called the ſée apoſtolike. This ſermon being ended, the king and the cardinall riding togither, returned to White hall, and the king had his ſword borne before him, and the cardinall had onelie his croſſe, and no more.

Prince of Piemount commeth into England.

The ſeauen and twentith daie of the ſaid moneth, Emanuell Philibert earle of Sauoie and prince of Piemount came into England, accompanied with diuerſe other lords and gentlemen ſtrangers, who were receiued at Graueſend by the earle of Bedford lord priuie ſeale, and conueied by water through London bridge to White hall, where the king and queene then laie. ¶ On the ninth of Ianuarie next following, the prince of Orange was in like maner receiued at Graueſend, and from thence conueied to the court, being at White hall. The twelfth of Ianuarie, the ſaid prince of Orange, with other lords, was conducted by the lord chamberlein to the tower of London, where was ſhewed vnto him the ordinance, artillerie, munitions, and armorie, with the mint, &c: and ſo was brought into the white tower, from whence, as he returned through the long gallerie, all the priſoners ſaluted him: vnto whome the prince ſaid, he was ſorie for their captiuitie, and truſted the king and quéene would be good vnto them. Vpon wedneſdaie the 12 of December, fiue of the eight men which laie in the Fléet, that had paſſed vpon ſir Nicholas Throckmortons triall, were diſcharged and ſet at libertie vpon their fines paid, which was two hundred and twentie pounds a péece. The other thrée put vp a ſupplication, therein declaring their goods did not amount to the ſumme of that which they were appointed to paie: and ſo vpon that declaration, paieng thrée ſcore pounds a péece, they were deliuered out of priſon on ſaint Thomas daie before Chriſtmas, being the one & twentith of December. The two and twentith of the ſame moneth, the parlement (which began the two and twentith of Nouember before) was diſſolued, wherein among other acts paſſed there, the ſtatute Ex officio, and other lawes made for puniſhment of hereſies were reuiued. But chiefelie, the popes moſt liberall bull of diſpenſation of abbeie land was there confirmed, much to the contentation of manie, who not without cauſe ſuſpected by this new vnion, to loſe ſome peece of their late purchaſe. ¶ On new yeares daie at night was a great tumult betweene Spaniards and Engliſhmen at Weſtminſter, whereof was like to haue inſued great miſchiefe, through a Spaniſh frier which got into the church and roong alarum. The occaſion was about two whores which were in the cloiſter of Weſtminſter with a ſort of Spaniards, wherof whileſt ſome plaied the knaues with them, other ſome did kéepe the entrie of the cloiſter with dags and harneſſe. In the meane time certeine of the deanes men came into the cloiſter, and the Spaniards diſcharged their dags at them, and hurt ſome of them. By and by the noiſe of this doing came into the ſtreets, ſo that the whole towne was vp almoſt, but neuer a ſtroke was ſtricken. Vpon fridaie the eighteenth of Ianuarie, all the councell, by name, the lord chancellor, the biſhop of Elie, the lord treaſuror, the earle of Shrewesburie, the comptrollor of the quéenes houſe, ſecretarie Bourne, and ſir Richard Southwell maſter of the ordinance and armorie, went to the tower, and there the ſame daie diſcharged and ſet at libertie all the priſoners of the tower, or the more part of them, namelie the archbiſhop of Yorke, the late duke of Northumberlands ſonnes, the lords Ambroſe, Robert, and Henrie; alſo, ſir Andrew Dudleie, ſir Iames Croftes, ſir Nicholas Throckmorton, ſir Iohn Rogers, ſir Nicholas Arnold, ſir George Harper, ſir Edward Warner, ſir William Sentlow, ſir Gawen Carew, William Gibbes eſquier, Cutbert Vaughan, and diuerſe others.

Moreouer, about this ſeaſon diuerſe learned men being apprehended, and in priſon for matters of religion, were brought before the biſhops of Wincheſter and London, and other the biſhops and commiſſioners appointed therefore: who vpon the conſtant ſtanding of the ſaid learned men in their opinions, which they had taken vpon them to mainteine, as grounded vpon the true word of God, as they proteſted, procéeded in iudgement againſt them, and ſo diuerſe of them were burned at London in Smithfield, and in diuerſe other places. Nate not onelie by fire but by other torments were the good chriſtians perſecuted, whoſe zeale was hot in religion and defiance of the pope: inſomuch that then he was counted Gods enimie, which tooke not the pope for the friend of Chriſt (whome he hateth with hoſtilitie) as C.O. noteth verie trulie in his Eliſabetha, ſaieng:

In Februarie next following, doctor Thirlebie biſhop of Elie, and Anthonie lord Montacute, with a verie honorable traine of gentlemen and others, rode forth of the citie of London towards Rome as ambaſſadors ſent from the king and quéene, to confirme this new reconciliation to the pope. A yoong ſtripling, whoſe name was William Fetherſtone, a millers ſonne, about the age of eightéene yeares, named and bruted himſelfe to be king Edward the ſixt, whereof when the quéene and the councell heard, they cauſed with all diligence inquirie to be made for him, ſo that he was apprehended in Southworke, or (as other haue) at Eltham in Kent the tenth of Maie, and brought before the councell at Hampton court, and there examined. And it was demanded of him why he ſo named himſelfe? To which he counterfetting a maner of ſimplicitie, or rather frenſie, would make no direct anſwer, but praid pardon; for he wiſt not what he ſaid: affirming further, that he was counſelled ſo to ſaie, and to take vpon him the name, whereof he accuſed certeine perſons: but his talke was not found true, wherefore he was committed to the Marſhalſeie, as a lunatike foole.

On the eight and twentith daie of Maie next following, the aforeſaid counterfet prince was brought in a cart from the Marſhalſeie thorough the citie of London, with a paper ouer his head, wherein was written, that he named himſelfe king Edward. And from thenſe was conueied to Weſtminſter, being led round about the hall, and ſhewed to all the people there: and afterward he was taken out of the cart and ſtripped, and then whipped round about the palace at the ſame carts taile, and then thorough Weſtminſter into Smithfield, and then baniſhed into the north, in which countrie he was borne, and had béene ſometime lackie to ſir Peter Mewtas, and without more puniſhment was diſcharged, and ſet at libertie. But the next yeare following, for that he had ſpred abroad that king Edward was aliue, and that he had ſpoken with him, he was againe apprehended, and arreigned of high treaſon, whereof being condemned, he ſhortlie after was drawne vnto Tiburne, and there hanged and quartered the thirtéenth of March. ¶ Here, as in a fit and conuenient place, the obſeruation of the daie and moneth offering no leſſe, it is not amiſſe to ſet downe the ſpeech of quéene Marie vttered to ſundrie of hir lords, touching a motion which no doubt certeine popiſh prelats had put into hir mind; the effect whereof followeth as I find it in maſter Fox.

Abr. Fl. ex Ioh. Foxi martyrologio.

Before I paſſe this moneth of March (ſaith he) I cannot but leaue a little memorandum of the words or conſultation of quéene Marie, vſed to certeine of the councell, the eight & twentith daie of the ſaid moneth of March, touching the reſtoring againe of the abbeie lands. Who after ſhe had called vnto hir preſence foure of hir priuie councell, the daie and moneth aforeſaid: the names of which councellors were theſe; William lord marqueſſe of Wincheſter high treaſuror of England, ſir Robert Rocheſter knight, the quéenes comptrollor, ſir William Peter knight, ſecretarie, ſir Francis Inglefield knight, maſter of wards; the ſaid quéene Marie inferred theſe words: the principall effect & ſumme whereof here followeth. You are here of our councell, and we haue willed you to be called to vs, to the intent yée might heare of me my conſcience, and the reſolution of my mind, concerning the lands and poſſeſſions as well of monaſteries, as other churches whatſoeuer being now preſentlie in my poſſeſſion. Firſt, I doo conſider, that the ſaid lands were taken awaie from the churches aforeſaid, in time of ſchiſme, and that by vnlawfull means, ſuch as are contrarie both to the law of God and of the church. For the which cauſe my conſcience dooth not ſuffer me to deteine them: and therefore I here expreſſelie refuſe either to claime or to reteine the ſaid lands for mine: but with all my heart fréelie and willinglie without all paction or condition, here and before God I doo ſurrender and relinquiſh the ſaid lands and poſſeſſions or inheritances whatſoeuer, & doo renounce the ſame with this mind and purpoſe, that order and diſpoſition thereof may be taken as ſhall ſéeme beſt liking to our moſt holie lord the pope, or elſe his legat the lord cardinall, to the honour of God and wealth of this our realme.

The names of the councellors called before quéene Marie.

The effect of quéene Maries words touching abbeie lands to be reſtored.

The quéene taketh a conſcience in kéeping abbeie lands.

The quéene ſurrendreth from hir ſelfe the poſſeſſiō of abbeie lands.

And albeit you may obiect to me againe, that conſidering the ſtate of my kingdome, the dignitie thereof, and my crowne imperiall cannot be honorablie mainteined and furniſhed without the poſſeſſions aforeſaid: yet notwithſtanding I ſet more by the ſaluation of my ſoule, than by ten kingdoms: and therefore the ſaid poſſeſſions I vtterlie refuſe here to hold after that ſort and title, and giue moſt hartie thanks to almightie God, which hath giuen me an husband likewiſe minded, with no leſſe good affection in this behalfe, than I am my ſelfe. Wherefore I charge and command, that my chancellor (with whom I haue conferred my mind in this matter before) and you foure, to morrow together doo reſort to the moſt reuerend lord legat, and doo ſignifie to him the premiſſes in my name, & giue your attendance vpon him for the more full declaration of the ſtate of my kingdome, and of the foreſaid poſſeſſions accordinglie, as you your ſelues doo vnderſtand the matter, and can informe him in the ſame. This charge (as the ſequele gaue proofe) was followed with no leſſe diligence of the lords, than it was impoſed with willingnes vpon them by the quéene: inſomuch that ſhortlie after (as anon you ſhall heare) ſhe performed hir promiſe to the pith.

Promiſe for reſtitution of abbeie lands.

But to let this matter paſſe, till due time & place require a declaration of the concluſion thereof; I am héere (ſaith maſter Fox, as occaſion ſerueth) to intreat of pope Iulius death, for ſo much as he made his end about the latter end of this foreſaid moneth of March. Concerning the déeds and acts of which pope, to make a full declaration, it were not ſo much tedious to the reader, as horrible to all good eares. Vnder this Iulius floriſhed the archbiſhop of Beneuentanus, a Florentine, named Iohannes a Caſa, deane of the popes chamber, and chéefe legat to the Venetians: who well declaring the fruit of that filthie ſée, ſo farre forgat both honeſtie and nature, that he ſhamed not onelie to plaie the filthie Sodomite himſelfe, and to boaſt openlie of the ſame: but alſo tooke vpon him moſt impudentlie in Italian metre, to all mens eares, to ſet forth the praiſe and commendation of that beaſtlie iniquitie, ſaieng that he himſelfe neuer vſed other: and this booke was printed at Venice, by one Troianus Nauus. And yet the pope could ſuffer this ſo great iniquitie and ſhameleſſe beaſtlineſſe, euen vnder his noſe in his owne chamber, which could not abide the true doctrine of Chriſt in chriſtian bookes.

Note here what an holie catholike church this is Amongſt other pranks and déeds of this foreſaid pope, in his Iubilés, and in the ſynod of Trent, and in confirming of the idoll of Lauretane, this is alſo reported of him in his life, that he delighted greatlie in porke fleſh and peacocks. Vpon a time when he was admoniſhed of his phyſician to abſteine from all ſwines fleſh, for that it was noiſome for his gout, and yet would not follow his counſell: the phyſician afterward gaue warning to his ſteward or orderer of his diet, that he ſhould ſet no more porke fleſh before him. Wherevpon when the pope perceiued the ſaid porke fleſh to be lacking in his accuſtomed ſeruice; Where (ſaid he) is my porke? And when his ſteward had anſwered that his phyſician had forbidden anie porke to be ſerued: then the pope burſting out in great rage, ſaid in theſe words; Bring me, ſaid he, my porke fleſh Al diſpetto di Dio: that is to ſaie in Engliſh, In the deſpight of God.

A porkiſh pope.

Monſtrous blaſphemie in the pope.

At an other time, he ſitting at dinner, pointing to a peacocke vpon his table, which he had not touched; Kéepe (ſaid he) this cold peacocke for me againſt ſupper, and let me ſup in the garden, for I ſhall haue gheſts. So when ſupper came, and amongſt other hot peacocks, he ſaw not his cold peacocke brought to his table: the pope after his wonted manner, moſt horriblie blaſpheming God, fell into an extreame rage, &c. Wherevpon one of his cardinals ſitting by, deſired him ſaieng: Let not your holineſſe, I praie you, be ſo mooued with a matter of ſo ſmall weight. Then this Iulius the pope anſwering againe; What (ſaid he) if God was ſo angrie for one apple, that he caſt our firſt parents out of paradiſe for the ſame, whie maie not I being his vicar, be angrie then for a peacocke, ſithens a peacocke is a greater matter than an apple? Behold here good reader, by this pope, the holineſſe of that blaſphemous ſée: and yet thou ſhalt ſée here, what affection was borne vnto this pope here in England, by the diriges, hearſes, and funerals commanded to be had and celebrated in all churches by the quéene and hir councell, as may appeare by the copie of their letters here following.

Pope Iulius blaſphemeth God for a peacocke.

Aprill 10. Wincheſters letter to Boner for the popes funerall

After my hartie commendations to your good lordſhip. The king and quéenes maieſties hauing certeine knowledge of the death of the popes holineſſe, thought good there ſhould be as well ſolemne obſequies ſaid for him throughout the realme, as alſo theſe praiers (which I ſend you herein incloſed) vſed at maſſe times in all places at this time of vacation; and therefore willed me to ſignifie their pleaſures vnto you in this behalfe, that thereupon ye might procéed to the full accompliſhment therof, by putting the ſame in due execution within your owne dioceſſe, and ſending word to the reſt of the biſhops to doo the like in theirs. Thus doubting not but that your lordſhip will vſe ſuch diligence in this matter at this time, as ſhall be neceſſarie, I bid your lordſhip hartilie well to fare. From my houſe at Aſher, the tenth of Aprill. 1555.

Vpon this commandement, on wedneſdaie in Eaſter wéeke there were hearſes ſet vp, & diriges ſong for the ſaid Iulius in diuerſe places. At which time it chanced a woman to come into S. Magnus church at the bridgefoot in London, & there ſéeing an hearſe and other preparation, aſked what it meant: and other that ſtood by, ſaid, that it was for the pope, and that ſhe muſt praie for him. Naie (quoth ſhe) that will I not, for he néedeth not my praier: and ſéeing he could forgiue vs all our ſinnes, I am ſure he is clean himſelfe: therefore I néed not to praie for him. She was heard ſpeake theſe words of certeine that ſtood by: which by and by caried hir vnto the cage at London bridge, and bad hir coole hir ſelfe there.

And héere (ſaith maſter Fox) commeth to be remembred the notable working of Gods hand vpon a certeine prieſt in Kent named Nightingall, parſon of Crondall beſides Canturburie: who vpon Shroueſundaie, which was about the third daie of the ſaid moneth of March, and yeare of our Lord aforeſaid, reioiſing belike not a little at this alteration of religion, began to make a ſermon to his pariſhioners, taking his theame out of the words of ſaint Iohn: He that ſaith, he hath no ſinne, is a lier, and the trueth is not in him, &c. And ſo vpon the ſame, verie impertinentlie, declared to them all ſuch articles as were ſet forth by the popes authoritie, and by the commandement of the biſhops of this realme; ſaieng moreouer vnto the people in this wiſe: Now maſters and neighbors reioiſe and be merrie, for the prodigall ſonne is come home. I was before my lord cardinall Pooles grace, and he hath made me as cleane from ſinne, as I was at the font ſtone: and on thurſdaie laſt being before him, he hath appointed me to notifie (I thanke him for it) the ſame vnto you. And I will tell you what it is. And ſo reading the popes bull of pardon that was ſent into England, he ſaid, he thanked God that euer he had liued to ſée that daie: adding moreouer that he beléeued, that by the vertue of that bull he was as cleane from ſinne, as that night that he was borne: and immediatlie vpon the ſame fell ſuddenlie downe out of the pulpit, and neuer ſtirred hand nor foot, and ſo laie he. Teſtified by Robert Auſten of Cartham, which both heard and ſaw the ſame, and is witneſſed alſo by the whole countrie round about.]

The lord Courtneie goeth ouer into Italie.

About this time, Edward Courtneie, earle of Deuonſhire, of whom before yée haue heard, how he was appointed to remaine at Fodringheie vnder ſafe cuſtodie, at length was ſet at libertie, came to the court, and got licence to paſſe the ſeas, went into Italie, where ſhortlie after he ſickened, and died within fouretéene daies after his ſickneſſe firſt tooke him: he was honorablie buried in Padwaie. This Courtneie was the onelie ſonne and heire of Henrie, marqueſſe of Exceſter, couſine germane to king Henrie the eight, as is ſaid before. For the ſaid king and he were deſcended of two ſiſters, Elizabeth and Katharine, two of the daughters of king Edward the fourth, which propinquitie of bloud notwithſtanding the ſaid marqueſſe, for points of treaſon laid againſt him, ſuffered at the tower hill, the thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, to the great dolour of the moſt of the ſubiects of this realme, who for his ſundrie vertues bare him great fauour and goodwill.

The lord Courtneie deſcended of the bloud roiall.

After whoſe death, this yoong gentleman his ſonne, being yet a child, was committed priſoner to the tower, where he remained vntill the beginning of the reigne of this quéene Marie (as before you haue heard.) This gentleman (as it appeared) was borne to be a priſoner, for from twelue yeares of age vnto thirtie, he had ſcarſe two yeares libertie, within the which time he died, and obteined quiet, which in his life he could neuer haue. In the moneth of Maie next following, cardinall Poole, who had bin a great labourer for peace betwéene the French king and the emperour, being accompanied with Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter and chancellor of England, the erle of Arundell lord ſteward, and the lord Paget, were ſent by the king and quéene ouer the ſea to Calis, & from thence went to the towne of Marke where they met with the ambaſſadors of the emperor and the French king. From the emperour were ſent the biſhop of Arras with others. From the French king was ſent the cardinall of Loraine, and the conſtable of France. In this treatie, cardinall Poole ſat as preſident and vmpier in the name of the quéene of England. This peace was greatlie laboured, where at the firſt, there was much hope, but in the end nothing was concluded: wherefore the ſeauentéenth daie of Iune, this aſſemblie was diſſolued, and the Engliſh ambaſſadours returned againe into England.

¶ In this moneth of Auguſt, in Suffolke, at a place by the ſea ſide, all of hard ſtone and pibble, called in thoſe parts a ſhelfe, lieng betwéene the townes of Orford and Alborough, where neuer grew graſſe, nor any earth was euer ſéene, there chanced in this barren place ſuddenlie to ſpring vp without any tillage or ſowing, great abundance of peaſon, whereof the poore gathered (as men iudged) aboue an hundred quarters; yet remained ſome ripe, & ſome bloſſoming, as manie as euer there were before. To the which place rode the biſhop of Norwich, and the lord Willoughbie with others in great number, who found nothing but hard rockie ſtone for the ſpace of thrée yards vnder the roots of thoſe peaſon, which roots were great and long, and verie ſwéet in taſt to the mouth of the eater, &c.

The neceſſitie of the poore releeued by Gods prouidence.

Diſputation at Chriſts hoſpitall, as had béene accuſtomed at ſaint Bartholomewes in Smithfield, being an incouragement to yong ſcholers.

On Bartholomew euen, after the Lord maior and aldermen of London had rid about Bartholomew faire, they came to Chriſtes hoſpitall within Newgate, where they heard a diſputation betwéene the ſcholers of Paules ſchoole, ſaint Anthonies ſchoole, and the ſcholers of the ſaid hoſpitall, for whome was prouided thrée games, which was thrée pennes: the beſt pen of ſiluer and gilt, valued at fiue ſhillings, woone by a ſcholer of ſaint Anthonies ſchoole, and the maiſter of that ſchoole had ſix ſhillings eight pence: the ſecond, a pen of ſiluer parcell gilt, valued at iiij. ſhillings, woone by a ſcholer of Paules ſchoole, & his maiſter had fiue ſhillings in monie: the third a pen of ſiluer, valued at thrée ſhillings, woone by a ſcholer of the ſaid hoſpitall, and his maiſter had foure ſhillings. And there were two préeſts maiſters of arts appointed for iudges, which had each of them a ſiluer rule for their paines, valued at ſix ſhillings eight pence the péece. The diſputation being ended, the maior and aldermen entred the hall, where the children of the hoſpitall vſe to dine, and had fruit & wine, and ſo departed.

King Philip went ouer into Flanders.

King Philip went ouer ſeas, and landed at Calis on the fourth of September, where he was honorably receiued by the lord deputie, & the maior of the ſtaple of Calis, an alderman of London named ſir Andrew Iud, preſenting his maieſtie with a purſe & a thouſand marks of gold in it: that night the king was lodged in ſtaple inne: and on the morrow he departed from Calis towards Bruſſels in Brabant, to viſit the emperor his father: he gaue at his departing among the ſouldiors of the towne of Calis, a thouſand crownes of gold, and there accompanied him in his iournie of Engliſh lords, the earle of Arundell lord ſteward of the quéenes houſe, the earle of Penbroke, the earle of Huntington, and others. On Michaelmaſſe euen, the priſoners that laie in the counter in Bredſtréet, were remoued to a new counter made in Woodſtréet of the cities purchaſe & building, the which remouing was confirmed by a common councell aſſembled at the Guildhall for that purpoſe.

Great landwaters wherby diuerſe frequented places were ouerflowne.

On the laſt of September, by occaſion of great wind and raine that had fallen, was ſuch great floods, that that morning the kings palace at Weſtminſter, and Weſtminſter hall was ouerflowne with water, vnto the ſtaire foot, going to the chancerie and kings bench: ſo that when the lord maior of London ſhould come to preſent the ſhiriffes to the barons of the exchecker, all Weſtminſter hall was full of water. And by report there, that morning, a whirriman rowed with his bote ouer Weſtminſter bridge, into the palace court, and ſo through the ſtaple gate: and all the wooll ſtaple into the kings ſtréet, and all the marſhes on Lambeth ſide, were ſo ouerflowne, that the people from Newington church could not paſſe on foot, but were caried by bote from the ſaid church to the pinfold, néere to ſaint Georges in Southworke.]

Anno Reg. 3. Commiſſioners ſent to Oxford, by the popes authoritie, & why.

About this time, the biſhop of Lincolne, Glouceſter, and Briſtow, were ſent in commiſſion to Oxford by the popes authoritie, to examine Ridleie and Latimer, vpon certeine articles by them preached, which if they would not recant, and conſent to the popes doctrine, then had they power to procéed in ſentence againſt them as heretikes, and to commit them ouer to the ſecular power. Thoſe two doctors neuertheles ſtood conſtantlie to that which they had taught, and would not reuoke: for which cauſe, they were condemned, and after burned in the towne ditch at Oxford, the ſixteenth daie of October. In the time of whoſe examination, bicauſe the biſhops aforeſaid declared themſelues to be the popes commiſſioners, neither Ridleie nor Latimer would doo them any reuerence, but kept their caps on their heads: wherefore they were ſharplie rebuked by the biſhop of Lincolne, and one of the officers was commanded for to take of their caps. Of theſe men, and the maner of their death, ye may read at large in the booke of the monuments of the church.

A parlement wherein the liuings of the church are reſtored.

The one and twentith of October, a parlement was holden at Weſtminſter, in the which amongſt other things the quéene being perſuaded by the cardinall (and other of hir clergie) that ſhe could not proſper, ſo long as ſhe kept in hir hands any poſſeſſions of the church, did frankelie and fréelie reſigne and render vnto them all thoſe reuenues eccleſiaſticall, which by the authoritie of parlement, in the time of king Henrie, had béene annexed to the crowne, called the firſt fruits and tenths of all biſhopricks, benefices, and eccleſiaſticall promotions. The reſignation [illegible] was a great diminution of the reuenues of [illegible]wne. ¶In this parlement was granted to the [illegible] & quéene a ſubſidie of the laitie from fiue pounds to ten pounds eight pence of the pound, from ten pounds to twentie pounds twelue pence of the pound, & from twentie pounds vpward ſixtéene pence of the pound, and all ſtrangers double, and the cleargie granted ſix ſhillings of the pound.

A ſubſidie. I. Stow.

Doctor Storie and other were appointed by the cardinall, to viſit euerie pariſh church in London and Middleſex, to ſée their relikes repared, and the images of the crucifix, with Marie and Iohn thereupon to be fixed.] During the time of this parlement, Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, and chancellor of England died at his houſe called Wincheſter place, beſide ſaint Marie Oueries in Southworke, the ninth daie of Nouember, whoſe corps was ſhortlie after ſolemnly from thence conueied to his church of Wincheſter, & there buried. The maner of whoſe death why ſhould I bluſh to blaze as I find it by report? ¶One miſtreſſe Mondaie, being the wife of one maiſter Mondaie ſecretarie ſometime to the old lord Thomas duke of Norffolke, a preſent witnes of this that is teſtified, thus openlie reported in the houſe of a worſhipfull citizen, bearing office in this citie, in words and effect as followeth. The ſame daie, when as biſhop Ridleie and maiſter Latimer ſuffered at Oxford, being about the ninetéenth daie of October, there came to the houſe of Stephan Gardiner, the old duke of Norffolke with the foreſaid Mondaie his ſecretarie aboue named, reporter héereof. The old aged duke, there waiting and tarieng for his dinner, the biſhop being not yet diſpoſed to dine, deferred the time till thrée or foure of the clocke at afternoone.

At length, about foure of the clocke commeth his ſeruant poſting in all poſſible ſpéed from Oxford, bringing intelligence to the biſhop what he had heard and ſéene: of whom the ſaid biſhop diligentlie inquiring the truth of the matter, & hearing by his man, that fire moſt certeinlie was ſet vnto them, commeth out reioiſing to the duke: Now ſaith he, let vs go to dinner. Whereupon, they being ſet downe, meat immediatlie was brought, and the biſhop began merilie to eate: but what followed? The bloudie tyrant had not eaten a few bits, but the ſudden ſtroke of God his terrible hand fell vpon him in ſuch ſort, as immediatlie he was taken from the table, & ſo brought to his bed, where he continued the ſpace of fiftéene daies, in ſuch intollerable anguiſh and torments, that all that meane while, during thoſe fiftéene daies, he could not auoid by order of vrine, or otherwiſe, any thing that he receiued: whereby his bodie being miſerablie inflamed within (who had inflamed ſo manie good martyrs before) was brought to a wretched end. And thereof no doubt, as moſt like it is, came the thruſting out of his tong from his mouth ſo ſwolne & blacke, with the inflammation of his bodie. A ſpectacle worthie to be noted and beholden of all ſuch bloudie burning perſecutors.

Gardiner viſited with the ſudden ſtroke of God.

But whatſoeuer he was, ſéeing he is now gone, I referre him to his iudge, to whom he ſhall ſtand or fall. As concerning his death and maner thereof, I would they which were preſent thereat, would teſtifie to vs what they ſaw. This we haue all to thinke, that his death happened ſo opportunelie, that England hath a mightie cauſe to giue thanks to the Lord therefore: not ſo much for the great hurt he had doone in times paſt in peruerting his princeſſe, in bringing in the ſix articles, in murthering Gods ſaints, in defacing Chriſts ſincére religion, &c: as alſo eſpeciallie for that he had thought to haue brought to paſſe in murthering alſo our noble quéene that now is. For whatſoeuer danger it was of death that ſhe was in, it did (no doubt) procéed from that bloudie biſhop, who was the cauſe thereof. And if it be certeine which we haue heard, that hir highneſſe being in the tower, a writ came downe from certeine of the councell for hir execution, it is out of controuerſie, that wilie Wincheſter was the onelie Dedalus and framer of that engine. Who (no doubt) in that one daie had brought this whole realme into wofull ruine, had not the lords moſt gratious councell, thorough maiſter Bridges then the lieutenant, comming in haſt to the quéene, certified hir of the matter, and preuented Achitophels bloudie deuiſes. For the which, thanks be to the ſame our Lord and Sauiour, in the congregation of all Engliſh churches, Amen.]

¶And now forſomuch as in the beginning of the moneth of Iune about Whitſuntide, the time was thought to be nie, that this yoong maiſter ſhould come into the world, and that midwiues, rockers, nurſes, with the cradle and all, were prepared and in a readineſſe, ſuddenlie vpon what cauſe or occaſion it is vncerteine, a certeine vaine rumor was blowne in London of the proſperous deliuerance of the quéene, and the birth of the child: inſomuch that bels were roong, bonefiers and proceſſions made, not onelie in the citie of London, and in moſt other parts of the realme, but alſo in Antwerpe guns were ſhot off vpon the riuer by the Engliſh ſhips, and the mariners thereof were rewarded with an hundred piſtolets or Italian crownes by the ladie regent, who was the quéene of Hungarie. Such great reioiſing and triumph was for the quéenes deliuerie, and that there was a prince borne. Yea, diuerſe preachers, namelie one the perſon of ſaint Anne within Alderſgate, after proceſſion and Te Deum ſoong, tooke vpon him to deſcribe the proportion of the child, how faire, how beautifull, and great a prince it was, as the like had not béene ſéene.

In the middeſt of this great adoo, there was a ſimple man (this I ſpeake but vpon information) dwelling within foure miles of Barwike, that neuer had béene before halfe waie to London, which ſaid concerning the bonefires made for quéene Maries child; Here is a ioifull triumph, but at length all will not proue worth a meſſe of pottage, as in déed it came to paſſe: for in the end all proued cleane contrarie, and the ioy & expectations of men were much deceiued. For the people were certified, that the quéene neither was as then deliuered, nor after was in hope to haue anie child. At this time manie talked diuerſlie. Some ſaid this rumour of the quéenes conception was ſpread for a policie: ſome other affirmed that ſhe was deceiued by a timpanie or ſome other like diſeaſe, to thinke hirſelfe with child, and was not; ſome thought ſhée was with child, and that it did by ſome chance miſcarie, or elſe that ſhe was bewitched: but what was the truth therof, the Lord knoweth, to whome nothing is ſecret. One thing of mine owne hearing and ſéeing I cannot paſſe ouer vnwitneſſed.

Q. Maries child would not come.

What became of Q. Maries child no man can tell.

There came to me, whome I did both heare and ſée, one Iſabell Malt, a woman dwelling in Alderſgate ſtréet in Horne allie, not farre from the houſe where this preſent booke was printed, who before witneſſe made this declaration vnto vs, that ſhe being deliuered of a man-child vpon Whitſundaie in the morning, which was the eleuenth daie of Iune Anno 1555, there came to hir the lord North, and another lord to hir vnknowne, dwelling then about old Fiſhſtréet, demanding of hir if ſhe would part with hir child, and would ſweare that ſhe neuer knew nor had no ſuch child. Which if ſhe would, hir ſonne (they ſaid) ſhould be well prouided for, ſhe ſhould take no care for it, with manie faire offers if ſhe would part with the child.

After that came other women alſo, of whome one (ſhe ſaid) ſhould haue béene the rocker: but ſhe in no wiſe would let go hir ſonne, who at the writing hereof being aliue and called Timothie Malt, was of the age of thirtéene yeares and vpward. Thus much (I ſaie) I heard of the woman hir ſelfe. What credit is to be giuen to hir relation, I deale not withall, but leaue it to the libertie of the reader, to beléeue it they that liſt: to them that liſt not, I haue no further warrant to aſſure them. Among manie other great preparations made for the quéenes deliuerance of child, there was a cradle verie ſumptuouſlie and gorgeouſlie trimmed, on the which cradle for the child appointed, theſe verſes were written, both in Latine and in Engliſh, as they are ſet downe here in record:

About this time there came ouer into England a certeine Engliſh booke, giuing warning to the Engliſhmen of the Spaniards, and diſcloſing certeine cloſe practiſes for recouerie of abbeie lands, which booke was called A warning for England. Whereof ye ſhall vnderſtand much more at large where[*] we ſpeake of the Spaniſh inquiſition. About this time, Brokes biſhop of Gloceſter was by the cardinall ſent downe as commiſſioner from the pope to Oxford, there to ſit vpon the examination of Thomas Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie, in ſuch things as ſhould be laid to his charge by Iohn Storie and Thomas Martin, doctors in the lawes, ſent ſpeciallie in commiſſion from the quéene. At which time the ſaid archbiſhop making low obeiſance to them that ſate in the quéenes [illegible] ſhewed no token of reuerence to the biſhop that was the popes commiſſioner: who neuertheleſſe procéeded againſt him as iudge, and conuicted him of hereſie. Before his death by the perſuaſion of a Spaniſh frier, named frier Iohn, a reader of diuinitie in Oxford, and by the counſell of certeine other that put him in hope of life and pardon, he ſubſcribed to a recantation, wherein he ſubmitted himſelfe wholie to the church of Rome, and continued in the ſame mind to outward appearance, vntill he was brought out of priſon, to go to the fire. Afore whoſe execution, a ſermon was made by doctor Cole deane of Paules, in ſaint Martins church in Oxford. And in the end of his ſermon, the ſaid doctor Cole praied the people to incline their eares to ſuch things as the ſaid Cranmer would declare vnto them by his owne mouth. For (ſaith he) he is a man verie repentant, and will here before you all reuoke his errors. Neuertheleſſe he did cleane contrarie. For when he came to the place where the holie biſhops and martyrs of God, Hugh Latimer and Ridleie were burnt before him, for the confeſſion of the truth, knéeling downe he praied to God, & not tarieng long in his praiers, putting off his garments to his ſhirt, he prepared himſelfe to death. His ſhirt was made long downe to his féet: his féet were bare. Likewiſe his head, when both his caps were off, was ſo bare, that one heare could not be ſéene vpon it. His beard was long and thicke, couering his face with maruellous grauitie. Such a countenance of grauitie moued the hearts both of his friends and of his enimies.

The deſcription of his perſon.

And as for the recantation aforeſaid, with manie tears he proteſted, that he had ſubſcribed to the ſame againſt his conſcience, onelie for feare of death, and hope of life. Which ſéemed true: for when he came to the ſtake, & the fire kindled, he put his right hand into the fire, and held it there a good ſpace, ſaieng: that the ſame hand ſhould firſt burne, bicauſe it held the pen to ſubſcribe againſt his Lord God. Vpon the death of this Cranmer I find theſe reuerend verſes:

Infortunatè eſt fœlix, qui nomine læſo,
Cuiuſuis gaudet commoditate boni.

Infœlix ille eſt verò fœliciter, orbi

The eight of Iulie, in the beginning of this fourth yeare of the quéens reigne, Henrie Peckham and Iohn Daniell were executed, and after they were dead, were headed on the tower hill: their bodies were buried in Barking church. ¶ About this time one Clober, which ſometime kept a ſchoole at Dis in Norffolke, with thrée brethren, whoſe names were Lincolne, pretended an inſurrection, and would haue gathered the people at a mariage, vnto the which the brethren promiſed either of them to bring an hundred horſſe with men. At which time by them appointed. the ſaid Clober gaue charge to a ſeruant of his, to watch in a lane nigh to the church where they ſhould méet, and as ſoone as he ſaw anie horſſeman comming thitherward, to giue him warning with all ſpéed. So it chanced (by the will of God) that certeine men riding through that lane, to ſome other place about their buſineſſe, came about ſuch an houre as Clober had appointed. Vpon ſight of which men, his ſaid ſeruant returned to his maiſter, and told him that his friends were come: and immediatlie the ſaid Clober ſtood vp in the pariſh church of Parſleie, and read a traitorous proclamation of purpoſe prepared: which being ended, and ſéeing his part was too weake, for that his mates were not come, began to flée. But one maiſter Shireman purſued and tooke him at a towne called Eie in Suffolke, and was kept in priſon vntill the next ſeſſions at ſaint Edmundſburie, and his thrée mates being brought to him, were there all togither drawne, hanged, and quartered.]

And although the quéene ſéemed to fauour him much, as one profeſſing the catholike religion: yet when ſhe vnderſtood the truth of his vile déed, ſhe abhorred him, & commanded that he ſhould be vſed according to iuſtice; wherefore ſhortlie after, he was brought to Weſtminſter, & there arreigned & found guiltie, & had iudgement as a murtherer to be hanged. ¶This yeare before harueſt, wheat was ſold for foure marks the quarter, malt at foure & fortie ſhillings the quarter, beans & rie at fortie ſhillings the quarter, & peaſe at ſix and fortie ſhillings and eight pence: but after harueſt wheat was ſold for fiue ſhillings the quarter, malt at ſix ſhillings eight pence, rie at thrée ſhillings foure pence. So that the penie wheat loafe, that weied in London the laſt yéere but eleuen ounces Troie, weied now ſix and fiftie ounces Troie. In the countrie, wheat was ſold for foure ſhillings the quarter, malt at foure ſhillings eight pence; and in ſome places a buſhell of rie for a pound of candles which was foure pence. The ſeauenth of September, at ſeauen of the clocke at night, in a blacke rainie cloud in the weſt was ſéene a rainbow, the moone in the eaſt riſen one houre before, and faire ſhining, and at the full the daie before.] This preſent moneth of March king Philip, who a long ſeaſon had béene in Flanders to take poſſeſſion & gouernment of the low countries (as is aforſaid) did now returne into England, and paſſed through London, being accompanied with the quéene and diuerſe nobles of the realme.

The returne of king Philip into England.

The foure and twentith of Aprill Thomas Stafford, ſecond ſonne to the lord Stafford, with other to the number of two and thirtie perſons, comming forth of France by ſea, arriued at Scarborough in Yorkeſhire, where they tooke the caſtell, and held the ſame two daies, and then were taken without effuſion of bloud by the earle of Weſtmerland. The ſaid Stafford and Richard Sanders, otherwiſe called capteine Sanders, with thrée or foure others, of the which one was a Frenchman, were ſent vp to London, & there committed to priſon in the tower. The ſaid Stafford and foure others were arreigned and condemned. Wherevpon the eight and twentith of Maie, being fridaie, the ſaid Stafford was beheaded on the tower hill; and on the morrow thrée of his companie, as Strellie, Bradford, and Proctor, were drawen from the tower to Tiborne, and there executed. Their heads were ſet ouer the bridge, and their quarters ouer the gates about the ſame citie. Capteine Sanders had his pardon, and ſo eſcaped. The firſt of Maie Thomas Perſie was made knight, and after lord, and on the next daie he was created earle of Northumberland. The quéene gaue vnto him all the lands which had béene his anceſtors, remaining at that time in hir hands.

Stafford and others committed to the tower, and after executed.

Thomas Perſie created earle of Northumberland.

In this ſeaſon, although the French king (as was ſaid) was verie loth to haue warres with England, yet the quéene tangling hir ſelfe contrarie to promiſe in hir huſbands quarrell, ſent a defiance to the French king by Clarenceaux king of armes; who comming to the citie of Remes, where the ſaid king then laie, declared the ſame vnto him the ſeuenth of June, being the mondaie in Whitſunwéeke. On the which daie, Garter and Norreie king of armes, accompanied with other heralds, and alſo with the lord maior and certeine of the aldermen of the citie of London, by ſound of thrée trumpets that rode before them, proclamed open war againſt the ſaid French king, firſt in Cheape ſide, and after in other parts of the citie, where cuſtomarilie ſuch proclamations are made: the ſhiriffes ſtill riding with the heralds, till they had made an end, although the lord maior brake off in Cheape ſide, and went to ſaint Peters to heare ſeruice, and after to Paules, where (according to the vſage then) he went on proceſſion. King Philip bicauſe of the warres towards, betwixt him and the French king, the firſt of Julie paſſed ouer to Calis, and ſo into Flanders, where on that ſide the ſeas he made prouiſion for thoſe warres: at which time there was great talke among the common people, muttering that the king making ſmall account of the quéene, ſought occaſions to be abſent from hir.

Neuertheleſſe, ſhe ſhortlie after cauſed an armie of a thouſand horſemen, and foure thouſand footmen, with two thouſand pioners to be tranſported ouer to his aid, vnder the leading of diuerſe of the nobilitie and other valiant capteins, whoſe names partlie follow: the earle of Penbroke capteine generall, ſir Anthonie Browne vicount Montacute lieutenant generall vnder the ſaid earle, the lord Greie of Wilton lord marſhall, the earle of Rutland generall of the horſſemen, the lord Clinton earle of Lincolne coronell of the footmen, the lord Ruſſell earle of Bedford, the lord Robert Dudleie earle of Leiceſter and maiſter of the ordinance, the lord Thomas Howard, ſir William Weſt lord de la Ware, ſir Edward Windſore after lord Windſore, the lord Braie, ſir Edmund Briges lord Shandois, the lord Ambroſe Dudleie earle of Warwike, the lord Henrie Dudleie, Edward Randall eſquier ſergeant maior, maiſter Whiteman treaſuror of the armie, Edward Chamberleine eſquier capteine of the pioners, ſir Richard Leigh trenchmaſter, John Higate eſquier prouoſt marſhall, Thomas Haruie eſquier muſtermaſter, ſir Peter Carew, ſir William Courtneie, ſir Giles Stranguiſh, ſir Thomas Finch maſter of the campe, and other nobles, knights, and gentlemen of right approoued valiancie: although diuerſe of them were ſuſpected to be proteſtants. Furthermore, to make king Philips power the ſtronger, there came aid vnto him from ſundrie places; whereby as his armie increaſed in number, ſo likewiſe grew the ſame more puiſſant in ſtrength. The people that aſſiſted him are thus remembred by C. O. in his diſcourſe of this warre, as here followeth:

The fiftéenth of Julie, the ladie Anne of Cleue departed this life at Chelſeie, and was honorablie buried at Weſtminſter the fift of Auguſt: a ladie of right commendable regard, courteous, gentle, a good houſekéeper, & verie bountifull to hir ſeruants.

Obſequie for the king of Portingale.

Fiftéene or ſixtéene thouſand footmen, and a thrée or foure thouſand horſſemen.

The coneſtable of France duke Montmorencie generall of the French forces.

The eightéenth of Auguſt was a ſolemne obſequie celebrated in the church of S. Paule in London, for Iohn king of Portingale, who departed this life in Iulie laſt paſt. The lord treaſuror was chéefe mourner. The quéenes armie being tranſported ouer to Calis (as before ye haue heard) marched to ioine with king Philips power: the which alreadie being aſſembled, had inuaded the French confines, and being come before ſaint Quintins, planted a ſtrong ſiege before that tower. To the reſcue whereof, the French king ſent a great armie both of horſſemen and footmen, vnder the leading of the coneſtable of France: which armie conſiſted of about nine hundred men at armes, with as manie light horſſemen, ſeuen or eight hundred Roiſters, two & twentie enſignes of lancequenets, and ſixtéene enſignes of French footmen. They had alſo with them fiftéene péeces of great artillerie, to wit, ſix double canons, foure long culuerings, the reſt baſtard culuerings, and other péeces of ſmaller mould. The coneſtable thus garded vpon ſaint Laurence daie, which is the tenth of Auguſt, approched the towne, meaning to put into the ſame ſuccours of more ſoldiors, with Dandelot the admerals brother, that was within the towne not furniſhed with ſuch a garriſon as was thought expedient for the defenſe therof, againſt ſuch a power as king Philip had prepared againſt it.

Priſoners of name. Theſe nine were knights of the order.

The duke of Sauoie and other capteins of the armie that laie at ſiege before thẽ towne, aduertiſed of the coneſtables comming towards them, aſſembled the moſt part of their horſſemen togither, and with all ſpéed made towards a paſſage diſtant from the place where the French armie ſtood houering about a two Engliſh miles: and being got ouer, they diuided themſelues into eight troopes of horſſemen, led by the earles of Egmond, Horne, Mauſfield, the dukes of Brunſwike and others, being in all to the number of fiue thouſand men of armes, beſide the ſwart Rutters and light horſſemen. Which gaue ſuch a furious & cruell charge vpon the Frenchmen, that they not able to reſiſt the ſame, were altogither defeated, and their battels as well horſſemen as footmen put to flight. Wherof king Philip hauing knowlege, purſued them with all his force, in which purſute there were ſlaine of the Frenchmen a great number, the chiefe whereof were theſe that follow. Iohn of Burbon duke of Anghien the vicount of Turraine & eldeſt ſonne of Roch du Maine, the lord of Chandenier, with a great number of other gentlemen that bare armes in the field. There were taken theſe priſoners following; the duke of Montmorencie conſtable of France hurt with an harquebuz ſhot in the hanch, the duke of Montpenſer hurt in the head, the duke of Longueuille, the marſhall of ſaint Andrews, the lord Lewes brother to the duke of Mantoa, monſieur de Vaſſe, the baron of Curton, monſieur de la Roch du Maine, the Reingraue coronell of the Almans: moreouer the counte de Roch Foucault, monſieur d' Obignie, monſieur de Meru, monſieur de Montbrun, monſieur de Biron, ſonnes to the coneſtable, monſieur de la chapelle de Biron, monſieur de ſaint Heran: beſide manie other gentlemen and capteins of good account and eſtimation. Yet there eſcaped the more part of the French horſſemen, and manie of their footmen, with certeine of their capteins of honor; as the duke of Neuers, the prince of Conde brother to the king of Nauarre, the earle of Montmorencie eldeſt ſonne to the coneſtable, the earle of Sancerre, monſieur de Burdillon, and other of the barons of France.

The ſiege before ſaint Quintins, and the ſame taken and ſacked.

Within two or thrée daies after this ouerthrow, king Philip with the Engliſh armie, vnder the gouernement of the earle of Penbroke, and others, came to the ſiege afore ſaint Quintins, & ſo was the ſiege greatlie reinforced; and on the ſeuen and twentith of Auguſt by the ſpeciall aid & helpe of the Engliſhmen, the towne of ſaint Quintins was taken. For when the other ſoldiours, after diuerſe aſſaults were repelled and gaue ouer, the Engliſhmen of a ſtout courage gaue a new onſet, by reaſon whereof the towne was taken. And in reward of their well dooing, king Philip granted them the ſaccage of the ſaid towne. But then the ſwart Rutters, which kéepe no rule when they be ſtrongeſt, ſet vpon the Engliſhmen, in taking of the ſpoile, and killed a great number of them. This grudge was with much difficultie appeaſed, & men thought that if the Engliſhmen being much fewer in number had not béene oppreſſed with the multitude of the other, that it would haue growne to a great ſlaughter on both parts. At the aſſault the lord Henrie Dudleie, yoongeſt ſonne to the duke of Northumberland was ſlaine with the ſhot of a great péece, as he ſtooped vpon his approch vnto the wall, and ſtaid to rip his hoſe ouer the knée, thereby to haue béene the more apt and nimble to the aſſault. This was his end, of whome one ſaith thus:

———Henricus Dudleius heros,
Ille annis generoſam animam iuuenilibus efflat,
Quem referunt ſocij flentes in caſtra peremptum;
Vt mos chriſticolæ eſt, velatum ſindone, gentis.

The lord Henrie Dudleie ſlaine with the ſhot of a gun.

After the winning of this towne, newes in poſt were brought into England to the quéene, who cauſed generall proceſſions to be made, and Te Deum to be ſoong, giuing all laud and praiſe to almightie God for this great victorie. And in the ſtréets of euerie citie and towne of the realme were made bonefires with great reioiſing: which ſudden ſhort gladneſſe turned verie ſhortlie after to great & long ſorow. For if ought were woone by hauing of ſaint Quintins, England got nothing at all, for the gaine thereof came onelie to king Philip. But the loſſe of Calis, Hammes and Guiſnes, with all the countrie on that ſide the ſea (which followed ſoone after) was ſuch a buffet to England, as happened not in more than an hundred yeares before; and a diſhonor wherwith this realme ſhall be blotted, vntill God ſhall giue power to redub it with ſome like requitall to the French.

Doctor Weſton reſigneth the deanrie of Weſtminſter by compulſion and is recompenſed.

Doctor Weſton being (as you haue heard before) prolocutor of the conuocation houſe, was at this time in diſpleaſure with cardinall Poole, and other biſhops: bicauſe he was vnwilling to reſigne his deanrie of Weſtminſter vnto the quéene, whoſe purpoſe was to place there (as in old time before) the religion of moonks, whome in déed he fauoured not, although in all other things he ſtood with the church of Rome. Neuertheleſſe, by verie importunate ſute, or rather compulſion, he with his collegues reſigned the deanrie of Weſtminſter. In recompenſe therof he was made deane of Windſor, where not long after he was taken in adulterie, and for that fact was by the cardinall depriued of all his ſpirituall liuings, from whoſe ſentence he appealed vnto the court of Rome. For the following of which appeale he ſought ſecretlie to depart the realme: but he was apprehended by the waie, and committed to the tower of London, where he remained priſoner, vntill (by the death of quéene Marie) quéene Elizabeth came vnto the crowne, by whome he was ſet at libertie, and foorthwith fell ſicke and died.

The malice of cardinall Poole againſt king Henrie the eight.

Sir Thomas Treſham made lord of ſaint Iohns of Ieruſalem.

The common talke was, that if he had not ſo ſuddenlie died, he would haue diſcloſed the purpoſe of the chiefe of the clergie, meaning the cardinall, which was to haue taken vp K. Henries bodie at Windſor, and to haue burned it, as manie thought. The thirtith of Nouember, being ſaint Andrews daie, in the forenoone, the quéene came from ſaint Iames to hir palace at Weſtminſter, where ſhe heard maſſe: at the which, ſir Thomas Treſham knight receiued the Calis not furniſhed with a ſufficient number of men.

the order of the croſſe, & was inſtituted lord of ſaint Iohns of Ieruſalem in England. At this time, although there was open hoſtilitie and warre betwéen England & France: yet contrarie to the common cuſtome before vſed, the towne of Calis and the forts thereabouts were not ſupplied with anie new accrewes of ſoldiors, but rather withdrawne from thenſe, and diſcharged. Which negligence was not vnknowne to the enimie, who long before had practiſed the winning of the ſaid towne and countrie.

The loſſe of ſaint Quintins nettleth the French king.

The French king therefore being ſharplie nettled with the late loſſe of ſaint Quintins, and a great péece of his countrie adioining, and deſirous of reuenge, thought it not méet to let ſlip this occaſion, but rather to aduance the ſame with all expedition, according vnto the plot laied by the coneſtable before hand. The king yet neuertheleſſe hauing an armie in a readineſſe (although the coneſtable were now priſoner, and therefore could not be preſent himſelfe) to imploie where moſt aduantage ſhould appeare, determined with all ſpéed to put in proofe the enterpriſe of Calis, which long and manie times before was purpoſed vpon, as it was well knowne. This practiſe was not ſecret, but that the deputies of Calis and Guiſnes had ſome intelligence thereof, and informed the quéens and hir councell accordinglie, as well by letters, as by ſufficient meſſengers: for not onelie Iohn Hieſield maſter of the ordinance was ſent from thenſe to giue due aduertiſement of the French kings purpoſe, & to haue a ſupplie of things neceſſarie for mounting of the great artillerie wherof he had charge; but alſo ſir Raſe Chamberleine, capteine of the caſtell, was likewiſe ſent to giue the like aduertiſement, who returned not paſt two or thrée daies before the duke of Guiſe came thither with the armie. And ſo either by wilfull negligence, or lacke of credit by the quéenes councell here, this great caſe was ſo ſlenderlie regarded, that no prouiſion of defenſe was made, vntill it was ſomewhat too late.

The duke of Guiſe with a great armie commeth toward Calis.

Guiſe entreth the Engliſh frontier.

The duke of Guiſe being generall of the French armie, procéeded in this enterpriſe with maruellous ſpéed and no leſſe policie. For approching the Engliſh frontier vnder colour to vittell Bullongne and Ard, he entered the ſame vpon a ſudden on Newyeares daie, a ſorie little plot of ground, intrenched at Sandgate, and then diuided his armie into two parts, ſending one part with certeine péeces of great artillerie along the downes by the ſea ſide towards Ricebanke: and the other part furniſhed alſo with batterie péeces, marched ſtreightforth to Newnambridge, meaning to batter theſe two forts both at one time. Which thing he did with ſuch readie diſpatch, that comming thither verie late in the euening, he was maſter of both by the next morning: where at the firſt ſhot diſcharged at Newnambridge, the head of the maſter gunner of that péece, whoſe name was Horſlie was ſtriken off.

Newnambridge taken by the French.

The maſter gunners head ſmitten cleane off with a gun.

The capteine hauing ſent vnto the lord deputie of Calis for ſome ſupplie of men, was anſwered that if he perceiued the enimies force to be ſuch, whereby his péece ſhould grow to be in anie danger: that then he ſhould choke vp the artillerie, and retire with his men vnto Calis for defenſe of the towne, where they ſtood in great want of men alſo, euen to the perill of loſing the whole, if the enimies came forwards to beſiege it. Herevpon the capteine within Newnambridge perceiuing he might haue no ſuccors, retired with his ſoldiors vnto Calis, in ſuch ſecret wiſe, that the Frenchmen perceiued it not of a pretie while; inſomuch that they ſhot ſtill at the fort, when there was not a man within it to make reſiſtance: and by that time that they were come to Calis, the other part of the French armie that went by the ſea ſide with their batterie, had wonne Ricebanke, being abandoned to their hands. The next daie the Frenchmen with fiue double canons and thrée culuerings began a batterie, from the Sandhils next Ricebanke againſt the curteine betwixt the watergate and the ſoldiors priſon on the wall, and continued the ſame by the ſpace of two or thrée daies, vntill they had made a little breach next vnto the watergate, which neuertheleſſe was not yet aſſaultable: for that which was broken in the daie, was by them within the towne made vp againe in the night ſtronger than before. But the batterie was not begun there by the French, for that they intended to enter in that place, but rather to abuſe the Engliſh, to haue the leſſe regard vnto the defenſe of the caſtell, which was the weakeſt part of the towne, and the place where they were aſcerteined by their eſpials to win eaſie entrie. So that while our people trauelled fondlie to defend that counterfet breach of the towne wall, the duke had in the meane ſeaſon planted fiftéene double canons againſt the caſtell. Which caſtell being conſidered by the rulers of the towne, to be of no ſuch force as might reſiſt the batterie of the canon (by reaſon it was old and without anie rampiers) it was deuiſed to make a traine with certeine barrels of powder to this pupoſe, that when the Frenchmen ſhould enter (as they well knew that there they would) to haue fired the ſaid traine, and blowne vp the kéepe, and for that purpoſe left neuer a man within to defend it.

But the French hauing paſſed through the dich full of water, & thereby with their cloths wringing wet as they paſſed ouer the traine, they moiſted ſo the powder, that it would not take fire when it was giuen. Herevpon the Frenchmen eſpieng the traine, auoided the ſame; ſo as that deuiſe came to no purpoſe, and without anie reſiſtance they entered the caſtell, and thought to haue entered the towne by that waie. But by the proweſſe and hardie courage of ſir Anthonie Ager knight, & marſhall of the towne, with his ſoldiors they were repelled, and driuen backe againe into the caſtell, and ſo hard followed, that our men forced them to cloſe and ſhut the caſtell gate for their ſuertie, leaſt it ſhould haue béene recouered againſt them, as it was once attempted by ſir Anthonie Ager; who there with his ſonne and heire, and a purſeuant at armes called Calis, with diuerſe others to the number of thrée or foure ſcore Engliſhmen loſt their liues.

Sir Anthonie Ager and his ſonne ſlaine.

The lord Wentworth.

A parlée demanded of the French.

The ſame night after the recule of the Frenchmen, whoſe number ſo increaſed in the caſtell, that the towne was not able to reſiſt their force, the lord Wentworth being deputie of the towne, appointed Nicholas Fellow, aliàs Guiſnes, and Richard Turpine, aliàs Hammes, to go to the French within the caſtell, to demand parlée: wherevnto they aſſented, put forth of the poſterne two French gentlemen, and in pledge for them receiued into the caſtell Iohn Hieſield maſter of the ordinance, and Edmund Hall one of the coneſtables of the ſtaple. Herevpon they falling in talke about a compoſition: at length after ſome long debating of the matter, they concluded in this ſort. Firſt that the towne, with all the great artillerie, vittels, and munitions, ſhould be fréelie yeelded to the French king, the liues of the inhabitants onelie ſaued, to whome ſafe conduct ſhould be granted to paſſe where they liſted: ſauing the lord deputie, with fiftie ſuch other as the duke ſhould appoint, to remaine priſoners, and be put to their ranſome. The next morning, the Frenchmen entered and poſſeſſed the towne: and forthwith all the men, women, and children, were commanded to leaue their houſes, and to go to certeine places appointed for them to remaine in, till order might be taken for their ſending awaie.

Calis deliuered to the French.

The places thus appointed for them to remaine in, were chieflie foure, the two churches of our ladie, and ſaint Nicholas, the deputies houſe, and the ſtaple, where they reſted a great part of that daie, and one whole night, and the next daie till thrée of the clocke at afternoone, without either meat or drinke. And while they were thus in the churches, and thoſe other places, the duke of Guiſe in the name of the French king, in their hearings made a proclamation, ſtrictlie charging all and euerie perſon that were inhabitants of the towne of Calis, hauing about them anie monie, plate, or iewels, to the value of one groat to bring the ſame forthwith, and laie it downe vpon the high altars of the ſaid churches vpon paine of death; bearing them in hand alſo, that they ſhould be ſearched. By reaſon of which proclamation, there was made a great & ſorowfull offertorie. And while they were at this offering within the churches, the Frenchmen entered into their houſes, and rifled the ſame, where was found ineſtimable riches and treaſure: but ſpeciallie of ordinance, armor, and other munitions.

The duke of Guiſes proclamation to bring in monie and plate, &c.

The French fall to ſpoiling and rifling.

¶ Thus dealt the French with the Engliſh in lieu and recompenſe of the like vſage to the French when the forces of king Philip preuailed at S. Quintins: where not content with the honour of victorie, the Engliſh in ſacking the towne ſought nothing more than the ſatiſfieng of their gréedie veine of couetouſneſſe, with an extreame neglect of all moderation. So likewiſe did the Spaniſh ſoldiors, and the reſt that could come to finger anie thing of value: inſomuch that neither monie nor plate, either of ſiluer or gold, rich hangings, bedding nor houſhold ſtuffe was ſpared: but what they could not carie awaie for cumberſomneſſe, they ſold dogcheape; were the ſame neceſſarie furniture ſeruiceable for the chamber, the kitchin, or anie other roome in a mans houſe. Pearls and pretious ſtones, iewels and owches, the rich ornaments of the French dames were then bought and ſold at a low price, which a long time had béene kept ſhut vp vnder locke and keie: all laie open now to the gréedie eie of the ſoldiors, who like landlords kept poſſeſſion of houſes, as C.O. noteth, of whom I haue borrowed the report of this reuell rowt, ſaieng:

Armatis muros firmiſsimáque occupat vrbis
Militibus victor, dominantur in ædibus altis
Iam vacuis veterum dominorum Marte phalanges
Conſpicuæ.]

About two of the clocke the next daie at after noone, being the ſeuenth of Ianuarie, a great number of the meaneſt ſort were ſuffered to paſſe out of the towne in ſafetie, being garded through the armie with a number of Scotiſh light horſſemen, who vſed the Engliſhmen verie well and friendlie: and after this euerie daie for the ſpace of thrée or foure daies togither, there were ſent awaie diuerſe companies of them till all were auoided, thoſe only excepted that were appointed to be reſerued for priſoners, as the lord Wentworth, & others. There were in the towne of Calis fiue hundred Engliſh ſouldiors ordinarie, and no more: and of the towneſmen not fullie two hundred fighting men (a ſmall gariſon for the defenſe of ſuch a towne) and there were in the whole number of men, women, and children (as they were accounted when they went out of the gate) foure thouſand and two hundred perſons. But the Lord Wentworth deputie of Calis, ſir Raſe Chamberleine capteine of the caſtell, Iohn Harlſton capteine of Ricebanke, Nicholas Alexander capteine of Newnambridge, Edward Grimſtone the comptrollor, Iohn Rogers ſuruetor, with others, to the number of fiftie (as aforeſaid) ſuch as it pleaſed the duke of Guiſe to appoint, were ſent priſoners into France.

The poreſt & meaneſt ſort voided out of Calis.

Gariſon of ſoldiors that were in Calis

Thus haue ye heard the diſcourſe of the ouerthrow and loſſe of the towne of Calis, the which enterpriſe was begun and ended in leſſe than eight daies, to the great maruell of the world, that a towne of ſuch ſtrength, and ſo well furniſhed of all things as that was (ſufficient numbers of men of warre onlie excepted) ſhould ſo ſuddenlie be taken and conquered, but moſt ſpeciallie in the winter ſeaſon, what time all the countrie about (being mariſh ground) is commonly ouerflowne with water. The ſaid towne was woon from the French king by K. Edward the third, in the time of Philip de Valois then French king: and being in poſſeſſion of the kings of England two hundred and eleuen yeares, was in the time of Philip and Marie king & quéene of England loſt within leſſe than eight daies: being the moſt notable fort that England had. For the winning whereof, king Edward aforeſaid, in the 21 yeare of his reigne, was faine to continue a ſiege eleuen moneths and more. Wherefore it was iudged of all men, that it could not haue come ſo to paſſe, without ſome ſecret trecherie.

Calis conquered and loſt in leſſe than eight daies.

How long Calis was in poſſeſſion of the kings of England.

Here is alſo to be noted, that when quéene Marie and hir councell heard crediblie of the Frenchmens ſudden approch to that towne, ſhe with all ſpéed poſſible (but ſomewhat too late) raiſed a great power for the reſcue thereof; the which comming to Douer, ſtaied thereabouts till the towne was woone, either for that their whole number was not come togither, or for that there were not ſhips readie ſufficient to paſſe them ouer, although the wind and weather ſerued verie well to haue tranſported them thither, till the ſundaie at night after the towne was deliuered: for then began a maruellous ſore and rigorous tempeſt, continuing the ſpace of foure or fiue daies togither, that the like had not béene ſéene in the remembrance of man. Wherefore ſome ſaid that the ſame came to paſſe through necromancie, and that the diuell was raiſed vp and become French, the truth whereof is knowne (ſaith maiſter Grafton) to God. True it is that after the ſaid tempeſt began, for the time it laſted, no ſhip could well brooke the ſeas, by reaſon of the outragious ſtorms. And ſuch of the quéenes ſhips as did then aduenture the paſſage, were ſo ſhaken and torne with the violence of the weather, that they were forced to returne in great danger, & not without loſſe of all their tackle and furniture: ſo that if this tempeſtuous weather had not chanced, it was thought that the armie ſhould haue paſſed to haue giuen ſome ſuccors to Guiſnes, and to haue attempted the recouerie of Calis.

As good neuer as too late.

A terrible tempeſt.

Rich. Grafton.

The quéenes ſhips ſore ſhaken with ſtorme and tempeſt.

But if the ſame armie might haue béene readie to haue tranſported ouer in time, before the loſſe of Calis, and whileſt the weather was moſt calme and ſwéet, as was poſſible for that time of the yeare, the towne might haue béene preſerued; and the other péeces which through want of timelie ſuccours came into the enimies poſſeſſion. And thus by negligence of the councell at home, conſpiracie of traitors elſewhere, force and falſe practiſe of enimies, holpen by the rage of moſt terrible tempeſts of contrarie winds and weather, this famous fort of Calis was brought againe and left in the hands and poſſeſſion of the French. ¶ Now were he worthie of a kingdome, that could ſenſiblie and ſignificantlie ſet forth the inſolent triumphs and immoderate reioiſing of the French for the recouerie of Calis ſo long poſſeſſed by the Engliſh, and now in forren tenure. In deſcribing whereof a man had néed of manie heads fraught with extraordinarie inuention, and of many hands readilie to deliuer in writing his rare conceipts in this caſe. For as they are a people depending wholie vpon extremities in their actions: ſo in this they vſed no meaſure, inſomuch that euen the learneder ſort among them, namelie Turnebus, Au-

A ſight of which verſes in ſome part I may not omit (for it requireth a booke to tranſcribe all) leaſt I might be thought to impoſe vpon them a falſe charge. This therefore in the forme of a dialog betweene a poſt and the people writeth Auratus the French kings publike reader in the Gréeke tong:

And thus procéedeth he in his od veine of inuention, concluding with a queſtion, whether the king of France or the duke of Guiſe are the more happie and bleſſed perſon? The anſwer is made that they are both bleſſed, the king for the duke ſake, and the duke for the kings; and therefore his poſie muſt of force ſing and ſound to them both thriſe, that is, oftentimes Ter io triumphe, ter io triumphe. But I would to God the Engliſh had not béene ſo ſoon and ſo ſuddenlie turned out of their old poſſeſſion, nor the French fondlings obteined ſuch a iuſt cauſe of immoderate ioy and outragious triumph.]

But to leaue Calis in the preſent ſtate, you ſhall vnderſtand, that ſo ſoone as this duke of Guiſe (contrarie to all expectation) had in ſo few daies gained this ſtrong towne of Calis (afore thought impregnable) and had put the ſame in ſuch order as beſt ſéemed for his aduantage, proud of the ſpoile, and preſſing forward vpon his good fortune, without giuing anie long time to the reſidue of the guides or capteines of the forts there, to breath vpon their buſineſſe, the 13 daie of the ſaid moneth being thurſdaie, with all prouiſion requiſite for a ſiege, marched with his armie from Calis, vnto the towne and fort of Guiſnes, fiue miles diſtant from thence. Of which towne and caſtell at the ſame time there was capteine a valiant baron of England, called William lord Greie of Wilton, who not without cauſe ſuſpecting a ſiege at hand, and knowing the towne of Guiſnes to be of ſmall force, as being large in compaſſe, without walles or bulworks, cloſed onlie with a trench, before the Frenchmens arriuall had cauſed all the inhabitants of the towne to auoid, and ſo manie of them as were able to beare armes he cauſed to retire into the caſtell, which was a place well fortified with ſtrong and maſſie bulworks of bricke, hauing alſo an high and mightie tower, of great force and ſtrength, called the Kéepe.

The duke of Guiſe marcheth to the fort and town of Guiſnes.

The L. Greie capteine of Guiſnes.

The towne being thus abandoned, the Frenchmen had the more eaſie approch to the caſtell, who thinking to find quiet lodging in thoſe vacant houſes, entred the ſame without any feare. And being that night at their reſt (as they thought) a choſen band of ſouldiors appointed by the lord Greie, iſſued out by a poſterne of the ſaid caſtell, and ſlue no ſmall number of their ſléepie gheſts, & the reſt they put out of their new lodgings, and maugre the duke and all the French power, conſumed all the houſes of the towne with fire. That notwithſtanding, the ſaid duke with all diligence began his trenches. And albeit the ſhot of the great artillerie from the caſtell was terrible, & gaue him great impeachment: yet did he continue his worke without intermiſſion, and for examples ſake wrought in his owne perſon as a common pioner or labourer. So that within leſſe than thrée daies, he brought to the number of fiue & thirtie batterie péeces, hard to the brim of the caſtell ditch, to batter the ſame on all ſides, as well forthright as acroſſe. But his principall batterie he planted againſt the ſtrongeſt bulworke of all, called Marie bulworke, thinking by gaining of the ſtronger to come more eaſilie by the weaker.

The L. Greie taketh the French at a ſléepie aduantage.

Rabutine.

On mondaie morning therefore by breake of the daie, they had laid two battries to the ſaid bulworke, thirtéene canons in the one, and nine in the other, with which they plied it ſo well, as that by noone they had not onelie diſmounted their counter batterie within, but alſo cleane cut awaie the hope of bricks off the whole forefront of their bulworks, whereof the filling being but of late digged earth, did crimble awaie. Which the enimie finding about two of the clocke in the ſame afternoone, ſent fortie or fiftie forlorne boies with ſwords and targets to view and aſſaie the breach. The ditch at that place before the batterie was not foure and twentie foot broad, now aſſuredlie not a dozzen, nor in deapth aboue a mans knées, therefore with ſmall adoo they came to the breach, and with as little paine came vp the ſame, the clime was ſo eaſie; from whence hauing diſcharged certeine piſtols vpon the Engliſhmen, and receiued a few puſhes of the pike, they retired. And making report of the eaſineſſe of the breach, ſtrait a band or two of Gaſcoigns (as it was thought) threw themſelues into the ditch, and vp they came. Then a little more earneſtly the Engliſhmen leaned to their tackling, their flankers walked, their pikes, their culuers, their pots of wild fire were lent them, the harquebuſh ſaluted them, ſo as iollie maiſter Gaſcoigne was ſet downe with more haſt than he came vp with good ſpéed: and ſo ended mondaies worke, ſauing that vpon the retire from the aſſalt, they gaue ſeuen or eight ſuch terrible tires of batterie, as tooke cleane away from them within the top of their vaumure and maunds, leauing them all open to the canons mouth. Wherby ſurelie but for night that came on, the Engliſhmen had beene forced to haue abandoned the place.

Batteries to the Marie bulworke.

The Gaſcoignes put backe with more haſt than they came vp with good ſpéed.

At this aſſault was ſlaine of gentlemen, one capteine Bourne an Engliſhman, verie valiant, alſo a Spaniſh gentleman, and common ſouldiours to the number of fortie or fiftie. There was alſo ſore hurt at the ſame aſſault, one other Spaniſh capteine, with diuerſe others, whom for the auoiding of tediouſneſſe I let paſſe. At night the lord Greie came to the bulworks, and hauing rendred thanks to God for that daies good ſucceſſe, did greatlie commend them all for their manfull defenſe and valiant behauiour, exhorting them to continue therein, as the onelie thing wherein their ſafetie and good name did reſt. The batterie (as before is told) hauing laid the bulworks open, they within were inforced for winning of a new vaumure, to intrench within the bulworke ſix foot déepe, and nine in thickneſſe, which maruellouſlie did ſtrengthen the péece, the ſame being of no great largeneſſe before. By the next daie being tueſdaie, they had planted two batteries more; the one in the market place of the towne, to beate a curteine of the bodie of the caſtell, of ſix canons; the other vpon the rampire of the towne of thrée péeces, to beat the Cat and a flanker of the Barbican, which two garded one ſide of the Marie bulworke.

The number ſlaine at this aſſault.

The lord Greie commendeth his ſouldiours.

This morning they beſtowed moſt in battering at the flankers, which the daie before they had felt, and in déed wone euerie one from them within, ſauing

Battering of the flankers.

uing that of the Cat, which laie high and ſomwhat ſecret, and an other at the end of a braie by the gate on the other ſide of the bulworke; all the reſt, as thoſe of the Garden bulworke which chéefelie beheld the maine breach of the Barbican, and of the Kéepe, were quite béereued them. And beſides the enimie continuallie interteined the breach, with eight or nine tires the houre. In the afternoone, about the ſame houre that they made their attempt the daie afore, a regiment of Swiſſes, with certeine bands of Frenchmen approched the dich, as if preſentlie they would haue giuen the aſſault; but there they did ſtaie, ſending to the breach onelie a capteine or two, ſéeking thereby to haue diſcouered what flankers yet were left to them within: wherein they were preuented, the lord Graie hauing before warned the gunners not to diſcloſe them, but vpon extremitie. And thus after an houres plaie with the harquebuſh onelie, and a light offer or two of approach, this people retired them, and gaue the canon place againe, which by night had driuen them within anew to become moldwarps, and to intrench themſelues with all ſpéed poſſible.

Certeine Swiſſes and French approch the dich as if they would offer aſſault.

The morrow being wedneſdaie, by the péepe of daie, all the batteries began, and without intermiſſion held on till one of the clocke in the afternoone, and eſpeciallie that in the market place ſo preuailed, as hauing cleane ruined the old wall, did driue through the rampire, and a new countermure of earth raiſed vpon the ſame, where the lord Greie himſelfe ſitting vpon a forme, with ſir Henrie Palmer, and maſter Lewes Diue his lordſhips couſin and deputie, made a faire eſcape, the forme being ſtricken aſunder vnder them, without anie further harme to anie of them: though ſundrie other that daie and the next following loſt their liues on the ſame curteine by the foreſaid battrie, which full in flanke did beat it, wherein yet was his lordſhips onelie abode as his chéefeſt place, to view and regard the behauiour and néed of all the other lims, from which alſo a quoit might be throwne into Marie bulworke. The enimies canon (as is ſaid) hauing plaid thus all the morning, and well ſearched (as they thought) euerie corner that flankers might lurke in, about the foreſaid houre of one of the clocke, the Engliſhmen might deſcrie the trench before the breach to be ſtuffed with enſignes. The L. Greie ſtreight expecting that which followed, gaue word incontinentlie to euerie place to ſtand on their gard, incouraging euerie man to continue in their well begun endeuor. A tower that was called Webs tower, and yet ſtanding, which flanked one ſide of the beaten bulworke, he ſtuffed with twentie of the beſt ſhot with curriers. Theſe things no ſooner thus ordered, but that eight or nine enſignes of Swiſſes, and thrée of Gaſcoigns, did preſent themſelues vpon the counterſcarfe; and without ſtaie the Gaſcoignes flue into the ditch, run vp the breach, whome they within receiue with harquebuſh ſhot, but they requite the Engliſhmen againe with two for one. The top of the vaumure or rather trench, the enimie boldlie approcheth, the pike is offered, to handblowes it commeth. Then the Swiſſe with a ſtatelie leaſure ſteppeth into the dich, and cloſe togither marcheth vp the breach, the fight increaſeth, wareth verie hot, & the breach all couered with the enimies. The ſmall ſhot in Webs tower began now their parts, no bullet that went in vaine. On the other ſide againe 20 of the Spaniards on the inſide of the braies had laid themſelues cloſe till the heat of the aſſault: and then ſhewing themſelues, did no leſſe gall the enimies than the tower. Thus was it no luſtilier aſſailed than brauelie defended. At laſt after an houres fight and more, the gouernors without, finding the great ſlaughter that theirs went to, and ſmall auaile, and perceiuing the two little caſemates of the tower and braies to be the chéefeſt annoiances, did cauſe a retire to be ſounded: and withall thrée or foure of the canons in the market place, to be turned vpon Webs tower, the which at two tires brought cleane downe the ſame vpon the ſouldiors heads, wherein two or thrée were ſlaine outright, others hurt to death, and who eſcaped beſt, ſo maimed or bruiſed, as they were no more able to ſerue.

The danger which my lord Greie eſcaped ſitting vpon a forme with two gentlemen.

The Swiſſes & Gaſcoigns giue the aſſault.

The manhood of the Spaniards againſt the French.

The enimie this while hauing breathed, and a brace of an hundred ſhots put foorth onelie to attend on the few Spaniards that kept the corners of the braies the aſſault afreſh is begun, and their beaten bands with new companies relieued. The lord Greie alſo ſent into the bulworke two hundred freſh men. Now grew the fight heauie vpon the Engliſhmen, all their defenſe reſting in the pike and bill; their chéefeſt flankers being gone, their places to beſtow ſhot in taken from them, their fier-works in manner ſpent, the Spaniſh ſhot on the other ſide ſo ouerlaid, as not one of them but was either ſlaine or marred, yer a quarter of the aſſault was paſt. The eaſineſſe of the fight thus alluring the enimie, vnappointed companies flue to the breach, and courage was on euerie ſide with them, what hauocke they made it is not hard to geſſe. My lord Greie perceiuing the extremitie, ſent to the two forenamed flankers, that they ſhould no longer ſpare. They ſtreight went off, the diches and breach being couered with men. Theſe vnlooked for gheſts made the enimie that was comming to pauſe, and the other alreadie come to repent their haſt. Thrée or foure bowts of theſe ſalutations began to cleare well the breach, though the dich grew the fuller at night. At laſt parted with no great triumph of others winnings (for as the Engliſhmen within went not ſcotfrée) ſo ſuerlie no ſmall number of their enimies carcaſſes tooke vp their lodgings in the ditch that night.

A freſh aſſault begun and the fight hot and heauie againſt the Engliſh.

Enimies ſlaine.

My lord Greie this night came into the bulworke, where after praiſe firſt to God, he gaue thanks and commendations to them all. The ſlaine men he cauſed to be buried, the hurt to be remooued and looked vnto, ſaw the breach repared, inquired of their lacks, and (as he might) ſupplied the ſame. They that were great could not be helped, as cornpowder, fierworks, yea and pikes began to faile vs. The moſt part of the night he here beſtowed, and longer as was thought had taried, had not a ſcaberdles ſword about one of the ſouldiors as he went in the throng & darke amongſt them, thruſt him almoſt through the foot: wherevpon he withdrew him to be dreſſed, vſing firſt vnto his ſouldiors an exhortation to acquite themſelues no leſſe valiantlie the next daie, aſſuring them that one or two more ſuch bankets as this laſt, giuen to the enimie, would coole their courages for anie more aſſaults.

My lord Greies worke after the ſkirmiſh ended.

My L. Greie hurt by miſchance.

This night now, great noiſe & working was heard in the dich, wherevpon the bulworke was once or twice on alarum. At the laſt with creſſets it was eſpied that they were making a bridge. The morning came, and then the ſame was ſéene to be finiſhed, emptie caſks with ropes faſtened togither, & ſawed boords laid thereon. This yet did but put them within, in a certeintie of that which before they accounted of, and ſtood prepared for. To be ſhort, the enimies ſpent all the daie till it was full two of the clocke in batterie, & beating at the two laſt flankers, which at length they woone from them within, & the gunners of either ſlaine. Wherevpon the lord Greie taking counſell of ſir Henrie Palmer, maſter Lewes Diue and Montdragon the leader of the Spaniards: it was reſolued, that there might be order to make a fucaſſe within the bulworke, and preſentlie to withdraw all from thence, ſauing a certeine for a face and ſtale to toll in the enimie, and then to haue blowne it vp whole to the deſtruction of them all.

The duke of Guiſe and monſieur Dandelot with their powers.

In the meane time, the duke in Guiſe hauing giuen order to monſieur Dandelot coronell of the French footmen, that he with his bands ſhould be in a readineſſe to giue the aſſault when ſigne ſhould be giuen, did withdraw him to an higher ground, from whence he might plainlie diſcouer the behauiour as well of his ſouldiors in the aſſault giuing, as alſo of the defendants in anſwering the ſame. And perceiuing not ſo manie of the Engliſh part appearing for defenſe (as he douted there would) gaue order forthwith, that a regiment of his moſt forward lanceknights ſhould mount the brech, to open the firſt paſſage: and that monſieur Dandelot with his French footbands ſhould backe them, which order was followed with ſuch haſt, & deſperat hardines, that entring a déepe ditch full of water, from the bottome whereof to the top of the breach, in ſome places, was well neare fortie foot, without feare either of the water beneath, or the fire aboue, they mounted the breach.

Rabutine.

The deſperat aduenture of the French.

And whereas the duke had prepared (as ye haue heard) bridges made of planke boords, borne vp with caſks and emptie pipes, tied one to another, for his men to paſſe the ſaid ditch: manie of them now at this aſſault, without care of thoſe bridges, plunged into the water, and tooke the next waie to come to the aſſault. Which hot haſt notwithſtanding, the aſſailants were at the firſt ſo ſtoutlie repelled and put backe by the defendants, being furniſhed with great ſtore of wildfire, and other fucaſies for the purpoſe, that they were turned headlong one vpon another, much faſter than they came vp, not without great waſt and ſlaughter of their beſt and moſt forward ſouldiors, to the ſmall comfort of the ſtout duke, who (as is ſaid before) ſtood all this while vpon a little hill to behold this buſineſſe. Wherefore he not induring this ſight any longer, as a man inraged, ran among his men, ſo reprouing ſome, and incouraging other, that the aſſault was hot renewed, with much more vehemencie and furie than before, and with no leſſe ſturdie obſtinacie and deſperation receiued by the defendants, whereby all the breach beneath was filled with French carcaſes.

The duke of Guiſe in a rage with his ſoldiers.

The Engliſh forced to auoid & the enimie entereth.

This notwithſtanding, the duke ſtill redoubled his forces with freſh companies, and continued ſo manie aſſaults one vpon another, that at the laſt charge, being moſt vehement of all the other, the Engliſhmen being tired, and greatlie miniſhed in their numbers, by ſlaughter and bloudie wounds, were of fine force driuen to auoid, & ſo after halfe an houres fight, the enimie entered. Which when the lord Greie beheld, he leaped to the top of the rampire, wiſhing of God that ſome ſhot would take him. When one that ſtood next him, by the ſcarffe ſuddenlie pulled him downe, otherwiſe the effects had well declared the earneſtnes of the praier: for he was not yet vp againe, when a canon ſhot grated vpon the ſame place from whence he fell. And thus verie narrowlie hée ſcaped the danger of that ſhot, which if it had hit him would (no doubt) haue wrought his diſpatch. For what is the weake frame of a mans bodie to mightie forts and ſtrong caſtels, builded of timber and ſtone, beſide the iron worke therewith compact, oftentimes redoubling the ſtrength of the ſame: And yet theſe (we ſée by experience) ruinated, battered, and laid leuell manie times with the thundering ſhot of this dreadfull artillerie: an engine of no great antiquitie, and not vſed among ancient warriours in former ages, but late deuiſe of a Franciſcane frier; pitie it is that euer he was borne to ſet abroch ſuch a peſtilent inuention, as the poet noteth, ſhewing alſo the vſe and the miſchéefous effect therof as followeth:

Tormenti genus eſt ex ferro aut ære coactum,
Quod Franciſcanus frater reperiſſe refertur,
Vt capiat paucis validiſſima caſtra diebus,
Quæ vix cepiſſes armis toto prius anno, &c.

Arthur Greie now lord Greie.

The enimie is daſtardlie, al his victorie notwithſtanding.

But to procéed. The fight within the bulworke yet laſted, to the great ſlaughter of them that defended it. Herevpon my lord Greie preſentlie called to maiſter Lewes Diue, and others that were about him, to follow him to the gate. The maze was ſuch, that beſides his ſonne maiſter Arthur Greie, and now lord Greie, maiſter Lewes Diue, capteine Brickewell, and halfe a dozen of armed corſlets, not a man elſe did follow him. By this means the Engliſhmen were cleane driuen out of the bulworke, the enimie yet not daring to paſſe the braies, gaue them that eſcaped good leiſure to recouer the gate, where my lord Greie holding the wicket himſelfe, receiued them in. Vpon the taking of this bulworke, the ſouldiors of Whiteleies bulworke and the baſe court in diſcomfiture abandoned their charges, fleing to the caſtell: ſo that more than the kéepe and the bodie of the caſtell no part was frée from the enimie. My lord Greie hauing receiued all his, cauſed the gates to be rammed vp.

Ric. Grafton.

A trumpetter from the duke of Guiſe to the lord Greie.

Thus were the chéefe bulworks and vtter lims of the caſtell of Guiſnes obteined by the French, on ſaint Sebaſtians daie, being the twentith of Ianuarie, but yet not without great expenſe of bloud on both ſides: for of the French part there were ſlaine in thoſe aſſaults aboue the number of eight or nine hundred, and of the Engliſh not manie fewer: amongſt whom the greateſt loſſe lighted vpon thoſe few Spaniards and Wallons that were come to aſſiſt the Engliſh at that preſent. It was now night: when a trumpetter came to the ditches ſide in the baſe court, & ſounded a ſummons: who being called vnto, & asked what he would, told that he was ſent to my lord Greie by the duke of Guiſe, with offer of a parlée if it would be harkened vnto. The ſouldiors no ſooner heard theſe newes, but forſaking the walles came all in rowt togither, & confuſedlie ſpeaking to their chiefteine the ſaid lord Greie, praied him to harken to the meſſage, & to haue conſideration of their liues, which ſo long as anie hope remained, they willinglie had ventured. The lord Greies anſwer was, that he marueiled, either what cauſeleſſe miſtruſt of his caring for them was now come vpon them, or what ſudden vnwonted faintneſſe of mind had ſo aſſailed them, as to cauſe them in ſuch diſorder to forſake their places, and leaue the walles naked, and he willed them to returne to the ſame.

Hoſtages required on the dukes part from the lord Greie during the time of the parlée, &c.

My lord Greie hereof tooke counſell, and it was thought good not to reiect the offer, the extremitie on euerie ſide weied. The trumpetter receiuing anſwer, accordinglie departed, & without long abode returned againe, requiring in the dukes behalfe hoſtages for a truce during the parlée from vs, he minding to deliuer the like into the caſtell. From him in fine monſieur Deſtrées, and a gentleman of the kings chamber were ſent in: and maiſter Arthur Greie my lords ſonne, and maiſter Lewes Diue, were put out. Monſieur Dandelot in the braies receiued them, and caried them ouer the vnfortunate bulworke, being come vpon naked and new ſlaine carcaſes, ſome of them ſpralling yet and groning vnder their feet, were onelie the earth they trod on. So paſſing downe the breach ſomewhat to the eaſe of the former heauie ſight, they ſaw it, and the ditch little leſſe fraught with the enimies corpſes. Then to the campe they came, and were lodged in the ſaid Dandelots tent.

The duke and the lord Greie haue communication an whole houre.

The next daie in the morning, the lord Greie was to méet the duke abrode: betwéene them willinglie one houre was ſpent in talking without agréement, onelie vpon this point, that the lord Greie would haue his bands depart with their enſignes diſplaied, which would not be yéelded vnto: ſo he returned, & the hoſtages alſo therevpon were ſent in. Monſieur Deſtrées not being yet come forth, my lord was no ſooner entered againe, but that the ſouldiers eftſoones forſaking the walles, willinglie & to the preſent cutting of all their owne throtes (if monſieur Deſtrées himſelfe had not béene, with a few capteins & gentlemen of the lord Greies owne retinue) came and met him, crieng vpon him to haue pitie vpon them. The lord Greie herewith ſtaied, and pauſing a while, had this ſpeach.

The onelie pitie (if fond I cannot ſaie) that I haue of you, hath cauſed me this daie to make ſuch offers of compoſition, as neither your honeſties, nor my honour, nor either of our duties in my thought maie well beare, which refuſed to take harder to the vtter defacing of our credits, ſith the beſt would blot it. If I would, ſouldiers, your ſelues (me thinketh) in vengeance thereof ſhould turne your weapons vpon me, and ſacrifice ſo hartleſſe a capteine, rather than to take it as a token of a pitifull capteine ouer you, and to yéeld thanks for the ſame. We haue begun, as becommed vs: we haue yet held on as dutie doth bind vs: let vs end then as honeſt dutie and fame doth will vs. Neither is there anie ſuch extremitie of deſpaire in our caſe, but that we maie yet dearelie inough ſell our ſkins yer we loſe them. Let vs then either march out vnder our enſignes diſplaied, or elſe herewith die vnder them diſplaied.

The lord Greis words to his ſoldiers being aſhamed of their timerouſneſſe, and yet pitieng their preſent diſtreſſe.

The ſoldiers herewith in a mutinie flatlie anſwered, that they for his vainglory would not ſell their liues. The deſperatneſſe of their caſe was not vnknowne vnto them (ſaid they) and that their liues in other ſeruice might yet auaile their prince and countrie. In this now further to venture, was but like oxen to be thruſt to the butcher. That his lordſhip was not to expect anie one blow at their hands.

The lord Greies ſouldiers in a mutinie do murmure againſt him, &c.

Herewith in haſt came one from monſieur Deſtrées that ſtood at the rampire, aduiſing him to ſend his ſouldiors to the wals, otherwiſe that the Swiſſes would aſſuredlie enter. So conſtreined, his lordſhip promiſed them to compound, and ſo he got them to the wals. Then my lord going to councell, at length agréed vpon theſe conditions. Firſt, that the caſtell with all the furniture therin as well vittels as great artillerie, powder, and all other munitions of warre, ſhould be wholie rendred without waſting, hiding, or miniſhment thereof. Secondarilie, that the lord Greie with all the capteins, officers and others, hauing charge there, ſhould remaine priſoners at the dukes pleaſure, to be ranſomed after the maner of warre. Thirdlie, that all the reſt, as well ſouldiors as others, ſhould depart with their armors, and baggage to what parties it ſéemed them beſt: neuertheleſſe to paſſe without ſound of drum or trumpet, or enſigne, and to leaue them behind. Theſe articles ſent by monſieur Deſtrées to the duke were accepted, & ſo in the after noone, the duke himſelfe came & receiued the keies of my lord Greie, who preſentlie went out, and was giuen to the marſhall Strozzie, and from him ſold to monſieur de Randan, by whom he came into his brother the counte de Rochefoucalt his hands, and there reſted, till he was redéemed for foure and twentie thouſand crownes.

Articles of agréement betwéene the lord Greie and the enimie.

The daie following, that is ſaie the two and twentith of Ianuarie, all the ſouldiors of the ſaid fortreſſe of Guiſnes, as well Engliſh as ſtrangers, with all the reſt of the inhabitants, and other (excepted the lord Greie himſelfe, maiſter Arthur Greie his ſon, ſir Henrie Palmer knight, Montdragon capteine of the Spaniards, and other men of charge reſerued by the compoſition) departed with their bag and baggage from thenſe towards Flanders. At whoſe iſſuing forth, there were eſtéemed to the number of eight or nine hundred able men for the warre, part Engliſh & part Burgognians. Of Spaniards ſo few were left, as no account is to be made of them, in maner the whole number of them being ſlaine, and ſelling their liues right déerelie, according to the order of good & hardie ſouldiors. Thus endeth this ſiege, wherein for breuities ſake we haue left to ſaie anie thing of the prouiſions that the lord Greie made againſt the ſame, of the aduertiſements that from time to time he ſent to king Philip and quéene Marie, and of their anſwers, of the ſundrie aduentures which they of Guiſnes had with the enimie during their being about Calis, and of the great and manie booties that were there taken. Onelie in a word or two will I ad what bands of ſtrangers were within the péece, becauſe thereof as in an other thing or two, I doo find maiſter Grafton in his chronicle ſpeake at rouers. Firſt came in Montdragon, with two Spaniards more, verie valiant men, whome did follow within a daie or two, about foure or fiue and thirtie other Spaniards, all ſhot, of which (as I haue heard) there went not fiue out of the caſtell.

The ſouldiors of Guiſnes depart thenſe with bag and baggage.

What bands of ſtrangers were within the fort.

There came one capteine Deſquie a Burgognian, with two hundred ſouldiors, pikes moſt. This band was appointed to the Marie bulworke, whoſe capteine being full of the gout, and an impotent man, would not yet be from his charge, but in his bed ended his life in the bulworke. And ſo of this enough. But now after the winning of this towne and caſtell, the duke aduiſing well vpon the place, and conſidering that if it ſhould happen to be regained by Engliſhmen, what a noiſome neighbor the ſame might be to Calis, now being French; and ſpeciallie what impeachment ſhould come thereby for the paſſage thither from France, conſidering alſo the neere ſtanding thereof to the French kings fortreſſe of Ard: ſo that to keepe two garriſons ſo nigh togither ſhould be but a double charge, and not onlie néedleſſe, but alſo dangerous for the cauſe afore rehearſed. Vpon theſe conſiderations (as the Frenchmen write) he tooke order for all the great artillerie, vittels and other munition, to be taken forth, and the caſtell with all the bulworkes and other fortifications there, with all ſpéed to be razed and throwne downe, and the ſtuffe to be caried awaie, and emploied in other more neceſſarie places.

Rich. Grafton.

Then reſted nothing within all the Engliſh pale on that ſide vnconquered, but the little caſtell or pile called Hammes, which though it were but of ſmall force, made by art and induſtrie of mans hand, and being altogither of old workemanſhip without rampiers or bulworks: yet neuertheleſſe, by the naturall ſituation thereof, being on all ſides inuironed with fens and mariſh grounds, it could not eaſilie be approched vnto, either with great ordinance for the batterie, or elſe with anie armie to incampe there for a ſiege: but hauing one ſtreict paſſage thereto by a narrow cauſeie, trauerſed and cut through in diuerſe places, with déepe ditches, alwaies full of water. Which thing being well foreſéene by Edward lord Dudleie then capteine there, hauing as good cauſe to ſuſpect a ſiege there, as his neighbors had afore the Frenchmens comming to Guiſnes, cauſed all the bridges of the ſaid cauſeie being of wood to be broken, to giue thereby the more impeachment to the French, if they ſhould attempt to approch the ſame, as ſhortlie after they did, and kept diuerſe of the paſſages.

Hammes caſtell could not be eaſilie approched vnto, and why.

The lord Edward Dudleie.

But to deliuer the duke and his ſouldiors from that care, there came to him glad newes from thoſe that had charge to watch the ſaid cauſeie, how the capteine hauing intelligence of the rendering of Guiſnes, ſecretlie the ſame night had conueied him-ſelfe,

A prouiſo of aduantage for the duke.

ſelfe, with his ſmall garriſon by a ſecret paſſage ouer the mariſh into Flanders. Wherby the duke being now paſt care of anie further ſiege to be laid in all the frontier, tooke order forthwith to ſeize the ſaid little fort into his own hands, as it was eaſie to doo, when there was no reſiſtance. When this peece was once ſeized by the French, then remained there none other place of defenſe nor ſtrength of the Engliſh on all that ſide the ſea, for the ſafegard of the reſt of the countrie. Whereby the French king became wholie and throughlie lord & maiſter of all the Engliſh pale: for now (as ye haue heard) there was neither towne, caſtell, or other fortreſſe, more or leſſe on that ſide (ſauing Boots bulworks neere to Graueling, which after king Philip kept as his) but that it was either taken awaie by force, or elſe abandoned, and left open to the enimie. And (as the Frenchmen write) beſides the great riches of gold and ſiluer, coine, iewels, plate, wools, and other merchandize (which was ineſtimable) there were found thrée hundred peeces of braſſe mounted on whéeles, and as manie of iron, with ſuch furniture of powder, pellets, armour, vittels, and other munitions of war ſcarſelie credible.

This was a maruellous rich bootie for the enimie, and a great loſſe to the partie contrarie.

Thus haue you heard the whole diſcourſe of the conqueſt of the noble towne of Calis, with all the Engliſh fortreſſes and countrie adioining made by the duke of Guiſe. The news whereof when they came to the French king, no need to aſke how ioifullie they were receiued, not onelie of him and all his court, but alſo vniuerſallie through the whole realme of France. For the which victorie, there was (as the maner is) Te Deum ſung, and bonefiers made euerie where, as it is woont to be in caſes of common ioy and gladneſſe, for ſome rare benefit of God. In ſo much that ſhortlie vpon the conqueſt, there was a publike aſſemblie at Paris of all the eſtates of France, who franklie in recompenſe of the kings charges emploied in the winning of Calis, and the places aforeſaid, and for maintenance of his wars to be continued afterwards, granted vnto him thrée millians of French crowns: whereof the clergie of France contributed one millian, beſides their diſmes. And no maruell though the French did highlie reioiſe at the recouerie of Calis out of the Engliſhmens hands: for it is conſtantlie affirmed of manie, that be acquainted with the affaires of France, that euer ſince the ſame towne was firſt woone by Engliſhmen, in all ſolemne councels aſſembled to treat vpon the ſtate of France, there was a ſpeciall perſon appointed to put them in remembrance from time to time of Calis: as it were to be wiſhed that the like were vſed in England, vntill it were regained from the French.

¶ And here becauſe thus much is ſaid of the French by waie of diſcourſe concerning their exulting, and immoderat ioyfulneſſe manie waies teſtified, ſomewhat being alredie written thereof before: it is noteworthie, either for the increaſe of wit in vs, if it were the fault of our follie; or the aggrauating of their impudencie, if they bluſh not to publiſh a moſt lowd and lewd lie; to remember what I haue read in verſes ſet forth by a Frenchman; wherein among manie words & terms vſed touching this conqueſt of Calis & Guiſnes (wherein alſo a propheſie of Merline (of which name there were two, and both prophets) is introduced, foretelling the reuolution of the ſame to be rather fatall to that nation, than recouerable by prowesse martiall (for thus he ſaith:)

Námque erat in fatis redditurum haud antè Caletum
Ad veteres dominos, quàm ſe regina marito
Traderet externo, veterúmque propagine regum
Poſthabita, nouus hic ſuccederet aduena regnis:
Ipſe Valeſina venturum à ſtirpe nepotem
Merlinus vates multo prædixerat antè,
Sanguinis vltorem noſtri cladíſque futurum.)

But this is not the matter that I meant (though it conteine ſomewhat whereat men may muſe) but a further reach to the rebuke of raſhneſſe in ſome, if it were their déed; and to the ſhame of others, if the report be falſe. For thus ſaith the ſame author, whoſe verſes euen now I rehearſed, ſpeaking of the Engliſhmen, whome former victories (ſaith he) made verie venterous, confident, and full of heart; and beſides that, ſo diſdainfull and ſcornefull towards the French, that they cauſed to be grauen in hard marbell aloft at the entrie of the caſtell or fortreſſe in legible letters (but he telleth not in what language, no more than which of the Merlins propheſie it was; howbeit (ſaith he) thus much in effect in Latine:

Tùm demùm Francus premet obſidione Caletum,
Cùm ferrum plumbúmue natabit ſuberis inſtar.
Then ſhall the Frenchmen Calis win,
When iron and lead like corke ſhall ſwim.

Thus report the French, but how trulie, let them ſaie that are able (vpon their owne knowledge) to iudge: and thus much ſhall ſuffice for that matter.]

Now ſéemed euerie daie a yeare to the French king vntill he perſonallie had viſited Calis, and his new conquered countrie. Wherefore about the end of Ianuarie he tooke his viage thither, accompanied with no ſmall number of his nobilitie: and immediatlie vpon his arriuall there, he peruſed the whole towne and euerie part thereof from place to place, deuiſing with the duke of Guiſe for the better fortification thereof, what ſhould be added vnto the old, and what ſhould be made new, and what ſhould be taken awaie. And after order taken for that buſineſſe, he placed there a noble man, & no leſſe valiant knight of the order, called monſieur de Thermes to be capteine of the towne, and ſo departed he againe into France.

The French king goeth to viſit and ſe Calis.

Monſieur d Thermes made captein of Calis.

After the French kings departure from Calis, he made great haſt for the accompliſhment of the mariage, mooued betweene Francis his eldeſt ſonne, called the Dolphin, and Marie Steward daughter & ſole heire of Iames the fift late king of Scotland: which princeſſe, if the Scots had bin faithfull of promiſe, as they ſeldome be) ſhould haue married king Edward the ſixt. For the breach of which promiſe began all the warre betwéene England & Scotland, as you heard in the latter end of the life of king Henrie the eight, and in the beginning of king Edward the ſixt. This mariage (ſaith Grafton) though it be not of my matter, I thought not to omit, for that manie things were meant thereby, which thanks be to God neuer came to effect. But one ſpeciall point was not hidden to the world, that by meanes of the ſame, the realme of Scotland ſhould for euermore haue remained as vnited and incorporat to the crowne of France: and that as the ſonne and heire of euerie French king dooth ſuccéed to the inheritance and poſſeſſion of a countrie called the Dolphin, & is therfore called Dolphin; & like as the principalitie of Wales apperteineth to the eldeſt ſon of the king of England, who therefore is called the prince of Wales: euen ſo the Dolphin heire of France ſhould thereby haue béene king of Scotland for euermore: which name and title vpon this mariage was accordinglie giuen to Francis Dolphin and heire apparant of France, to be called king Dolphin. The meaning whereof was vtterlie to exclude for euermore anie to be king of Scotland, but onelie the eldeſt ſonne of France.

The mariage betweene the Dolphin and the princeſſe of Scots.

Why the ſon and heire of euerie French king is called the Dolphin.

This memorable marriage was ſolemnized in the citie of Paris the foure and twentith daie of Aprill, in the yéere of Chriſt 1558, with moſt magnificall pompe and triumph, and honored with the preſence of the moſt part of the princes, prelats, lords and barons of both the realmes, as it were for a confirmation of this new aliance. Which as it was much to the aduantage and benefit of France: ſo nothing could be more preiudice & derogation to the crowne of Scotland, as a deuiſe tending to the perpetuall aboliſhing and extinguiſhment of the name & ſtate of kings in that realme. In this meane time alſo the queene Dowager of Scotland had doone what in hir laie, to procure the Scotiſh nobilitie to make warres againſt England: but they being not willing thereto, monſieur Doiſell coronell of certeine bands of Frenchmen came to Aimouth within ſix miles of Berwike, and fortified that place, making ſundrie rodes and inuaſions into England. In reuenge whereof the Engliſhmen made the like inrodes into Scotland, wherevpon the Scotiſhmen in their defenſe (as ſome pretend) were driuen to haue warres: and therevpon the earle of Huntleie was made lieutenant of the Scots borders, who remaining there by the helpe of the Frenchmen did manie diſpleaſures to the Engliſhmen. This warre was begun in the yeere laſt paſt, and ſo continued: during the which manie ſkirmiſhes and diuerſe proper feats of armes were put in practiſe betwixt the parties (as in the hiſtorie of Scotland more at large it doth appeare) where we ſpeake of the doings in the yeares 1557 and 1558.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S. pag. 1106. A preſt to the queene.

A wonderfull tempeſt of thunder wonderfull indeed.

A great death of old people through vehement quartane agues.

¶A preſt was granted to the queene by the citizens of London, of twentie thouſand pounds, which was leuied of the companies: for the which ſumme to be paied againe, the queene bound certeine lands, & alſo allowed for intereſt of the monie twelue pounds of euerie hundred for a yeare. Alſo this yeare within a mile of Notingham, was a maruellous tempeſt of thunder, which as it came through two townes, beat downe all the houſes and churches, the bels were caſt to the out ſide of the churchyards, and ſome webs of lead foure hundred foot into the field, writhen like a paire of gloues. The riuer of Trent running betweene the two townes, the water with the mud in the botome was carried a quarter of a mile, and caſt againſt the trees, the trees were pulled vp by the roots and caſt twelue ſcore off. Alſo a child was taken forth of a mans hands two ſpeares length hie, and carried a hundred foot off, and then let fall, wherewith his arme was broken, & ſo he died. Fiue or ſix men thereabout were ſlaine, and neither fleſh nor ſkinne periſhed; there fell ſome haileſtones that were fifteene inches about, &c. This yeare in harueſt time the quartane agues continued in like maner, or more vehementlie, than they had doone the laſt yeare paſt, where through died manie old people, and ſpeciallie prieſts, ſo that a great number of pariſhes were vnſerued, and no curats to be gotten: and much corne was loſt in the field for lacke of workemen & laborers. Wherevpon inſued a great ſcarſitie; ſo that in the beginning of ſir Thomas Leighs maioraltie, corne roſe to fourteene ſhillings the quarter, and wood waxed ſcant in London, and was ſold for thirteene and foureteene ſhillings the thouſand of billets, and coles at ten pence the ſacke, by reaſon of the great death and ſickneſſe the laſt ſummer for lacke of helpe and carriage.] ¶And here before we paſſe the yeare 1558, it were a fowle ouerſight, not to make mention of a memorable diſcourſe touching the ladie Katharine late dutcheſſe of Suffolke, a perſonage of honor, and worthie of commemoration in chronicles for hir godlineſſe to hir high praiſe: where manie a malefactor is recorded for their outragious wickedneſſe to their immortall ſhame. Concerning the ſaid ladie therefore thus writeth maſter Fox.

Ex Ioh. Foxi martyrologio. The old hatred of Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter againſt the dutcheſſe of Suffolke.

Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, ſurmiſing the ladie Katharine baroneſſe of Willoughbie and Creſbie, and ducheſſe Dowager of Suffolke, to be one of his ancient enimies, becauſe he knew he had deſerued no better of hir, deuiſed in the holie time of the firſt Lent in queen Maries reigne, a holie practiſe of reuenge, firſt by touching hir in the perſon of hir huſband maiſter Richard Bertie eſquier, for whome he ſent an attachment (hauing the great ſeale at his deuotion) to the ſhiriffe of Lincolnſhire, with a ſpeciall letter, commanding moſt ſtrictlie the ſame ſhiriffe to attach the ſaid Richard immediatlie, and without baile to bring him vp to London to his great lordſhip. Maiſter Bertie hir huſband being cleare in conſcience, and free from offenſe towards the queene, could not coniecture anie cauſe of this ſtrange proceſſe, vnleſſe it were ſome quarrell for religion, which he thought could not be ſo ſore as the proceſſe pretended.

Maiſter Richard Bertie huſband to the dutcheſſe, attached by the biſhop of Wincheſter.

The ſhiriffe, notwithſtanding the commandement, aduentured onelie to take the bond of maiſter Bertie, with two ſuerties in a thouſand pounds for his appearance, to be made before the biſhop on good fridaie following: at which daie maiſter Bertie appeered, the biſhop then lieng at his houſe by ſaint Marie Oueries. Of whoſe preſence when the biſhop vnderſtood by a gentleman of his chamber, in a great rage he came out of his gallerie into his dining chamber, where he found a preaſe of ſuters, ſaieng he would not that daie heare anie: but came forth onelie to know of maiſter Bertie, how he being a ſubiect durſt ſo arrogantlie ſet at light two former proceſſes of the queenes. Maiſter Bertie anſwered, that albeit my lords words might ſeeme to the reſt ſomewhat ſharpe towards him, yet he conceiued great comfort of them. For whereas he before thought it extremitie to be attached, hauing vſed no obſtinacie or contumacie: now he gathered of thoſe words, that my lord ment not otherwiſe but to haue vſed ſome ordinarie proceſſe; albeit indeed none came to his hands. Yea Marie, quoth the biſhop, I haue ſent you two Sub pœnas, to appeere immediatlie, and I am ſure you receiued them: for I committed the truſt of them to no worſſe man but to maiſter ſolicitor, and I ſhall make you an example to all Lincolnſhire for your obſtinacie. Maiſter Bertie denieng the receipt of anie, humblie praied his lordſhip to ſuſpend his diſpleſure and the puniſhment, till he had good triall thereof: and then (if it pleaſed him) to double the paine for the fault, if anie were. Well (quoth the biſhop) I haue appointed my ſelfe this daie (according to the holineſſe of the ſame) for deuotion, and I will not further trouble me with you: but I inioine you in a thouſand pounds, not to depart without leaue, and to be here againe to morrow at ſeauen of the clocke.

Maſter Bertie appeareth before biſhop Gardiner.

Talke betweene biſhop Gardiner and maiſter Bertie.

The deuotion of biſhop Gardiner to good fridaie.

Maiſter Bertie well obſerued the houre, and no iot failed. At the which time the biſhop had with him maiſter ſergeant Stamford, to whome he moued certeine queſtions of the ſaid maſter Bertie, bicauſe maſter ſergeant was towards the lord Wriotheſleie late earle of Southampton, & chancellor of England, with whom the ſaid maſter Bertie was brought vp. Maſter ſergeant made verie friendlie report of maſter Bertie of his owne knowledge for the time of their conuerſation togither. Wherevpon the biſhop cauſed maiſter Bertie to be brought in; and firſt making a falſe traine (as God would, without fire) before he would deſcend to the quarrell of religion, he aſſaulted him in this maner. The queenes pleaſure is (quoth the biſhop) that you ſhall make preſent paiment of foure thouſand pounds due to hir father by duke Charles, late huſband to the dutcheſſe your wife, whoſe executor ſhe was. Pleaſeth it your lordſhip (quoth maiſter Bertie) that debt is eſtalled, and is according to that eſtallment trulie anſwered. Tuſh (quoth the biſhop) the queene will not be bound to eſtallments, in the time of Kets gouernment, for ſo I eſteeme the late gouernment. The eſtallment (quoth maiſter Bertie) was appointed by king Henrie the eight; beſides, the ſame was by ſpeciall commiſſioners confirmed in king Edwards time, and the lord treaſuror being an executor alſo to the duke Charles ſolie and wholie, tooke vpon him before the ſaid commiſſioners to diſcharge the ſame.

Maiſter Bertie attached for debt of foure thouſand pounds due to the queene.

If it be true that you ſaie (quoth the biſhop) I will ſhew you fauor. But of an other thing maiſter Bertie, I will admoniſh you as mening you well. I heare euill of your religion; yet I hardlie can think euill of you, whoſe mother I know to be as godlie and catholike, as anie within this land, your ſelfe brought vp with a maiſter, whoſe education if I ſhould diſallow, I might be charged as author of his error. Beſides partlie I know you my ſelfe, and vnderſtand of my friends inough to make me your friend: wherfore I will not doubt of you, but I praie you if I maie aske the queſtion of my ladie your wife; is ſhe now as readie to ſet vp the maſſe, as ſhe was latelie to pull it downe, when ſhe cauſed in hir progreſſe, a dog in a rochet to be caried & called by my name? Or doth ſhe thinke hir lambs now ſafe inough, which ſaid to me when I vailed my bonnet to hir out of my chamber window in the tower, that it was merie with the lambs now the woolfe was ſhut vp? Another time my lord hir huſband hauing inuited me and diuerſe ladies to dinner, deſired euerie ladie to chooſe him whome ſhe loued beſt, and ſo place themſelues. My ladie your wife taking me by the hand, for that my lord would not haue hir to take himſelfe, ſaid, that for ſo much as ſhe could not ſit downe with my lord whome ſhe loued beſt, ſhe had choſen me whome ſhe loued worſt.

A dog clothed in a rochet vnder the name of biſhop Gardiner.

It is merie with lambs when woolues be tied.

Of the deuiſe of the dog, quoth maſter Bertie, ſhe was neither the author nor the allower. The words, though in that ſeaſon they ſounded bitter to your lordſhip: yet if it ſhould pleaſe you without offenſe to know the cauſe, I am ſure the one will purge the other. As touching ſetting vp of maſſe, which ſhe learned not onelie by ſtrong perſuaſions of diuerſe excellent learned men, but by vniuerſall conſent and order whole ſix yeares paſt inwardlie to abhorre; if ſhe ſhould outwardlie allow, ſhe ſhould both to Chriſt ſhew hir ſelfe a falſe chriſtian, and vnto hir prince a maſking ſubiect. You know my lord, one by iudgement reformed, is more worth than a thouſand transformed temporizors. To force a confeſſion of religion by mouth, contrarie to that in the heart, worketh damnation where ſaluation is pretended. Yea marie (quoth the biſhop) that deliberation would doo well if ſhe neuer required to come from an old religion to a new. But now ſhe is to returne from a new to an ancient religion: wherein when ſhe made me hir goſſip, ſhe was as earneſt as anie.

Purgation of the ladie ducheſſe for not comming to maſſe.

For that, my lord (ſaid M. Bertie) not long ſince, ſhe anſwered a friend of hirs vſing your lordſhips ſpeech, that religion went not by age but by truth: and therefore ſhe was to be turned by perſuaſion and not by commandement. I praie you (quoth the biſhop) thinke you it poſſible to perſuade hir? Yea verelie (ſaid maſter Bertie) with the truth: for ſhe is reaſonable inough. The biſhop thereunto replieng, ſaid: It will be a maruellous griefe to the prince of Spaine, and to all the nobilitie that ſhall come with him, when they ſhall find but two noble perſonages of the Spaniſh race within this land, the queene, and my ladie your wife, and one of them gone from the faith. Maſter Bertie anſwered, that he truſted they ſhould find no fruits of infidelitie in hir. So the biſhop perſuading maſter Bertie to trauell earneſtlie for the reformation of hir opinion, and offering large friendſhip, releaſed him of his band from further appearance.

Religion goeth not by age, but by truth.

Maſter Bertie releaſed from his band of appearing.

The ducheſſe and hir huſband, daílie more and more, by their friends vnderſtanding that the biſhop meant to call hir to an account of hir faith, whereby extreamitie might follow, deuiſed waies how by the queenes licence they might paſſe the ſeas. Maſter Bertie had a redie meane: for there reſted great ſummes of monie due to the old duke of Suffolke (one of whoſe executors the ducheſſe was) beyond the ſeas, the emperour himſelfe being one of thoſe debtors. Maſter Bertie communicated this his purpoſed ſute for licence to paſſe the ſeas, and the cauſe, to the biſhop; adding, that he tooke this time moſt meet to deale with the emperour, by reaſon of likelihood of marriage betweene the queene and his ſonne. I like your deuiſe well (quoth the biſhop) but I thinke it better, that you tarrie the princes comming, and I will procure you his letters alſo to his father. Naie (quoth maſter Bertie) vnder your lordſhips correction & pardon of ſo liberall ſpeech, I ſuppoſe the time will then be leſſe conuenient: for when the marriage is conſummate, the emperour hath his deſire: but till then he will refuſe nothing to win credit with vs.

Waies pra ſed how to conueie th ducheſſe ou the ſeas with the queen licence.

Maſter Be tie deuiſeth cauſes to pa ouer into Flanders.

By ſaint Marie (quoth the biſhop, ſmiling) you geſſe ſhrewdlie. Well, proceed in your ſute vnto the queene, and it ſhall not lacke my helping hand. Maſter Bertie found ſo good ſucceſſe, that he in few daies obteined the queenes licence, not onlie to paſſe the ſeas, but to paſſe and repaſſe them ſo often as to him ſeemed good, till he had finiſhed all his buſineſſe and cauſes beyond the ſeas. So he paſſed the ſeas at Douer about the beginning of Iune in the firſt yeare of hir reigne, leauing the ducheſſe behind, who by agreement and conſent betwixt hir and hir huſband, followed, taking barge at Lion keie, verie earlie in the morning, on the firſt daie of Ianuarie next inſuing, not without ſome perill. There was none of thoſe that went with hir, made priuie to hir going till the inſtant, but an old gentleman called maſter Robert Cranwell, whome maſter Bertie had ſpeciallie prouided for that purpoſe. She tooke with hir hir daughter an infant of one yeare, and the meaneſt of hir ſeruants: for ſhe doubted the beſt would not aduenture that fortune with hir. They were in number foure men, one a Greeke borne, which was a rider of horſſes, an other a ioiner, the third a brewer, the fourth a foole one of the kitchin, one gentlewoman, and a landreſſe.

Maſter Be tie licenced b the queene to paſſe the ſeas.

Preparatio made how to conueie the ducheſſe ouer the ſeas.

M. Cran a truſty frien to maſter Bertie.

As ſhe departed hir houſe called the Barbican, betwixt foure and fiue of the clocke in the morning, with hir companie and baggage, one Atkinſon an herald, keeper of hir houſe, hearing noiſe about the houſe, roſe and came foorth with a torch in his hand as ſhe was yet iſſuing out of the gate: wherewith being amazed, ſhe was forced to leaue a male with neceſſaries for hir yoong daughter, & a milkepot with milke in the ſame gatehouſe, commanding all hir ſeruants to ſpeed them before awaie to Lion keie: and taking with hir onelie the two women and hir child, ſo ſoone as ſhe was out of hir owne houſe, perceiuing the herald to follow, ſhe ſtept in at Garterhouſe hard by. The herald comming out of the ducheſſe houſe, and ſeeing no bodie ſtirring, not aſſured (though by the male ſuſpecting) that ſhe was departed, returned in: and while he ſtaied ranſacking parcels left in the male, the ducheſſe iſſued into the ſtreet, and proceeded in hir iournie, he knowing the place onelie by name where ſhe ſhould take hir boat, but not the waie thither, nor none with hir. Likewiſe hir ſeruants hauing diuided themſelues, none but one knew the waie to the ſaid keie.

The duch with hir co panie depar ted the realme.

The maner of the ducheſſe flieng out of hir houſe.

So ſhe apparelled like a meane merchants wife, and the reſt like meane ſeruants, walking in the ſtreets vnknowne, ſhe tooke the way that led to Finſburie field, and the others walked the citie ſtreets as they laie open before them, till by chance more than diſcretion, they met all ſuddenlie together a little within More gate, from whence they paſſed directlie to Lion keie, and there tooke barge in a morning ſo miſtie, that the ſtearesman was loth to lanch out, but that they vrged him. So ſoone as the daie permitted, the councell was informed of hir departure, and ſome of them came forthwith to hir houſe to inquire of the maner thereof, and tooke an inuentarie of hir goods, beſides further order deuiſed for ſearch and watch to apprehend and ſtaie hir. The fame of hir departure reached to Leigh, a towne at the lands end, before hir approching thither. By Leigh dwelt one Goſling a merchant of London, an old acquaintance of Cranwels, whither the ſaid Cranwell brought the ducheſſe, naming hir miſtreſſe White, the daughter of maſter Goſling, for ſuch a daughter he had which neuer was in that countrie. There ſhe repoſed hir, and made new garments for hir daughter, hauing loſt hir owne in the male at Barbican.

The ducheſſe with hir companie taketh barge.

Purſute after the ducheſſe.

The ducheſſe retained in M. Goſlings houſe by Leigh, vnder the name of his daughter.

When the time came that ſhe ſhould take ſhip, being conſtreind that night to lie at an inne in Leigh (where ſhe was againe almoſt bewraied) yet notwithſtanding by Gods good working ſhe eſcaping that hazzard, at length as the tide and wind did ſerue, they went aboord, and being carried twiſe into the ſeas, almoſt into the coaſt of Zeland, by contrarie wind were driuen to the place from whence they came. And at the laſt recuile, certeine perſons came to the ſhore, ſuſpecting ſhe was within that ſhip: yet hauing examined one of hir companie that was one land for freſh Achates, and finding by the ſimplicitie of his tale, onelie the appearance of a meane merchants wife to be a ſhipboord, he ceaſed anie further ſearch. To be ſhort, ſo ſoone as the ducheſſe had landed in Brabant, ſhe and hir women were apparelled like the women of Netherland with hukes, and ſo ſhe and hir huſband tooke their iournie towards Cleueland, and being arriued at a towne therin called Santon, tooke a houſe there, vntill they might further deuiſe of ſome ſure place where to ſettle themſelues.

The hard aduenture of the ducheſſe vpon the ſeas.

The ducheſſe landed in Brabant. M. Bertie with the ducheſſe his wife arriued at Santon.

About fiue miles from Santon is a free towne called Weſell, vnder the ſaid duke of Cleues dominion, and one of the Hauns townes, priuileged with the companie of the Stilliard in London, whither diuerſe Wallons were fled for religion, and had for their miniſter one Francis Peruſell, then called Francis de Riuers, who had receiued ſome courteſie in England at the ducheſſe hands. Maſter Bertie being yet at Santon, practiſed with him to obteine a protection from the magiſtrats for his abode and his wiues at Weſell: which was the ſooner procured bicauſe the ſtate of the ducheſſe was not diſcouered but onelie to the cheefe magiſtrate, earneſtlie bent to ſhew them pleaſure, whileſt this protection was in ſeeking.

A protection procured for the ducheſſe, of the magiſtrates of Weſell.

In the meane while, at the towne of Santon was a muttering, that the ducheſſe and hir huſband were greater perſonages than they gaue themſelues forth, and the magiſtrats not verie well inclined to religion; the biſhop of Arras alſo being deane of the great minſter, order was taken, that the duches and hir huſband ſhould be examined of their condition and religion vpon the ſudden. Which practiſe diſcouered by a gentleman of that countrie to maſter Bertie, he without delaie taking no more than the duches hir daughter, and two other with them, as though he meant no more but to take the aire, about three of the clocke in the afternoone in Februarie, on foot, without hiering of horſſe or wagon for feare of diſcloſing his purpoſe, meant priuilie that night to get to Weſell, leauing his other familie ſtill at Santon.

Another eſcape of the ducheſſe and hir huſband.

After the duches and he were one Engliſh mile from the towne, there fell a mightie raine of continuance, whereby a long froſt and iſe before congealed was thawed, which doubled more the wearineſſe of thoſe new lackies. But being now on the waie, and ouertaken with the night, they ſent their two ſeruants (which onelie went with them) to villages, as they paſſed, to hire ſome car for their eaſe: but none could be hired. In the mene time maſter Bertie was forced to carrie the child, and the duches his cloke and rapier. At laſt betwixt ſix and ſeauen of the clocke in the darke night, they came to Weſell, and repairing to their innes for lodging and ſome repoſe after ſuch a painfull iourneie, found hard interteinment: for going from inne to inne, offering large monie for ſmall lodging, they were refuſed of all the inholders, ſuſpecting maſter Bertie to be a lanceknight, and the duches to be his woman. The child for cold and ſuſtenance cried pittifullie, the mother wept as faſt, and the heauens rained as faſt as the clouds could powre.

The hard diſtreſſe of the ducheſſe by euill wether.

The hard interteinment of M. Bertie & the ducheſſe at their entring into Weſell.

Maſter Bertie deſtitute of all other ſuccor of hoſpitalitie, reſolued to bring the ducheſſe to the porch of the great church in the towne, and ſo to buie coles, victuals and ſtraw for their miſerable repoſe there that night, or at leaſt till by Gods helpe he might prouide hir better lodging. Maſter Bertie at that time vnderſtood not much Dutch, and by reaſon of euill weather and late ſeaſon of the night, he could not happen vpon anie that could ſpeake Engliſh, French, Italian, or Latine; till at laſt going towards the church porch, he heard two ſtriplings talking Latine, to whome he approched and offered them two ſtiuers to bring him to ſome Wallons houſe. By theſe boies, and Gods good conduct, he chanced at the firſt vpon the houſe where maſter Peruſell ſupped that night, who had procured them the protection of the magiſtrats of that towne. At the firſt knocke, the goodman of the houſe himſelfe came to the doore, and opening it, aſked maſter Bertie what he was. Maſter Bertie ſaid, an Engliſhman, that ſought for one maſter Peruſels houſe. The Wallon willed maſter Bertie to ſtaie a while, who went backe and told maſter Peruſell that the ſame Engliſh gentleman, of whome they had talked the ſame ſupper, had ſent, by likelihood his ſeruant to ſpeake with him. Wherevpon maſter Peruſell came to the doore, and beholding maſter Bertie, the ducheſſe, & their child, their faces, apparels, and bodies ſo farre from their old forme, deformed with durt, weather, and heauineſſe, could not ſpeake to them, nor they to him for teares. At length recouering themſelues, they ſaluted one another, & ſo togither entered the houſe, God knoweth full ioifullie: maſter Bertie changing of his apparell with the goodman, the ducheſſe with the good wife, and their child with the child of the houſe.

Gods prouidence in time of diſtreſſe.

The meeting of w. Peruſel & the ducheſſe at Weſell.

Within few daies after, by maſter Peruſels means, they hired a verie faire houſe in the towne, and did not let to ſhew themſelues what they were, in ſuch good ſort as their preſent condition permitted. It was by this time through the whole towne what diſcourteſie the inholders had ſhewed vnto them at their entrie, in ſo much as on the ſundaie following, a preacher in the pulpit openlie in ſharpe termes rebuked that great inciuilitie towards ſtrangers; by allegation of ſundrie places out of holie ſcriptures, diſcourſing how not onelie princes ſometime are receiued in the image of priuat perſons, but angels in the ſhape of men, and that God of his iuſtice would make the ſtrangers one day in an other land, to haue more ſenſe of the afflicted heart of a ſtranger. The time was paſſing forth, as they thought themſelues thus happilie ſetled, ſuddenlie a watchword came from ſir Iohn Maſon, then queene Maries ambaſſadour in Netherland, that my lord Paget had fained an errant to the baths that waies: and whereas the duke of Brunſwicke was ſhortlie with ten enſignes to paſſe by Weſell for the ſeruice of the houſe of Auſtricke againſt the French king, the ſaid dutcheſſe, and hir huſband ſhould be with the ſame charge and companie intercepted. Wherefore to preuent the crueltie of theſe enimies, maſter Bertie with his wife and child departed to a place called Winheim in high Dutchland vnder the Palſgraues dominion, where vnder his protection they continued till their neceſſaries began to faile them, and they almoſt fainting vnder ſo heauie a burthen, began to faile of hope.

Ioan. Alaſco a meanes to the king of Pole for the ducheſſe of Suffolke.

At what time, in the middeſt of their deſpaire, there came ſuddenlie letters to them from the Palatine of Vilna and the king of Pole, being inſtructed of their hard eſtate by a baron named Ioannes Alaſco, that was ſomtime in England, offring them large curteſie. This purniſon vnlooked for greatlie reuiued their heauie ſpirits. Yet conſidering they ſhould remoue from manie their countriemen and acquaintance, to a place ſo farre diſtant, a countrie not haunted with the Engliſh, and perhaps vpon their arriuall not finding as they looked for, the end of their iornie ſhould be worſe than the beginning: they deuiſed thervpon with one maiſter Barlow, late biſhop of Chicheſter, that if he would vouchſafe to take ſome paines therin, they would make him a fellow of that iournie. So finding him prone, they ſent with him letters of great thanks to the king & Palatine, and alſo with a few principall iewels (which onlie they had left of manie) to ſolicit for them, that the king would vouchſafe vnder his ſeale, to aſſure them of the thing which he ſo honourablie by letters offered.

The Palatine of Vilna a great friend of the dutches

That ſute by the forwardnes of the Palatine was as ſoone granted as vttered. Vpon which aſſurance the ſaid dutcheſſe and hir huſband, with their familie, entred the iournie in Aprill 1557, from the caſtell of Winheim, where they before laie, towards Francford. In the which their iournie, it were long here to deſcribe what dangers fell by the waie vpon them, & their whole companie, by reaſon of the Lantgraues capteines, who vnder a quarrell pretenſed for a ſpaniell of maiſter Berties, ſet vpon them in the high waie, with his horſſemen, thruſting their boreſpears through the wagon where the children and women were, maiſter Bertie hauing but foure horſſemen with him. In the which brabble it happened the capteins horſſe to be ſlaine vnder him.

The dutches taketh hir iournie toward Pole.

The troubles happening to the dutches in hir iournie to Poleland.

Wherevpon a rumor was ſparſed immediatlie through townes and villages about, that the Lantgraues capteine ſhould be ſlaine by ſome Wallons, which incenſed the ire of the countriemen there more fiercelie againſt maiſter Bertie, as afterwards it proued. For as he was motioned by his wife to ſaue himſelfe by the ſwiftnes of his horſſe, and to recouer ſome towne therby for his reſcue, he ſo dooing was in worſe caſe than before: for the townſmen and the capteines brother, ſuppoſing no leſſe but that the capteine had béene ſlaine, preſſed ſo egerlie vpon him, that he had béene there taken and murthered among them, had not he (as God would) ſpieng a ladder leaning to a window, by the ſame got vp into the houſe, and ſo gone vp in to a garret in the top of the houſe, where he with his dag and rapier defended himſelfe for a ſpace: but at length the Burghmaiſter comming thither with another magiſtrate, which could ſpeake Latine, he was counſelled to ſubmit himſelfe vnto the order of the law. Maiſter Bertie knowing himſelfe cléere, and the capteine to be aliue, was the more bolder to ſubmit himſelfe to the iudgement of the law, vpon condition that the magiſtrate would receiue him vnder ſafe conduct, and defend him from the rage of the multitude. Which being promiſed, maiſter Bertie putteth himſelfe and his weapon in the magiſtrates hand, and ſo was committed to ſafe cuſtodie, while the truth of his cauſe ſhould be tried. Then maſter Bertie writing his letters to the Lantgraue and to the earle of Erbagh, the next daie erlie in the morning the earle of Erbagh dwelling within eight miles, came to the towne whither the dutcheſſe was brought with hir wagon, maiſter Bertie alſo being in the ſame towne vnder cuſtodie.

M. Bertie in great danger of his life.

The earle, who had ſome intelligence of the dutches before, after he was come, & had ſhewed ſuch courteſie as he thought to hir eſtate was ſéemelie, the townſmen perceiuing the earle to behaue himſelfe ſo humblie vnto hir, began to conſider more of the matter: and further vnderſtanding the capteine to be aliue, both they, and eſpecallie the authors of the ſtir ſhrunke awaie, and made all the friends they could to maiſter Bertie and his wife, not to report their dooings after the worſt ſort. And thus maiſter Bertie and his wife eſcaping that danger, procéeded in their iournie toward Poleland, where in concluſion they were quietlie interteined of the king, and placed honorablie in the earledome of the ſaid king of Poles in Sanogelia, called Crozan, where maiſter Bertie with the dutcheſſe hauing the kings abſolute power of gouernment ouer the ſaid earldome, continued both in great quietneſſe and honor, till the death of quéene Marie.] Whoſe troubleſome time (ſauoring altogither of bloudſhed & mercileſſe murthering of Gods ſaints, wherof the poet ſaith full trulie, being expired, and the peaceable reigne of gratious quéene Elizabeth eſtabliſhed, the ſaid dutcheſſe and hir huſband returned into England, where they liued in libertie both of bodie and mind; in which good ſtate we will leaue them. And bicauſe we are entred into a diſcourſe of troubles happening to perſonages of good account and name; it is neceſſarie that wée adde another narration of like argument vnto the former, concerning the troubles and happie deliuerance of the reuerend father in God doctor Sands, firſt biſhop of Worceſter, next of London, and now archbiſhop of Yorke, as I find it word for word in maiſter Fox, who beginneth and continueth the ſaid diſcourſe as followeth.

Abr. Fl. ex I. F. martyrologio.

D. Sands vicechancellor when the duke of Northumberland came downe to Cambridge to proclame the ladie Iane quéene.

¶ King Edward died, the world being vnworthie of him, the duke of Northumberland came downe to Cambridge with an armie of men, hauing commiſſion to proclame ladie Iane quéene, and by power to ſuppreſſe ladie Marie, who tooke vpon hir that dignitie, and was proclamed quéene in Norffolke. The duke ſent for doctor Sands being vicechancellor, for doctor Parker, for doctor Bill, and maiſter Leauer, to ſup with him. Amongſt other ſpéeches he ſaid; Maiſters, praie for vs that we ſpéed well: if not, you ſhall be made biſhops, and we deacons. And euen ſo it came to paſſe: doctor Parker, and doctor Sands were made biſhops, and he and ſir Iohn Gates, who was then at the table, were made deacons yer it was long after on the tower hill. Doctor Sands being vicechancellor, was required to preach on the morrow. The warning was ſhort for ſuch an auditorie, and to ſpeake of ſuch a matter: yet he refuſed not the thing, but went to his chamber, and ſo to bed. He roſe at thrée of the clocke in the morning, tooke his bible in his hand, and after that he had praied a good ſpace, he ſhut his eies, and holding his bible before him, earneſtlie praied to God that it might fall open where a moſt fit text ſhould be for him to intreat of. The bible (as God would haue it) fell open vpon the firſt chapter of Ioſua, where he found ſo conuenient ent a peece of ſcripture for that time, that the like he could not haue choſen in all the bible. His text was thus: Reſponderúntque ad Ioſue, atque dixerunt, Omniaque præcepiſti nobis faciemus, & quocunque miſeris ibimus: ſicut obediuimus in cunctis Moſi ita obediemus & tibi, tantùm ſit Dominus Deus tuus tecum ſicut fuit cum Moſe, qui contradixerit ori tuo, & non obedierit cunctis ſermonibus quos præceperis ei, moriatur: tu tantùm confortare & viriliter age. Who ſhall conſider what was concluded by ſuch as named themſelues by the ſtate, and withall, the auditorie, the time, and other circumſtances, he ſhall eaſilie ſee that this text moſt fitlie ſerued for the purpoſe. And as God gaue the text, ſo gaue he him ſuch order and vtterance, as pulled manie teares out of the eies of the biggeſt of them.

The text of D. Sands wherevpon he made his ſermon.

In the time of his ſermon one of the gard lift vp to him into the pulpit a maſſe booke and a graile, which ſir George Howard with certeine of the gard had taken that night in maſter Hurleſtons houſe, where ladie Marie had beene a little before, & there had maſſe. The duke with the reſt of the nobilitie required doctor Sands to put his ſermon in writing; and appointed maiſter Leauer to go to London with it, and to put it in print. Doctor Sands required one daie and a halfe for writing of it. At the time appointed he had made it readie, and maiſter Leauer was readie booted to receiue it at his hands, & carie it to London. As he was deliuering of it, one of the bedels named maiſter Adams, came weeping to him, & praied him to ſhift for himſelfe, for the duke was retired, and queene Marie proclamed.

The duke & nobles deſire D. Sands to write his ſermon that it might be printed.

Doctor Sands was not troubled herewithall, but gaue the ſermon written to maſter Leifield; maſter Leauer departed home, and he went to dinner to one maſter Mores a bedell, his great friend. At the dinner, miſtreſſe More ſeeing him merrie and pleaſant (for he had euer a mans courage, and could not be terrified) dranke vnto him, ſaieng: Maſter vicechancellor, I drinke vnto you, for this is the laſt time that euer I ſhall ſee you. And ſo it was, for ſhee was dead before doctor Sands returned out of Germanie. The duke that night retired to Cambridge, and ſent for doctor Sands to go with him to the market place to proclame queene Marie. The duke caſt vp his cap with others, and ſo laughed, that the tears ran downe his cheekes for greefe. He told doctor Sands that queene Marie was a mercifull woman, and that he doubted not thereof: declaring, that hee had ſent vnto hir to know hir pleaſure, and looked for a generall pardon. Doctor Sands anſwered; My life is not deare vnto me, neither haue I done or ſaid anie thing that vrgeth my conſcience. For that which I ſpake of the ſtate, I haue inſtructions warranted by the ſubſcription of ſixteene councellors. Neither can ſpeach be treaſon, neither yet haue I ſpoken further than the word of God, and lawes of this realme doth warrant me, come of me what God will. But be you aſſured, you ſhall neuer eſcape death: for if ſhee would ſaue you, thoſe that now ſhall rule will kill you.

Miſtreſſe More ſpake truer than peraduenture ſhe thought.

D. Sands words to the duke touching his owne ſermon and the dukes action.

That night the gard apprehended the duke, and certeine groomes of the ſtable were as buſie with doctor Sands, as if they would take a priſoner. But ſir Iohn Gates who laie then in doctor Sands his houſe, ſharplie rebuked them, and draue them awaie. Doctor Sands, by the aduiſe of ſir Iohn Gates, walked into the fields. In the meane time the vniuerſitie (contrarie to all order) had met togither in conſultation, and ordered that doctor Mouſe and doctor Hatcher ſhould repaire to doctor Sands lodging, and fet awaie the ſtatute booke of the vniuerſitie, the keies, and ſuch other things that were in his keeping, and ſo they did. For doctor Mouſe being an earneſt proteſtant the daie before, and one whome doctor Sands had done much for, now was he become a papiſt, and his great enimie.

Euil intended againſt doctor Sands.

Certeine of the vniuerſitie had appointed a congregation at afternoone. As the bell rang to it, doctor Sands commeth out of the fields, and ſending for the bedels, asketh what the matter meaneth, and requireth them to wait vpon him to the ſchooles, according to their dutie. So they did. And ſo ſoone as doctor Sands, the bedels going before him, came into the regent houſe and tooke his chaire; one maſter Mitch with a rabble of vnlearned papiſts went into a byſchoole, and conſpired togither to pull him out of his chaire, and to vſe violence vnto him. Doctor Sands began his oration, expoſtulating with the vniuerſitie, charging them with great ingratitude, declaring that he had ſaid nothing in his ſermon, but that hee was readie to iuſtifie, and that there caſe was all one with his: for they had not onelie concealed, but conſented to that which he had ſpoken.

A conſpiracie of papiſts againſt doctor Sands, and their behauior towards him.

And thus while he remembred vnto them how beneficiall he had beene to the vniuerſitie, and their vnthankfulneſſe to him againe, in commeth maiſter Mitch with his conſpirators about twentie in number. One laieth hand vpon the chaire to pull it from him, another told him that that was not his place, and another called him traitor. Whereat he perceiuing how they vſed violence, and being of great courage, groped to his dagger, and had diſpatched ſome of them as Gods enimies; if doctor Bill and doctor Blith had not fallen vpon him, and praied him for Gods ſake to hold his hands and be quiet, and patientlie to beare that great offered wrong. He was perſuaded by them, and after that tumult was ceaſed, he ended his oration, and hauing ſome monie of the vniuerſities in his hands, he there deliuered the ſame euerie farthing. He gaue vp the books, reckonings & keies perteining to the vniuerſitie, & withall yeelded vp his office, praieng God to giue to the vniuerſitie a better officer, and to giue them better and more thankfull hearts, and ſo repaired home to his owne college.

D. Sands couragious heart and manhood.

D. Sands reſigneth vp his office of vicechancellorſhip.

On the morrow after, there came vnto him one maſter Gerningham, and one maſter Thomas Mildmaie. Gerningham told him, that it was the queens pleaſure that two of the gard ſhould attend on him, and that he muſt be caried priſoner to the tower of London with the duke. Maiſter Mildmaie ſaid he marueled that a learned man would ſpeake ſo vnaduiſedlie againſt ſo good a prince, and wilfullie run into ſuch danger. Doctor Sands anſwered, I ſhall not be aſhamed of bonds. But if I could doo as maſter Mildmaie can, I needed not feare bonds: for he came downe in paiment againſt queene Marie, and armed in the field, and now he returneth in paiment for queene Marie: before a traitor and now a great friend. I can not with one mouth blow hot and cold after this ſort.

Maſter Mildmaies trecherie noted by doctor Sands to his obloquie.

Vpon this, his ſtable was robbed of foure notable good geldings, the beſt of them maſter Hurleſtone tooke for his owne ſaddle, and rode on him to London in his ſight. An inuentarie was taken of all his goods by maſter More bedell for the vniuerſitie. Hee was ſet vpon a lame horſe that halted to the ground, which thing a friend of his perceiuing, praied that he might lend him a nag. The yeoman of the gard were content. As he departed out of the townes end, ſome papiſts reſorted thither to geere at him, ſome of his friends to mourne for him. He came into the ranke to London, the people being full of outcries. And as he came in at Biſhops gate, one like a milkewife hurled a ſtone at him, and hit him on the breaſt with ſuch a blow, that he was like to fall off his horſſe. To whome he mildlie ſaid: Woman, God forgiue it thee. Truth it is, that iourneieng & euill intreating ſo mortified him, that he was more readie to die than to liue.

The miſuſage of certeine drabs againſt doctor Sands as he was brought priſoner to the tower.

As he came through tower hill ſtréet, one woman ſtanding in hir doore, cried: Fie on thée thou knaue, thou knaue, thou traitor, thou heretike. Whereat hée ſmiled. Looke; the deſperat heretike (ſaith ſhe) laugheth at this geare. A woman on the other ſide of the ſtréet anſwered, ſaieng: Fie on thée neighbour, thou art not worthie to be called a woman, railing vpon this gentleman whom thou knoweſt not, neither yet the cauſe whie he is thus intreated. Then ſhée ſaid, Good gentleman, God be thy comfort, and giue thée ſtrength to ſtand in Gods cauſe euen to the end. And thus he paſſed through fire and water into the tower, the firſt priſoner that entered in that daie, which was ſaint Iames daie. The yeoman of the gard tooke from him his borrowed nag, and what elſe ſoeuer hée had. His man one Quintin Swainton brought after him a bible, and ſome ſhirts, and ſuch like things. The bible was ſent in to him, but the ſhirts and ſuch like ſerued the yeoman of the gard.

The gard offer him fowle wrong.

After he had béene in the tower thrée wéekes in a bad priſon, he was lift vp into Nunnes bower, a better priſon, where was put to him maſter Iohn Bradford. At the daie of quéene Maries coronation, their priſon doore was ſet open, euer ſhut before. One maſter Michell his old acquaintance, who had béene priſoner before in the ſame place, came in to him and ſaid: Maſter Sands, there is ſuch a ſtir in the tower, that neither gates, doores, nor priſoners are looked to this daie. Take my cloake, my hat and my rapier, and get you gone; you maie go out of the gates without queſtioning; ſaue your ſelfe, and let me doo as I maie. A rare friendſhip: but he refuſed the offer, ſaieng: I know no iuſt cauſe why I ſhould be in priſon. And thus to doo were to make my ſelfe guiltie, I will expect Gods good will, yet muſt I thinke my ſelfe moſt bound vnto you: and ſo maſter Michell departed.

Maſter Michels counſell to D. Sands to make an eſcape.

While doctor Sands and maſter Bradford were thus in cloſe priſon togither nine and twentie wéeks, one Iohn Bowler was their kéeper, a verie peruerſe papiſt, yet by often perſuading of him, for he would giue eare, and by the gentle vſing of him, at length he began to miſlike poperie, and to fauour the goſpell, and ſo perſuaded in true religion, that on a ſundaie when they had maſſe in the chappell, he bringeth vp a ſeruice booke, a manchet and a glaſſe of wine, and there doctor Sands miniſtred the communion to Bradford and to Bowler. Thus Bowler was their ſonne begotten in bonds when Wiat was in armes, & the old duke of Norffolke ſent forth with a power of men to apprehend him, that roome might be made in the tower for him and other his complices. Doctor Cranmer, doctor Ridleie, and maſter Bradford were caſt into one priſon, & doctor Sands with nine other preachers were ſent into the Marſhalſea.

Bowler of a peruerſe papiſt becõmeth reformed in true religion.

D. Sands remoued to the Marſhalſea.

The kéeper of the Marſhalſea appointed to euerie preacher a man to lead him in the ſtréet, he cauſed them go farre before, and he and doctor Sands came behind, whome he would not lead, but walked familiarlie with him. Yet doctor Sands was knowne, and the people euerie where praied to God to comfort him, & to ſtrengthen him in the truth. By that time the peoples minds were altered, poperie began to be vnſauerie. After they paſſed the bridge, the kéeper Thomas Waie ſaid to doctor Sands: I perceiue the vaine people would ſet you forward to the fire, you are as vaine as they, if you being a yoong man will ſtand in your own conceit, & prefer your own knowledge before the iudgement of ſo manie worthie prelats, ancient, learned, and graue men, as be in this relme. If you ſo doo, you ſhal find me as ſtrict a kéeper as one that vtterlie miſliketh your religion. Doctor Sands anſwered; I know my yeares yoong, and my learning ſmall, it is inough to know Chriſt crucified, and he hath learned nothing that ſéeth not the great blaſphemie that is in poperie, I will yéeld vnto God and not vnto man: I haue read in the ſcriptures of manie godlie and courteous kéepers, God may make you one; if not, I truſt he will giue me ſtrength and patience to beare your hard dealing with me. Saith Thomas Waie; Do you then mind to ſtand to your religion? Yea ſaith doctor Sands, by Gods grace. Trulie ſaith the kéeper, I loue you the better, I did but tempt you. What fauor I can ſhew you, you ſhall be ſure of, and I ſhall thinke my ſelfe happie if I may die at the ſtake with you. The ſaid kéeper ſhewed doctor Sands euer after all friendſhip: he truſted him to go into the fields alone, and there met with maiſter Bradford, who then was remoued into the Bench, and there found like fauor of his kéeper. He laid him in the beſt chamber in the houſe: he would not ſuffer the knight marſhals men to laie fetters on him, as others had. And at his requeſt, he put maiſter Sands in to him, to be his bedfellow, and ſundrie times ſuffered his wife, who was maiſter Sands daughter of Eſſex, a gentlewoman, beautifull both in bodie & ſoule to reſort to him. There was great reſort vnto doctor Sands, and maiſter Sanders: they had much monie offered them, but they would receiue none. They had the communion there thrée or foure times, and a great ſort of communicants. Doctor Sands gaue ſuch exhortation to the people, for at that time being yoong, he was thought verie eloquent, that he mooued manie tears and made the people abhorre the maſſe, and defie all poperie.

Thomas Wate the kéeper pretendeth to perſuade doctor Sands to poperie.

The frendſh that doct Sands foun at his kéeper hands.

When Wiat with his armie came into Southworke, he ſent two gentlemen into the Marſhalſea to doctor Sands: ſaieng, that maiſter Wiat would be glad of his companie and aduiſe, & that the gates ſhould be ſet open for all the priſoners. He anſwered: Tell maiſter Wiat, if this his riſing be of God it will take place: if not, it will fall. For my part I was committed hither by order, I will be diſcharged by like order, or I will neuer depart hence. So anſwered maiſter Sanders, and the reſt of the preachers being there priſoners. After that doctor Sands had béene nine wéekes priſoner in the Marſhalſea, by the mediation of ſir Thomas Holcroft then knight marſhall he was ſet at libertie. Sir Thomas ſued earneſtlie to the biſhop of Wincheſter, doctor Gardiner for his deliuerance after manie repulſes, except doctor Sands would be one of their ſect, and then he could want nothing. He wroong out of him, that if the quéene could like of his deliuerance, he would not be againſt it: for that was ſir Thomas his laſt requeſt. In the meane time he had procured two ladies of the priuie chamber to mooue the quéene in it: who was contented, if the biſhop of Wincheſter could like of it. The next time that the biſhop went into the priuie chamber to ſpeake with the quéene, maiſter Holcroft followed, and had his warrant for doctor Sands remiſſion readie, and praied the two ladies, when as the biſhop ſhould take his leaue, to put the quéene in mind of doctor Sands. So they did. And the quéene ſaid: Wincheſter, what thinke you by doctor Sands, is he not ſufficientlie puniſhed? As it pleaſe your maieſtie, ſaith Wincheſter. That he ſpake, remembring his former promiſe to maiſter Holcroft, that he would not be againſt Sands, if the quéene ſhould like to diſcharge him. Saith the quéene: Then trulie, we would that he were ſet at libertie. Immediatlie maiſter Holcroft offered the quéene the warrant, who ſubſcribed the ſame, and called Wincheſter to put to his hand, and ſo he did. The warrant was giuen to the Doctor Sands ſet libertie by th meanes of ſ Thomas Ho croft.

How quée Marie is di poſed to ſe doctor Sa at large, an ſealeth his warrant fo his libert knight marſhall againe, ſir Thomas Holcroft. As the biſhop went foorth of the priuie chamber doore, he called maiſter Holcroft to him: commanding him not to ſet doctor Sands at libertie, vntill he had taken ſuerties of two gentlemen of his countrie with him, euerie one bound in fiue hundred pounds, that doctor Sands ſhould not depart out of the realme without licence. Maiſter Holcroft immediatlie after met with two gentlemen of the north, friends & couſins to doctor Sands, who offered to be bound in bodie, goods and lands for him.

Communication betweene ſir Thomas Holcroft and doctor Sands about his departing out of England.

At after dinner the ſame daie, maiſter Holcroft ſent for doctor Sands to his lodging at Weſtminſter, requiring the keeper to accompanie with him. He came accordinglie, finding maiſter Holcroft alone, walking in his garden: maiſter Holcroft imparted his long ſute, with the whole proceeding, and what effect it had taken to doctor Sands: much reioiſing that it was his good hap to do him good, & to procure his libertie; and that nothing remained, but that he would enter into bonds with his two ſuerties, for not departing out of the realme. Doctor Sands anſwered: I giue God thanks, who hath moued your hart to mind me ſo well, & I thinke my ſelfe moſt bound vnto you, God ſhall requite, and I ſhall neuer be found vnthankfull. But as you haue dealt friendlie with me, I will alſo deale plainlie with you. I came a free man into priſon, I will not go foorth a bondman. As I cannot benefit my friends, ſo will I not hurt them: and if I be ſet at libertie, I will not tarie ſix daies in this realme if I may get out. If therefore I may not go free foorth, ſend me to the Marſhalſea againe, and there you ſhall be ſure of me.

Sir Thomas Holcroft cannot perſuade doctor Sands to tarie in England, and therefore ſetteth him at large.

This anſwer much miſliked maiſter Holcroft, who told doctor Sands that the time would not long continue, a change would ſhortlie come: the ſtate was but a cloud, and would ſoone ſhake awaie; and that his couſine ſir Edward Braie would gladlie receiue him and his wife into his houſe, where he ſhould neuer need to come at church, and how the ladie Braie was a zealous gentlewoman, who hated poperie: adding that he would not ſo deale with him to loſe all his labor. When doctor Sands could not be remoued from his former ſaieng, maiſter Holcroft ſaid: Seeing you can not be altered, I will change my purpoſe, and yeeld vnto you, come of it what will, I will ſet you at libertie: and ſeeing you mind ouer ſea, get you gone ſo quicklie as you can. One thing I require of you, that while you are there, you write nothing to come hither, for ſo ye may vndoo me. He freendlie kiſſed doctor Sands, bad him farewell, and commanded the keeper to take no fees of him: ſaieng; Let me anſwer Wincheſter as I may. Doctor Sands returned with the keeper to the Marſhalſea and taried all night. There on the morrow gaue a dinner to all the priſoners, bad his bedfellow and ſworne ſtakefellow, if it had ſo pleaſed God, maiſter Saunders farewell, with manie teares and kiſſings, the one falling on the others necke, and ſo departed, clearelie deliuered without examination or bond. From thence he went to the Bench, and there talked with maiſter Bradford, and maiſter Farrar biſhop of S. Dauids, then priſoners. Then he comforted them, & they praiſed God for his happie deliuerance. He went by Wincheſters houſe, and there tooke boate, and came to a freends houſe in London called William Banks, and taried there one night. On the morrow at night he ſhifted to an other freends houſe, and there he learned that ſearch was made for him.

Search made by doctor Sands after his inlargement.

Doctor Watſon and maiſter Chriſtopherſon, comming to the biſhop of Wincheſter, told him that he had ſet at libertie the greateſt heretike in England, and one that had of all other moſt corrupted the vniuerſitie of Cambridge, doctor Sands. Wherevpon the biſhop of Wincheſter, being chancellor of England, ſent for all the conſtables of London, commanding them to watch for doctor Sands, who was then within the citie, and to apprehend him; and who ſo euer of them ſhould take him and bring him to him, he ſhould haue fiue pounds for his labor. Doctor Sands ſuſpecting the matter, conueied himſelfe by night to one maiſter Berties houſe a ſtranger, who was in the Marſhalſea with him priſoner a while, he was a good proteſtant and dwelt in Marke lane. There he was ſix daies, and had one or two of his freends that repaired to him. Then he repaired to an acquaintance of his, one Hurleſtone a ſkinner, dwelling in Cornehill, he cauſed his man Quintin to prouide two geldings for him, minding on the morrow to ride into Eſſex to maiſter Sands his father in law, where his wife was.

Gardiners commandement to watch and ward for doctor Sands and to apprehend him, with a reward promiſed to the taker of him.

At his going to bed in Hurleſtons houſe, he had a paire of hoſe newlie made that were too long for him. For while he was in the tower, a tailor was admitted him to make him a paire of hoſe. One came vnto him whoſe name was Beniamin, a good proteſtant, dwelling in Birchin lane: he might not ſpeake to him, or come vnto him, to take meaſure of him, but onelie looke vpon his leg, he made the hoſe, and they were two inches too long. Theſe hoſe he praied the good wife of the houſe to ſend to ſome tailor to cut his hoſe two inches ſhorter. The wife required the boy of the houſe to carie them to the next tailor to cut. The boy chanced (or rather God ſo prouided) to go to the next tailor, which was Beniamin that made them, which alſo was a conſtable, and acquainted with the lord chancellors commandement. The boy required him to cut the hoſe. He ſaid I am not thy maiſters tailor. Saith the boy, Becauſe ye are our next neighbor, and my maiſters tailor dwelleth far off, I come to you, for it is far nights, and he muſt occupie them timelie in the morning. Beniamin tooke the hoſe and looked vpon them, he tooke his handie worke in hand, and ſaid: Theſe are not thy maiſters hoſe, but doctor Sands, them I made in the tower. The boy yeelded, and ſaid it was ſo. Saith he, Go to thy miſtreſſe, praie hir to ſit vp till twelue of the clocke, then I will bring the hoſe and ſpeake with doctor Sands to his good.

Note Gods prouidence in giuing a way to doctor Sands for his ſafe eſcaping out of danger.

At midnight the goodwife of the houſe, and Beniamin the tailor, commeth into doctor Sands chamber. The wife praieth him not to be afraid of their comming. He anſwereth: Nothing can be amiſſe, that God will, that ſhall be doone. Then Beniamin telleth him that he made his hoſe, and by what good chance they now came to his hands, God vſed the meane that he might foretell him of his perill, & aduiſe him how to eſcape it, telling him that all the conſtables of London, whereof he was one, watched for him, & ſome were ſo greedilie ſet, that they praied him (if he tooke him) to let them haue the carriage of him to the biſhop of Wincheſter, and he ſhould haue the fiue pounds. Saith Beniamin, It is knowen that your man hath prouided two geldings, and that you mind to ride out at Aldgate to morrow, and there then yee are ſure to be taken. Follow mine aduiſe, and by Gods grace yee ſhall eſcape their hands. Let your man walke all the daie to morrow in the ſtreet where your horſſes ſtand, booted and readie to ride. The goodmans ſeruant of the houſe ſhall take the horſſes and carrie them to Bednoll greene. The goodman ſhall be booted, and follow after as if he would ride. I will be here with you to morrow about eight of the clocke; it is both terme and parlement time, here we will breake our faſt, and when the ſtreet is full we will go foorth. Looke wiſelie, and if you meet your brother in the ſtreat, ſhun him not, but outface him, and know him not. Accordinglie doctor Sands did, clothed like a gentleman in all reſpects, and looked wildlie as one that had beene long kept in priſon out of the light. Beniamin carried him through Birching lane, and from one lane to another till he came at Moore gate: there they went forth vntill they came to Bednoll greene, where the horſſes were readie, and maiſter Hurleſton to ride with him as his man. Doctor Sands pulled on his boots, and taking leaue of his friend Beniamin, with teares they kiſſed ech other, he put his hand in his purſe, and would haue giuen Benismin a great part of that little he had, but Beniamin would take none. Yet ſince doctor Sands hath remembred him thankfullie. He rode that night to his father in law maiſter Sands where his wife was, he had not been there two houres, but it was told maiſter Sands that there was two of the gard which would that night apprehend doctor Sands, and ſo they were appointed.

Doctor Sands diſguiſeth himſelfe like a gentleman, and eſcapeth.

God ſtirreth vp the harts of the mariners to fanſie doctor Sands &c.

That night doctor Sands was guided to an honeſt farmer neere the ſea, where he taried two daies and two nights in a chamber without all companie. After that he ſhifted to one Iames Mower a ſhipmaſter, who dwelt at Milton ſhore, where he expected wind for the Engliſh fleet readie into Flanders. While he was there, Iames Mower brought to him fortie or fiftie mariners, to whome he gaue an exhortation; they liked him ſo well, that they promiſed to die for it, yer that he ſhould be apprehended. The firſt of Maie, being ſundaie the wind ſerued: he tooke his leaue of his hoſt and hoſteſſe, and went towards the ſhip. In taking leaue of his hoſteſſe who was barren, and had beene married eight yeares, he gaue hir a fine handkercher and alſo an old roiall of gold in it, thanking hir much, and ſaid: Be of good comfort, yer that an whole yeere be paſt God ſhall giue you a child a boie. And it came to paſſe, for that daie twelue moneths lacking one daie, God gaue hir a faire ſonne.

Doctor Sands his propheticall bleſſing to his hoſteſſe at his departing.

At the ſhore doctor Sands met with maiſter Iſaac of Kent, who had his eldeſt ſonne there, who vpon the liking he had to doctor Sands, ſent his ſonne with him, who afterward died in his fathers houſe in Frankford. Doctor Sands and doctor Cox were both in one ſhip, being one Cokrels ſhip. They were within the kenning when two of the gard came thither to apprehend doctor Sands. They arriued at Antwerpe, being bid to dinner to maiſter Locke. And at dinner time one George Gilpin being ſecretarie to the Engliſh houſe, and kinſman to doctor Sands, came to him and rounded him in his eare, and ſaid; King Philip hath ſent to make ſearch for you, and to apprehend you. Herevpon they roſe from their dinner in a maruellous great ſhower, and went out at the gate toward the land of Cleue; there they found a wagon and haſted awaie, and came ſafe to Auſpurge in Cleueland, where doctor Sands taried fourteene daies, and then iournied towards Straſborough, where after he had liued one yeare, his wife came vnto him. He fell ſore ſicke of a flix which kept him nine moneths, and brought him to deaths doore. He had a child which fell ſicke of the plague and died. His wife at length fell ſicke of a conſumption and died in his armes; no man had a more godlie woman to his wife.

Doctor Sands and doctor Cox go by wagon into Cleueland.

After this, maiſter Samſon went awaie to Emanuell, a man ſkilfull in the Hebrue. Maiſter Grindall went into the countrie to learne the Dutch toong. Doctor Sands ſtill remained in Straſborough, whoſe ſuſtentation then was chieflie from one maiſter Iſaac, who loued him moſt dearelie, and was euer more readie to giue than he to take. He gaue him in that ſpace aboue one hundred marks, which ſum the ſaid doctor Sands paied him againe, and by his other gifts and friendlineſſe ſhewed himſelfe to be a thankfull man. When his wife was dead, he went to Zurike, and there was in Peter Martyrs houſe for the ſpace of fiue weekes. Being there as they ſate at dinner, word ſuddenlie came that queene Marie was dead, and doctor Sands was ſent for by his friends at Straſborough. That newes made maiſter Martyr and maiſter Iarret then there verie ioyfull: but doctor Sands could not reioiſe, it ſmote into his hart that he ſhould be called to miſerie. Maiſter Bullinger and the miniſters feaſted him, and he tooke his leaue and returned into Straſborough, where he preached, and ſo maiſter Grindall and he came towards England, and then to London the ſame daie that queene Elizabeth was crowned.

Happie newes of queen Maries death: wherevpon doctor Sands returneth into England.

This is the true ſtorie of ſuch accidents as befell doctor Sands, a reuerend father, and conſtant in the truth; whereof if anie part had beene falſe, likelie it is that one or other would haue barked againſt it yer now. But the report being common, and hauing beene thus long extant in print, the ſilence of men is a ſufficient proofe & confirmation of the truth.] Here therefore we will leaue doctor Sands in his archiepiſcopall ſee of Yorke; and after this long (but yet needfull) digreſſion fall againe to the diſcourſe of Calis; which being loſt (as you haue heard) in a verie ſhort time after ſo long poſſeſſion, tidings thereof were carried to and fro, farre and neere, by word of mouth and by writing. In ſo much that the ſame newes likewiſe being made notorious and knowne to the French were not ſo ioyfullie receiued in France, as they were generallie grieuous and diſpleaſant to the whole relme of England: but ſpeciallie to queene Marie, who being a princeſſe of hart and courage, more than commonlie is in womankind, thought hir ſelfe ſo much touched in honour by the loſſe of hir ſaid towne and poſſeſſions on that ſide the ſea, as ſhe counted hir life irkeſome, vntill the ſame were either recouered againe, or the loſſe redoubled with ſome like victorie againſt the French elſewhere.

With what indignation queene Marie tooke the loſſe of Calis.

In reſpect whereof ſhe ceaſed not to trauell after with king Philip hir husband, as with hir owne priuie councell, and the lords of the realme, which waie ſhould be beſt to reuenge this iniurie: and ſpeciallie now whileſt the French king was occupied in wars with king Philip, to indamage ſome of his countries by waie of inuaſion, & to ſurpriſe ſome of his townes vpon the ſudden. And among ſundrie deuiſes, none was thought ſo fit to be attempted as an hauen towne in Britaine called Breſt, which in the time of king Richard the ſecond was kept and mainteined with an Engliſh garriſon, vntill the ſaid king rendered the ſame to the French king againe by compoſition. This towne as well for the conuenient ſituation alwaies readie to receiue freſh ſuccors and vittelling out of England by ſea, as alſo for that it was knowne to the queene and hir councell at that preſent, not to be furniſhed with anie garriſon of ſoldiors, ſufficient to repell the power of a prince vpon the ſudden, was thought to be the beſt marke to be ſhot at for the time. Wherefore vpon this caſe well debated, there was immediatlie order giuen to Edward lord Clinton then high admerall of England, with all expedition to prepare himſelfe with all the queenes ſhips of warre, furniſhed with ſoldiors, munition & vittels, to ioine with the admerall of king Philip, who had like order from the ſaid king to ioine with the nauie of England for the atchiuing of this enterpriſe.

Force intended againſt Breſt in Britaine.

The lord Clinton admerall of England ſent againſt Breſt.

But before I declare to you the aduenture of theſe two great nauies by ſea, it ſhall not be impertinent to touch ſome accidents in the meane time by land.

Monſieur de Thermes capteine of Calis worketh vpon the aduantage to do the French king more honorable ſeruice.

Monſieur de Thermes determination to ſpoile king Philips countrie.

land. While king Philip being abſent from the low countrie, was (as you haue heard) occupied with his warres in France, monſieur de Thermes the new capteine of Calis, being a man verie expert in the wars (whoſe propertie is neuer to neglect anie time of aduantage) caſt in his mind, how (during king Philips abſence) to do ſome ſingular ſeruice to the French king his maiſter. And eſpieng well the negligence of the Flemings his neighbors, how little they vnderſtood the great weakening of their countrie by the loſſe of Calis, and that there was no new prouiſion made for the defenſe thereof, more than was before, whileſt Calis was Engliſh, by the loſſe whereof, their frontiers were now become open for the French at all times to enter. He therefore taking out of Calis ſo manie of his ſoldiors as might be ſpared from thenſe, adioining to them all the forces of the French garriſons in Arthois, Bullongnois, and Picardie, whereof togither with the ſoldiors of Calis, being to the number of ſeuen hundred footmen, and thrée hundred light horſſemen Scotiſh, there were aſſembled fouretéene enſigns of the French footmen, eightéene banlins of Almans, foure or fiue hundred men at armes of France, beſide the light horſſemen Scots, amounting in the whole to the number at the leaſt of nine thouſand footmen, and fifteene hundred horſſemen, entred into Flanders, with full determination to ſpoile and waſte all king Philips countrie along the ſea coaſt, and namelie a proper hauen towne called Dunkirke, and with like purpoſe to haue ſurpriſed the towne of Graueling; if occaſion would ſo ſerue.

Dunkirke beſieged, taken, and burned by the French.

Monſieur de Thermes ſicke of the gowt.

This capteine following his enterpriſe, of a policie paſſing by the towne of Graueling, laid ſiege to a little towne not farre from thence called Berghs, which he wan in a ſmall time, and with ſmall reſiſtance, leauing the ſaccage of the ſame vnto his ſoldiors, where they found manie good booties. And without long ſtaieng they marched forth to Dunkirke beforeſaid, and planting a ſiege in like maner there, battered the ſame ſo ſharplie with the cannon, that within leſſe than foure daies he became maſter of the towne, which he in like maner put to the ſacke, where was found more plentie of ſpoile and good booties, than in anie place before, ſo farre forth as the meaneſt ſlaues and lackies came awaie rich. And after ſetting the towne on fire (whereby all in the countrie about were maruellouſlie put in feare) and the French ſpreading further abroad, waſted the moſt fruitfull quarter of all that part of Flanders, euen almoſt vnto Newport. But yet bicauſe that monſieur de Thermes fell diſeaſed of the gowt, the armie withdrew and incamped within halfe a mile of Graueling, & for his more eaſe, he himſelfe laie in Dunkirke, and in the meane time diuerſe ſkirmiſhes fell out betwéene the Frenchmen, and them of the garriſon within Graueling.

Countie Egmond lieutenant generall for king Philip in the low countrie.

During which paſtime, the countie de Aiguemont (or as he is commonlie called Egmond) lieutenant generall for king Philip in the low countrie, with all haſt poſſible aſſembled all the power as well of king Philips garriſons, as alſo of men of warre in the low countrie, to the number of fouretéene or fiftéene thouſand footmen, and two or thrée thouſand horſſemen, whereof there were fiftéene hundred ſwart Rutters, determining ſo to affront the French, that either they ſhould paſſe no further in to the countrie, or at the leaſt waie to impeach them from the ſiege of Graueling, whereof there was great appearance. Monſieur de Thermes hearing of this power aſſembled (though ſcarſelie well recouered) made all poſſible haſt toward Graueling, where he was no ſooner arriued, but that he ſaw his enimies readie ranged in the field. By reaſon whereof his ſtudie was now nothing elſe but how he might bring home his armie in ſafetie to Calis.

The Engliſh ſhips annoie the French with gunſhot, &c.

A valiant onſet giuen vpon the Frenchmen by countie Egmond.

The countie de Egmond eſpieng the Frenchmen bent to march awaie with the ſpoile of the countrie, cut betwéene them and home, placing his battels in ſuch order, that the Frenchmen had no waie to paſſe, but vpon the ſands betwéene the towne and the ſea. Whereas by good chance laie a great fléet of quéene Maries ſhips of warre, within the danger of whoſe gunſhot the Frenchmen had no ſhift but to paſſe as their iournie laie. And ſo being forced either to famiſh or to fight at diſaduantage, monſieur the Thermes without ſtaieng anie longer, cauſed his vantgard to paſſe ouer the riuer ſomewhat néere the towne, to auoid the ſhot of the Engliſh ſhips. And ſtaieng vpon the further ſide for the reſidue of his battels, there came ſuch thicke haileſhot of artillerie out of the towne on the one ſide, and from the Engliſh ſhips on the other ſide, that there was a full batterie made vpon the Frenchmen on all ſides, which they neuertheleſſe abode, without breaking order for the time, when ſuddenlie appéered before them two great troops of horſſemen, of fiftéene hundred a péece, part ſwart Rutters, and part Burgognians, whereof the one in front, and the other in flanke, gaue ſtrong charges vpon the French vantgard, who being well backed with their other battels (whereof the moſt part then had paſſed the riuer) ſtoutlie repelled theſe two firſt troops, though not without loſſe of manie their beſt ſoldiors.

A recharge vpon the French ſcarſe recouered.

A great victorie.

Certeine French priſoners taken, and what they were by name.

Calis might haue béene recouered from the French.

So thus both parties being at a ſtaie, and ſeuered ſomewhat aſunder, the countie de Egmond himſelfe with eightéene hundred men of armes, and his foot battels following, before the French had well recouered breath, recharged vpon them with all his forces togither, ſo terriblie that he choked all their battell, and the number tooke them to flight, without further triall. So by that time that the footmen on either ſide came to the puſh of the pike, the victorie was ſoone had, by reaſon (as the Frenchmen report) that the Almans beaten back with artillerie, as well of the towne as of the ſhips before ſaid, brake their order, and came not to the ſhocke, whereby the whole charge of the battell reſted vpon the French bands onelie. This field was fought the thirtéenth of Iulie 1558, vpon the ſea ſands néere to Graueling, where beſides thoſe that were ſlaine, being eſtéemed to the number of fiue thouſand fighting men, there were taken priſoners the marſhall de Thermes capteine of Calis, monſieur Senerpont gouernour of Bullongne, monſieur Willebou gouernour of Picardie, monſieur Annebault ſonne to the late admerall Annebault, knight of the order, monſieur de Moruilliers gouernour of Abuile, monſieur de Channe gouernour of Corbie, beſide a great number of other gentlemen, valiant capteins & ſoldiors: but ſpeciallie the bands of Calis went to wracke, ſo as verie few returned home to bring tidings. Which gaue ſuch a terrour to the ſoldiors remaining in Calis, that it is verelie beléeued, that if the admerals of England and Flanders had béene preſent there with their nauies, as the ſaid other few ſhips of England were, and vpon this ſudden had attempted Calis, with the aid of the countie Egmond hauing his power preſent: the towne of Calis might haue béene recouered againe with as little difficultie, and happilie in as ſhort time as it was before gained by the duke of Guiſe. But the ſaid admerals (as it appeared) knew nothing thereof. Wherfore following their preſcribed courſe, & ioining togither at the place appointed, they ſailed from thence with proſperous wind & weather, & by the nine and twentith daie of the ſame moneth, and in the ſaid yeare, with ſeauen ſcore ſhips of warre, appeared by the brake of the daie before the hauen of Conqueſt, commonlie called Conquet in Britaine; whereof the poet ſaith, touching the ſeat of the ſame, abutting vpon the ſea:

Nobile Conquetum ſalſis Thetis alluit vndis.

At whoſe arriuall there (as the manner is) they ſounded their trumpets, & with a thundering peale of great ordinance gaue a lowd ſalue vnto the Britains: and by eight of the clocke the ſame morning, mauger all the power of the countrie, being aſſembled there in armes, with manie péeces of great artillerie, to defend the entrie of their port, the Engliſhmen manning forth their ſhipboats, with manie valiant capteins and ſoldiors, recouered landing, and within ſhort time became maſters of the ſaid towne of Conquet, which they put to the ſaccage, with a great abbeie, and manie pretie townes and villages néere thereabouts, where our men found great ſtore of pillage and good booties. This done, they marched into the countrie, and burned manie villages and houſes: and after withdrew downe vnto the ſea ſide, where their ſhips laie readie to receiue them. But the Flemmings being couetous of ſpoile, paſſing further into the land, before they could recouer their ſhips againe, were incountered by the power of the countrie, by whome there were ſlaine of them to the number of foure or fiue hundred.

Conqueſt or Conquet taken and burned.

A great ſlaughter of the Flemmings occaſioned by their owne couetouſneſſe.

The admerals perceiuing the power of the countrie greatlie to increaſe, and hauing intelligence that the duke of Eſtampes the French kings lieutenant in Britaine was verie néere, comming on with a great number of horſſemen and footmen, eſtéemed to be about twentie thouſand (as the Frenchmen themſelues affirme) thought not beſt to attempt anie aſſault againſt the towne of Breſt, or to make longer abode there. But yet in hope to doo ſome further exploit elſewhere, they laie there houering on the coaſt a while, to vnderſtand the demeanour of the Britains: but by this time there was ſuch numbers of people raiſed in all thoſe parts for defenſe of the ſame coaſts, that the admerals afterward attempting in diuers places to land their men, and finding ech where more appearance of loſſe than of gaine, returned home without atchiuing anie further enterpriſe. In this meane time, while king Philip and the French king, with two moſt puiſſant armies affronted ech other, néere vnto the water of Some, either of them was obſtinatelie bent to driue the other out of the field, for which cauſe they intrenched their campes.

The admerals remoue for feare of loſſe.

Anno Reg. 6.

During which time there was nothing doone betwéene them worthie memorie, more than dailie ſkirmiſhes of no great account. Neuertheleſſe, the countrie of France could not but ſuſteine extreame damage, ſo long ſuſteining ſuch a maine multitude, ſpeciallie of men of warre, which thoſe two mightie kings had aſſembled. And daie by daie came freſh companies to either partie; ſo as it was thought a thing impoſſible that ſuch two princes being ſo néere, could depart without ſome cruell bloudie battell to determine their quarrels. But God, in whoſe hands are the hearts of kings (when leaſt hope was) conuerted their obſtinate minds from warre to peace, which came chieflie to paſſe by the mediation of the ducheſſe of Lorraine, who had béene a long and earneſt traueller to that end; and neuer ceaſſed, vntill by hir interceſſion, both the ſaid kings appointed ſpeciall commiſſioners to treat vpon peace. So that after diuerſe conferences, they at laſt concluded vpon all controuerſies, except the matter of Calis, whereof quéene Marie by hir amballadours required reſtitution; but the French partie would in no wiſe heare thereof. By reaſon of which difficultie, this treatie could not come to anie good concluſion. King Philip thinking himſelfe bound in honour to ſtand in that caſe with the quéene his wife, who for his ſake had entered into a néedleſſe warre againſt France, and thereby loſt hir ſaid towne, with all the countrie adioining (as you haue heard before) did therefore ſtaie a long time before he concluded peace with the French king.

No memorable act doone by either of the kings during the affronting of their armies.

Peace is procured betwéen both kings at the ſute and ſéeking of the ducheſſe of Lorraine.

Quéene Marie ſéeing no likelihood, nor hauing anie hope of the reſtitution of Calis, and conſidering alſo that moſt of hir affaires had but hard ſucceſſe, conceiued an inward ſorrow of mind: by reaſon whereof about September next ſhe fell ſicke of a hot burning feauer, which ſickneſſe was common that yeare through all the realme, and conſumed a maruellous number, as well noblemen, as biſhops, iudges, knights, gentlemen, and rich farmers: but moſt of the cleargie, and other ancient and graue perſons. In which while the quéene laie languiſhing of a long ſickneſſe, and ſo continued vntill the ſeuentéenth of Nouember next betwéene the houres of fiue or ſix in the morning, and then ended hir life in this world, at hir houſe of ſaint Iames beſides Weſtminſter, when ſhe had reigned fiue years, foure moneths, and eleuen daies, and in the thrée and fortith yeare of hir bodilie age. The death of this ſaid quéene made a maruellous alteration in this realme, namelie in the caſe of religion, which like as by the death of king Edward the ſixt it ſuffered a change from the eſtabliſhment of his time: ſo by the death of this quéene it returned into the former eſtate againe. So that we ſée the vncerteintie of the world, and what changes doo come in times by their reuolutions, and that euerie thing is ſubiect to vnconſtancie, and nothing frée from variableneſſe; as the poet ſaith:

Humanis quàm nulla ſubeſt conſtantia rebus!

And heere, bicauſe we are come to the knitting vp of quéene Maries reigne, I cannot ouerſlip with ſilence that notable and néedfull diſcourſe of maſter Fox concerning our bleſſed ſoueraigne, quéen Elizabeth, whoſe maieſtie the Lord of his mercie inuiron with fréends as in number manie, ſo in ſeruice truſtie; and whoſe enimies the ſame Lord in iuſtice root out from the land of the liuing, heaping vpon them plague after plague, to their vtter confuſion, bicauſe they haue reiected the gratious means of their conuerſion. Thus therefore writeth maſter Fox concerning the miſchéefous perſecution and miraculous preſeruation of ladie Elizabeth, now quéene of England, from extreame calamitie and danger of life, in the time of quéene Marie hir ſiſter.

But (ſaith maſter Fox) when all hath béene ſaid and told, whatſoeuer can be recited touching the admirable working of Gods preſent hand in defending and deliuering anie one perſon out of thraldome, neuer was there ſince the memorie of our fathers, anie example to be ſhewed, wherin the Lords mightie power hath more admirablie and bleſſedlie ſhewed it ſelfe, to the glorie of his owne name, to the comfort of all good hearts, and to the publike felicitie of this whole realme, than in the miraculous cuſtodie and outſcape of this our ſoueraigne ladie, now quéene, then ladie Elizabeth, in the ſtrict time of quéene Marie hir ſiſter. In which ſtorie, firſt we haue to conſider in what extreame miſerie, ſickneſſe, feare, and perill hir highneſſe was; into what care, what trouble of mind, and what danger of death ſhe was brought. Firſt with great routs and bands of armed men (and happie was he that might haue the carrieng of hir) being fetched vp as the greateſt traitour in the world, clapped in the tower, and againe toſſed from thence, from houſe to houſe, from priſon to priſon, from poſt to piller, at length alſo priſoner in hir owne houſe, and garded with a ſort of cut-throats, which euer gaped for the ſpoile, whereby they might be fingering of ſomewhat.

Secondlie, we haue againe to conſider, all this notwithſtanding, how ſtrangelie, or rather miraculouſlie from danger ſhe was deliuered: what fauour and grace ſhe found with the almightie, who when all helpe of man, and hope of recouerie was paſt, ſtretched out his mightie protection, and preſerued hir highneſſe, and placed hir in this princelie ſeat of reſt and quietneſſe, wherein now ſhe ſitteth, and long maie ſhe ſit, the lord of his glorious mercie grant, we beſeech him*. In which ſtorie, if I ſhould ſet forth at large and at full, all the particulars and circumſtances thereunto belonging, and as iuſt occaſion of the hiſtorie requireth, beſides the importunate length of the ſtorie diſcourſed, peraduenture it might moue offenſe to ſome being yet aliue, and truth might get me hatred. Yet notwithſtanding, I intend (by the grace of Chriſt) therein to vſe ſuch breuitie and moderation, as both may be to the glorie of God, the diſcharge of the ſtorie, the profit of the reader, & hurt to none, ſuppreſſing the names of ſome, whome here although I could recite, yet I thought not to be more cruell in hurting their name, than the queene hath beene mercifull in pardoning their liues.

*Amen.

The hiſtorie of the ladie Elizabeth.

Therefore now to enter into the diſcourſe of this tragicall matter, firſt here is to be noted, that queene Marie when ſhe was firſt queene, before ſhe was crowned, would go no whither,* but would haue hir by the hand, and ſend for hir to dinner and ſupper: but after ſhe was crowned, ſhe neuer dined nor ſupped with hir, but kept hir aloofe from hir, &c. After this it happened, immediatlie vpon the riſing of ſir Thomas Wiat (as before was mentioned,* pag. 1418, 1419) that the ladie Elizabeth and the lord Courtneie were charged with falſe ſuſpicion of ſir Thomas Wiats riſing. Where vpon queene Marie, whether for that ſurmiſe, or for what other cauſe I know not, being offended with the ſaid Elizabeth hir ſiſter, at that time lieng in hir houſe at Aſhridge, the next daie after the riſing of Wiat, ſent to hir three of hir councellors, to wit, ſir Richard Southwell, ſir Edward Haſtings, then maſter of the horſſe, and ſir Thomas Cornwallis, with their retinue and troope of horſemen, to the number of two hundred & fiftie. Who at their ſudden and vnprouided comming, found hir at the ſame time ſore ſicke in hir bed, and verie feeble and weake of bodie. Whither when they came, aſcending vp to hir graces priuie chamber, they willed one of hir ladies, whome they met, to declare vnto hir grace, that there were certeine come from the court, which had a meſſage from the queene.

Sir Richard Southwell, [illegible]ngs, and ſir Thomas Cornwallis, ſent to fetch vp ladie Elizabeth, with whom alſo afterward was ſent the lord william Howard, &c.

Hir grace hauing knowledge thereof, was right glad of their comming: howbeit, being then verie ſicke, and the night farre ſpent (which was at ten of the clocke) ſhe requeſted them by the meſſenger, that they would reſort thither in the morning. To this they anſwered, and by the ſaid meſſenger ſent word againe, that they muſt needs ſee hir, and would ſo doo, in what caſe ſoeuer ſhe were. Whereat the ladie being againſt, went to ſhew hir grace their words: but they haſtilie following hir, came ruſhing as ſoone as ſhe into hir graces chamber vnbidden. At whoſe ſo ſudden comming into hir bed chamber, hir grace being not a little amazed, ſaid vnto them: Is the haſt ſuch, that it might not haue pleaſed you to come to morrow in the morning? They made anſwer, that they were right ſorie to ſee hir in that caſe. And I (quoth ſhe) am not glad to ſee you here at this time of the night. Whereunto they anſwered, that they came from the queene to doo their meſſage and dutie: which was to this effect, that the queens pleaſure was, that ſhe ſhould be at London the ſeauenth daie of that preſent moneth. Whereunto ſhe ſaid; Certeſſe, no creature more glad than I to come to hir maieſtie, being right ſorie that I am not in caſe at this time to wait on hir, as you your ſelues do ſee and can well teſtifie.

The vnmannerlineſſe of the knights.

In deed we ſee it true (quoth they) that you doo ſaie: for which we are verie ſorie: albeit we let you to vnderſtand, that our commiſſion is ſuch, and ſo ſtraineth vs, that we muſt needs bring you with vs, either quicke or dead. Whereat ſhe being amazed, ſorrowfullie ſaid, that their commiſſion was verie ſore: but yet notwithſtanding ſhe hoped it to be other wiſe, and not ſo ſtrict. Yes verelie, ſaid they. Where vpon they called for two phyſicians, doctor Owen and doctor Wendie, demanding of them, whether ſhe might be remooued from thence with life, or no. Whoſe anſwer and iudgement was, that there was no impediment (in their iudgement) to the contrarie, but that ſhe might trauell without danger of life. In concluſion, they willed hir to prepare againſt the morning at nine of the clocke to go with them, declaring that they had brought with them the queenes litter for hir. After much talke, the meſſengers declaring how there was no prolonging of times and daies, ſo departed to their chamber, being interteined and cheared as apperteined to their worſhips.

A ſtrait commiſſion from the queene to bring the ladie Elizabeth either quicke or dead.

The gentleneſſe of queene Marie to ſend hir horſlitter to bring hir ſiſter to trouble.

On the next morrow at the time preſcribed, they had hir forth as ſhe was, verie faint and feeble, and in ſuch caſe that ſhe was readie to ſound three or foure times betweene them. What ſhould I ſpeake heere that cannot well be expreſſed, what an heauie houſe there was to behold the vnreuerend and dolefull dealing of theſe men, but eſpeciallie the carefull feare and captiuitie of their innocent ladie and miſtreſſe? Now to proceed in hir iornie from Aſhridge all ſicke in the litter, ſhe came to Redborne, where ſhe was garded all night: from thence to S. Albons, to ſir Rafe Rowlets houſe, where ſhe tarried that night, both feeble in bodie, and comfortleſſe in mind. From that place they paſſed to maſter Dods houſe at Mims, where alſo they remained that night: and ſo from thence ſhe came to Highgate: where ſhe being verie ſicke, taried that night and the next daie. During which time of hir abode there, came manie purſeuants and meſſengers from the court: but for what purpoſe I cannot tell.

Ladie Elizabeth taketh hir iourneie toward the queene.

From that place ſhe was conueied to the court: where (by the waie) came to meet hir manie gentlemen, to accompanie hir highneſſe, which were verie ſorie to ſee hir in that caſe. But eſpeciallie a great multitude of people there were ſtanding by the way, who then flocking about hir litter, lamented and bewailed greatlie hir eſtate. Now, when ſhe came to the court, hir grace was there ſtraightwaies ſhut vp, and kept as cloſe priſoner a fortnight, which was till Palmeſundaie, ſeeing neither king nor queene, nor lord, nor friend, all that time, but onelie then the lord chamberlaine, ſir Iohn Gage, and the vicechamberlaine which were attendant vnto the doores. About which time ſir William Sentlow was called before the councell; vnto whoſe charge it was laid, that he knew of Wiats rebellion. Which he ſtoutlie denied, proteſting that he was a true man, both to God and his prince, defieng all traitors and rebels: but being ſtrictlie examined, he was in concluſion committed to the tower.

Ladie Elizabeth brought vp to Londō.

Sir william Sentlow committed to the tower.

The fridaie before Palmeſundaie, the biſhop of Wincheſter, with nineteene others of the councell (who ſhall be here nameleſſe) came vnto hir grace from the queenes maieſtie, and burdened hir with Wiats conſpiracie: which ſhe vtterlie denied, affirming that ſhe was altogither giltleſſe therein. They being not contented with this, charged hir grace with buſineſſe made by ſir Peter Carew, and the reſt of the gentlemen of the weſt countrie: which alſo ſhe

Ladie Elizabeth threatned to go to the tower.

Ladie Elizabeth purgeth hir ſelfe to the lords.

ſhe vtterlie denieng, cleared hir innocencie therein. In concluſion, after long debating of matters, they declared vnto hir, that it was the quéenes will and pleaſure that ſhe ſhould go vnto the tower, while the matter were further tried and examined. Whereat ſhe being agaſt, ſaid, that ſhe truſted the quéenes maieſtie would be more gratious ladie vnto hir, and that hir highneſſe would not otherwiſe conceiue of hir, but that ſhe was a true woman: declaring furthermore to the lords, that ſhe was innocent in all thoſe matters wherin they had burdened hir; and deſired them therefore to be a further meane to the quéene hir ſiſter, that ſhe being a true woman in thought, word, and déed towards hir maieſtie, might not be committed to ſo notorious & dolefull a place: proteſting that ſhe would requeſt no mercie at hir hand, if ſhe ſhould be proued to haue conſented vnto anie ſuch kind of matter, as they had laid vnto hir charge: and therefore in fine deſired their lordſhips to thinke of hir what ſhe was, and that ſhe might not ſo extremelie be dealt withall for hir truth.

Ladie Elizabeths ſeruāts remoued from hir.

The quéenes men, and waiting women attendant vpō ladie Elizabeth.

Wher vnto the lords anſwered againe, that there was no remedie, for that the quéenes maieſtie was fullie determined that ſhe ſhould go vnto the tower. Wherewith the lords departed, with their caps hanging ouer their eies. But not long after, within the ſpace of an houre or little more, came foure of the foreſaid lords of the councell, which were the lord treaſuror, the biſhop of Wincheſter, the lord ſteward, the earle of Suſſex, with the gard, who warding the next chamber to hir, ſecluded all hir gentlemen and yeomen, ladies and gentlewomen, ſauing that for one gentleman vſher, thrée gentlewomen, and two groomes of hir chamber, were appointed in their roomes thrée other men of the quéenes, and thrée waiting women to giue attendance vpon hir, that none ſhould haue acceſſe to hir grace. At which time there were an hundred of northerne ſouldiers in white cotes, watching and warding about the gardens all that night, a great fire being made in the midſt of the hall, and two certeine lords watching there alſo with their band and companie.

Ladie Elizabeth writeth to the quéene but it would not ſerue.

Vpon ſaturdaie following, two lords of the councell (the one was the earle of Suſſex, the other ſhall be nameleſſe) came and certified hir grace, that forthwith ſhe muſt go vnto the tower, the barge being prepared for hir, and the tide now readie, which tarieth for no bodie. In heauie mood hir grace requeſted the lords that ſhe might tarie another tide, truſting that the next would be better and more comfortable. But one of the lords replied, that nether tide nor time was to be delaied. And when hir grace requeſted him that ſhe might be ſuffered to write to the quéenes maieſtie, he anſwered, that he durſt not permit that: adding that in his iudgement it would rather hurt, than profit hir grace in ſo doing. But the other lord, more courteous and fauorable (who was the earle of Suſſex) knéeling downe, ſaid ſhe ſhould haue libertie to write; and as he was a true man, he would deliuer it to the quéenes highneſſe, & bring an anſwer of the ſame, what ſoeuer came thereof. Wherevpon ſhe wrote, albeit ſhe could in no caſe be ſuffered to ſpeake with the quéene to hir great diſcomfort, being no offendor againſt the quéenes maieſtie.

And thus the tide and time paſſed awaie for that ſeaſon, they priuilie appointing all things readie that ſhe ſhould go the next tide which fell about midnight: but for feare ſhe ſhould be taken by the waie, they durſt not. So they ſtaied till the next daie, being Palmeſundaie, when about nine of the clocke theſe two returned againe, declaring that it was time for hir grace to depart; ſhe anſwering: If there be no remedie, I muſt be content, willing the lords to go before. Being come forth into the garden, ſhe did caſt vp hir eies toward the window, thinking to haue ſéene the quéene, which ſhe could not. Whereat ſhe ſaid ſhe marueiled much what the nobilitie of the realme meant, which in that ſort would ſuffer hir to be led into captiuitie, the Lord knew whither, for ſhe did not. In the meane time commandement was giuen in all London, that euerie one ſhould kéepe the church and carie their palmes, while in the meane ſeaſon ſhe might be conueied without all recourſe of people into the tower.

Ladie Elizabeth ſent to the tower.

After all this, ſhe tooke hir barge with the two foreſaid lords, thrée of the quéenes gentlewomen, and thrée of hir owne, hir gentleman vſher, and two of hir groomes, lieng & houering vpon the water a certeine ſpace, for that they could not ſhoot the bridge, the bargemen being verie vnwilling to ſhoot the ſame ſo ſoone as they bad, bicauſe of the danger therof: for the ſterne of the boat ſtroke vpon the ground, the fall was ſo big, and the water was ſo ſhallow, that the boat being vnder the bridge, there ſtaied againe a while. At landing, ſhe firſt ſtaied, and denied to land at thoſe ſtaires where all traitors and offendors cuſtomablie vſed to land, neither well could ſhe vnleſſe ſhe ſhould go ouer hir ſhoo. The lords were gone out of the boat before, and aſked why ſhe came not. One of the lords went backe againe to hir, and brought word ſhe would not come. Then ſaid one of the lords which ſhall be nameleſſe, that ſhe ſhould not chooſe: and bicauſe it did then raine, he offered to hir his cloke, which ſhe (putting it backe with hir hand with a good daſh) refuſed. So ſhe comming out, hauing one foot vpon the ſtaire, ſaid; Here landeth as true a ſubiect being priſoner, as euer landed at theſe ſtaires: and before thée O God I ſpeake it, hauing none other fréends but thée alone.

The words of ladie Elizabeth entring the tower.

To whome the ſame lord anſwered againe, that if it were ſo, it was the better for hir. At hir landing there was a great multitude of their ſeruants and warders ſtanding in their order; What néeded all this ſaid ſhe? It is the vſe (ſaid ſome) ſo to be when anie priſoner came thither. And if it be (quoth ſhe) for my cauſe, I beſéech you that they may be diſmiſſed. Wherat the poore men knéeled downe, and with one voice deſired God to preſerue hir grace, who the next daie were releaſed of their cold coats. After this paſſing a little further, ſhe ſat downe vpon a cold ſtone, and there reſted hir ſelfe. To whom the lieutenant then being, ſaid; Madame, you were beſt to come out of the raine, for you ſit vnwholeſomelie. She then replieng, anſwered againe: Better ſitting here than in a worſe place, for God knoweth, I know not whither you will bring me. With that hir gentleman vſher wept: ſhe demanding of him what he meant ſo vncomfortablie to vſe hir, ſéeing ſhe tooke him to be hir comforter, and not to diſmaie hir, eſpeciallie for that ſhe knew hir truth to be ſuch, that no man ſhould haue cauſe to wéepe for hir. But forth ſhe went into the priſon.

The chriſtian praier of ladie Elizabeth.

The lord of Suſſex ſpeaketh for ladie Elizabeth.

The dores were locked and bolted vpon hir: which did not a little diſcomfort and diſmaie hir grace. At what time ſhe called to hir gentlewoman for hir booke, deſiring God not to ſuffer hir to build hir foundation vpon the ſands but vpon the rocke, whereby all the blaſts of bluſtering weather ſhould haue no power againſt hir. The dores being thus locked, and ſhe cloſe ſhut vp, the lords had great conference how to kéepe ward and watch, euerie man declaring his opinion in that behalfe, agréeing ſtrictlie and circumſpectlie to kéepe hir. Then one of them, which was the lord of Suſſex ſwearing, ſaid: My lords, let vs take héed, and doo no more than our commiſſion will beare vs, what ſoeuer ſhall happen hereafter. And further, let vs conſider that ſhe was the king our maiſters daughter, and therefore let vs vſe ſuch dealing, that we may anſwer vnto it hereafter, if it ſhall ſo happen, for iuſt dealing (quoth he) is alwaies anſwerable. Wherevnto the other lords agréed that it was well ſaid of him, and therevpon departed. Being in the tower, within two daies, commandement was that ſhe ſhould haue maſſe within hir houſe. One maiſter Yong was then hir chapleine: and bicauſe there was none of hir men ſo well learned to helpe the prieſt to ſaie maſſe, the maſſe ſtaied for that daie.

The next daie two of hir yeomen, who had gone long to ſchoole before, and were learned, had two abcies prouided and deliuered them, ſo that vpon the abcies they ſhould helpe the prieſt. One of the ſaid yeomen, holding the abcie in his hand, pretending ignorance at Kyrie eleiſon, ſet the prieſt, making as though he could anſwer that no further. It would make a pitifull and a ſtrange ſtorie, here by the waie to touch and recite what examinations and rackings of poore men there were, to find out that knife which ſhould cut hir throte: what gaping among my lords of the cleargie, to ſée the daie wherein they might waſh their goodlie white rochets in hir innocent bloud, but eſpeciallie the biſhop of Wincheſter Stephan Gardiner, then lord chancellor, ruler of the roſt, who then within fiue daies after came vnto hir, with diuerſe others of the councell, and examined hir of the talke that was at Aſhridge, betwixt hir and ſir Iames Acroft, touching hir remouing from thence to Dunnington caſtle, requiring hir to declare what ſhe meant thereby.

The biſhop of Wincheſter enimie to ladie Eliſabeth.

Ladie Eliſabeth examined by the biſhop of Wincheſter.

At the firſt, ſhe being ſo ſuddenlie aſked, did not well remember anie ſuch houſe: but within a while, well aduiſing hir ſelfe, ſhe ſaid; In déed (quoth ſhe) I doo now remember that I haue ſuch a place, but I neuer laie in it in all my life. And as for anie that hath mooued me therevnto, I doo not remember. Then to inforce the matter, they brought forth ſir Iames Acroft. The biſhop of Wincheſter demanded of hir what ſhe ſaid to that man? She anſwered, that ſhe had little to ſaie to him, or to the reſt that were then priſoners in the tower. But my lords (quoth ſhe) you doo examine euerie meane priſoner of me, wherein me thinks you doo me great iniurie. If they haue doone euill and offended the quéenes maieſtie, let them anſwer to it accordinglie. I beſéech you my lords, ioine not me in this ſort with anie of theſe offendors. And as concerning my going vnto Dunnington caſtle, I doo remember that maiſter Hobbie and mine officers and you ſir Iames Acroft, had ſuch talke: but what is that to the purpoſe, my lords, but that I may go to mine owne houſes at all times?

The friendlie ſpeach of the earle of Arundell to the ladie Eliſabeth.

Sir Iames Acroft examined touching the ladie Eliſabeth.

The lord of Arundell knéeling downe, ſaid: Your grace ſaith true, & certeinlie we are verie ſorie that we haue ſo troubled you about ſo vaine matters. She then ſaid: My lords, you doo ſift me verie narrowlie, but well I am aſſured, you ſhall not doo more to me than God hath appointed, and ſo God forgiue you all. At their departure, ſir Iames Acroft knéeled down, declaring that he was ſorie to ſée the daie in which he ſhould be brought as a witneſſe againſt hir grace. But I aſſure your grace (ſaid he) I haue béene maruellouſlie toſſed and examined touching your highneſſe, which the lord knoweth is verie ſtrange to me. For I take God to record before all your honors, I doo not know anie thing of that crime that you haue laid to my charge, and will thervpon take my death, if I ſhould be driuen to ſo ſtrict a triall.

Theſe were not officers of the tower, but ſuch as went in white and gréene.

Ladie Eliſabeths ſeruants reſtreined for bringing hir diet to the tower.

That daie, or thereabouts, diuerſe of hir owne officers, who had made prouiſion for hir diet, brought the ſame to the vtter gate of the tower, the common raſcall ſouldiers receiuing it: which was no ſmall gréefe vnto the gentlemen the bringers thereof. Wherfore they required to ſpeake with the lord chamberleine, being then conſtable of the tower. Who comming before his preſence, declared vnto his lordſhip, that they were much afraid to bring hir graces diet, and to deliuer it to ſuch common and deſperat perſons as they were which did receiue it: beſéeching his honor to conſider hir grace, and to giue ſuch order, that hir viands might at all times bée brought in by them which were appointed therevnto. Yea ſirs (ſaid he) who appointed you this office? They anſwered, Hir graces councell. Councell (quoth he?) There is none of them which hath to doo, either in that caſe, or anie thing elſe within this place: and I aſſure you, for that ſhe is a priſoner, ſhe ſhall be ſerued with the lieutenants men, as other the priſoners are. Whereat the gentlemen ſaid, that they truſted for more fauor at his hands, conſidering hir perſonage, ſaieng; that they miſtruſted not, but that the quéene and hir councell would be better to hir grace than ſo, and therewith ſhewed themſelues to be offended at the vngratefull words of the lord chamberleine towards their ladie and miſtreſſe.

Diſpleaſure betwéene the lord chamberleine and ladie Eliſabeths men.

At this he ſware by God, ſtriking himſelfe vpon the breaſt, that if they did either frowne or ſhrug at him, he would ſet them where they ſhould neither ſée ſunne nor moone. Thus taking their leaue, they deſired God to bring him in a better mind towards hir grace, and ſo departed from him. Vpon the occaſion whereof, hir graces officers made great ſute vnto the quéenes councell, that ſome might be appointed to bring hir diet to hir, & that it might no more be deliuered in to the common ſoldiers of the tower. Which being reaſonablie conſidered, was by them granted. Wherevpon were appointed one of hir gentlemen, hir clearke of hir kitchin, and hir two purueiors to bring in hir prouiſion once a day; all which was done the warders euer waiting vpon the bringers thereof. The lord chamberleine himſelfe being alwaies with them, circumſpectlie and narrowlie watched, and ſearched what they brought: and gaue héed that they ſhould haue no talke with anie of hir graces waiting ſeruants, and ſo warded them both in and out. At the ſaid ſute of hir officers were ſent by the commandement of the councell, to wait vpon hir grace, two yeomen of hir chamber, one of hir robes, two of hir pantrie and ewrie, one of hir buttrie, another of hir cellar, two of hir kitchin, and one of hir larder, all which continued with hir the time of hir trouble.

Ladie Eliſabeths waitingmen in the tower.

Variance betwéene the lord chamberleine & ladie Eliſabeths ſeruants.

Here the coneſtable, being at the firſt not verie well pleaſed with the comming in of ſuch a companie againſt his will, would haue had his men ſtill to haue ſerued with hir graces men. Which hir ſeruants at no hand would ſuffer, deſiring his lordſhip to be contented; for that order was taken, that no ſtranger ſhould come within their offices. At which anſwer being ſore diſpleaſed, he brake out into theſe threatning words: Well (ſaid he) I will handle you well inough. Then went he into the kitchin, and there would néeds haue his meat roſted with hir graces meat, & ſaid that his cooke ſhould come thither and dreſſe it. To that hir graces cooke anſwered; My lord, I will neuer ſuffer anie ſtranger to come about hir diet, but hir owne ſworne men, ſo long as I liue. He ſaid they ſhuld. But the cooke ſaid, his lordſhip ſhould pardon him for that matter. Thus did he trouble hir poore ſeruants verie ſtoutlie: though afterwards he were otherwiſe aduiſed, and they more courteouſlie vſed at his hands. And good cauſe why, for he had good cheare, and fared of the beſt; and hir grace paied well for it. Wherefore he vſed himſelfe afterwards more reuerentlie toward hir grace.

After this ſort, hauing lien a whole moneth there in cloſe priſon, and being verie euill at eaſe therwithall, ſhe ſent for the lord chamberleine, and the lord

Shandois,

Ladie Eliſabeth denied the libertie of the tower.

Shandois to come and ſpeake with hir. Who comming, ſhe requeſted them that ſhe might haue libertie to walke in ſome place, for that ſhe felt hirſelfe not well. To the which they anſwered, that they were right ſorie that they could not ſatiſfie hir graces requeſt, for that they had commandement to the contrarie, which they durſt not in anie wiſe breake. Furthermore, ſhe deſired of them, if that could not bée granted, that ſhe might walke but into the quéenes lodging. No nor yet that (they anſwered) could by anie meanes be obteined without a further ſute to the quéene and hir councell. Well (ſaid ſhe) my lords, if the matter be ſo hard that they muſt be ſued vnto for ſo ſmall a thing, and that friendſhip be ſo ſtrict, God comfort me: and ſo they departed, ſhe remaining in hir old dungeon ſtill, without anie kind of comfort but onelie God.

The next daie after, the lord Shandois came againe vnto hir grace, declaring vnto hir that he had ſued vnto the councell for further libertie. Some of them conſented thereunto, diuerſe other diſſented, for that there were ſo manie priſoners in the tower. But in concluſion they did all agrée, that hir grace might walke into thoſe lodgings, ſo that he & the lord chamberleine, and thrée of the quéenes gentlewomen did accompanie hir, the windowes being ſhut, and ſhée not ſuffered to looke out at anie of them: wherewith ſhe contented hirſelfe, and gaue him thanks for his good will in that behalfe. Afterwards there was libertie granted to hir grace to walke in a little garden, the doores and gates being ſhut vp, which notwithſtanding was as much diſcomfort vnto hir, as the walke in the garden was pleaſant and acceptable. At which times of hir walking there, the priſoners on that ſide ſtrictlie were commanded not to ſpeake or looke out at the windows into the garden, till hir grace were gone out againe, hauing in conſideration thereof, their keepers waiting vpon them for that time. Thus hir grace with this ſmall libertie contented hir ſelfe in God, to whome be praiſe therefore.

Libertie granted to ladie Eliſabeth to walke in a little garden.

Suſpicious heads.

A yoong child examined for bringing flowers to the ladie Eliſabeth.

During this time, there vſed a little boie, a mans child in the tower to reſort vnto their chambers, and manie times to bring hir grace flowers, which likewiſe hée did to the other priſoners that were there. Wherevpon naughtie and ſuſpicious heads thinking to make and wring out ſome matter thereof, called on a time the child vnto them, promiſing him figs and apples, and aſked of him when he had béene with the earle of Deuonſhire, not ignorant of the childs wonted frequenting vnto him? The boy anſwered that he would go by and by thither. Further they demanded of him, when he was with the ladie Eliſabeths grace? He anſwered: Euerie daie. Furthermore they examined him, what the lord of Deuonſhire ſent by him to hir grace? The child ſaid: I will go know what he will giue to carie to hir. Such was the diſcretion of the child, being yet but foure yeares of age. This ſame is a craftie boy, quoth the lord chamberleine, how ſaie you my lord Shandois? I praie you my lord (quoth the boy) giue me the figs you promiſed me. No marie (quoth he) thou ſhalt be whipped if thou come anie more to the ladie Eliſabeth, or the lord Courtneie. The boy anſwered: I will bring my ladie and miſtreſſe more flowers. Whervpon the childs father was commanded to permit the boy no more to come vp into their chambers.

The next daie, as hir grace was walking in the garden, the child péeping in at a hole in the doore, cried vnto hir, ſaieng: Miſtreſſe, I can bring you no more flowers. Whereat ſhe ſmiled, but ſaid nothing, vnderſtanding thereby what they had doone. Wherefore afterwards the chamberleine rebuked highlie his father, commanding him to put him out of the houſe. Alas poore infant, quoth the father. It is a craftie knaue (quoth the lord chamberleine) let me ſée him here no more. The fift of Maie the coneſtable was diſcharged of his office of the tower, & one ſir Henrie Benefield placed in his roome, a man vnknowne to hir grace, and therefore the more feared: which ſo ſudden mutation was vnto hir no little amaze. He brought with him an hundred ſoldiors in blew cotes, wherewith ſhe was maruellouſlie diſcomforted, and demanded of ſuch as were about hir, whether the ladie Ianes ſcaffold were taken awaie or no, fearing by reaſon of their comming, leaſt ſhe ſhould haue plaied hir part. To whome anſwer was made, that the ſcaffold was taken awaie, and that hir grace néeded not to doubt of anie ſuch tyrannie: for God would not ſuffer anie ſuch treaſon againſt hir perſon. Wherewith being contented, but not altogither ſatiſfied, ſhe aſked what ſir Henrie Benefield was, and whether he was of that conſcience or no, that if hir murthering were ſecretlie committed to his charge, he would ſée the execution thereof? She was anſwered, that they were ignorant what maner of man he was. Howbeit they perſuaded hir that God would not ſuffer ſuch wickedneſſe to procéed? Well, quoth ſhe, God grant it be ſo. For thou O God canſt mollifie all ſuch tyrannous hearts, and diſappoint all ſuch cruell purpoſes: and I beſéech thée to heare me thy creature, which am thy ſeruant, and at thy commandement, truſting by thy grace euer ſo to remaine.

About which time it was ſpread abroad, that hir grace ſhould be caried from thenſe by this new iollie capteine and his ſouldiors: but whither, it could not be learned. Which was vnto hir a great griefe, eſpeciallie for that ſuch a companie was appointed to hir gard, requeſting rather to continue there ſtill, than to be led thenſe with ſuch a ſort of raſcals. At laſt plaine anſwer was made by the lord Shandois, that there was no remedie, but from thenſe ſhe muſt néeds depart to the manour of Woodſtocke, as he thought. Being demanded of hir for what cauſe? For that (quoth he) the tower is like further to be furniſhed. She being deſirous to know what he meant thereby, demanded wherewith? He anſwered, with ſuch matter as the quéene and councell were determined in that behalfe, wherof he had no knowledge: and ſo departed. In concluſion, on Trinitie ſundaie being the ninetéenth daie of Maie, ſhe was remoued from the tower, the lord treaſuror being then there for the lading of hir carts, and diſcharging the place of the ſame. Where ſir Henrie Benefield (being appointed hir gailor) did receiue hir with a companie of rakehels to gard hir, beſide the lord of Darbies band, waiting in the countrie about for the mooneſhine in the water. Vnto whome at length came my lord of Tame, ioined in commiſſion with the ſaid ſir Henrie, for the ſafe guiding of hir to priſon: and they togither conueied hir grace to Woodſtocke, as hereafter followeth. The firſt daie they conducted hir to Richmond, where ſhe continued all night, being reſtreined of hir owne men, which were lodged in outchambers, and ſir Henrie Benefields ſouldiors appointed in their roomes to giue attendance on hir perſon. Whereat ſhe being maruellouſlie diſmaied, thinking verelie ſome ſecret miſchiefe to be a working towards hir, called hir gentleman vſher, and deſired him, with the reſt of his companie, to praie for hir. For this night (quoth ſhe) I thinke to die. Wherewith he being ſtricken to the heart, ſaid: God forbid that anie ſuch wickedneſſe ſhould be pretended againſt your grace. So comforting hir as well as he could, at laſt he burſt out into teares, & went from hir downe into the court, where were walking the lord of Tame and ſir Henrie Beneſield.

Then he comming to the lord of Tame (who had proffered to him much friendſhip) deſired to ſpeake with him a word or two. Vnto whome he familiarlie ſaid, he ſhould with all his heart. Which when ſir Henrie ſtanding by heard, he aſked what the matter was: To whome the gentleman vſher anſwered: No great matter ſir (ſaid he) but to ſpeake with my lord a word or two. Then when the lord of Tame came to him, he ſpake on this wiſe: My lord (quoth he) you haue beene alwaies my good lord, and ſo I beſeech you to remaine. The cauſe why I come to you at this time, is to deſire your honor, vnfeinedlie to declare vnto me whether anie danger is meant towards my miſtreſſe this night, or no, that I and my poore fellows may take ſuch part as ſhall pleaſe God to appoint: for certeinlie we will rather die, than ſhe ſhould ſecretlie and innocentlie miſcarie. Marie (ſaid the lord of Tame) God forbid that anie ſuch wicked purpoſe ſhould be wrought: and rather than it ſhould be ſo, I with my men are readie to die at hir foot alſo: and (ſo praiſed be God) they paſſed that dolfull night, with no little heauineſſe of heart. Afterwards paſſing ouer the water at Richmond, going towards Windſore, hir grace eſpied certeine of hir poore ſeruants ſtanding on the other ſide, which were verie deſirous to ſee hir. Whome when ſhe beheld, turning to one of hir men ſtanding by, ſhe ſaid; Yonder I ſee certeine of my men, go to them and ſay theſe words from me; Tanquam ouis.

The ladie Elizabeths vſher talketh with the lord of Tame.

Tanquam ouis, i. Like a ſheepe to the ſlaughter.

So ſhe paſſing forward to Windſore, was lodged there that night in the deane of Windſors houſe, a place more meet in deed for a prieſt than for a princeſſe. And from thenſe hir grace was garded and brought the next night to maiſter Dormers houſe, where much people ſtanding by the way, ſome preſented to hir one gift, and ſome another; ſo that ſir Henrie was greatlie moued therewith, and troubled the poore people verie ſore, for ſhewing their louing hearts in ſuch a maner, calling them rebels and traitors, with ſuch like vile words. Beſides, as ſhe paſſed thorough the villages, the townſmen rang the bels, as being ioyfull of hir comming, thinking verelie it had beene otherwiſe than it was indeed, as the ſequele proued after to the ſaid poore men. For immediatlie the ſaid ſir Henrie hearing the ſame, ſent his ſouldiors thither, who apprehended ſome of the ringers, ſetting them in the ſtocks, and otherwiſe vncourteouſlie miſuſing other ſome for their good wils.

Ladie Elizabeth honourablie receiued and beloued of the people.

On the morrow hir grace paſſing from maiſter Dormers (where was for the time of hir abode there a ſtrict watch kept) came to the lord of Tames houſe where ſhe laie all night, being verie princelie interteined, both of knights and ladies, gentlemen and gentlewomen. Wherat ſir Henrie Beneſield grunted, and was highlie offended, ſaieng vnto them, that they could not tell what they did, and were not able to anſwer to their doings in that behalfe; letting them to vnderſtand that ſhe was the queens maieſties priſoner, and no otherwiſe: aduiſing them therfore to take heed & beware of afterclaps. Whereunto the lord of Tame anſwered in this wiſe: that he was well aduiſed of his doings, being ioined in commiſſion as well as he, adding with warrant, that hir grace might ant ſhould in his houſe be merrie. The next daie as ſhe ſhould take hir iournie from Richmond towards Woodſtocke, the lord of Tame, with an other gentleman being at tables, plaieng, and dropping vie crownes, the ladie Elizabeth paſſing by, ſtaied & ſaid ſhe would ſee the game plaied out, which ſir Henrie Beneſield would ſcarſe permit. The game running long about, and they plaieng drop vie crownes; Come on ſaith he: I will tarie ſaith ſhe, and will ſee this game out.

After this, ſir Henrie went vp into a chamber, where was appointed for hir grace a chaire, two cuſhions, and a foot carpet verie faire and princelike, wherein preſumptuouſlie he ſat, and called one Barwike his man to pull off his boots. Which as ſoone as it was knowen among the ladies and gentles, euerie one muſed thereat, & laughed him to ſcorne, obſeruing his vndiſcreet maners in that behalfe, as they might verie well. When ſupper was doone, he called my lord, and willed him that all the gentlemen and ladies ſhould withdraw themſelues euerie one to his lodging, maruelling much that he would permit there ſuch a companie, conſidering ſo great a charge committed to him. Sir Henrie (quoth my lord) content your ſelfe, all ſhall be voided, your men and all. Nay my ſoldiors (quoth ſir Henrie) ſhall watch all night. The lord of Tame anſwered, It ſhall not need. Well ſaid he, Need or need not, they ſhall ſo doo: miſtruſting belike the companie, which God knoweth was without cauſe.

The next daie hir grace tooke hir iournie from thenſe to Woodſtocke, where ſhe was incloſed, as before in the tower of London, the ſouldiors garding and warding both within & without the wals, euerie daie to the number of three ſcore, and in the night without the wals fortie, during the time of hir impriſonment there. At length ſhe had gardens appointed for hir walke, which was verie comfortable to hir grace. But alwaies when ſhe did recreat hir ſelfe therein, the doores were faſt locked vp, in as ſtrict maner as they were in the tower, being at the leaſt fiue or ſix locks betweene hir lodging and hir walks: ſir Henrie himſelfe keeping the keies, and truſting no man therewith. Wherevpon ſhe called him hir gailor: and he kneeling downe, deſired hir grace not to call him ſo, for he was appointed there to be one of hir officers. From ſuch officers (quoth ſhe) good Lord deliuer me. And now by the way as digreſſing, or rather refreſhing the reader, if it be lawfull in ſo ſerious a ſtorie to recite a matter incident, & yet not impertinent to the ſame: occaſion heere moueth, or rather inforceth me to touch briefelie what happened in the ſame place and time by a certeine merie conceited man, being then about hir grace: who noting the ſtrict & ſtrange keeping of his ladie & miſtres by the ſaid ſir Henrie Beneſield, with ſo manie locks & doores, with ſuch watch and ward about hir, as was ſtrange and woonderfull, ſpied a goat in the ward where hir grace was. And whether to refreſh hir oppreſſed mind, or to notifie hir ſtrict handling by ſir Henrie, either elſe both; he tooke it vpon his necke, and followed hir grace therewith as ſhe was going into hir lodging. Which when ſhe ſaw, ſhe aſked him what he would doo with it, willing to let it alone. Vnto whome the ſaid partie anſwered: No by ſaint Marie (if it like your grace) will I not: for I can not tell whether he be one of the queens friends or no. I will carie him to ſir Henrie Beneſield (God willing) to know what he is. So leauing hir grace, he went with the goat on his necke, and caried it to ſir Henrie Beneſield. Who when he ſaw him comming with it, aſked him halfe angerlie what he had there. Vnto whome the partie anſwered, ſaieng: Sir (quoth he) I can not tell what he is, I pray you examine him, for I found him in the place where my ladies grace was walking, and what talke they had I can not tell. For I vnderſtand him not, but he ſhould ſeeme to me to be ſome ſtranger, & I thinke verelie a Welſhman, for he hath a white freeſe coat on his backe. And forſomuch as I being the queens ſubiect, and perceiuing the ſtrict charge committed to you of hir keeping, that no ſtranger ſhould haue acceſſe to hir without ſufficiſufficient licence, I haue here found a ſtranger (what he is I can not tell) in place where hir grace was walking: and therefore for the neceſſarie diſcharge of my dutie, I thought it good to bring the ſaid ſtranger to you, to examine as you ſee cauſe: and ſo he ſet him downe. At which his words ſir Henrie ſeemed much diſpleaſed, and ſaid: Well, well, you will neuer leaue this geare I ſee: and ſo they departed.

A merie ſtorie concerning the ſtrict keeping of the ladie Elizabeth.

The ſtrictnes of ſir Henrie Beneſield merilie noted.

Now to returne to the matter from whence we haue digreſſed. After hir grace had bene there a time ſhe made ſute to the councell that ſhe might be ſuffered to write to the queene, which at laſt was permitted. So that ſir Henrie Beneſield brought hir pen, inke, and paper; and ſtanding by hir while ſhe wrote (which he ſtrictlie obſerued) alwaies ſhe being wearie, he would carie awaie hir letters, and bring them againe when ſhe called for them. In the finiſhing therof, he would haue beene meſſenger to the queene of the ſame. Whoſe requeſt hir grace denied, ſaieng one of hir owne men ſhould carie them, and that ſhe would neither truſt him nor none of his therein. Then he anſwering againe ſaid; None of them durſt be ſo bold (he trowed) to carie hir letters, being in that caſe. Yes (quoth ſhe) I am aſſured I haue none ſo diſhoneſt that would denie my requeſt in that behalfe, but will be as willing to ſerue me now as before. Well (ſaid he) my commiſſion is to the contrarie, and I maie not ſo ſuffer it. Hir grace replieng againe ſaid; You charge me verie often with your commiſſion, I praie God you maie iuſtlie anſwer the cruell dealing you vſe towards me.

The cruell dealing of ſir Henrie Beneſield to the ladie Elizabeth reproued.

Then he kneeling downe, deſired hir grace to thinke and conſider how he was a ſeruant, and put in truſt there by the queene to ſerue hir maieſtie, proteſting that if the caſe were hirs, he would as willinglie ſerue hir grace, as now he did the queenes highneſſe. For the which his anſwer hir grace thanked him, deſiring God that ſhe might neuer haue need of ſuch ſeruants as he was; declaring further to him, that his doings towards hir were not good nor anſwerable, but more than all the friends he had would ſtand by. To whom ſir Henrie replied & ſaid, that there was no remedie but his doings muſt be anſwered, and ſo they ſhould, truſting to make good account thereof. The cauſe which moued hir grace ſo to ſaie, was for that he would not permit hir letters to be caried foure or fiue daies after the writing thereof. But in fine he was content to ſend for hir gentleman from the towne of Woodſtocke, demanding of him whether he durſt enterpriſe the cariage of hir graces letters to the queene or no. And he anſwered; Yea ſir, that I dare, and will with all my hart. Whervpon ſir Henrie halfe againſt his ſtomach tooke them vnto him. Then about the eight of Iune came downe doctor Owen & doctor Wendie, ſent by the queene to hir grace, for that ſhe was ſickelie; who miniſtring to hir, and letting hir bloud, tarried there and attended on hir grace fiue or ſix daies. Then ſhe being well amended, they returned againe to the court, making their good report to the queene and the councell of hir graces behauior and humbleneſſe towards the queenes highneſſe. Which hir maieſtie hearing, tooke verie thankfullie: but the biſhops thereat repined, looked blacke in the mouth, and told the queene, they marueiled that ſhe ſubmitted not hir ſelfe to hir maieſties mercie, conſidering that ſhe had offended hir highneſſe.

About this time hir grace was requeſted by a ſecret friend, to ſubmit hir ſelfe to the queenes maieſtie, which would be verie well taken, and to hir great quiet and commoditie. Vnto whome ſhe anſwered, that ſhe would neuer ſubmit hir ſelfe to them whome ſhe neuer offended. For (quoth ſhee) if I haue offended and am guiltie, I then craue no mercie, but the law, which I am certeine (quoth ſhe) I ſhould haue had yer this, if it could be prooued by me. For I know my ſelfe (I thanke God) to be out of the danger thereof, wiſhing that I were as cleare out of the perill of mine enimies, & then I am aſſured I ſhould not ſo be locked and bolted vp within wals and doores as I am. God giue them a better mind when it pleaſeth him. About this time was there a great conſulting among the biſhops and gentlemen touching a marriage for hir grace, which ſome of the Spaniards wiſhed to be with ſome ſtranger, that ſhe might go out of the realme with hir portion; ſome ſaieng one thing, and ſome another.

Ladie Elizabeth requeſted to ſubmit hir ſelfe to the queene.

Counſell of the papiſts to marrie the ladie Elizabeth to a Spaniard.

A lord (who ſhall be here nameleſſe) being there at laſt ſaid, that the king ſhould neuer haue anie quiet common wealth in England, vnleſſe hir head were ſtricken from the ſhoulders. Whervnto the Spaniards anſwered ſaieng; God forbid that the king and maiſter ſhould haue that mind to conſent to ſuch a miſcheefe. This was the courteous anſwer of the Spaniards to the Engliſhmen, ſpeaking after that ſort againſt their owne countrie. From that daie the Spaniards neuer left off their good perſuaſions to the king, that the like honor he ſhould neuer obteine, as he ſhould in deliuering the ladie Elizabeths grace out of priſon; whereby at length ſhe was happilie releaſed from the ſame. Here is a plaine and euident example of the good clemencie and nature of the king and his councellors towards hir grace (praiſed be God therefore) who moued their harts therein. Then hervpon ſhe was ſent for ſhortlie after to come to Hampton court.

But before hir remouing awaie from Woodſtocke, we will a little ſtaie to declare in what dangers hir life was during this time ſhe there remained. Firſt through fire, which began to kindle betweene the boords & ceeling vnder the chamber where ſhe laie, whether by a ſparke of fire, gotten into a cranie, or whether of purpoſe by ſome that meant hir no good, the Lord doth know. Neuertheleſſe a worſhipfull knight of Oxfordſhire, which was there ioined the ſame time with ſir Henrie Beneſield in keeping that ladie (who then tooke vp the boords and quenched the fire) verelie ſuppoſed it to be doone of purpoſe. Furthermore it is thought, and alſo affirmed (if it be true) of one Paule Penie a keeper of Woodſtocke, a notorious ruffian and a butcherlie wretch, that he was appointed to kill the ſaid ladie Elizabeth, who both ſaw the man being often in hir ſight, and alſo knew thereof.

Ladie Elizabeth in danger of killing.

Another time one of the priuie chamber, a great man about the queene, and chiefe darling of Stephan Gardiner, named maiſter Iames Baſſet came to Blandenbrige a mile from Woodſtocke, with twentie or thirtie priuie cotes, and ſent for ſir Henrie Beneſield to come and ſpeake with him. But as God would, which diſpoſed all things after the purpoſe of his owne will; ſo it happened, that a little before the ſaid ſir Henrie Beneſield was ſent for by poſt to the councell, leauing ſtrict word behind him with his brother, that no man whatſoeuer he were, though comming with a bill of the queenes hand, or anie other warrant, ſhould haue acceſſe to hir before his returne againe. By reaſon whereof it ſo fell out, that maiſter Beneſields brother comming to him at the bridge, would ſuffer him in no caſe approch in, who otherwiſe (as is ſuppoſed) was appointed violentlie to murther the innocent ladie. In the life of Stephan Gardiner we declared before, pag. 1787, how that the ladie Elizabeth, being in the tower, a writ came downe ſubſcribed with certeine hands of the councell for hir execution. Which if it were certeine (as it is reported) Wincheſter (no doubt) was deuiſer of that miſcheefous drift. And doubtleſſe the ſame

Another conſpiracie of murther againſt ladie Elizabeth.

Ladie Elizabeth preſerued by the lords prouidence from execution in the tower.

Achitophell had brought his impious purpoſe that day to paſſe, had not the fatherlie prouidence of almightie God (who is euer ſtronger than the diuell) ſtirred vp maſter Bridges lieutenant at that time of the tower, to come in haſt to the quéene, to giue certificat therof, & to know further hir conſent touching hir ſiſters death. Wherupon it folowed, that all that deuiſe was diſappointed, & Wincheſters diuelliſh platforme which he ſaid he had caſt, thorough the Lords great goodnes came to no effect. Where moreouer is to be noted, that during the priſonment of this ladie and princeſſe, one maiſter Edmund Tremaine was on the racke, and maiſter Smithwike, and diuerſe other in the tower were examined, and diuerſe offers made to them to accuſe the giltleſſe ladie, being in hir captiuitie. Howbeit all that notwithſtanding, no matter could be prooued by all examinations, as ſhe the ſame time lieng at Woodſtocke had certeine intelligence, by the meanes of one Iohn Gaier, who vnder a colorable pretenſe of a letter vnto miſtreſſe Cleue from hir father, was let in, and ſo gaue them ſecretlie to vnderſtand of all this matter. Whereupon the ladie Elizabeth at hir departing out from Woodſtocke, wrote theſe verſes with hir diamond in a glaſſe window verie legiblie as here followeth:

Wincheſters platforme ouerthrowne: wherof read before pa.1787

Verſes written by ladie Eliſabeth in the glaſſe window.

Much ſuſpected by me,
Nothing prooued can be:
Quoth Elizabeth priſoner.

And thus much touching the troubles of ladie Eliſabeth at Woodſtocke. Whereunto this is more to be added, that during the ſame time, the lord of Tame had labored to the quéene, and became ſuretie for hir, to haue hir from Woodſtocke to his houſe, and had obteined grant thereof. Whereupon preparation was made accordinglie, and all things readie in expectation of hir comming. But through the procurement either of maiſter Benefield, or by the dooing of Wincheſter hir mortall enimie, letters came ouer night to the contrarie: whereby hir iornie was ſtopped. Thus this worthie ladie oppreſſed with continuall ſorrow, could not be permitted to haue recourſe to anie friends ſhe had; but ſtill in the hands of hir enimies was left deſolate, and vtterlie deſtitute of all that might refreſh a dolfull hart, fraught full of terror and thraldome. Whereupon no maruell, if ſhe hearing vpon a time out of hir garden at Woodſtocke, a certeine milkmaid ſinging pleaſantlie, wiſhed hir ſelfe to be a milkemaid as ſhe was, ſaieng that hir caſe was better, and life more merier than was hirs in that ſtate as ſhe was.

Ladie Eliſabeth not ſuffered to come to the lord of Tames houſe.

Ladie Eliſabeth wiſheth hir ſelfe to be a milkemaid.

Now after theſe things thus declared, to procéed further where we left before, ſir Henrie Beneſield and his ſoldiors, with the lord of Tame, and ſir Raſe Chamberleine, garding and waiting vpon hir, the firſt night from Woodſtocke ſhe came to Ricot. In which iourneie ſuch a mightie wind did blow, that hir ſeruants were faine to hold downe hir clothes about hir: in ſo much that hir hood was twiſe or thriſe blowen from hir head. Whereupon ſhe deſirous to returne to a certeine gentlemans houſe there néere, could not be ſuffered by ſir Henrie Beneſield ſo to doo: but was conſtreined vnder an hedge to trim hir head as well as ſhe could. After this, the next night they iournied to maiſter Dormers, & ſo to Colbrooke, where ſhe laie all that night at the George: and by the waie comming to Colbrooke, certeine of hir graces gentlemen and yeomen met hir to the number of thrée ſcore, much to all their comforts, which had not ſéene hir grace of long ſeaſon before: notwithſtanding they were commanded in the quéenes name immediatlie to depart the towne, to both their and hir graces no little heauineſſe, who could not be ſuffered once to ſpeake with them. So that night all hir men were taken from hir ſauing hir gentleman vſher, thrée gentlewomen, two groomes, and one of hir wardrobe, the ſoldiors watching and warding about the houſe, and ſhe cloſe ſhut vp within hir priſon.

Ladie Eliſabeth remooued from Woodſtocke to Hampton court.

The next daie following, hir grace entred Hampton court on the backeſide, into the princes lodging, the doores being ſhut to hir: and ſhe garded with ſoldiors, as before, laie there a fortnight at the leaſt, yer euer anie had recourſe vnto hir. At length came the lord William Howard, who maruellous honourablie vſed hir grace. Wherat ſhe tooke much comfort, & requeſted him to be a meane that ſhe might ſpeake with ſome of the councell. To whome (not long after) came the biſhop of Wincheſter, the lord of Arundell, the lord of Shrewesburie, and ſecretarie Peter, who with great humilitie humbled themſelues vnto hir grace. She againe likewiſe ſaluting them, ſaid: My lords (quoth ſhe) I am glad to ſée you: for me thinke I haue béene kept a great while from you deſolatelie alone. Wherefore I would deſire you to be a meane to the king and quéenes maieſties, that I maie be deliuered from priſon, wherein I haue béene kept a long ſpace, as to you my lords it is not vnknowne.

Lord William Howard gentle and fauourable to ladie Eliſabeth.

When ſhe had ſpoken, Stephan Gardiner the biſhop of Wincheſter kneeled downe, and requeſted that ſhe would ſubmit hir ſelfe to the quéenes grace, and in ſo dooing he had no doubt but that hir maieſtie would be good vnto hir. She making anſwer that rather than ſhe would ſo doo, ſhe would lie in priſon all the daies of hir life, adding that ſhe craued no mercie at hir maieſties hand, but rather deſired the law, if euer ſhe did offend hir maieſtie in thought, word, or déed. And beſides this, in yéelding (quoth ſhe) I ſhould ſpeake againſt my ſelfe, and confeſſe my ſelfe to be an offendor, which neuer was towards hir maieſtie: by occaſion whereof the king and the quéene might euer hereafter conceiue of me an ill opinion: and therefore I ſaie my lords, it were better for me to lie in priſon for the truth, than to be abroad and ſuſpected of my prince. And ſo they departed, promiſing to declare hir meſſage to the quéene.

Ladie Eliſabeth requeſted by Wincheſter to ſubmit hir ſelfe to the quéenes mercie.

Ladie Eliſabeth ſtandeth to be tried by the law.

On the next daie the biſhop of Wincheſter came againe vnto hir grace, and knéeling downe, declared that the quéene maruelled that ſhe would ſo ſtoutlie vſe hir ſelfe, not confeſſing to haue offended: ſo that it ſhould ſéeme the quéenes maieſtie wrongfullie to haue impriſoned hir grace. Naie (quoth the ladie Eliſabeth) it pleaſeth hir to puniſh me as ſhe thinketh good. Well quoth Gardiner, hir maieſtie willeth me to tell you, that you muſt tell an other tale yer that you be ſet libertie. Hir grace anſwered, that ſhe had as léefe be in priſon with honeſtie and truth, as to be abroad ſuſpected of hir maieſtie: and this that I haue ſaid, I will (ſaid ſhe) ſtand vnto, for I will neuer béelie my ſelfe. Wincheſter againe knéeled downe and ſaid: Then your grace hath the vantage of me and other the lords for your long and wrong impriſonment. What vantage I haue (quoth ſhe) you know, taking God to record I ſéeke no vantage at your hands for your ſo dealing with me, but God forgiue you and me alſo. With that the reſt knéeled, deſiring hir grace that all might be forgotten, and ſo departed, ſhe being faſt locked vp againe. A ſeauen nights after, the quéene ſent for hir grace at ten of the clocke in the night to ſpeake with hir: for ſhe had not ſéene hir in two yeares before. Yet for all that ſhe was amazed at the ſudden ſending for, thinking it had béene worſe than afterwards it prooued, and deſired hir gentlemen and gentlewomen to praie for hir, for that ſhe could not tell whether euer ſhe ſhould ſée them againe or no.

Talke againe betwéene Wincheſter & ladie Eliſabeth.

Ladie Eliſabeth denied to confeſſe anie fault doone to the quéene.

Ladie Eliſabeth ſent for to the quéene.

Ladie Eliſabeth brought to the quéenes bedchamber.

At which time ſir Henrie Beneſield with miſtreſſe Clarencius comming in, hir grace was brought into the garden vnto a ſtaires foot that went into the quéenes lodging, hir graces gentlewomen waiting vpon hir, hir gentleman vſher and hir grooms going before with torches, where hir gentlemen and gentlewomen being commanded to ſtaie all ſauing one woman, miſtreſſe Clarencius conducted hir to the quéenes bedchamber where hir maieſtie was. At the ſight of whome hir grace knéeled downe, and deſired God to preſerue hir maieſtie, not miſtruſting but that ſhe ſhould trie hir ſelfe as true a ſubiect towards hir maieſtie, as euer did anie, and deſired hir maieſtie euen ſo to iudge of hir: and ſaid that ſhe ſhould not find hir to the contrarie, whatſoeuer report otherwiſe had gone of hir. To whome the quéene anſwered: You will not confeſſe your offenſe, but ſtand ſtoutlie to your truth: I praie God it maie ſo fall out. If it doth not, quoth the ladie Eliſabeth, I requeſt neither fauour nor pardon at your maieſties hands. Well ſaid the quéene, you ſtiflie ſtill perſeuere in your truth. Belike you will not confeſſe but that you haue béene wrongfullie puniſhed. I muſt not ſaie ſo (if it pleaſe your maieſtie) to you.

Talke betwéene the quéene and ladie Eliſabeth.

Why then (ſaid the quéene) belike you will to others. No, if it pleaſe your maieſtie (quoth ſhe) I haue borne the burthen, and muſt beare it; I humblie beſéech your maieſtie to haue a good opinion of me, and to thinke me to be your true ſubiect, not onelie from the beginning hitherto, but for euer, as long as life laſteth: and ſo they departed with verie few comfortable words of the quéene, in Engliſh: but what ſhe ſaid in Spaniſh, God knoweth. It is thought that king Philip was there behind a cloth, and not ſéene, and that he ſhewed himſelfe a verie friend in that matter, &c. Thus hir grace departing, went vnto hir lodging againe, and the ſeauenth night after was releaſed of ſir Henrie Benefield hir gailor (as ſhe tearmed him) and his ſoldiors, and ſo hir grace being ſet at libertie from impriſonment, went into the countrie, and had appointed to go with hir ſir Thomas pope, one of quéene Maries councellors, and one of hir gentlemen vſhers, maſter Gage, and thus ſtrictlie was ſhe looked vnto all quéene Maries time. And this is the diſcourſe of hir highneſſe impriſonment.

Small comfort at the quéenes hand toward hir ſiſter.

King Philip thought to be a friend to ladie Eliſabeth.

Ladie Eliſabeth by Gods prouidence ſet at libertie.

Sir Henrie Benefield diſcharged.

Then there came to Lambeire, maſter Gerningham, and maſter Norris gentleman vſher, quéene Maries men, who tooke awaie from hir grace miſtreſſe Aſhleie to the Fléet, and thrée other of hir gentlewomen to the tower: which thing was no little trouble to hir grace, ſaieng: that ſhe thought they would fetch all awaie at the end. But God be praiſed, ſhortlie after was fetched awaie Gardiner thorough the mercifull prouidence of the Lords goodneſſe, by occaſion of whoſe opportune deceaſſe (as is partlie touched in this ſtorie before, pag. 1705) the life of this excellent princeſſe, the wealth of all England, was preſerued. For this is credible to be ſuppoſed, that the ſaid wicked Gardiner of Wincheſter had long laboured his wits, and to this onelie moſt principall marke bent all his deuiſes, to bring this ſo happie and déere ſoueraigne out of the waie, as both by his words and doings before notified maie ſufficientlie appeare.

Miſtreſſe Aſhleie ſent to the Fléet.

Thrée gentlewomen of ladie Eliſabeths ſent to the tower.

Note the wonderfull working of the Lords prouidence in ſauing of ladie Eliſabeth.

Ladie Eliſabeth deliuered by the death of Stephan Gardiner.

But ſuch was the gratious and fauourable prouidence of the Lord, to the preſeruation not onlie of hir roiall maieſtie, but alſo the miſerable and wofull ſtate of this whole Iland, and poore ſubiects of the ſame, whereby the proud platforms and péeuiſh practiſes of this wretched Achitophell preuailed not: but contrariwiſe, both he, and all the ſnares and traps of his pernicious counſell laid againſt an other, were turned to a net to catch himſelfe, according to the prouerbe: Malum conſilium conſultori peſſimum. After the death of this Gardiner, followed the death alſo and dropping awaie of other hir enimies, whereby by little and little hir ieopardie decreaſed, feare diminiſhed, hope of comfort began to appeare as out of a darke cloud. And albeit as yet hir grace had no full aſſurance of perfect ſafetie, yet more gentle interteinment dailie did grow vnto hir, till at length to the moneth of Nouember, and ſeauentéenth daie of the ſame, thrée yeares after the death of Stephan Gardiner, followed the death of quéene Marie, as heretofore at large hath béene trulie declared. Although this hiſtorie following be not directlie perteining to the former matter, yet the ſame maie here not vnaptlie be inſerted, for that it doth diſcouer and ſhew forth the malicious hearts of the papiſts towards this vertuous quéene our ſoueraigne ladie in the time of quéene Marie hir ſiſter, which is reported as a truth credible told by ſundrie honeſt perſons, of whome ſome are yet aliue, and doo teſtifie the ſame. The matter whereof is this.

How the Lord here began to worke for ladie Eliſabeth.

A note of a ſtorie declaring the malignant hart of the papiſts towards ladie Eliſabeth.

Soone after the ſtirre of Wiat and the troubles that happened to this quéene for that cauſe: it fortuned one Robert Farrer a haberdaſher of London, dwelling néere vnto Newgate market, in a certeine morning to be at the Roſe tauerne (from whence he was ſeldome abſent) and falling to his common drinke, as he was euer accuſtomed, and hauing in his companie thrée other companions like vnto himſelfe, it chanced the ſame time one Laurence Shiriffe grocer, dwelling alſo not farre from thence, to come into the ſaid tauerne, and finding there the ſaid Farrer (to whome of long time he had borne good will) ſat downe in the ſeat to drinke with him, and Farrer hauing in his full cups, and not hauing conſideration who were preſent began to talke at large, and namelie againſt the ladie Eliſabeth, and ſaid: That gill hath béene one of the chiefe doers of this rebellion of Wiat, and before all be doone, ſhe and all the heretikes hir partakers ſhall well vnderſtand of it. Some of them hope that ſhe ſhall haue the crowne, but ſhe and they (I truſt) that ſo hope, ſhall hop headleſſe, or be fried with fagots before ſhe come to it.

Robert Farrer of London a ſore enimie to ladie Eliſabeth.

Laurence Shiriffe, ſworne friend and ſeruant to ladie Eliſabeth his miſtreſſe.

Robert Farrer raileth againſt ladie Eliſabeth.

The aforeſaid Laurence Shiriffe grocer, being then ſeruant vnto the ſaid ladie Eliſabeth, & ſworne vnto hir grace, could no longer forbeare his old acquaintance and neighbor Farrer in ſpeaking ſo vnreuerentlie of his miſtreſſe, but ſaid to him: Farrer, I haue loued thée as a neighbour, and haue had a good opinion of thée, but hearing of thée that I now heare, I defie thée: and I tell thée I am hir graces ſworne ſeruant, and ſhe is a princeſſe, and the daughter of a noble king, and it euill becommeth thée to call hir a gill, and for thy ſo ſaieng, I ſaie thou art a knaue, & I will complaine vpon thée. Doo thy worſt ſaid Farrer, for that I ſaid, I will ſaie againe: and ſo Shiriffe came from his companie. Shortlie after, the ſaid Shiriffe taking an honeſt neighbour with him, went before the commiſſioners to complaine: the which commiſſioners ſat then at Boner the biſhop of Londons houſe beſide Pauls, and there were preſent Boner then being the chiefe commiſſioner, the lord Mordant, ſir Iohn Baker, doctor Derbiſhire chancellor to the biſhop, doctor *Storie, doctor Harpſfield, and others. The aforeſaid Shiriffe comming before them, declared the maner of the ſaid Robert Farrers talke againſt the ladie Eliſabeth. Boner anſwered, Peraduenture you tooke him worſe than he meant. Yea my lord (ſaid doctor Storie) if you knew the man as I doo, you would ſaie that there is not a better catholike, nor an honeſter man in the citie of London.

The part of a good truſtie ſeruant.

Robert Farrer complained of to the commiſſioners, but no redreſſe [illegible] had.

* A knaue.

Well, ſaid Shiriffe, my lord, ſhe is my gratious ladie and miſtreſſe, and it is not to be ſuffered that ſuch a varlet as he is, ſhould call ſo honorable a princeſſe by the name of a gill: and I ſaw yeſterdaie in the court that my lord cardinall Poole méeting hir in the the chamber of preſence, kneeled downe on his knees and kiſſed hir hand: and I ſaw alſo that king Philip meeting hir, made hir ſuch obeiſance that his knee touched the ground: and then (me thinketh) it were too much to ſuffer ſuch a varlet as this is, to call hir gill, and to wiſh them to hop headleſſe that ſhall wiſh hir grace to inioie the poſſeſſion of the crowne when God ſhall ſend it vnto hir as in the right of hir inheritance. Yea! Staie there (quoth Boner.) When God ſendeth it vnto hir, let hir inioie it. But trulie (ſaid he) the man that ſpake the words that you haue reported, meant nothing againſt the ladie Eliſabeth your miſtreſſe, and no more doo we: but he like an honeſt and zealous man feared the alteration of religion, which euerie good man ought to feare: and therfore (ſaid Boner) good man go your waies home and report well of vs towards your miſtreſſe, and we will ſend for Farrer and rebuke him for his raſh and vndiſcreet words, and we truſt he will not doo the like againe. And thus Shiriffe came awaie, and Farrer had a flap with a fox taile. Now that ye maie be fullie informed of the aforeſaid Farrer, whome doctor Storie praiſed for ſo good a man, ye ſhall vnderſtand that the ſame Farrer, hauing two daughters, being handſome maidens, the elder of them for a ſumme of monie he himſelfe deliuered vnto ſir Richard Cholmleie to be at his commandement; the other he ſold to a knight called ſir William Goddolphin to be at his commandement: whome he made his lackie and ſo carried hir with him, being apparelled in mans apparell to Bullongne, and the ſaid Farrer followed the campe. He alſo was a great and a horrible blaſphemer of God, and a common accuſer of honeſt and quiet men, alſo a common drunkard. And now I referre the life of theſe catholiks to your iudgement, to thinke of them as you pleaſe.

How biſhop Boner and doctor Storie bear with him that railed againſt ladie Eliſabeth.

Note the vngodlie life of theſe catholikes.

But of this matter enough and too much. Now let vs returne where we left before, which was at the death of queene Marie. After whoſe deceaſſe ſucceeded hir foreſaid ſiſter ladie Eliſabeth into the right of the crowne of England: who after ſo long reſtreinement, ſo great dangers eſcaped, ſuch bluſterous ſtormes ouerblowne, ſo manie iniuries digeſted and wrongs ſuſteined by the mightie protection of our mercifull God, to our no ſmall comfort and commoditie, hath beene exalted and erected out of thrall to libertie, out of danger to peace and quietneſſe, from dread to dignitie, from miſerie to maieſtie, from mourning to ruling; brieflie, of a priſoner made a princeſſe, and placed in hir throne roiall, proclamed now queene, with as manie glad hearts of hir ſubiects, as euer was anie king or queene in this realme before hir, or euer ſhall be (I dare ſaie) hereafter. Touching whoſe floriſhing ſtate, hir princelie reigne and peaceable gouernement, with other things diuerſe and ſundrie incident to the ſame, and eſpeciallie touching the great ſtirres and alterations which haue happened in other forren nations, and alſo partlie among our ſelues here at home, forſomuch as the tractation hereof requireth an huge volume by it ſelfe, I ſhall therefore deferre the reader to the next booke or ſection inſuing: wherein (if the Lord ſo pleaſe to ſuſteine me with leaue and life) I maie haue to diſcourſe of all and ſingular ſuch matters doone and atchiued in theſe our latter daies and memorie, more at large.

Ladie Eliſabeth proclamed queene the ſame daie that queene Marie died.

The Lord make England thankefull to him for his great benefits.

He meaneth his owne worke; not this volume or anie part thereof.

Now then after theſe ſo great afflictions falling vpon this realme, from the firſt beginning of queene Maries reigne, wherein ſo manie men, women, and children were burned, manie impriſoned and in priſons ſtarued, diuerſe exiled, ſome ſpoiled of goods and poſſeſſions, a great number driuen from houſe to home, ſo manie weeping eies, ſo manie ſobbing harts, ſo manie children made fatherleſſe, ſo manie fathers bereft of their wiues and children, ſo manie vexed in conſcience, and diuerſe againſt conſcience conſtrained to recant; and in concluſion, neuer a good man almoſt in all the realme but ſuffered ſomething during all the time of this bloudie perſecution: after all this (I ſaie) now we are come at length (the Lord be praiſed) to the ſeuenteenth of Nouember, which daie as it brought to the perſecuted members of Chriſt, reſt from their carefull mourning, ſo it eaſeth me ſomewhat likewiſe of my laborious writing, by the death I meane of queene Marie, who being long ſicke before vpon the ſaid ſeuenteenth daie of Nouember, in the yeare aboue ſaid, about three or foure of the clocke in the morning, yeelded hir life to nature, and hir kingdome to queene Eliſabeth hir ſiſter.

Nouemb. 17. queene Marie endeth.

Queene Eliſabeth beginneth hir reigne.

As touching the maner of whoſe death, ſome ſaie that ſhe died of a timpanie, ſome by hir much ſighing before hir death ſuppoſed ſhe died of thought and ſorrow. Whereupon hir councell ſeeing hir ſighing, and deſirous to know the cauſe, to the end they might miniſter the more readie conſolation vnto hir, feared (as they ſaid) that ſhe tooke ſome thought for the kings maieſtie hir huſband, which was gone from hir. To whome ſhe anſwering againe; In deed (ſaid ſhe) that may be one cauſe, but that is not the greateſt wound that pearſeth mine oppreſſed mind: but what that was ſhe would not expreſſe to them. Albeit afterward ſhe opened the matter more plainlie to miſtreſſe Riſe and miſtreſſe Clarentius (if it be true that they told me, which heard it of miſtreſſe Riſe himſelfe) who then being moſt familiar with hir, and moſt bold about hir, told hir that they feared ſhe tooke thought for king Philips departing from hir. Not that onelie (ſaid ſhe) but when I am dead and opened, you ſhall find Calis lieng in my hart, &c. Which one ſuppoſing to be true, hath left this report:

*Hiſpani * oppidulo amiſſo contabuit vxor,*
Quam cruciatu ægro confecerat anxia cura.

The maner of queene Maries death.

Q. Marie tooke thought for the loſſe of Calis.

* Caleto.

And here an end of queene Marie, and of hir perſecution, during the time of hir miſgouernment. Of which queene this trulie may be affirmed and left in ſtorie for a perpetuall memoriall or epitaph for all kings and queenes that ſhall ſucceed hir to be noted, that before hir neuer was read in ſtorie of anie king or queene of England ſince the time of king Lucius, vnder whom in time of peace, by hanging, heading, burning, and priſoning: ſo much chriſtian bloud, ſo manie Engliſhmens liues were ſpilled within this realme, as vnder the ſaid queene Marie for the ſpace of foure yeares was to be ſeene, and I beſeech the Lord neuer may be ſeene hereafter.

More Engliſh bloud ſpilled in queene Maries time, than euer was in anie kings reigne before hir.

Now, for ſo much as queene Marie, during all the time of hir reigne, was ſuch a vehement aduerſarie and perſecutor againſt the ſincere profeſſors of Chriſt Ieſus and his goſpell: for the which there be manie which doo highlie magnifie and approue hir doings therein, reputing hir religion to be ſound and catholike, and hir proceedings to be moſt acceptable and bleſſed of almightie God: to the intent therfore that all men may vnderſtand, how the bleſſing of the Lord God did not onelie not proceed with hir proceedings; but contrarie, rather how his manifeſt diſpleaſure euer wrought againſt hir, in plaging both hir and hir realme, and in ſubuerting all hir counſels and attempts, what ſoeuer ſhe tooke in hand: we will beſtow a litle time therein, to perpend and ſurueie the whole courſe of hir doings and cheuances: and conſider what ſucceſſe ſhe had in the ſame. Which being well conſidered, we ſhall find neuer no reigne of anie prince in this land, or anie other, which had euer to ſhew in it (for the proportion of time) ſo manie arguments of Gods great wrath and diſpleaſure, as was to be ſeene in the reigne of this queene Marie,

The reigne of queene Marie how vnproſperous it was both to hir & hir realme in all reſpects.

Quéene Marie neuer had good ſucceſſe in anie thing ſhe went about.

whether we behold the ſhortneſſe of hir time, or the vnfortunate euent of all hir purpoſes? Who ſéemed neuer to purpoſe anie thing that came luckilie to paſſe, neither did anie thing frame to hir purpoſe, what ſoeuer ſhe tooke in hand touching hir owne priuat affaires.

A good king alwaies maketh a floriſhing realme.

Of good kings we read in the ſcripture, in ſhewing mercie and pitie, in ſéeking Gods will in his word, and ſubuerting the monuments of idolatrie, how God bleſſed their waies, increaſed their honors, and mightilie proſpered all their procéedings: as we ſée in king Dauid, Salomon, Joſias, Joſaphat, Ezechias, with ſuch others. Manaſſes made the ſtréets of Hieruſalem to ſwim with the bloud of his ſubiects, but what came of it the text doth teſtifie. Of quéene Eliſabeth, which now reigneth among vs, this we muſt néeds ſaie, which we ſée, that ſhe in ſparing the bloud, not onelie of Gods ſeruants, but alſo of Gods enimies, hath doubled now the reigne of quéene Marie hir ſiſter, with ſuch aboundance of peace and proſperitie, that it is hard to ſaie, whether the realme of England felt more of Gods wrath in quéene Maries time, or of Gods fauour and mercie in theſe ſo bleſſed and peaceable daies of quéene Eliſabeth.

Compariſon betwéene the reigne of Q. Marie and quéene Eliſabeth.

Gamaliels reaſon. Acts. 5.

Gamaliell ſpeaking his mind in the councell of the Phariſeis concerning Chriſtes religion, gaue this reaſon, that if it were of God, it ſhould continue, who ſoeuer ſaid naie: if it were not, it could not ſtand. So may it be ſaid of quéene Marie and hir Romiſh religion, that if it were ſo perfect and catholike as they pretend, and the contrarie faith of the goſpellers were ſo deteſtable and hereticall as they make it, how commeth it then, that this ſo catholike a quéene, ſuch a neceſſarie piller of his ſpouſe the church continued no longer, till ſhe had vtterlie rooted out of the land this hereticall generation? Yea how chanced it rather, that almightie God, to ſpare theſe poore heretikes, rooted out quéene Marie ſo ſoone from hir throne, after ſhe had reigned but onelie fiue yeares and fiue moneths?

Quéene Marie proſpered ſo long as ſhe went not againſt the Lord.

Q. Maries promiſe to the goſpellers broken.

Now furthermore, how God bleſſed hir waies and indeuors in the meane time, while ſhe thus perſecuted the true ſeruants of God, remaineth to be diſcuſſed. Where firſt this is to be noted, that when ſhe firſt began to ſtand for the title of the crowne, and yet had wrought no reſiſtance againſt Chriſt and his goſpell, but had promiſed hir faith to the Suffolke men, to mainteine the religion left by king Edward hir brother, ſo long God went with hir, aduanced hir, and by the means of the goſpellers brought hir to the poſſeſſion of the realme. But after that ſhe breaking hir promiſe with God and man, began to take part with Stephan Gardiner, and had giuen ouer hir ſupremaſie vnto the pope, by and by Gods bleſſing left hir, neither did anie thing well thriue with hir afterward during the whole time of hir regiment. For firſt incontinentlie the faireſt and greateſt ſhip ſhe had, called great Harrie, was burned: ſuch a veſſell as in all theſe parts of all Europe was not to be matched.

The ſhip called the great Harrie burned.

Q. Maries mariage with a ſtranger.

Q. Marie diſappointed of hir purpoſe in crowning king Philip.

Q. Marie ſtopped of hir will in reſtoring abbeie lands.

Then would ſhe néeds bring in king Philip, and by hir ſtrange marriage with him, make the whole realme of England ſubiect vnto a ſtranger. And all that notwithſtanding, either that ſhe did or was able to doo, ſhe could not bring to paſſe to ſet the crowne of England vpon his head. With king Philip alſo came in the pope and his popiſh maſſe: with whome alſo hir purpoſe was to reſtore againe the monks and nunnes vnto their places, neither lacked there all kind of attempts to the vttermoſt of hir abilitie: and yet therein alſo God ſtopt hir of hir will, that it came not forward. After this, what a dearth happened in hir time here in hir land, the like wherof hath not lightlie in England béene ſéene, in ſo much that in ſundrie places hir poore ſubiects were faine to féed of acorns for want of corne?

The victorie of king Edward the ſixt in Scotland.

The ill lucke of Q. Marie in loſing of Calis.

The eleuenth king from the conqueſt got Calis, and the eleuenth againe after him loſt it.

Furthermore, where other kings are woont to be renowmed by ſome worthie victorie and proweſſe by them atchiued, let vs now ſée what valiant victorie was gotten in quéene Maries daies. King Edward the ſixt hir bleſſed brother, how manie rebellions did he ſuppreſſe in Deuonſhire, in Norffolke, in Oxfordſhire, and elſe where? What a famous victorie in his time was gotten in Scotland, by the ſingular working (no doubt) of Gods bleſſed hand rather than by anie expectation of man? King Edward the third (which was the eleuenth king from the conqueſt) by princelie puiſſance purchaſed Calis vnto England, which hath béene kept Engliſh euer ſince, till at length came quéene Marie, the eleuenth likewiſe from the ſaid king Edward, which loſt Calis from England againe: ſo that the winnings of this quéene were verie ſmall; what the loſſes were, let other men iudge.

The ill lucke of quéene Marie in hir childbirth.

Hitherto the affaires of quéene Marie haue had no great good ſucceſſe, as you haue heard. But neuer worſſe ſucceſſe had anie woman, than had ſhe in hir childbirth. For ſéeing one of theſe two muſt néeds be granted, that either ſhe was with child or not with child; if ſhe were with child and did trauell, why was it not ſéene? if ſhe were not, how was all the realme deluded? And in thē meane while where were all the praiers, the ſolemne proceſſions, the deuout maſſes of the catholike cleargie? Why did they not preuaile with God, if their religion were ſo godlie as they pretended? If their maſſes Ex opere operato be able to fetch Chriſt from heauen, & to reach downe to purgatorie, how chanced then they could not reach to the quéens chamber, to helpe hir in hir trauell, if ſhe had béene with child in déed? If not, how then came it to paſſe, that all the catholike church of England did ſo erre, and was ſo déepelie deceiued? Quéene Marie, after theſe manifold plagues and corrections, which might ſufficientlie admoniſh hir of Gods diſfauor prouoked againſt hir, would not yet ceaſſe hir perſecution, but ſtill continued more & more to reuenge hir catholike zeale vpon the lords faithfull people, ſetting fire to their poore bodies by dozens & halfe dozens togither. Whereupon Gods wrathfull indignation increaſing more and more againſt hir, ceaſſed not to touch hir more neare with priuat miſfortunes and calamities.

Q. Marie left deſolate of K. Philip hir huſband.

The ill lucke of Q. Marie with hir huſband.

For after that he had taken from hir the fruit of children (which chieflie and aboue all things ſhe deſired) then he beréeft hir of that, which of all earthlie things ſhould haue béene hir chiefe ſtaie of honour, and ſtaffe of comfort; that is, withdrew from hir the affection and companie euen of hir owne huſband, by whoſe mariage ſhe had promiſed before to hirſelfe whole heapes of ſuch ioy and felicitie. But now the omnipotent gouernour of all things, ſo turned the whéele of hir owne ſpinning againſt hir, that hir high buildings of ſuch ioies and felicities came all to a caſtell come downe, hir hopes being confounded, hir purpoſes diſappointed, and ſhe now brought to deſolation: who ſéemed neither to haue the fauour of God, nor the hearts of hir ſubiects, nor yet the loue of hir huſband: who neither had fruit by him while ſhée had him, neither could now inioy him whome ſhe had maried, neither yet was in libertie to marrie anie other whome ſhe might inioy. Marke here (chriſtian reader) the wofull aduerſitie of this quéene, & learne withall, what the Lord can doo when mans wilfulnes will néeds reſiſt him, and will not be ruled.

The finall end and death of Q. Marie.

At laſt, when all theſe faire admonitions would take no place with the quéene, nor moue hir to reuoke hir bloudie lawes, nor to ſtaie the tyrannie of hir prieſts, nor yet to ſpare hir owne ſubiects; but that the poore ſeruants of God were drawne dailie by heapes moſt pittifullie as ſheepe to the ſlaughter, it ſo pleaſed the heauenlie maieſtie of almightie God, when no other remedie would ſerue, by death to cut hir off, which in hir life ſo little regarded the life of others: giuing hir throne, which ſhe abuſed to the deſtruction of Chriſts church and people, to another, who more temperatlie and quietlie could guide the ſame, after ſhe had reigned heere the ſpace of fiue yeares and fiue moneths. The ſhortneſſe of which yeares and reigne, vneth we find in anie other ſtorie of king or quéene ſince the conqueſt or before (being come to their owne gouernement) ſaue onelie in king Richard the third. Which reigne was ſo rough and rigorous, notwithſtanding the ſhortneſſe of the ſame, that it became a verie ſpectacle to all chriſtendome; and the maner of dealing vſed vnder hir gouernment was ſo deteſtable, that as it was rare, ſo it raiſed vp a rare report, euen among ſtrangers, whoſe heads being fuller of matter than their pens full of inke, wrote in tearmes brode inough of the tumults and ſlaughters happening in hir vnhappie daies: among whome I will ſet downe for a ſaie a few verſes drawne out of an hundred and od, preſented to Henrie the French king of that name the ſecond, touching the conqueſt of Calis, whereat for ioy the French were rauiſhed. Thus therefore he ſaith:

Q. Marie reigned fiue yeares & fiue moneths.

Theſe ſhort verſes were thus ſubſcribed. La. B. Te.

And thus much here, as in the cloſing vp of this ſtorie, I thought to inſinuat, touching the vnluckie and rufull reigne of quéene Marie: not for anie detraction to hir place and ſtate roiall, whereunto ſhe was called of the Lord: but to this onlie intent and effect, that forſomuch as ſhe would néeds ſet hirſelfe ſo confidentlie to worke and ſtriue againſt the Lord and his procéedings, all readers and rulers not onelie maie ſée how the Lord did worke againſt hir therfore, but alſo by hir maie b[illegible]aduertiſed and learne what a perillous thing it is for men and women in authoritie, vpon blind zeale and opinion, to ſtirre vp perſecution in Chriſts church, to the effuſion of chriſtian bloud, leaſt it proue in the end with them (as it did here) that while they thinke to perſecute here[illegible], they ſtumble at the ſame ſtone as did the Iew[illegible]s in perſecuting Chriſt and his true members to de[illegible], to their owne confuſion and deſtruction.]

An admonition to all chriſtian rulers.

Le[illegible]ing quéene Marie being dead & gone, you are to vn[illegible]ſtand and note, that the ſame euening, or (as ſome [illegible] written) the next daie after the ſaid quéens [illegible]ath, Cardinall Poole the biſhop of Romes legat [illegible]parted out of this life, hauing béene not long afore [illegible]ade archbiſhop of Canturburie: he died at his [illegible]uſe ouer againſt Weſtminſter commonlie called Lambeth, and was buried in Chriſts church at Canturburie. This cardinall was deſcended of the noble houſe of Clarence, that is to ſaie, of one of the yonger ſonnes of Margaret counteſſe of Saliſburie, daughter of George duke of Clarence, brother to K. Edward the fourth. ¶ So that hereby you haue a proofe of the nobleneſſe of his birth, but how barbarous he was of behauiour, and how vnnaturall in the courſe of his life (which blemiſhed the honour of his deſcent) it maie appeare by the order and maner of his viſitation in Cambridge, with the condemning, taking vp, and burning both the bones and bookes of Bucer and Paulus Phagius, as alſo by the deſpitefull handling and madneſſe of the papiſts towards Peter Martyrs wife at Oxford, taken vp from hir graue at the commandement of the ſaid cardinall, and after buried in a dunghill: ſo that in his actions he ſhewed himſelfe (as he is noted) earneſt in burning the bodies of the dead. And for further teſtimonie of his crueltie, it ſhall not be impertinent out of maiſter Fox, here to adioine and ſet forth to the eies of the world, the blind and bloudie articles ſet out by cardinall Poole, to be inquired vpon within his dioces of Canturburie. Whereby it maie the better appeare what yokes and ſnares of fond and fruitleſſe traditions were laid vpon the poore flocke of Chriſt, to intangle and oppreſſe them with loſſe of life and libertie. By the which wiſe men haue to ſée what godlie fruits procéeded from that catholike church and ſée of Rome. In which albeit thou ſéeſt (good reader) ſome good articles inſparſed withall, let that nothing moue thée: for elſe how could ſuch poiſon be miniſtred, but it muſt haue ſome honie to reliſh the readers taſt?

Thus you ſee of what a malignant nature the cardinall was: neuertheleſſe, of more lenitie than manie other popelings, ſauoring of the like lewd leuen of antichriſtianiſme. For at what time two and twentie priſoners for their conſcience were apprehended and ſent vp all togither to London from Colcheſter (as maiſter Fox reporteth in his martyrologe) and conuented before Boner then biſhop of that ſée, the ſaid Boner himſelfe wrote to cardinall Poole concerning them, as you ſhall heare.

¶ A letter of biſhop Boner to cardinall Poole.

Biſhop Boners letter to cardinall Poole, concerning the two and twentie priſoners aforeſaid.

May it pleaſe your good grace with my moſt humble obedience, reuerence and dutie, to vnderſtand that going to London vpon thurſdaie laſt, and thinking to be troubled with maiſter Germains matter onelie, and ſuch other common matters as are accuſtomed, inough to werie a right ſtrong bodie, I had the daie following to comfort my ſtomach withall, letters from Colcheſter, that either that day, or the day following I ſhould haue ſent thenſe two and twentie heretikes, indicted before the commiſſioners, and in déed ſo I had, and compelled to beare their charges as I did of the other, which both ſtood me in aboue twentie nobles, a ſumme of monie that I thought full euill beſtowed. And theſe heretikes, notwithſtanding they had honeſt catholike kéepers to conduct and bring them vp to me, and in all the waie from Colcheſter to Stratford of the bow, did go quietlie, and obedientlie, yet comming to Stratford, they began to take heart of grace, & to doo as pleaſed themſelues, for there they began to haue their gard, which generallie increaſed till they came to Algate, where they were lodged fridaie night.

And albeit I tooke order, that the ſaid heretikes ſhould be with me verie earlie on ſaturdaie morning, to the intent they might quietlie come and be examined by me: yet it was betwéene ten and eleuen of the clocke before they would come, and no waie would they take, but through Cheapſide, ſo that they were brought to my houſe with about a thouſand perſons. Which thing I tooke verie ſtrange, and ſpake to ſir Iohn Greſham then being with me, to tell the maior and the ſhiriffes that this thing was not well ſuffered in the citie. Theſe naughtie heretikes all the waie they came through Cheapſide, both exhorted the people to their part, and had much comfort A promiſcua plebe, and being entred into my houſe and talked withall, they ſhewed themſelues deſperat and verie obſtinat: yet I vſed all the honeſt meanes I could, both by my ſelfe and other, to haue wonne them, cauſing diuerſe learned men to talke with them: and finding nothing in them but pride & wilfulneſſe, I thought to haue had them all hither to Fulham, and here to giue ſentence againſt them. Neuertheleſſe, perceiuing by my laſt dooing that your grace was offended, I thought it my dutie before I anie thing further procéeded herein, to aduertiſe firſt your grace hereof, and know your good pleaſure, which I beſéech your grace I may doo by this truſtie bearer. And thus moſt humblie I take my leaue of your good grace, beſéeching almightie God alwaies to preſerue the ſame. At Fulham, Poſtridie Natiu. 1556.

Your graces moſt bounden bedeſman and ſeruant Edmund Boner.

By this letter of biſhop Boner to the cardinall (ſaith maiſter Fox) is to be vnderſtood, what goodwill was in this biſhop, to haue the bloud of theſe men, and to haue paſt with ſentence of condemnation againſt them, had not the cardinall ſomewhat (as it ſéemed) haue ſtaied his feruent headineſſe. Concerning the which cardinall, although it can not be denied by his acts and writings, but that he was a profeſſed enimie, and no otherwiſe to be reputed but for a papiſt: yet againe it is to be ſuppoſed, that he was none of the bloudie and cruell ſort of papiſts, as may appeare, not by ſtaieng the rage of this biſhop: but alſo by his ſolicitous writing, and long letters written to Cranmer, alſo by the complaints of certeine papiſts, accuſing him to the pope to be a bearer with the heretikes, and by the popes letters ſent to him vpon the ſame, calling him vp to Rome, and ſetting frier Peto in his place, had not quéene Marie by ſpeciall intreatie made, kept him out of the popes danger. All which letters I haue (if néed be) to ſhew: beſides alſo, that it is thought of him that toward his latter end, a little before his comming from Rome to England, he began ſomewhat to fauour the doctrine of Luther, and was no leſſe ſuſpected at Rome: yea, and furthermore did there at Rome conuert a certeine learned Spaniard from papiſme to Luthers ſide: notwithſtanding the pompe and glorie of the world afterward caried him awaie to plaie the papiſt thus as he did.]

Biſhop Boners crueltie ſomewhat ſtaied by the cardinall.

Cardinall Poole a papiſt but no bloudie papiſt.

Cardinall Poole halfe ſuſpected for a Lutheran at Rome.

¶ And ſith I haue waded thus far in portraieng the ſaid cardinall, I am willing to make you communicants of a report concerning him, vttered by Cutbert Tunſtall biſhop of Dureſme, in a ſermon which he made vpon Palmeſundaie, in the yeare of our Lord 1539, before king Henrie the eight, treating vpon theſe words of ſaint Paule to the Philippians, Cap. 2. Hoc ſentite in vobis, quod & in Chriſto Ieſu, &c: See the ſame mind be in you, that was in Ieſu Chriſt, etc. The ground of whoſe ſermon ſtanding vpon obedience and diſobedience, after he had diſcourſed at large therevpon, he fell into theſe words in preſence of the king, the nobles, and people.

Ab.Fl. ex concione Cut. Tunſtalli coram Hen. 8.

And the biſhop of Rome now of late, to ſet forth his peſtilent malice the more, hath allured to his purpoſe a ſubiect of this realme Reginald Poole, come of a noble bloud, and thereby the more arrant traitor, to go about from prince to prince, and from countrie to countrie, to ſtir them to warre againſt this realme, and to deſtroie the ſame, being his natiue countrie. Whoſe peſtilent purpoſe albeit the princes that he breaketh it vnto, haue in much abhominati on, both for that the biſhop of Rome (who being a biſhop ſhould procure peace) is a ſtirrer of warre, and becauſe this moſt arrant and vnkind traitor is his miniſter to ſo diuelliſh a purpoſe to deſtroie the countrie that he was borne in, which anie heathen man would abhorre to doo. But for all that without ſhame he ſtill goeth on, exhorting thereunto all princes that will heare him; who doo abhorre to ſée ſuch vnnaturalneſſe in anie man, as he ſhameleſſe dooth ſet forwards, whoſe pernicious treaſons late ſecretlie wrought againſt this realme, haue béene, by the worke of almightie God ſo maruellouſlie detected, and by his owne brother, without looking therefore ſo diſcloſed, and condigne puniſhment inſued, that hereafter (God willing) they ſhall not take anie more ſuch root to the noiſance of this realme.

Cardinall Poole an arrant traitor.

Cardinall Poole a ſeditious fellow, and an vnpudent.

Cardinall Pooles treaſons detected by his owne brother.

And where all nations of gentiles by reaſon & law of nature preferre their countrie before their parents, ſo that for their countrie they will die againſt their parents being traitors: this peſtilent man worſe than a pagan, is not aſhamed to deſtroie if he could his natiue countrie. And whereas Curtius a heathen man was content for ſauing of the citie of Rome where he was borne, to leape into a gaping of the earth, which by the illuſions of the diuell it was anſwered ſhould not be ſhut, but that it muſt firſt haue one; this pernicious man is content to run headlong into hell: ſo that he maie deſtroie thereby his natiue countrie of England, being in that behalfe incomparablie worſe than anie pagan. And beſides

Cardinall Poole no chriſtian, but worſe than a pagan.

Cardinall Pooles vnkindneſſe to king Henrie that brought him vp.

Sée more thereof before pag. 1134.

beſides his peſtilent treaſon, his vnkindneſſe againſt the kings maieſtie, who brought him vp of a child, and promoted both him, and reſtored his bloud being attainted, to be of the péeres of this realme, and gaue him monie yéerelie out of his coffers, to find him honorablie at ſtudie, maketh his treaſon much more deteſtable to all the world, and him to be reputed more wild and cruell than anie tiger.

A traitor he liued, a traitor he died.

Thus much out of Cutbert Tunſtals ſermon printed Cum priuilegio ad imprimendum ſolum, by Thomas Berthelet, the yeare aboue named. Now it reſteth to conclude this diſcourſe concerning cardinall Poole with a briefe epitome of his laſt will and teſtament, which he made not long before he let his life, wherein he profeſſeth him ſelfe reſolute to die in the ſame faith and obedience of the Romiſh church wherein he liued; willing & ordeining his bodie to be buried in his cathedrall church of Canturburie (as he termeth it) in the ſame chappell where the head of the moſt bleſſed martyr Thomas Becket, whilome archbiſhop of the ſaid church was kept: with maſſes & dirges, &c: to be ſaid for his ſoule, the ſoules of his parents, and of all the faithfull departed out of this life, &c.

The diſtribution of his goods.

Touching dilapidations.

He is deſirous that quéene Marie ſhould haue knowledge of this his laſt will.

As for patrimoniall goods, ſith he had none whereby he ought to haue had regard of his kindred; therefore ſuch goods as he had he willed to be diſtributed among ſuch perſons as had well deſerued of him, and vpon godlie vſes. He made one Aloiſius Priolus a Venetian his heire and executor of all his goods and chattels, as well within England as without, in Spaine, Italie, Rome, Venice, or elſewhere, &c. And for dilapidations, there is no reaſon (ſaith he) whie my ſucceſſor in the ſée of Canturburie ſhuld demand anie thing, becauſe I haue beſtowed more than a thouſand pounds within theſe few yéeres, in reparing & making better ſuch houſes as belonged to the ſaid ſée, ſince I came to it (which was no long time by our computation.) The ouerſéers and defenders of this his laſt will he made Nicholas archbiſhop of Yorke chancellor of England, Thomas biſhop of Elie, his couſine the lord Edward Haſtings the kings chamberleine, ſir Iohn Borall the quéenes ſecretarie, ſir Edward Cordall maſter of the rolles, and maſter Henrie Cole his vicar generall in his ſpiritualties. All theſe he beſought to giue quéene Marie knowledge of this his laſt will, and with all reuerence to beſéech hir, that what good will and fauor ſhe ſhewed him in all cauſes and affaires whiles he was aliue; the ſame ſhe would vouchſafe to exhibit and beſtow vpon him being dead, and gratiouſlie prouide that all lets and impediments to the execution of this his laſt will & teſtament might be remoued and vtterlie taken awaie: and to euerie one of his ouerſéers for their paines taking herein, he gaue fiftie pounds a péece by will. This teſtament was ſubſcribed with his owne hand, and ſigned with his owne ſeale, in preſence of a number of witneſſes there vndernamed. All which, with the tenor of his ſaid laſt will at large, are remembred by Schardius in epitome rerum geſtarum ſub Ferdinando imperatore. And thus much of cardinall Poole.

* Sée pa. 865.

* Sée pa. 1069.

Vpon whoſe diſcourſe preſentlie ended, as hath béene done in the treatiſe of high conſtables * at the duke of Buckinghams beheadding, and of the lord protectors * at the duke of Summerſets ſuffering (in which two honorable perſonages thoſe two offices had their end) ſo here we are to infer a collection of Engliſh cardinals, which order ceaſed when Reginald Poole died. After which treatiſe ended, according to the purpoſed order, and a catalog of writers at the end of this quéenes reigne annexed, it remaineth that quéene Elizabeth ſhew hir ſelfe in hir triumphs at hir gratious and glorious coronation.

The cardinals of England collected by Francis Thin, in the yeare of our Lord, 1585.

THis cardinall Poole being the laſt cardinall in England, and ſo likelie to be, as the ſtate of our preſent time doth earneſtlie wiſh; doth here offer occaſion to treat of all ſuch Engliſhmen as haue poſſeſſed that honor. Which I onelie doo, for that I would haue all whatſoeuer monuments of antiquitie preſerued, leaſt Pereat memoria eorum cum ſonitu. Wherefore thus I begin.

Adrian the fourth pope of Rome.

Will. Paru. lib. 2. cap. 16. Onuphrius. Matt. Parker. Ranulph Higden.

Adrian the fourth of that name biſhop of Rome (called before that time Nicholas Breakeſpeare) being borne in England about ſaint Albons (whome Onuphrius affirmeth to be borne in the towne of Malmesberie, in the dominions of ſaint Albons, in the dioces of Bath, ſomewhat like a ſtranger miſtaking the names of places and perſons, as he often doth) was for the pouertie of his father (who after became a monke in ſaint Albons) not able to be mainteined here at learning. Wherevpon he goeth into Prouince to the monaſterie of ſaint Rufus, whereof in time he was made a canon, and after abbat of that houſe; but in the end miſliked of the couent, they appealed him to Rome before Eugenius the third then pope: who for that time pacifieng the matter betwéene them, they did after fall at variance againe, and ſo called him before the pope the ſecond time. Eugenius ſéeing theſe continuall bralles, wearie to heare them, and fauoring this Nicholas, made them choſe an other abbat, and appointed Nicholas to the biſhoprike of Alba, and to the honor of a cardinall, ſending him legat into Denmarke and Norweie: where he remained ſome yeares. But at length returning to Rome after the death of Eugenius and his ſucceſſor Anaſtaſius, this Nicholas was aduanced from a cardinall to a pope, and called Adrian the fourth. Who died in the fift yeare of Henrie the ſecond king of England, in the yeare of Chriſt 1159.

Boſa. Matt. Parker. Onuphrius.

Boſa, an Engliſhman and cardinall, was not that Boſa which was biſhop of Yorke, of whome Beda maketh mention, lib. 4. cap. 13. and cap. 23. of his eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie, where he ſaith that the ſame Boſa was made biſhop of the ſame ſée, in the yeare of Chriſt 678. And therefore being long before this Boſa, our cardinall could not be the ſame man, as ſome vnconſideratlie haue ſtiflie mainteined. For this our Boſa was a cardinall deacon, and the nephue to pope Adrian the fourth before named; and intituled a deacon cardinall of the title of Coſma and Damian, in the yeare of Chriſt 1155, being after made a prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Prudentian, by pope Alexander the third, in the yeare of Chriſt 1163, before which he was chamberleine to the church of Rome, being created to the firſt cardinalſhip and office of chamberleine by his vncle the ſaid pope Adrian the fourth.

Robert Curſon. Matt. Parker. Matt. Paris. Matt. Weſt. Holinſhed.

Robert Curſon, a man excellentlie learned both in diuine & humane letters, comming from Rome, grew in ſuch eſtimation, that in the end he became a cardinall, of whom we find recorded in this ſort. At the taking of Dameta in Egypt, there was with Pelagius the popes legat, maiſter Robert Curſon an Engliſhman a moſt famous clearke, borne of a noble houſe, and cardinall of the church of Rome.

Stephan Langhton. Matt. Parker. Matt. Paris. Holinſhed. Onuphrius.

Stephan Langhton made prieſt cardinall, in the yeare of Chriſt 1213, and the ſixtéenth yeare of pope Innocent the third, of the title of ſaint Chryſogon, was archbiſhop of Canturburie, for whoſe cauſe and contention betwéene king Iohn and him, the realme of England was long interdicted, the nobilitie was ſlaine, the king depoſed, his kingdome made feodarie to Rome, and Pandolph the cardinall ſent hither to receiue the crowne of K. John. This Stephan departed the world, in the twelfe yeare of Henrie the third, and in the yeare of our redemption 1238.

Robert Somercot. Holinſhed. Matt. Paris. Fol. 772.

Robert Somercot a cardinall, a man well eſteemed for his vertue and learning, a graue writer, and well beloued of all men, departed from the vanities of this life, in the yeare of our ſaluation 1241, being the fiue and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third.

Ancherus. Onuphrius. Matt. Parker.

Ancherus citizen and archdeacon of London, was made prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Praxidis, by pope Urban the ſecond, in the yéere that the world became fleſh 1262, and the yeare of the long reigne of king Henrie the third, the foure and fortith.

Robert de Kilwarbie. Matt. Parker. Hen. of Leceſt. Onuphrius.

Robert de Kilwarbie, whome Onuphrius calleth Robert Wiliberie frier preacher, doctor of diuinitie was remoued from the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie to be biſhop of Portus, and afterward was made cardinall of ſaint Rufinian by pope Nicholas the third, in the yeare of Chriſt as ſome ſaie 1277, and as others haue 1278, or 1273: being aabout the firſt yeare of Edward the firſt of that name king of England; who died vnder the ſame pope Nicholas, in the yeare of Chriſt 1280, as hath Onuphrius.

Barnard de Anguiſcelle. Matt. Parker.

Barnard de Anguiſcelle was remoued from the archbiſhoprike of Arras, and made biſhop of Portua and cardinall of ſaint Rufinian, being a biſhop cardinall, and aduanced to that principalitie by pope Martine the fourth of that name, in the yeare of our redemption 1291, being about the nintéenth yeare of the ſaid Edward the firſt: whome Onuphrius much miſtaking himſelfe maketh a Frenchman: and Matthew Parker rightlie ſetteth him downe as an Engliſhman.

Hugh Attrat. Matthew Parker. Ra. Baldocke. Onuphrius.

Hugh Attrat prieſt cardinall, of the title of ſaint Laurence in Lucina was created cardinall by pope Martine the fourth, in the yéere of our Lord 1281: he was alſo called Hugh of Eueſham, and died at Rome in the yéere of Chriſt 1287, whileſt the ſée was vacant, being about the fiftéenth yéere of Edward the firſt.

Bernard. Matthew Parker.

Berard or rather Bernard a cardinall of Preſtina was aduanced to the dignitie of a cardinall by Nicholas the fourth of that name biſhop of Rome in the yéere (as I ſuppoſe) 1298, though ſome ſaie in the yéere 1288, the error whereof I gather to be in the printer.

Leonard Guercine. Matthew Parker. Onuphrius,

Leonard Guercine biſhop, cardinall of Alba was receiued to the ſcarlet hat and robe by pope Bonifacius the eight, in the yéere of Chriſt 1300, being the eight and twentith of Edward the firſt.

William. Matthew Parker. Onuphrius. Walſingham.

William one of the order of the frier preachers doctor of diuinitie in Oxford, prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Sabina, to which place he was adopted by pope Benedict the eleuenth, in the yéere 1303, being the one and thirtith yéere of Edward the firſt, in which yéere he died in England.

Walter Winterborne. Matthew Parker. Nic. Triuet. Onuphrius.

Walter Winterborne (that came in place of William laſt before named) doctor of diuinitie of the order of frier preachers, confeſſor to Edward the firſt, and prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Sabina, was by the ſaid Benedict the eleuenth admitted to the college of cardinals in the yeare of Chriſt 1304, being the one and thirtith yéere of Edward the firſt, which Walter ſmall time-inioied that place. For going with other cardinals into France, & ſo into Italie, he died at Genoa or Gene, whoſe bodie being carried into England, was buried in the church of the frier preachers in the yéere of Chriſt 1305, being the thrée and thirtith yéere of Edward the firſt.

Thomas Jorze. Walſingham. Nic. Triuet. Matthew Parker. Onuphrius.

Thomas Jorze a frier preacher doctor of diuinitie of Oxford, confeſſor to Edward the firſt, prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Sabina was created by pope Clement the fift in the yéere of Chriſt 1305, being the thrée and thirtith yéere of Edward the firſt, or (as ſaith Walſingham) a little before Chriſtmaſſe in the yéere of Chriſt 1306, who by him is alſo named Jorza. This man (as hath Onuphrius) died in the iorneie he made as ambaſſador into Italie to Henrie the ſeuenth of that name emperour in the yéere 1311, & the ſeuenth yéere of the popedome of Clement the fift, who ſent him in that ambaſſage: his bodie was carried into England, and buried at Oxford in a monaſterie of the frier preachers.

Simon Langham.

Simon Langham abbat of Weſtminſter, treaſuror of England, biſhop of Elie and of Canturburie, and chancellor of England, was elected to the honor of the purple hat and cardinall dignitie, in the yéere of our redemption 1368, being the two and fortith yéere of king Edward the third. And here becauſe I would not ſet it downe in a diſtinct place, as receiuing it for truth, ſith by ſearch I find it not ſo, what authoritie ſoeuer they that wrote the ſame had to lead them to it: I will note an ouerſight paſſed the fingers of Fabian, Holinſhed, and Grafton, all writers of our age, who affirme that the biſhop of Wincheſter, in the fiue and fortith yéere of king Edward the third, being a cardinall (for ſo I gather by the words and circumſtance of the ſtorie) with the biſhop of Beauois likewiſe a cardinall, were put in commiſſion by pope Gregorie the eleuenth to treat betwixt the king of England and France. But becauſe I can not find in Omiphrius nor in Matthew Parker anie ſuch cardinall ſet downe, I doo not at this time imbrace it, vntill I maie find better proofe thereof than the authoritie of Grafton, Fabian, and thoſe before named; eſpeciallie ſith that he which was then biſhop of Wincheſter in the ſaid fiue and fortith yéere of Edward the third, and all they which were biſhops of Wincheſter from the firſt yeare of the reigne of Edward the third, vntill the yeare of Chriſt 1404, in which Henrie Beaufort was biſhop of Wincheſter, were neuer cardinals: the ſaid biſhops in orderlie ſucceſſion thus named: Adam Orletie, William de Edington, William Wickham, and then Henrie Beaufort, who was a cardinall. But theſe writers miſtaking perchance the yeare of the king, and the name of the biſhops ſée, in the fiue and fortith yeare of Edward the third (in which yeare John Thorſbie was cardinall as after followeth) haue (in ſetting downe Wincheſter for Worceſter committed a fault) ſo eaſie it is for the printer or anie other to miſplace and miſname the one biſhoprike for the other.

John Thorſbie. Holinſhed and other authors.

John Thorſbie biſhop of ſaint Dauids in Wales chancellor of England, biſhop of Worceſter, and after biſhop of Yorke, was made cardinall by Urban the fift then biſhop of Rome (as I ſuppoſe) before the fiue and fortith yeare of Edward the third. This man ſurrendred his life in the yeare of our redemption 1374, being the eight and fortith yeare of king Edward the third.

Adam. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker. Holinſhed.

Adam prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Cicilia, was inueſted with the dignitie of a ſcarlet hat in the yeare of our redemption 1378, about the firſt yeare of Richard the ſecond. Holinſhed mentioneth one Adam Eſton to be a cardinall, who (conſidering the time when he liued) muſt néeds be this man, of whome he writeth in this ſort. Adam Eſton well ſéene in all the toongs, was made a cardinall by pope Gregorie the eleuenth, but by pope Urban the firt he was committed to priſon in Genoa (in the yeare of our redemption 1383, being about the ſeauenth yeare of Richard the ſecond) and by contemplation plation of the ſaid king Richard, was taken out of priſon, but not fullie deliuered, untill the daies of Boniface the ninth, who (in the yeare of our redemption 1389, about the thirteenth yeare of Richard the ſecond) reſtored the ſaid Adam to his former dignitie: all which Holinſhed ſpeaketh of him amongſt the writers of England, except the yeares of the Lord which I haue added out of Onuphrius, and the yeares of the king which I haue ioined of my ſelfe. Which Onuphrius maketh this Adam to be biſhop of London, and to die in Rome the third calends of Maie, in the yéere of our ſauior 1397, being the one and twentith of Richard the ſecond, under Boniface the ninth pope of that name, and was buried in the place whereof he was intituled to the honor of a cardinall.

Philip de Repindone. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker.

Philip de Repindone biſhop of Lincolne and doctor of diuinitie, was by pope Gregorie the twelfe, then biſhop of Rome, in the yeare of Chriſt 1408, being the tenth yeare of king Henrie the fourth created cardinall of the title of ſaint Nereus and Achilleus.

Thomas. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker. Liber Dunel.

Thomas biſhop of Durham was made (as ſaith Onuphrius, in the yeare of our redemption 1411 by Iohn the two and twentith, commonlie called Iohn the thrée and twentith) prieſt cardinall. Touching which matter there is no mention made in the life of Thomas Langleie biſhop of Durham, and liuing at this time that this Langleie was a cardinall: for this Thomas Langleie was made biſhop of Durham in the yeare of our Lord 1406, and continued in that ſée one and thirtie yeares, departing the world 1437, and ſo the creation of this Thomas biſhop of Durham mentioned by Onuphrius and Matthew Parker biſhop of Canturburie, in the yeare of Chriſt 1411 muſt néedes fall in the life of this Thomas Langleie biſhop of Durham.

Robert. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker.

Robert biſhop of Saliſburie prieſt cardinall (although it be not ſhewed of what title) was preferred to that place by pope Iohn the thrée and twentith in the yeare of our redemption 1411, being about the twelfe yere of the reigne of king Henrie the fourth, of whom Onuphrius writeth in this ſort: Roberti epiſcopi Sariſburienſis presbyteri cardinalis, & Egidij de campis presbyteri cardinalis geſta & exitus, quòd nunquam Romanam curiam adierint, incerti & obſcuri omninò ſunt. Satis tamen conſtat, eos ante papæ Martini electionem mortuos fuiſſe.

Henrie Beaufort.

Henrie Beaufort, ſonne unto Iohn of Gant and Katharine Swineford, being biſhop of Wincheſter and chancellor of England, tooke the ſtate of a cardinall (of the title of ſaint Euſebius) at Calis, being abſent (as hath Matthew Parker) in the yeare of our redemption 1426: in the fift yeare of king Henrie the ſixt. He was called the rich cardinall of Wincheſter, being aduanced to that honor by Martine the third, commonlie called Martine the fift then pope of Rome. This Henrie died under pope Nicholas the fift in the yeare of Chriſt 1447: being about the ſix & twentith yeare of the miſerable reigne of king Henrie the ſixt.

Iohn Stafford. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker.

Iohn Stafford biſhop of Bath and Welles chancellor of England, after biſhop of Canturburie, was created prieſt cardinall by Eugenius then biſhop of Rome, in the yeare that the word became fleſh 1434: being the twelfe yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt.

Iohn Kempe. Holinſhed. Polydor. Onuphrius.

Iohn Kempe biſhop of London, twiſe lord chancellour of England, biſhop of Yorke, and after that archbiſhop of Canturburie, was by Eugenius the fourth then archbiſhop of Rome, made cardinall of the title of ſaint Sabina, as ſaith Holinſhed, otherwiſe by Onuphrius called Balbina: contrarie to Polydor, who in his thrée and twentith booke of the hiſtorie of England, affirmeth him to be cardinalited by pope Nicholas the fift. He died (as ſaith Onuphrius) in the yeare that the godhead was united to the manhood, to wit, one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and foure, under pope Nicholas the firſt, which yeare of our Lord met with the fiue and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt.

Thomas Bourcher. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker. Holinſhed. Polydor.

Thomas Bourcher (borne of the noble houſe of the earles of Eſſex, being chancellor of England, biſhop of Worceſter, from thence remooued to Elie, from that Ile aduanced to the metropolitan ſée of Canturburie, and prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Siriacus in Thermis or the Baths) was honored with the ſcarlet hat and ſiluer pillers, by pope Paule the ſecond of that name, in the yeare that the ſecond perſon in trinitie tooke upon him the forme of a ſeruant, one thouſand foure hundred ſixtie & fiue, being the fift yeare of the reigne of the noble prince king Edward the fourth.

Iohn Morton. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker. Polydor. Holinſhed.

Iohn Morton biſhop of Elie chancellor of England & archbiſhop of Canturburie, being prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Anaſtaſius, was honored with a ſcarlet hat by Alexander the ſixt of that name (then gouernour of the ſeat of Peter at Rome) in the yeare from the birth of Chriſt 1493, being the ninth yeare of the Salomon of England king Henrie the ſeauenth. He died as ſaith Onuphrius, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand and fiue hundred, being about the eight yeare of Alexander the ſixt ſtill pope of Rome, and the ſixteenth yeare of the ſaid Henrie the ſeauenth then king of England.

Chriſtopher Bembridge. Matthew Parker. Onuphrius.

Chriſtopher Bembridge a gentleman borne, was archbiſhop of Yorke, & prieſt cardinall of the title of S. Praxidis, was aduanced to that ſcarlet dignitie by pope Iulius the ſecond, in the yere that the virgin was deliuered of our ſauiour one thouſand fiue hundred & eleuen, being the third yeare of the triumphant reigne of king Henrie the eight. He died at Rome, (as ſaith Onuphrius) by poiſon, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and thirtéene yeares (being the eleuenth yeare, when Leo the tenth did hold the ſterne of the Romane biſhoprike, & the fift yeare when the ſaid Henrie the eight did rule the ſcepter of England) and was buried at Rome in the church of the holie trinitie of the Engliſh nation.

Thomas Wolſeie.

Thomas Wolſeie the kings almoner, deane of Yorke, abbat of ſaint Albons, and of ſaint Auſtins, biſhop of Lincolne, Wincheſter, and Yorke, chancellour of England: all which or all ſaue two he held at one time in his owne hands, was made prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Cicilie, whereunto he was promoted by pope Leo the tenth, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred and fifteene, being the ſeauenth yéere of the reigne of the famous king Henrie the eight, of whome Onuphrius ſomewhat miſtaking the pronuntiation of his name thus writeth: Thomas Wlcer ex oppido Sufforth dioceſis Norducenſis, &c.: wherein like a ſtranger to our countrimen he miſtaketh both name, towne, place, and the prouince of Suffolke for the towne of Ipſwich. For this cardinall Wolſeie being deſcended of meane parentage, was borne in the towne of Gipſwich now called Ipſwich in the prouince or countrie of Suffolke in the dioceſſe of the biſhoprike of Norwich.

Iohn Fiſher.

Iohn Fiſher biſhop of Rocheſter prieſt cardinall of the title of ſaint Vitalis, was (although he neuer came at Rome, nor for anie thing that I can learne was euer out of England) created cardinall at Rome, by Paule the third of that name, then wearing the triple crowned miter, and being biſhop of Rome. But this Fiſher neuer ware his ſcarlet hat: for after this high dignitie and before he might couer his prieſtlie crowne with the ſame, he loſt his head, in the yeare from which the angels ſang at the birth of the Meſſias one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and fiue, being the ſeauen and twentith of the reigne of that king Henrie the eight, which deliuered his kingdome from all ſubiection to the biſhop of Rome Clement the ſeauenth of that name.

Reginald Poole.

Reginald Poole, noblie borne, & yoong ſonne to ſir Richard Poole knight of the garter, by his wife Margaret counteſſe of Saliſburie, daughter to George duke of Clarence brother to K. Edward the fourth, was made deacon cardinall of the title of ſaint Marie in Coſmeden, by pope Paule the third of that name, in the yeare that the mother of God brought forth the ſonne of man 1536, being the eight and twentith yeare of king Henrie the eight. This man legat of pope Iulius the third, comming into England in the yeare of our Lord 1554, being the ſecond yeare of queene Maries reigne, was after made biſhop of Canturburie, on the fiue and twentith of March, in the yeare of Chriſt 1556, being the third yeare of the reigne of the ſaid queene Marie, and died the ſeauenteenth daie of Nouember, in the yeare of Chriſt 1558, being the laſt daie of the reigne of the ſaid queene Marie, or rather the next daie erlie in the morning, at his houſe at Lambeth, and was honorablie conueied to Canturburie, where he was buried. This man was the laſt Engliſh cardinall that liued and inioied that title of honour in England. For although the Engliſh cardinall which followeth were created after him, yet I ſuppoſe that he died much before him: but he liued not in England at the ſame time that cardinall Poole died, as farre as I can lerne. Wherfore I ſtill make this cardinall Poole the laſt Engliſh cardinall that was liuing in England.

Peter Peto.

Peter Peto, borne of an ancient familie, and one of the order of the frier minors obſeruants (whome Onuphrius calleth Angliæ legatum) was created cardinall by Paule the fourth of that name, cheefe biſhop of Rome, in the yeare that the word became fleſh 1557, being the fift yeare of queene Marie. Beſides this number of thirtie cardinals, there haue been manie other to the number of ten or more, before the time that pope Innocent the firſt of that name did weald the charge of the Romane biſhoprike, as Matthew Parker late biſhop of Canturburie a worthie antiquarie doth witneſſe, and I my ſelfe haue obſerued, beſides thoſe which Onuphrius and the ſaid Matthew Parker (in the Latine booke of the archbiſhops of his owne ſee) haue recited. But bicauſe neither they nor I haue yet atteined to their names, we muſt and doo omit them: and yet it may be that theſe three which follow, named by Onuphrius being Engliſh names, were Engliſhmen, and part of the ſaid number of ten cardinals, whoſe names we doo not know, which three cardinals were Hugh Foliot, Peter Mortimer, and Simon Braie. But bicauſe I cannot certeinlie gather out of Onuphrius that they were Engliſhmen, I dare not preſume ſo to make them; though in mine owne conceit I verelie ſuppoſe that they were borne in England: for in vncerteine matters I dare not ſet downe anie certeintie.

Wherefore to ſet end to this cardinals diſcourſe, I will knit vp this matter with one onelie note drawne out of Matthew Parkers beforenamed booke of the liues of the biſhops of Canturburie, which is as followeth: That this number and remembrance of our cardinals is not ſo wonderfull as is that computation of the Romane biſhops, which pope Iohn the two and twentith of that name hath gathered of his predeceſſors. For he doth recite that out of the order of ſaint Benet or Benedict (whereof himſelfe was) there haue iſſued foure and twentie popes, 183 cardinals, 1464 archbiſhops, 3502 biſhops, and abbats innumerable. Thus concluding (that of all thoſe our Engliſh cardinals, with the deſcription of their liues, I will more largelie intreat in my booke intituled the Pantogrophie of England, conteining the vniuerſall deſcription of all memorable places and perſons, aſwell temporall as ſpirituall) I requeſt the reader to take this in good part, till that booke may come to light. Thus much Francis Thin, who with the wheele of George Ripleie canon of Bridlington, after the order of circulation in alchimicall art, and by a geometricall circle in naturall philoſophie doth end this cardinals diſcourſe, reſting in the centre of Reginald Poole, the laſt liuing cardinall in England, by whoſe death the ſaid Francis tooke occaſion to paſe about the circumference of this matter of the cardinals of this realme.]

Learned men in queene Maries reigne.

Of ſuch learned men as had written and did liue in the reigne of queene Marie there were manie, of whome no ſmall number ended their liues alſo during that ſhort time of hir reigne, ſome by fire, and others in exile. Iohn Rogers borne in Lancaſhire, wrote diuerſe treatiſes, tranſlated the bible into Engliſh with notes, and publiſhed the ſame vnder the name of Thomas Matthew, he ſuffred in Smithfield the fourth of Februarie, in the yeare 1555. Nicholas Ridleie biſhop firſt of Rocheſter, and after of London, ſuffered at Oxford in the ſaid yeare 1555. Hugh Latimer borne in Leiceſterſhire, ſometime biſhop of Worceſter, a notable preacher, and a moſt reuerend father, ſuffered at the ſame place, and in the ſame daie and yeare with biſhop Ridleie. Iohn Hooper borne in Summerſetſhire, biſhop firſt of Gloceſter, and after of Worceſter, ſuffered at Gloceſter in the yeare of our Lord 1555. Iohn Bradford, borne in Mancheſter, a notable towne in Lancaſhire, a ſober, mild, and diſcreet learned man, ſuffered at London the firſt of Iulie in the ſaid yeare 1555.

Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter borne in the towne of ſaint Edmundſburie in Suffolke, of king Henrie the eights councell, and in king Edwards daies committed to ward within the tower, releaſed by queene Marie, made lord chancellor, and ſo died a ſtout champion in defenſe of the popes doctrine, and a great enimie to the profeſſours of the goſpell. Iohn Philpot borne in Hamſhire, ſonne to ſir Peter Philpot knight, was archdeacon of Wincheſter, ended his life by fire in the yeare aforeſaid 1555, the 18 of December, going then on the foure & fortith yeare of his age. Thomas Cranmer borne in Notinghamſhire, archbiſhop of Canturburie, a worthie prelat, in ſundrie vertues right commendable, ſuffered at Oxford the one and twentith of March, one thouſand, fiue hundred, fiftie and ſix. Richard Moriſon knight, borne in Oxfordſhire, wrote diuerſe treatiſes, and deceaſſed at Strauſburge the 17 of March 1556. Iohn Poinet borne in Kent, biſhop of Rocheſter firſt, & after of Wincheſter, deceaſſed likewiſe at Strauſburgh, about the tenth or eleauenth of Auguſt, in the yeare of our Lord 1556.

Robert Record a doctor of phyſicke, and an excellent philoſopher, in arithmetike, aſtrologie, coſmographie, and geometrie moſt ſkilfull, he was borne in Wales, deſcended of a good familie, and finallie departed this life in the daies of queene Marie. Bartholomew Traheron deſcended of a worſhipfull houſe in the weſt parts of England, deane of Chicheſter, departed this life in Germanie, where he liued in exile, about the latter end of queene Maries reigne. Cutbert Tunſtall, biſhop firſt of London, and after of Durham, borne in Lancaſhire of a right worſhipfull familie, excellentlie learned, as by his workes it may appeare, doctor of both the lawes, departed this life in the yeare 1559. Richard Sampſon biſhop of Couentrie & Lichfield wrote certeine treatiſes, & departed this life 1555. Lucas Shepherd borne in Colcheſter in Eſſex, an Engliſh poet. Iane Dudleie daughter vnto Henrie Greie duke of Suffolke, wrote diuerſe things highlie to hir commendation, of whome yée haue heard more before héere in this hiſtorie; William Thomas a Welſhman borne, of whome yée haue likewiſe heard how he ſuffered for treaſon, wrote the hiſtorie of Italie, and other things verie eloquentlie; James Brokes a doctor of diuinitie, John Standiſh a doctor likewiſe of the ſame profeſſion, great defenders of the popes doctrine, as by their workes appeareth; William Perine a blacke frier by profeſſion, and a doctor alſo of diuinitie, wrote in defenſe of the maſſe, and preached ſermons which were printed of like ſtuffe; John Baret borne in Lin, a doctor of diuinitie, and ſometime a Carmelit frier, but reuolting from the popes religion, he became an earneſt ſetter forth of the goſpell, but eftſoones he fell off, and returned to his former opinions now in the daies of quéene Marie; Henrie lord Stafford, ſonne to Edward duke of Buckingham, amongſt other things which he wrote, he tranſlated a booke out of Latine into Engliſh, intituled Vtriuſque poteſtatis differentia, that is, The difference betwixt the two powers, which booke (as ſome thinke) was firſt compiled and ſet forth by Edward For biſhop of Hereford; John Hopkins tranſlated diuerſe pſalmes of the pſalter into Engliſh méeter, which are to be found amongſt thoſe appointed to be ſung in the churches of England.

Thus farre the troubleſome reigne of Queene Marie the firſt of that name (God grant ſhe may be the laſt of hir religion) eldeſt daughter to king Henrie the eight.

The peaceable and proſperous regiment of bleſsed Queene Eliſabeth, ſecond daughter to king Henrie the eight.

AFter all the ſtormie, tempeſtuous, and bluſtering windie weather of quéene Marie was ouerblowne, the darkeſome clouds of diſcomfort diſperſed, the palpable fogs and miſts of moſt intollerable miſerie conſumed, and the dashing ſhowers of perſecution ouerpaſt; it pleaſed God to ſend England a calme and quiet ſeaſon, a cleare and louelie ſunſhine, a quitſeſt from former broiles of a turbulent eſtate, and a world of bleſſings by good quéene Eliſabeth: into whoſe gratious reigne we are now to make an happie entrance as followeth.

The reſolution of the lords to declare ladie Eliſabeth quéene.

When true knowledge was had that quéene Marie was deceaſed, who left hir life in this world the ſeuentéenth daie of Nouember, as is before mentioned in the latter end of hir hiſtorie: in the time of a parlement, the lords that were aſſembled in the vpper houſe, being reſolued according to the lawes of the land, to declare the ladie Eliſabeth ſiſter to the ſaid quéene to be verie true and lawfull heire to the crowne of England, ſent immediatlie to the ſpeaker of the parlement, willing him with the knights and burgeſſes of the neather houſe, without delaie to repaire vnto them into the vpper houſe, for their aſſents in a caſe of great importance. Who being come thither, after ſilence made (as the maner is) the archbiſhop of Yorke chancellor of England, whoſe name was Nicholas Heth, doctor in diuinitie, ſtood vp and pronounced in effect theſe words following.

The words of doctor Heath lord chancellor, vttered in the parlement houſe touching the proclaming of the ladie Eliſabeth quéene.

The cauſe of your calling hither at this time, is to ſignifie vnto you, that all the lords here preſent are certeinlie certified, that God this preſent morning hath called to his mercie our late ſoueréigne ladie quéene Marie. Which hap as it is moſt heauie and gréeuous vnto vs, ſo haue we no leſſe cauſe another waie to reioiſe with praiſe to almightie God; for that he hath left vnto vs a true, lawfull and right inheritrice to the crowne of this realme, which is the ladie Eliſabeth, ſecond daughter to our late ſoueréigne lord of noble memorie king Henrie the eight, and ſiſter to our ſaid late quéene, of whoſe moſt lawfull right and title in the ſucceſſion of the crowne (thanks be to God) we néed not to doubt. Wherefore the lords of this houſe haue determined with your aſſents and conſents, to paſſe from hence into the palace, and there to proclame the ſaid ladie Eliſabeth quéene of this realme, without further tract of time. Whereto the whole houſe anſwered with euident appearance of ioy, God ſaue quéene Eliſabeth, long may quéene Eliſabeth reigne ouer vs. And ſo this preſent parlement being diſſolued by the act of God, the ſaid lords immediatlie calling vnto them the kings and principall heralds at armes, went into the palace of Weſtminſter, and directlie before the hall doore in the fore noone of the ſame daie, after ſeuerall ſoundings of trumpets made, in moſt ſolemne maner, proclamed the new quéene, by this name and title: Eliſabeth by the grace of God queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c: to the great comfort and reioiſing of the people, as by their maners and countenances well appeared. After which proclamation made at Weſtminſter, the ſaid lords, to wit the duke of Norffolke, the lord treaſuror, the earle of Oxford, and diuerſe other lords and biſhops, with all ſpéed repaired into the citie of London, where the like proclamation was made in the preſence of them, and alſo of the lord maior and aldermen in their ſcarlet gowns, at the croſſe in Cheape, with no leſſe vniuerſall ioy and thankſgiuing to God of all the hearers. And ſo our moſt gratious ſoueréigne ladie quéene Eliſabeth began hir happie reigne ouer this realme of England, to the great comfort and gladneſſe of all eſtates chriſtianlie minded and diſpoſed, vpon the foreſaid ſeuentéenth day of Nouember,

The ladie Eliſabeth proclamed quéen.

The beginning of quéens Eliſabeths proſperous reigne.

The quéenes remouing frõ Hatfield.

On wedneſdaie the thrée and twentith of Nouember, the quéenes maieſtie remoued from Hatfield, vnto the Charter houſe in London, where ſhe lodged in the lord Norths houſe: in which remouing, and comming thus to the citie, it might well appeare how comfortable hir preſence was to them that went to receiue hir on the waie, and likewiſe to the great multitudes of people that came abroad to ſée hir grace, ſhewing their reioiſing harts in countenance and words, with hartie praiers for hir maieſties proſperous eſtate and preſeruation: which no doubt were acceptable to God, as by the ſequele of things it may certenlie be beleeued, ſith his diuine maieſtie hath ſo directed hir doings, that if euer the commonwealth of this land hath flouriſhed, it may rightlie be ſaid, that in hir moſt happie reigne it hath béene moſt flouriſhing, in peace, quietneſſe, and due adminiſtration of iuſtice, mixed with mercifull clemencie, ſo as thoſe which cannot content themſelues with the preſent ſtate of things vnder hir rule, no doubt they are ſuch factious creatures, as will not reſt ſatiſfied with anie kind of gouernement, be it neuer ſo iuſt and commendable. From the which ſort of men the Lord deliuer hir roiall maieſtie, and all hir true and louing ſubiects, and preſerue hir in long life to all our comforts, and continue hir in ſuch happie procéedings as ſhe hath begun, to the end.

The flouriſhing eſtate of this land vnder quéene Eliſabeth.

Hir grace remoueth to the tower.

On mondaie the eight and twentith of Nouember, about two of the clocke in the afternoone, hir grace remoued againe, and taking hir chariot, rode from my lord Norths houſe alongſt Barbican, and entring by Criplegate into the citie, kept along the wall to Biſhops gate, and ſo by blanch Chapelton vnto Marke lane. At hir entring into blanch Chapleton, the artillerie in the tower began to go off, continuallie ſhooting for the ſpace almoſt of halfe an houre, but yet had made an end before hir maieſtie was aduanced to Berkin church, and ſo with great ioie and prease of people, of whom all the ſtréets were full as ſhe paſſed, declaring their inward reioiſings by geſture, words, and countenance, ſhe entered the tower, where ſhe continued till the fift of December being mondaie, on the which daie, ſhe remoued by water vnto Summerſet place in the Strond, where ſhe arriued about ten of the clocke in the forenoone the ſame daie.

The death of ſir Thomas Cheinie lord warden of the cinque ports.

¶On thurſdaie betwéene two and thrée in the morning the eight of December 1558 in the firſt yeare of our ſouereigne ladie quéene Eliſabeths reigne died in the tower of London, that honorable man ſir Thomas Cheineie knight of the order, treaſuror of hir maieſties moſt honorable houſhold, warden of the cinque ports, & of hir highneſſe priuie councell, whoſe pulſes (by the report of his ſurgeon) laboured more than thrée quarters of an houre after his death, ſo ſtronglie as though life had not béene abſent from the bodie. By the report alſo of the ſame ſurgeon, he had the ſwéeteſt face of death to behold for one of his yeares that euer he ſaw, and died ſo quietlie and patientlie, that neither his face, mouth, eies, hands, or féet were vncomelie vſed in the changing of this his life.

His horſſe for ſeruice which proued him to be a louer of chiualrie.

For twentie yeares before his departure, he kept in his ſtable continuallie winter and ſummer twentie great horſſe at the leaſt, and eight or nine geldings, beſides ſixtéene or ſeuentéene geldings which were kept at graſſe, and had in a readineſſe furniture for them all to ſerue in the field: and no one of the ſame horſſe or geldings but he was able and readie for anie man at armes to ſerue vpon. Beſide this he kept ſo bountifull a houſe, and was ſo liberall and good to his men, that well was that noble mans ſon, gentlemans ſonne, or other that might happen to be preferred into his ſeruice. And againe, the number of his ſeruants to whom he gaue liueries were 205, whereof in houſhold were ſix ſcore, beſides ſtrangers that were dailie comming and going. And his ſeruants had no iuſt cauſe, either for lacke of great wages trulie paid them euerie quarter, and bordwages euerie ſundaie, or plentie of meat and drinke, & lodging on good featherbeds to liue out of order. And ſuch commoditie as might by chance fall within the iuriſdiction of his office of wardenrie, being a thing fit for his men, he neuer turned the ſame to his owne vſe; but allwaies gaue it them. Whether this realme hath not loſt a worthie ſubiect, and ſpeciallie his men a good maiſter, let all men iudge that knew him.

The like is reported of cardinall Wolſeie when he was in the floure of his proſperitie.

But how manie be there now that will giue awaie the profits of their office to their ſeruants?

Before his departure out of this world, he ſéemed to haue a great care for his men, thinking leaſt without ſome prouiſion for them, they would after his death run at randon and liue diſorderlie, which like a noble man he preuented after this liberall ſort as followeth. In his laſt will and teſtament, to ſome he gaue annuities during life, and to others a whole yeares wages after his death; but both to the one ſort and the other he prouided that all things which he owght them might be paied: and alſo ſo long as they vſed themſelues like honeſt men, and were not reteined in ſeruice, they ſhould haue meat, drinke, and lodging at his houſe, till his ſonne now lord Cheinie came to his lawfull age, which was the ſpace of thrée yeares, in no leſſe or worſſe maner than they were woont and accuſtomed to haue in his life time. In his laſt will he alſo remembred ſome of his fréends, as well thoſe of nobilitie and worſhip, as others, ſome with one gift and ſome with an other, deſiring them to aſſiſt his executors for the performance of his laſt will.

His beneſit & honorable care for his men that ſerued him.

His remembrances of his friends at his death.

His wit, experience, courteſie, and valiantneſſe in ſeruice was ſuch, as king Henrie the eight, and his children, to wit, king Edward the ſixt, quéene Marie, and quéene Eliſabeth vſed him as one of all their priuie councell, and was treaſuror of all their honorable houſholds during his life. He was brought vp in king Henrie the ſeuenths houſe, & was one of his henchmen. So that it appeareth before he died, he had ſerued thrée kings, and two quéenes. His truth was ſuch to all theſe princes, that he euer liued towards them ſine macula, ſeruing in the court thrée ſcore years. And although he bare this great ſaile, yet prouided he to paie euerie man iuſtlie that he owght them. His bountifulneſſe, liberalitie, and courteſie to diuerſe noble men, gentlemen and others, attending in the court was ſuch, that they were euer glad to haue him there amongſt them; and his ſtoutneſſe & haſtie courage was ſuch, and ſo well knowen to the Frenchmen, as they both feared and loued him wonderfullie. In the end he was ſo worthie a gentleman, and ſuch a neceſſarie member in the commonwealth, as his want cannot but be lamented of all good and true Engliſh harts. But the almightie muſt be ſerued when his good will and pleaſure is.]

Sir Thomas Cheinee an old ſeruitor in court. See more of him before, pag. 973, 974.

A commendation of his courteſie, bountifulnes, and warlike ſtoutneſſe.

The thirtéenth of December being tueſdaie, the corps of quéene Marie was right honorablie conueied from hir manor of S. Iames, vnto the abbeie of Weſtminſter. Hir picture was laid on the coffin, apparelled in hir roiall robes, with a crowne of gold ſet on the head thereof, after a ſolemne manner. In the abbeie was a rich and ſumptuous hearſe prepared and ſet vp with wax, and richlie decked with penons, baners, and ſcutchions, of the armes of England and France, vnder which hearſe the corpſe reſted all that night, and the next daie it was brought into the new chappell, where king Henrie the ſeuenth lieth, and was interred there in the chappell on the north ſide.

Quéene Marie buried.

The foure and twentith of December, being the euen of the natiuitie of our Lord, was a ſolemne obſequie kept in the abbeie church of Weſtminſter, for Charles the ſeuenth late emperour, who departed this life in September laſt, the one and twentith of the ſame moneth, in the monaſterie of S. Iuſtus in Caſtile, being then of age about eight and fiftie yeares, hauing gouerned the empire before he renounced the ſame a ſix and thirtie yeares; and his kingdoms of Caſtile, Arragon, Naples, Sicill, and others, aboue fortie yeares.

An obſequie kept for the emperour.

Moreouer in this yeare 1558 there died two of the ſaid emperors ſiſters, that went with him into Spaine, after he had reſigned the empire, to wit, quéene Leonor, firſt maried vnto Emanuell king of Portugall, and after his deceaſſe vnto the French king Francis the firſt of that name: ſhe deceaſſed in Februarie laſt paſt. His other ſiſter Marie, quéene of Hungarie, late regent of the low countries, deceaſſed on ſaint Lukes daie, the eightéenth of October laſt paſt. And ſo the one preuenting him, the other taried not long after him, in ſo much that king Philip did celebrate the exequies in the towne of Bruſſels, of his father the emperour, of his aunt Marie quéene of Hungarie, and of his wife Marie quéene of England, in this preſent moneth of December ſubſequentlie, after the moſt pompous and ſolemne manner.

The letanie, The epiſtle and goſpell in Engliſh.

On ſundaie the firſt of Ianuarie, by vertue of the quéenes proclamation, the Engliſh letanie was read accordinglie as was vſed in hir graces chappell in churches through the citie of London. And likewiſe the epiſtle and goſpell of the daie began to be read in the ſame churches at maſſe time in the Engliſh toong, by commandement giuen by the lord maior, according to the tenour of the ſame proclamation, publiſhed the thirtith of the laſt month. On thurſdaie the twelfe of Ianuarie, the quéenes maieſtie remoued from hir palace of Weſtminſter by water vnto the tower of London, the lord maior and aldermen in their barge, and all the citizens with their barges decked and trimmed with targets and banners of their myſteries accordinglie attending on hir grace.

The quéene remoueth from weſtminſter to the tower by water.

The bachellers barge of the lord maiors companie, to wit, the mercers had their barge with a foiſt trimmed with thrée tops, and artillerie aboord, gallantlie appointed to wait vpon them, ſhooting off luſtilie as they went, with great and pleaſant melodie of inſtruments, which plaied in moſt ſweet and heauenlie maner. Hir grace ſhot the bridge about two of the clocke in the after noone, at the ſtill of the ebbe, the lord maior and the reſt following after hir barge, attending the ſame, till hir maieſtie tooke land at the priuie ſtaires at the tower wharfe: and then the ſaid lord maior with the other barges returned, paſſing through the bridge againe with the floud, and landed at the wharfe of the thrée cranes in the Vintrie. Vpon ſaturdaie, which was the fourtéenth daie of Ianuarie, in the yeare of our Lord God 1558, about two of the clocke at after noone, the moſt noble and chriſtian princeſſe, our moſt dread ſouereigne ladie Eliſabeth, by the grace of God quéene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c: marched from the tower, to paſſe through the citie of London toward Weſtminſter, richlie furniſhed, and moſt honourablie accompanied, as well with gentlemen, barons, and other the nobilitie of this realme, as alſo with a notable traine of goodlie and beautifull ladies, richlie appointed.

Saterday 14° Janua

The quéene paſſeth from the tower to weſtminſter through the citie.

At hir entring the citie, ſhe was of the people receiued maruellous intierlie, as appeared by the aſſemblies praiers, wiſhes, welcommings, cries, tender words, and all other ſignes, which argued a wonderfull earneſt loue of moſt obedient ſubiects towards their ſouereigne. And on the other ſide, hir grace by holding vp hir hands, and merrie countenance to ſuch as ſtood farre off, and moſt tender and gentle language to thoſe that ſtood nigh vnto hir grace, did declare hirſelfe no leſſe thankefullie to receiue hir peoples good will, than they louinglie offered it vnto hir. To all that wiſhed hir grace well, ſhe gaue heartie thanks; & to ſuch as bad God ſaue hir grace, ſhe ſaid againe God ſaue them all, and thanked them with all hir hart. So that on the other ſide there was nothing but gladneſſe, nothing but praier, nothing but comfort. The quéenes maieſtie reioiſed maruellouſlie to ſée that ſo excéedinglie ſhewed towards hir hir grace, which all good princes haue euer deſired, I meane ſo erneſt loue of ſubiects, ſo euidentlie declared euen to hir graces owne perſon, being caried in the midſt of them.

The quéene ſaluteth them that ſalute hir.

The peoples hearts wholie ſet vpon Eliſabeth.

The people againe were wonderfullie rauiſhed with the louing anſwers and geſtures of their princeſſe, like to the which they had before tried at hir firſt comming to the tower from Hatfield. This hir graces louing behauiour preconceiued in the peoples heads, vpon theſe conſiderations was then throughlie confirmed, and in déed implanted a wonderfull hope in them touching hir worthie gouernment in the reſt of hir reigne. For in all hir paſſage ſhe did not onelie ſhew hir moſt gratious loue toward the people in generall, but alſo priuatlie if the baſer perſonages had either offered hir grace anie flowers, or ſuch like, as a ſignification of their good will, or moued to hir anie ſute; ſhe moſt gentlie, to the common reioiſing of all the lookers on, and priuat comfort of that partie, ſtaied hir chariot, and heard their requeſts. So that if a man would ſaie well, he could not better tearme the citie of London that time, than a ſtage, wherein was ſhewed the wonderfull ſpectacle of a noble hearted princeſſe towards hir moſt louing people, and the peoples excéeding comfort in beholding ſo worthie a ſouereigne, & hearing ſo princelike a voice, which could not but haue ſet the enimie on fire, ſith the vertue is in the enimie alwaie commended, much more could not but inflame hir naturall, obedient, and moſt louing people, whoſe weale leaneth onelie vpon hir grace, and hir gouernment.

The citie of London a ſtage for the time of this ſolemnitie.

Thus therefore the quéenes maieſtie paſſed from the tower, till ſhe came to Fanchurch, the people on each ſide ioyouſlie beholding the view of ſo gratious a ladie their quéene, and hir grace no leſſe gladlie noting and obſeruing the ſame. Néere vnto Fanchurch was erected a ſcaffold richlie furniſhed, whereon ſtood a noiſe of inſtruments, and a child in coſtlie apparell, which was appointed to welcome the quéenes maieſtie in the whole cities behalfe. Againſt which place when hir grace came, of hir owne will ſhe commanded the chariot to be ſtaied, and that the noiſe might be appeaſed, till the child had vttered his welcoming oration, which he ſpake in Engliſh as here followeth:

A ſcaffold ſet vp at Fanchurch with melodie, &c.

O peereleſſe ſouereigne queene, behold what this thy towne
Hath thee preſented with,
at thy firſt entrance heere:
Behold with how rich hope
ſhe leades thee to thy crowne,
Behold with what two gifts,
ſhe comforteth thy cheere.
The firſt is bleſſing toongs,
which manie a welcome ſaie,
Which praie thou maiſt doo well,
which praiſe thee to the skie.
Which wiſh to thee long life,
which bleſſe this happie daie,
Which to thy kingdome heapes
all that in toongs can lie.
The ſecond is true hearts,
which loue thee from their root,
Whoſe ſute is triumph now,
and ruleth all the game,
Which faithfulneſſe haue woone,
and all vntruth driuen out,
Which skip for ioy, when as they heare thy happie name.
Welcome therefore ô queene,
as much as heart can thinke,
Welcome againe ô queene,
as much as toong can tell:
Welcome to ioyous toongs,
and hearts that will not ſhrinke,
God thee preſerue we praie,
and wiſh thee euer well.

Theſe verſes were vttered by a child to the quéene who gaue good eare to them.

At which words of the laſt line, all the people gaue a great ſhout, wiſhing with one aſſent as the child had ſaid. And the quéens maieſtie thanked moſt heartilie both the citie for this hir gentle receiuing at the firſt, & alſo the people for confirming the ſame.

Here was noted in the quéenes maieſties countenance, during the time that the child ſpake, beſides a perpetuall attentiueneſſe in hir face, a maruellous change in looke, as the childs words either touched hir perſon, or the peoples tongs and hearts. So that ſhe with reioiſing viſage did euidentlie declare that the words tooke no leſſe place in hir mind, than they were moſt heartilie pronounced by the child, as from all the hearts of hir moſt heartie citizens. The ſame verſes were faſtened vp in a table vpon the ſcaffold, and the Latine thereof likewiſe in Latine verſes in another table, as hereafter inſueth:

The verſes in Latine which the child vttered to ẏ quéene in Engliſh.

Pro tua quæ ingreſſu dederit tibi munera primo,
O regina parem non habitura, vide.
Ad diadema tuum, te ſpe quàm diuite mittat,
Quæ duo lætitiæ det tibi dona, vide.
Munus habes primum, linguas bona multa precantes,
Quæ te quum laudant, tum pia vota ſonant,
Fœlicemque diem hunc dicunt, tibi ſæcula longa
Optant, & quicquid deniq; longa poteſt.
Altera dona feres, vera, & tui amantia corda,

Now when the child had pronounced his oration, and the quéenes highneſſe ſo thankefullie had receiued it, ſhe marched forward toward Gratious ſtréet, where at the vpper end before the ſigne of the eagle, the citie had erected a gorgeous and ſumptuous arch as here followeth. A ſtage was made which extended from the one ſide of the ſtréet to the other, richlie vawted with battlements conteining thrée ports, and ouer the middlemoſt was aduanced thrée ſeuerall ſtages in degrées.

A great ſtage arched and verie ſumptuous at Gratious ſtréet.

Vpon the loweſt ſtage was made one ſeat roiall, wherein were placed two perſonages, repreſenting king Henrie the ſeuenth, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter of king Edward the fourth; either of theſe two princes ſitting vnder one cloth of eſtate in their ſeates, none otherwiſe diuided, but that the one of them which was king Henrie the ſeuenth, procéeding out of the houſe of Lancaſter, was incloſed in a red roſe, and the other which was quéene Elizabeth, being heire to the houſe of Yorke, incloſed with a white roſe, each of them roiallie crowned, and decentlie apparelled, as apperteineth to princes, with ſcepters in their hands, and one vawt ſurmounting their heads, wherein aptlie were placed two tables, each conteining the title of thoſe two princes. And theſe perſonages were ſo ſet, that the one of them ioined hands with the other, with the ring of matrimonie perceiued on the finger. Out of the which two roſes ſprang two branches gathered into one, which were directed vpward to the ſecond ſtage or degrée, wherein was placed one repreſenting the valiant & noble prince king Henrie the eight, which ſprong out of the former ſtocke, crowned with a crowne imperiall, and by him ſat one repreſenting the right worthie ladie quéene Anne, wife to the ſaid king Henrie the eight, and mother to our moſt ſoueraigne ladie quéene Elizabeth that now is, both apparelled with ſcepters and diadems, and other furniture due to the ſtate of a king and quéene, and two tables ſurmounting their heads, wherein were written their names and titles.

The vnitie of the white roſe and the red.

Vertuous quéene Anne mother to gratious quéene Elizabeth.

From their ſeat alſo procéeded vpwards one branch, directed to the third and vppermoſt ſtage or degrée, wherein likewiſe was planted a ſeat roiall, in the which was ſet one repreſenting the quéenes moſt excellent maieſtie Elizabeth, now our moſt dread ſoueraigne ladie, crowned and apparelled as the other princes were. Out of the fore part of this pageant was made a ſtanding for a child, which at the quéenes maieſties comming declared vnto hir the whole meaning of the ſaid pageant. The two ſides of the ſame were filled with lowd noiſes of muſicke. And all emptie places thereof were furniſhed with ſentences concerning vnitie, and the whole pageant garniſhed with red roſes and white. And in the fore front of the ſame pageant, in a faire wreath, was written the name and title of the ſame, which was; The vniting of the two houſes of Lancaſter and Yorke. This pageant was grounded vpon the quéenes maieſties name. For like as the long warre betwéene the two houſes of Yorke and Lancaſter then ended, when Elizabeth daughter to Edward the fourth matched in mariage with Henrie the ſeuenth, heire to the houſe of Lancaſter: ſo ſith that the quéenes maieſties name was Elizabeth, & forſomuch as ſhe is the onelie heire of Henrie the eight, which came of both the houſes, as the knitting vp of concord: it was deuiſed, that like as Elizabeth was the firſt occaſion of concord, ſo ſhe another Elizabeth, might mainteine the ſame among hir ſubiects, ſo that vnitie was the end whereat the whole deuiſe ſhot, as the quéenes maieſties name moued the firſt ground.

The p[illegible] planting [illegible] [illegible] in colo[illegible]

Vnitie the end whereat the deuiſe of the pageant was directed.

The pageant now againſt the quéenes maieſties comming was addreſſed with children, repreſenting the forenamed perſonages, with all furniture due vnto the ſetting forth of ſuch a matter well meant, as the argument declared coſtlie and ſumptuouſlie ſet forth, as the beholders can beare witneſſe. Now the quéenes maieſtie drew néere vnto the ſaid pageant. And for ſo much as the noiſe was great, by reaſon of the preaſe of people, ſo that ſhe could ſcarſe heare the child which did interpret the ſaid pageant, and hir chariot was paſſed ſo far forwards, that ſhe could not well ſée the perſonages repreſenting the kings & quéenes aboue named: ſhe required to haue the matter opened vnto hir, and what they ſignified, with the end of vnitie and ground of hir name, according as is before expreſſed. For the ſight whereof hir grace cauſed hir chariot to be remoued backe, and yet hardlie could ſhe ſée, becauſe the children were ſet ſomewhat with the fartheſt in. But after that hir grace had vnderſtood the meaning thereof, ſhe thanked the citie, praiſed the faireneſſe of the worke, and promiſed that ſhe would doo hir whole indeuor for the continuall preſeruation of concord, as the pageant did import. The child appointed in the ſtanding aboue named, to open the meaning of the ſaid pageant, ſpake theſe words vnto hir grace:

The quéene is deſirous to know the meaning of euerie repreſentation.

The meaning of the pageant opened by the ſpéech of a child.

The two princes that ſit,
vnder one cloth of ſtate,
The man in the red roſe,
the woman in the white:
Henrie the ſeauenth, and queene Elizabeth his mate,
By ring of marriage,
as man and wife vnite.
Both heires to both their blouds,
to Lancaſter the king,
The queene to Yorke, in one
the two houſes did knit:
Of whome as heire to both,
Henrie the eight did ſpring,
In whoſe ſeate his true heire thou queene Elizabeth dooſt ſit.
Therefore as ciuill warre,
and ſhead of bloud did ceaſe,
When theſe two houſes were vnited into one;
So now that iarre ſhall ſtint,

and quietneſſe increaſe,
We truſt, ô noble queene,
thou wilt be cauſe alone.

The which alſo were written in Latine verſes, and both drawen in two tables vpon the fore front of the foreſaid pageant, as hereafter orderlie followeth:

The ſame verſes in Latine.

Sentences placed therein concerning vnitie.

Theſe verſes concerne concord and diſſention.

Nulla concordes animos vires domant.

Qui idem tenent, diutius tenent.
Regnum diuiſum facilè diſſoluitur.
Ciuitas concors armis fruſtrà tentatur.
Omnium gentium conſenſus firmat fidem, &c.

Theſe verſes and other pretie ſentences were drawen in void places of this pageant, all tending to one end, that quietnes might be mainteined, and all diſſention diſplaced: and that by the queenes maieſtie heire to agreement, and agreeing in name with hir, which tofore had ioined thoſe houſes, which had beene the occaſion of much debate and ciuill war within this realme, as maie appeere to ſuch as will ſearch chronicles, but be not to be touched herein: onelie declaring hir graces paſſage through the citie, and what prouiſion the citie made therefore. And yer the queenes maieſtie came within hearing of this pageant, ſhe ſent certeine as alſo at all the other pageants, to require the people to be ſilent. For hir maieſtie was diſpoſed to heare all that ſhould be ſaid vnto hir.

When the queenes maieſtie had heard the childs oration, and vnderſtood the meaning of the pageant at large, ſhe marched forward toward Cornehill, alwaie receiued with like reioiſing of the people. And there as hir grace paſſed by the conduit, which was curiouſlie trimmed againſt that ſame time, with rich banners adorned, and a noiſe of lowd inſtruments vpon the top thereof, ſhe ſpied the ſecond pageant. And bicauſe ſhe feared for the peoples noiſe, that ſhe ſhuld not heare the child which did expound the ſame, ſhe inquired what that pageant was yer that ſhee came to it; and there vnderſtood, that there was a child repreſenting hir maieſties perſon, placed in a ſeat of gouernement, ſupported by certeine vertues which ſuppreſſed their contrarie vices vnder their feet, and ſo forth, as in the deſcription of the ſaid pageant ſhall hereafter appeere.

The conduit in Cornehill decked, and a noiſe of loud inſtruments on the top of the ſame.

This pageant ſtanding in the nether end of Cornhill, was extended from the one ſide of the ſtreet to the other. And in the ſame pageant was deuiſed three gates all open, and ouer the middle part thereof was erected one chaire or ſeate roiall, with a cloth of eſtate to the ſame apperteining, wherein was placed a child repreſenting the queenes highneſſe, with conſideration had for place conuenient for a table, which conteined hir name and title: and in a comlie wreath artificiallie & well deuiſed, with perfect ſight and vnderſtanding to the people.

The deuiſe of the pageant in Cornehill.

In the front of the ſame pageant was written the name and title thereof, which is; The ſeat of worthie gouernance. Which ſeat was made in ſuch artificiall maner, as to the appearance of the lookers on, the fore part ſeemed to haue no ſtaie, & therefore of force was ſtaied by liuelie perſonages, which perſonages were in number foure, ſtanding and ſtaieng the forefront of the ſame ſeat roiall, each hauing his face to the queene and people, whereof euerie one had a table to expreſſe their effects, which are vertues, namelie Pure religion, Loue of ſubiects, Wiſedome and Iuſtice, which did tread their contrarie vices vnder their feet, that is to wit; Pure religion did tread vpon Superſtition and Ignorance, Loue of ſubiects did tread vpon Rebellion and Inſolencie, Wiſedome did tread vpon Follie and Vaine glorie, Iuſtice did tread vpon Adulation and Briberie. Ech of theſe perſonages according to their proper names and properties, had not onelie their names in plaine and perfect writing ſet vpon their breaſts eaſilie to be read of all: but alſo euerie of them was aptlie and properlie apparelled, ſo that his apparell and name did agree to expreſſe the ſame perſon, that in title he repreſented.

Liuely workmanſhip and right commendable.

A proper morall.

This part of the pageant was thus appointed and furniſhed. The two ſides ouer the two ſide ports had in them placed a noiſe of inſtruments, which immediatlie after the childs ſpeech, gaue an heauenlie melodie. Vpon the top or vppermoſt part of the ſaid pageant, ſtood the armes of England, roiallie purtratured with the proper beaſts to vphold the ſame. One repreſenting the queenes highneſſe ſat in this ſeat crowned with an imperiall crowne, and before hir ſeat was a conuenient place appointed for one child, which did interpret and applie the ſaid pageant, as hereafter ſhall be declared. Euerie void place was furniſhed with proper ſentences, commending the ſeat ſupported by vertues, and defacing the vices, to the vtter extirpation of rebellion, and to euerlaſting continuance of quietneſſe and peace. The queenes maieſtie approching nigh vnto this pageant thus beautified and furniſhed in all points, cauſed hir charriot to be drawne nigh therevnto, that hir grace might heare the childs ſhort oration, which was this:

How the pageant was appointed and furniſhed.

The queene draweth neere the pagent to heare the childs oration.

While that religion true,
ſhall ignorance ſuppreſſe,
And with hir weightie foot,
breake ſuperſtitions head:
While loue of ſubiects ſhall rebellion diſtreſſe,
And with zeale to the prince,
inſolencie downe tread.
While iuſtice flattering toongs,
and briberie can deface,
While follie and vaine glorie,
to wiſedome yeeld their hands;
So long ſhall gouernement not ſwarue from hir right race,
But wrong decaieth ſtill,
and rightwiſeneſſe vp ſtands.
Now all thy ſubiects hearts,
ô prince of peereleſſe fame,
Do truſt theſe vertues ſhall
mainteine vp thy throne:
And vice be kept downe ſtill,
the wicked put to ſhame,
That good with good may ioy,
and naught with naught may mone.

The ground or morall of the pageant.

The quéenes promiſe with thanks to the citie.

A pageant at Soper lane end.

Beſide theſe verſes, there were placed in euerie void roome of the pagent, both in Engliſh & Latine, ſuch ſentences as aduanced the ſeat of gouernance vpholden by vertue. The ground of this pageant was, that like as by vertues (which doo abundantlie appeare in hir grace) the quéenes maieſtie was eſtabliſhed in the ſeat of gouernment: ſo ſhe ſhuld ſit faſt in the ſame, ſo long as ſhe imbraſed vertue, and held vice vnder foot. For if vice once got vp the head, it would put the ſeat of gouernement in perill of falling. The quéenes maieſtie when ſhe had heard the child, and vnderſtood the pageant at full, gaue the citie alſo thanks therefore, & moſt gratiouſlie promiſed hir good indeuor for the maintenance of the ſaid vertues, and ſuppreſſion of vices, and ſo marched on, till ſhe came againſt the great conduit in Cheape, which was beautified with pictures and ſentences accordinglie, againſt hir graces comming thither. Againſt Soper lane end was extended from the one ſide of the ſtréet to the other, a pageant which had thrée gates all open: ouer the middlemoſt whereof were erected thrée ſeuerall ſtages, whereon ſat eight children, as hereafter followeth. On the vppermoſt one child, on the middle thrée, on the loweſt foure, each hauing the proper name of the bleſſing that they did repreſent, written in a table, & placed aboue their head.

In the forefront of this pageant, before the children which did repreſent the bleſſings, was a conuenient ſtanding caſt out for a child to ſtand, which did expound the ſaid pageant vnto the quéenes maieſtie, as was doone in the other before. Euerie of theſe children were appointed and apparelled, according vnto the bleſſing which he did repreſent. And on the forepart of the ſaid pageant was written in faire letters the name of the foreſaid pageant in this manner.

The inſcription fixed or ſet vpon the front of the ſaid pageant.

The eight beatitudes expreſſed in the fift chapter of the goſpell of ſaint Matthew, applied to our ſouereigne ladie quéene Eliſabeth.

The meaning of the pageant.

Ouer the two ſide ports was placed a noiſe of inſtruments. And all the void places in the pageant were furniſhed with prettie ſaiengs, commending & touching the meaning of the ſaid pageant, which was the promiſes & bleſſings of almightie God, made to his people. Before that the quéenes highneſſe came vnto this pageant, ſhe required the matter ſomwhat to be opened vnto hir, that hir grace might the better vnderſtand, what ſhould afterward by the child be ſaid vnto hir. Which ſo was, that the citie had there erected the pageant with eight children, repreſenting the eight bleſſings touched in the fift chapter of ſaint Matthew. Whereof euerie one vpon iuſt conſiderations, was applied vnto hir highneſſe, and that the people thereby put hir grace in mind, that as hir good doings before had giuen iuſt occaſion, why that theſe bleſſings might fall vpon hir, that ſo if hir grace did continue in hir goodneſſe as ſhe had entered, ſhe ſhould hope for the fruit of theſe promiſes due vnto them that doo exerciſe themſelues in the bleſſings: which hir grace heard maruellous gratiouſlie, and required that the charriot might be remooued towards the pageant, that ſhe might better perceiue the childs words, which were theſe, the quéenes maieſtie giuing moſt attentiue eare, and requiring that the peoples noiſe might be ſtaid. The verſes were as follow:

The quéene giueth attentiue eare to the childs words.

Thou haſt beene eight times bleſt,
ô queene of worthie fame,
By meekeneſſe of thy ſpirit,
when care did thee beſet,
By mourning in thy griefe,
by mildneſſe in thy blame,
By hunger and by thirſt,
and iuſtice couldſt none get.
By mercie ſhewd, not felt,
by cleanneſſe of thine heart,
By ſeeking peace alwaies,
by perſecution wrong.
Therefore truſt thou in God,
ſith he hath helpt thy ſmart,
That as his promiſe is,
ſo he will make thee ſtrong.

A conſent in all ſides of prince, people and children.

When theſe words were ſpoken, all the people wiſhed, that as the child had vttered, ſo God would ſtrengthen hir grace againſt all hir aduerſaries, whome the quéenes maieſtie did moſt gentlie thanke for their ſo louing wiſh. Theſe verſes were painted on the left ſide of the ſaid pageant, and other in Latine on the other ſide, which were theſe héere inſuing:

Qui lugent hilares fient, qui mitia geſtant
Pectora, multa ſoli iugera culta metent:
Iuſtitiam eſuriens ſitiénſue replebitur: ipſum
Fas homini puro corde videre Deum:
Quem alterius miſeret, Dominus miſerebitur huius:
Pacificus quiſquis, filius ille Dei eſt:
Propter iuſtitiam quiſquis patietur habétque
Demiſſam mentem cœlica regna capit.
Huic hominum generi terram, mare, ſidera, vouit
Omnipotens, horum quiſque beatus erit.

The ſtandard and croſſe in Cheape adorned and trimmed.

A pageant erected at the little conduit in Cheape.

Beſides theſe, euerie void place in the pageant was furniſhed with ſentences touching the matter and ground of the ſaid pageant. When all that was to be ſaid in this pageant was ended, the quéenes maieſtie paſſed on forwards in Cheapſide. At the ſtandard in Cheape, which was dreſſed faire againſt the time, was placed a noiſe of trumpets, with banners and other furniture. The croſſe likewiſe was alſo made faire, and well trimmed. And néere vnto the ſame, vpon the porch of ſaint Peters church doore, ſtood the waits of the citie, which did giue a pleaſant noiſe with their inſtruments, as the quéenes maieſtie did paſſe by, which on euerie ſide caſt hir countenance, and wiſhed well to all hir moſt louing people. Soone after that hir grace paſſed the croſſe, ſhe had eſpied the pageant erected at the little conduit in Cheape, and incontinent required to know what it might ſignifie. And it was told hir grace, that there was placed Time. Time, quoth ſhe? And time hath brought me hither. And ſo foorth the whole matter was opened to hir grace, as hereafter ſhall be declared in the deſcription of the pageant.

The quéene promiſeth the citie often to read ouer the bible.

But in the opening, when hir grace vnderſtood that the bible in Engliſh ſhould be deliuered vnto hir by Truth, which was therein repreſented by a child: ſhe thanked the citie for that gift, and ſaid, that ſhe would oftentimes read ouer that booke, commanding ſir Iohn Parrat, one of the knights which held vp hir canopie, to go before, and to receiue the booke. But learning that it ſhould be deliuered vnto hir grace downe by a ſilken lace, ſhe cauſed him to ſtaie, and ſo paſſed forward till ſhe came againſt the aldermen in the high end of Cheape before the little conduit, where the companies of the citie ended, which began at Fanchurch, & ſtood along the ſtréets, one by an other incloſed with railes, hanged with cloths, and themſelues well apparelled with manie rich furres, and their liuerie hoods vpon their ſhoulders in comelie and ſéemelie maner, hauing before them ſundrie perſons well apparelled in ſilks and chains of gold: as wiflers and garders of the ſaid companies, beſides a number of rich hangings, as well of tapiſtrie, arras, cloths of gold, ſiluer, veluet, damaske, ſattin, and other ſilks plentifullie hanged all the waie, as the quéenes highneſſe paſſed from the tower through the citie.

The ſeuerall companies of the citie ſhew their ioifull hearts at the quéenes comming.

Out at the windowes and penthouſes of euerie houſe did hang a number of rich and coſtlie banners and ſtreamers, till hir grace came to the vpper end of Cheape. Where by appointment, the right worſhipfull maſter Ranulph Cholmelie recorder of the citie, preſented to the quéenes maieſtie a purſſe of crimſon ſattin, richlie wrought with gold, wherein the citie gaue vnto the quéens maieſtie a thouſand marks in gold, as maſter recorder did declare bréefelie vnto the quéens maieſtie, whoſe words tended to this end; that the lord maior, his brethren, and communaltie of the citie, to declare their gladneſſe and goodwill towards the quéenes maieſtie, did preſent hir grace with that gold, deſiring hir grace to continue their good and gratious quéene, and not to eſtéeme the value of the gift, but the mind of the giuers. The quéens maieſtie with both hir hands tooke the purſſe, and anſwered to him againe maruellous pithilie; and ſo pithilie, that the ſtanders by, as they imbraced intirelie hir gratious anſwer, ſo they maruelled at the couching thereof, which was in words truelie reported theſe. I thanke my lord maior, his brethren, and you all. And whereas your requeſt is that I ſhould continue your good ladie and quéene, be yée enſured, that I will be as good vnto you, as euer quéene was to hir people. No will in me can lacke, neither doo I truſt ſhall there lacke anie power. And perſuade your ſelues, that for the ſafetie and quietneſſe of you all, I will not ſpare (if néed be) to ſpend my bloud, God thanke you all. Which anſwer of ſo noble an hearted princeſſe, if it mooued a maruellous ſhout & reioiſing, it is nothing to be maruelled at, ſith both the hartineſſe thereof was ſo woonderfull, and the words ſo iointlie knit.

The citie giueth a thouſand marks to the quéene in a purſſe.

The verie words of the quéene vttered to the lord maior, &c.

When hir grace had thus anſwered the recorder, ſhe marched toward the little conduit, where was erected a pageant with ſquare proportion, ſtanding directlie before the ſame conduit, with battlements accordinglie. And in the ſame pageant was aduanced two hilles or mounteins of conuenient height. The one of them being on the north ſide of the ſame pageant, was made cragged, barren, and ſtonie, in the which was erected one trée, artificiallie made, all withered and dead, with branches accordinglie. And vnder the ſame trée at the foot thereof ſat one in homelie and rude apparell crookedlie, and in mourning maner, hauing ouer his head in a table, written in Latine and Engliſh, his name which was Ruinoſa reſpublica, A decaied commonweale. And vpon the ſame withered trée were fixed certeine tables, wherein were written proper ſentences, expreſſing the cauſes of the decaie of a commonweale. The other hill on the ſouth ſide was made faire, freſh, gréene and beautifull, the ground thereof full of floures and beautie, and on the ſame was erected alſo one trée, verie freſh and faire, vnder the which ſtood vpright one freſh perſonage well apparelled and appointed, whoſe name alſo was written both in Engliſh and Latine, which was, Reſpublica bene inſtituta, A flouriſhing commonweale.

A pageant of a ſquare proportion, and what things the ſame had repreſented in it.

Reſpublica ruinoſa.

Reſpublica bene inſtituta.

And vpon the ſame trée alſo were fixed certeine tables conteining ſentences, which expreſſed the cauſes of a flouriſhing commonweale. In the middle betwéene the ſaid hils, was made artificiallie one hollow place or caue, with doore and locke incloſed, out of the which, a little before the quéenes highneſſe comming thither, iſſued one perſonage, whoſe name was Time, apparelled as an old man, with a ſieth in his hand, hauing wings artificiallie made, leading a perſonage of leſſer ſtature than himſelfe, which was finelie and well apparelled, all clad in white ſilke, and directlie ouer hir head was ſet hir name and title in Latine and Engliſh, Temporis filia, The daughter of Time. Which two ſo appointed, went forwards toward the ſouth ſide of the pageant. And on hir breſt was written hir proper name, which was Veritas, Truth, who held a booke in hir hand, vpon the which was written Verbum veritatis, The word of truth. And out of the ſouth ſide of the pageant was caſt a ſtanding for a child, which ſhould interpret the ſame pageant. Againſt whome when the quéenes maieſtie came, he ſpake vnto hir grace theſe ſwéet words:

Veritas temporis filia, expounded to the quéene.

This old man with the ſieth, old father Time they call,
And hir his daughter Truth,
which holdeth yonder booke:
Whome he out of his rocke, hath brought foorth to vs all,
From whence this manie yeares ſhe durſt not once out looke.
The ruthfull wight that ſits
vnder the barren tree,
Reſembleth to vs the forme,
when common weales decaie:
But when they be in ſtate triumphant, you may ſee
By him in freſh attire, that ſits vnder the baie.
Now ſith that Time againe, his daughter Truth hath brought,
We truſt ô worthie queene,
thou wilt this truth imbrace,
And ſith thou vnderſtandſt,
the good eſtate and naught,
We truſt wealth thou wilt plant,
and barrennes diſplace.
But for to heale the ſore,
and cure that is not ſeene,
Which thing the booke of truth,
dooth teach in writing plaine:
Shee dooth preſent to thee
the ſame, ô worthie queene,
For that, that words doo flie,
but written dooth remaine.

The interpretation of the pageant deliuered in ſpéech to the quéene by a child.

When the child had thus ended his ſpéech, he reached his booke towards the quéenes maieſtie, which a little before Truth had let downe vnto him from the hill, which by ſir Iohn Parrat was receiued, and deliuered vnto the quéene. But ſhée as ſoone as ſhe had receiued the booke, kiſſed it, and with both hir hands held vp the ſame, and ſo laid it vpon hir breſt, with great thanks to the citie therefore: and ſo went forward towards Paules churchyard. The former matter which was rehearſed vnto the quéenes maieſtie, was written in two tables, on either ſide the pageant eight verſes, and in the middeſt, theſe in Latine:

The quéene receiueth Verbum Dei, kiſſeth it, and laieth it in hir lap.

Ille, vides falcem læua qui ſuſtinet vncam,
Tempus is eſt, cui ſtat filia vera comes:
Hanc pater exeſa deductam rupe reponit
In lucem, quam non viderat antè diu.
Qui ſedet à læua cultu malè triſtis inepto
Quem duris creſcens cautibus orbis obit,
Nos monet effigie qua ſit reſpublica, quando
Corruit, at contra quando beata viget.
Ille docet iuuenis forma ſpectandus, amictu
Scitus, & æterna laurea fronde virens.

The ſentences written in Latine and Engliſh vpon both the trées, declaring the cauſes of both eſtates, and firſt of a ruinous commonweale were theſe: Want of Gods feare, diſobedience to rulers, blindneſſe of guides, briberie in magiſtrats, rebellion in ſubiects, ciuill diſcord, flattering of princes, vnmercifulneſſe in rulers, vnthankefulneſſe in ſubiects. Cauſes of a flouriſhing commonweale are theſe: Feare of God, a wiſe prince, learned rulers, obedience to officers, obedient ſubiects, louers of the commonweale, vertue rewarded, vice chaſtened.

The meaning in bréefe of this pagent.

The matter of this pageant dependeth of them that went before. For as the firſt declared hir grace to come out of the houſe of vnitie, the ſecond that ſhe is placed in the ſeat of gouernement staid with vertues, to the ſuppreſſion of vice; and therefore in the third, the eight bleſſings of almightie God might well be applied vnto hir: ſo this fourth now is, to put hir grace in remembrance of the ſtate of the commonweale, which Time with Truth his daughter doth reueale: which Truth alſo hir grace hath receiued, and therefore cannot but be mercifull and carefull for the good gouernement thereof. From thence, the quéenes maieſtie paſſed toward Paules churchyard, and when ſhe came ouer againſt Paules ſchoole, a child appointed by the ſchoolemaiſter thereof, pronounced a certeine oration in Latine, and certeine verſes, which alſo were there written as followeth:

A ſcholer of Paules vttereth an oration in Latine to the quéene.

Which the quéenes maieſtie moſt attentiuelie hearkened vnto. And when the child had pronounced, he did kiſſe the oration which he had there faire written in paper, and deliuered it vnto the quéenes maieſtie, which moſt gentlie receiued the ſame. And when the quéenes maieſtie had heard all that was there offered to be ſpoken, then hir grace marched toward Ludgate, where ſhe was receiued with a noiſe of inſtruments, the forefront of the gate being finelie trimmed vp againſt hir maieſties comming. From thence by the way as ſhe went downe toward Flétbridge, one about hir grace noted the cities charge, that there was no coſt ſpared. Hir grace anſwered, that ſhe did well conſider the ſame, and that it ſhould be remembred. An honorable anſwer, worthie a noble prince, which may comfort all hir ſubiects, conſidering that there can be no point of gentleneſſe, or obedient loue ſhewed towards hir grace, which ſhe doth not moſt tenderlie accept, and gratiouſlie weie. In this maner, the people on euerie ſide reioiſing, hir grace went forward towards the condoit in Flétſtréet, where was the fift and laſt pageant erected in forme following.

The quéenes maieſtie conſidereth the cities charge.

From the condoit, which was beautified with painting, vnto the northſide of the ſtréet was erected a ſtage, imbatteled with foure towers, and in the ſame a ſquare plat riſing with degrées; and vpon the vppermoſt degrée was placed a chaire, or ſeat roiall, and behind the ſame ſeat, in curious artificiall maner was erected a trée of reaſonable heigth, and ſo farre aduanced aboue the ſeat, as it did well and ſéemelie ſhadow the ſame, without indamaging the ſight of anie part of the pageant: and the ſame trée was beautified with leaues as gréene as art could deuiſe, being of a conuenient greatneſſe, and conteining thereupon the fruit of the date. And on the top of the ſame trée in a table was ſet the name thereof, which was a palme trée, and in the aforeſaid ſeat or chaire was placed * a ſéemelie and meet perſonage richlie apparelled in parlement robes, with a ſcepter in hir hand, as a quéene, crowned with an open crowne, whoſe name and title was in a table fixed ouer hir head, in this ſort: Debora the iudge and reſtorer of the houſe of Iſraell: Iudic. 4. And the other degrées on either ſide were furniſhed with ſix perſonages, two repreſenting the nobilitie, two the cleargie, & two the communaltie. And before theſe perſonages was written in a table: Debora with hir eſtats conſulting for the good gouernment of Iſraell. At the féet of theſe, and the loweſt part of the pageant was ordeined a conuenient roome for a child to open the meaning of the pageant. When the quéenes maieſtie drew neare vnto this pageant, and perceiued, as in the other, the child readie to ſpeake; hir grace required ſilence, and commanded hir chariot to be remooued nigher, that ſhe might plainlie heare the child ſpeake, which ſaid as hereafter followeth:

A pageant in Flétſtréet deſcribed.

* Alluding to the quéenes maieſtie no doubt.

How willing the quéene was to heare the child ſpeake.

Iabin of Canaan king, had long by force of armes
Oppreſt the Iſraelites, which for Gods people went:
But God minding at laſt for to redreſſe their harmes,
The worthie Debora
as iudge among them ſent.
In warre ſhe through Gods aid,
did put hir foes to flight,

And with the dint of ſword
 the band of bondage braſt.
In peace ſhe, through Gods aid,
 did alwaie mainteine right,
And iudged Iſraell
 till fortie yeares were paſt.
A worthie preſident,
 ô worthie queene thou haſt,
A worthie woman iudge,
 a woman ſent for ſtaie:
And that the like to vs
 indure alwaie thou maiſt,
Thy louing ſubiects will with true harts and toongs praie.

Which verſes were written vpon the pageant, & the ſame in Latin alſo fixed in the face of the people:

Quando Dei populum Canaan, rex preſsit Iaben,
 Mittitur à magno Debora magna Deo:
Quæ populum eriperet, ſanctum ſeruaret Iudan,
 Milite quæ patrio frangeret hoſtis opes.
Hæc Domino mandante Deo lectiſsima fecit
 Fœmina, & aduerſos contudit enſe viros.
Hæc quater denos populum correxerat annos
 Iudicio, bello ſtrenua, pace grauis:
Sic, ô ſic populum bellóque & pace guberna,
 Debora ſis Anglis Eliſabetha tuis.

The morall of the foreſaid pageant.

The void places of this pageant were filled with pretie ſentences concerning the ſame matter. The ground of this laſt pageant was, that forſomuch as the next pageant before had ſet before hir graces eies the flouriſhing and deſolate ſtates of a commonweale, ſhe might by this be put in remembrance to conſult for the worthie gouernement of hir people, conſidering God oftentimes ſent women noblie to rule among men, as Debora, which gouerned Iſraell in peace the ſpace of fortie yeares: and that it behoueth both men and women ſo ruling to vſe aduiſe of good councell. When the queenes maieſtie had paſſed this pageant, ſhe marched toward Temple bar.

The children of Chriſts hoſpitall ſtand at S. Dunſtans.

But at S. Dunſtans church, where the children of the hoſpitall were appointed to ſtand with their gouernors, hir grace perceiuing a child offered to make an oration vnto hir, ſtaied hir chariot, and did caſt vp hir eies to heauen, as who ſhould ſaie; I here ſee this mercifull worke toward the poore, whome I muſt in the middeſt of my roialtie needs remember: and ſo turned hir face toward the child, which in Latine pronounced an oration to this effect: That after the queenes highneſſe had paſſed through the citie, and had ſeene ſo ſumptuous, rich, and notable ſpectacles of the citizens, which declared their moſt hartie receiuing, and ioious welcomming of hir grace into the ſame: this one ſpectacle yet reſted and remained, which was the euerlaſting ſpectacle of mercie vnto the poore members of almightie God, furthered by that famous and moſt noble prince king Henrie the eight hir graces father, erected by the citie of London, & aduanced by the moſt godlie & vertuous prince king Edward the ſixt, hir graces deare and louing brother, doubting nothing of the mercie of the queenes moſt gratious clemencie, by the which they may not onelie be relieued and helped, but alſo ſtaied and defended: and therefore inceſſantlie they would praie and crie vnto almightie God, for the long life and reigne of hir highneſſe, with moſt proſperous victorie againſt hir enimies.

Temple bar adorned with Gogmagog, & other giants.

The child after he had ended his oration, kiſſed the paper wherein the ſame was written, & reached it to the queenes maieſtie, which receiued it gratiouſlie, both with words and countenance, declaring hir gratious mind toward their reliefe. From thence hir grace came to Temple bar, which was dreſſed finelie with the two images of Gogmagog the Albion, & Corineus the Briton, two giants, big in ſtature, furniſhed accordinglie, which held in their hands aboue the gate, a table, wherein was written in Latine verſes the effect of all the pageant which the citie before had erected, which verſes were theſe inſuing:

Quinque arcus quam ſignificationem implicitam teneant.

Ecce ſub aſpectu iam contemplaberis vno
 (O princeps populi ſola columna tui)
Quicquid in immenſa paſsim perſpexeris vrbe,
 Quæ cepere omnes vnus hic arcus habet.
Primus te ſolio regni donauit auiti,
 Hæres quippe tui vera parentis eras.
Suppreſsis vitijs, domina virtute. Secundus,
 Firmauit ſedem regia virgo tuam.
Tertius ex omni poſuit te parte beatam,
 Si, qua cœpiſti pergere velle, velis.
Quarto quid verum, reſpublica lapſa quid eſſet,
 Quæ florens ſtaret te docuere tui.
Quinto magna loco monuit te Debora miſſam
 Cœlitus, in regni gaudia longa tui.
Perge ergo regina, tuæ ſpes vnica gentis,
 Hæc poſtrema vrbis ſuſcipe vota tuæ.
Viue diu, regnáq; diu, virtutibus orna
 Rem patriam, & populi ſpem tueare tui.
Sic ô ſic petitur cœlum, ſic itur in aſtra:
 Hoc virtutis opus, cætera mortis erunt.

Which verſes were alſo written in Engliſh meeter, in a leſſe table as hereafter plainelie followeth:

What the arches ſignifie.

Behold here in one view, thou maiſt ſee all that plaine,
O princeſſe vnto this thy people th'onlie ſtaie:
What eachwhere thou haſt ſeene in this wide towne, againe,
This one arch whatſoeuer
 the reſt conteind, dooth ſaie.
The firſt arch as true heire vnto thy father deere,
Did ſet thee in thy throne
 where thy grandfather ſat.
The ſecond did confirme thy ſeat as princeſſe heere, Vertues now bearing ſwaie,
 and vices bet downe flat.
The third, if that thou wouldſt go on as thou began,
Declared thee to be bleſſed on euerie ſide.
The fourth did open truth,
 and alſo taught thee whan
The commonweale ſtood well, and when it did thence ſlide.
The fift, as Debora
 declard thee to be ſent
From heauen, a long comfort to vs thy ſubiects all.
Therefore go on ô queene,
 on whom our hope is bent,
And take with thee this wiſh of thy towne as finall.
Liue long, and as long reigne,
 adorning thy countrie
With vertues, and mainteine thy peoples hope of thee.
For thus, thus heauen is woone, thus muſt thou perſe the skie,
This is by vertue wrought,
 all other needs muſt die.

On the ſouthſide was appointed by the citie a noiſe of ſinging children, and one child richlie attired as a poet, which gaue the queenes maieſtie hir farewell in the name of the whole citie, by theſe ſweet words:

The cities farewell to the queene going out at Temple barre.

As at thine entrance firſt, ô prince of high renowne,
Thou waſt preſented with toongs and hearts for thy faier:

So now ſith thou muſt needs depart out of this towne,
This citie ſendeth thee
firme hope and earneſt praier.
For all men hope in thee,
that all vertues ſhall raine,
For all men hope that thou
none error wilt ſupport,
For all men hope that thou wilt truth reſtore againe,
And mend that is amiſſe,
to all good mens comfort.
And for this hope they praie,
thou maiſt continue long,
Our queene amongſt vs here,
all vice for to ſupplant,
And for this hope they praie,
that God maie make thee ſtrong,
As by his grace puiſſant,
So in his truth conſtant.
Farewell ô worthie queene,
and as our hope is ſure,
That into errors place,
thou wilt now truth reſtore:
So truſt we that thou wilt our ſoucreigne queene endure,
And louing ladie ſtand,
from henſefoorth euermore.

The laſt words of the queene to the citie by waie of promiſe.

While theſe words were in ſaieng, and certeine wiſhes therein repeated for maintenance of truth, and rooting out of errour, ſhe now and then held vp hir hands towards heauen, and willed the people to ſaie, Amen. When the child had ended, ſhee ſaid; Be ye well aſſured I ſhall ſtand your good queene. At which ſaieng, hir grace departed forth through Templebarre toward Weſtminſter, with no leſſe ſhowting and crieng of the people, than ſhe entered the citie with a noiſe of ordinance which the tower ſhot off at hir graces enterance firſt into Towerſtreet. The childs ſaieng was alſo in Latine verſes written in a table verie faire which was hanged vp there:

Carmen valedictorium a puero recitatum.

O regina potens, quum primam vrbem ingredereris,
Dona tibi linguas fidáq; corda dedit.
Diſcedenti etiam tibi nunc duo munera mittit,
Omnia plena ſpei, votáq; plena precum.
Quippe tuis ſpes eſt in te, quòd prouida virtus
Rexerit, errore nec locus vllus erit.
Quippe tuis ſpes eſt, quòd tu verum omni reduces
Solatura bonas, dum mala tollis, opes.
Hac ſpe freti orant, longum vt regina gubernes,
Et regni excindas crimina cuncta tui.
Hac ſpe freti orant, diuina vt gratia fortem
Et veræ fidei te velit eſſe baſin.
Iam regina vale, & ſicut nos ſpes tenet vna,
Quòd vero inducto, perditus error erit:
Sic quóq; ſperamus quòd eris regina benigna
Nobis per regni tempora longa tui.

Thus the queenes highneſſe paſſed through the citie, which without anie forreigne perſon, of it ſelfe beautified it ſelfe, and receiued hir grace at all places as hath beene before mentioned, with moſt tender obedience and loue, due to ſo gratious a queene and ſouereigne a ladie. And hir grace likewiſe of hir ſide in all hir graces paſſage, ſhewed hir ſelfe generallie an image of a worthie ladie and gouernour. But priuatlie theſe eſpeciall points were noted in hir grace, as ſignes of a moſt princelike courage, whereby hir louing ſubiects maie ground a ſure hope for the reſt of hir gratious doings hereafter.

Certein notes of the queenes maieſties great mercie, clemencie, and wiſdome [illegible] in this paſſage.

About the nether end of Cornehill toward Cheape, one of the knights about hir grace had eſpied an ancient citizen, which wept, and turned his head backe, and therewith ſaid this gentleman; Yonder is an alderman (for ſo he tearmed him) which weepeth, and turneth his face backeward; how maie it be interpreted that he ſo doth, for ſorrow, or for gladneſſe? The queens maieſtie heard him, and ſaid, I warrant you it is for gladneſſe. A gratious interpretation of a noble courage, which would turne the doubtfull to the beſt. And yet it was well knowne, that as hir grace did confirme the ſame, the parties cheere was moued for verie pure gladneſſe for the ſight of hir maieſties perſon, at the beholding whereof he tooke ſuch comfort, that with teares he expreſſed the ſame.

Of one that wept for ioy and inward gladneſſe.

In Cheape ſide hir grace ſmiled, and being thereof demanded the cauſe, anſwered, for that ſhe heard one ſaie; Remember old king Henrie the eight. A naturall child, which at the verie remembrance of hir fathers name, tooke ſo great a ioy, that all men maie well thinke, that as ſhe reioiſed at his name whome this realme doth hold of ſo worthie memorie: ſo in hir doings ſhe will reſemble the ſame.

When the cities charge without parcialitie, and onelie the citie was mentioned vnto hir grace, ſhée ſaid it ſhould not be forgotten. Which ſaieng might moue all naturall Engliſhmen hartilie to ſhew due obedience and intierneſſe to their ſo good a queene, which will in no point forget anie parcell of dutie louinglie ſhewed vnto hir. The anſwer which hir grace made vnto maiſter recorder of London, as the hearers know it to be true, & with melting hearts heard the ſame: ſo maie the reader thereof conceiue what kind of ſtomach and courage pronounced the ſame.

The humbleneſſe of the queene in receiuing verie trifles of the poore ſubiects thankefullie.

What more famous thing doo we read in ancient hiſtories of old time, than that mightie princes haue gentlie receiued preſents offered them by baſe and low perſonages. If that be to be wondered at (as it is paſſinglie) let me ſée anie writer that in anie princes life is able to recount ſo manie preſidents of this vertue, as hir grace ſhewed in that one paſſage thorough the citie.

How manie noſegaies did hir grace receiue at poore womens hands? How oftentimes ſtaid ſhe hir chariot, when ſhe ſaw anie ſimple bodie offer to ſpeake to hir grace? A branch of roſemarie giuen hir grace with a ſupplication by a poore woman about Fleetbridge, was ſéene in hir chariot till hir grace came to Weſtminſter, not without the maruellous wondering of ſuch as knew the preſenter, and noted the queens moſt gratious receiuing and keeping the ſame. What hope the poore and néedie maie looke for at hir graces hand, ſhe as in all hir iournie continuallie, ſo in hir hearkening to the poore children of Chriſts hoſpitall * with eies caſt vp into heauen, did fullie declare: as that neither the wealthier eſtate could ſtand without conſideration had to the pouertie, neither the pouertie be dulie conſidered, vnleſſe they were remembred, as commended vnto vs by Gods owne mouth.

* where hir mind then was no doubt in heauen vpon God.

As at hir firſt entrance ſhe as it were declared hir ſelfe prepared to paſſe through a citie that moſt intierlie loued hir: ſo ſhe at hir laſt departing as it were bound hir ſelfe by promiſe, to continue good ladie and gouernor vnto that citie, which by outward declaration did open their loue vnto their ſo louing and noble prince, in ſuch wiſe, as ſhe hir ſelfe wondered thereat. But becauſe princes be ſet in their ſeat by Gods appointing, and therefore they muſt firſt and chieflie tender the glorie of him, from whom their glorie iſſueth: it is to be noted in hir grace, that forſomuch as God hath ſo wonderfullie placed hir in the ſeat of gouernement ouer this realme, ſhe in all hir doings doth ſhew hir ſelfe moſt mindfull of his goodneſſe & mercie ſhewed vnto hir. And among all other, two principall ſignes thereof were noted in this paſſage. Firſt in the tower, where hir grace before ſhe entred hir chariot, lifted vp hir eies to heauen, and ſaid as followeth.

The queenes maieſtie is not forgetfull to glorifie God who glorified hir.

The praier of queene Eliſabeth as ſhe went to hir coronation.

O Lord almightie and euerlaſting God, I giue thee moſt hartie thanks, that thou haſt beene ſo mercifull vnto me, as to ſpare me to behold this ioifull daie. And I acknowledge that thou haſt delt as woonderfullie and as mercifullie with me, as thou diddeſt with thy true and faithfull ſeruant Daniell thy prophet; whome thou deliueredſt out of the den from the crueltie of the greedie and raging lions: euen ſo was I ouerwhelmed, and onlie by thee deliuered. To thee therefore onlie be thankes, honor, and praiſe, for euer; Amen.

As religious a princeſſe is queene Eliſabeth as euer ſhe was.

The ſecond was the receiuing of the bible at the little conduit in Cheape. For when hir grace had learned that the bible in Engliſh ſhould there be offered: ſhe thanked the citie therefore, promiſed the reading thereof moſt diligentlie, and incontinent commanded that it ſhould be brought. At the receipt whereof, how reuerendlie did ſhe with both hir hands take it, kiſſe it, and laie it vpon hir breſt, to the great comfort of the lookers on. God will vndoubtedlie preſerue ſo worthie a prince, which at his honor ſo reuerendlie taketh hir beginning. For this ſaieng is true, and written in the booke of truth; He that firſt ſeeketh the kingdome of God, ſhall haue all other things caſt vnto him. Now therefore all Engliſh hearts, and hir naturall people muſt needs praiſe Gods mercie, which hath ſent them ſo worthie a prince, and praie for hir graces long continuance amongſt vs. On ſundaie the fiue and twentith of Januarie, hir maieſtie was with great ſolemnitie crowned at Weſtminſter in the abbeie church there, by doctor Oglethorpe biſhop of Carleill. She dined in Weſtminſter hall, which was richlie hong, and euerie thing ordered in ſuch roiall maner, as to ſuch a regall and moſt ſolemne feaſt apperteined.

Sir Edward Dimmocke knight hir champion by office.

In the meane time, whileſt hir grace ſat at dinner, ſir Edward Dimmocke knight, hir champion by office, came riding into the hall in faire complet armor, mounted vpon a beautifull courſer, richlie trapped in cloth of gold, entred the hall, and in the midſt thereof caſt downe his gantlet: with offer to fight with him in hir quarell, that ſhould denie hir to be the righteous and lawfull queene of this realme. The queene taking a cup of gold full of wine, dranke to him thereof, and ſent it to him for his fee togither with the couer.

The lord maior of London ſerueth the queene of ipocraſſe.

Now after this, at the ſeruing vp of the wafers, the lord maior of London went to the cupbord, and filling a cup of gold with ipocraſſe, bare it to the queene: and kneeling before hir tooke the aſſaie, and ſhe receiuing it of him, and drinking of it, gaue the cup with the couer vnto the ſaid lord maior for his fee, which cup and couer weied ſixteene ounces Troie weight. Finallie, this feaſt being celebrated with all roiall ceremonies, and high ſolemnities, due and in like caſes accuſtomed, tooke end with great ioy and contentation to all the beholders. On wedneſdaie the fiue and twentith of Januarie the parlement began, the queenes maieſtie riding in hir parlement robes, from hir palace of Whitehall, vnto the abbeie church of Weſtminſter, with the lords ſpirituall and temporall, attending hir likewiſe in their parlement robes. Doctor Cox ſometime ſchoolemaiſter to king Edward the ſixt, and now latelie returned from the parties of beyond the ſeas, where during the daies of queene Marie he had liued as a baniſhed man, preached now before the eſtates there aſſembled in the beginning of the ſaid parlement. In this parlement, the firſt fruits and tenths were reſtored to the crowne, & alſo the ſupreame gouernment ouer the ſtate eccleſiaſticall, which queene Marie had giuen to the pope. Likewiſe the booke of common praier and adminiſtration of the ſacraments in our mother toong was reſtored.

¶But before this good worke was agreed vpon, there was much debating about matters touching religion, and great ſtudie on both parties imploied, the one to reteine ſtill, the other to impugne the doctrine and faction which before in queene Maries time had beene eſtabliſhed. But ſpeciallie here is to be noted, that though there lacked no induſtrie on the papiſts ſide, to hold faſt that which they moſt cruellie from time to time had ſtudied, and by all meanes practiſed to come by: yet notwithſtanding, ſuch was the prouidence of God at that time, that for lacke of the other biſhops, whom the Lord had taken awaie by death a little before, the reſidue that there were left could doo the leſſe: and in verie deed, God be praiſed therefore, did nothing at all in effect; although yet notwithſtanding there lacked in them neither will nor labor to doo what they could, if their cruell abilitie there might haue ſerued. But namelie amongſt all others, not onelie the induſtrious courage of doctor Storie, but alſo his words in this parlement are worthie to be knowne of poſteritie, who like a ſtout and furious champion of the popes ſide, to declare himſelfe how luſtie he was, and what he had and would doo in his maiſters quarell, ſhamed not openlie in the ſaid parlement houſe to burſt out into ſuch impudent ſort of words, as was wonder to all good eares to heare, and no leſſe worthie of hiſtorie.

Doctor Storie impudent and ſawcie.

The words of doctor Storie in the parlement houſe.

The ſumme of which his ſhameleſſe talke was vttered to this effect. Firſt beginning with himſelfe, he declared, that whereas he was noted commonlie abroad, and much complained of; to haue beene a great dooer, & a ſetter forth of ſuch religion, orders, & proceedings, as of his late ſoueraigne that dead is queene Marie were ſet forth in this relme, he denied nothing the ſame: proteſting moreouer that he had doone nothing therein, but that both his conſcience did lead him thereunto, and alſo his commiſſion did as well then command him, as now alſo doth diſcharge him for the ſame: being no leſſe readie now alſo to doo the like, and more, in caſe he by this queene were authoriſed likewiſe, and commanded thereunto. Wherefore as I ſee (ſaith he) nothing to be aſhamed of; ſo leſſe I ſee to be ſorie for: but rather ſaid that he was ſorie for this, becauſe he had doone no more than he did, and that in executing thoſe lawes, they had not beene more vehement & ſeuere. Wherein he ſaid, there was no default in him, but in them, whome he both oft and earneſtlie had exhorted to the ſame; being therefore not a little greeued with them, for that they labored onelie about the yoong and little ſprigs and twigs, while they ſhould haue ſtroken at the root, and cleane haue rooted it out: &c. And concerning his perſecuting and burning them, he denied not, but that he was once at the burning of an earewig (for ſo he termed it) at Vxbridge, where he toſt a fagot at his face as he was ſinging pſalmes, and ſet a wine buſh of thorns vnder his feet, a little to pricke him, with manie other words of like effect. In the which words he named moreouer ſir Philip Hobbie, and an other knight of Kent, with ſuch other of the richer and higher degree, whome his counſell was to plucke at, & to bring them vnder Coram; wherein (ſaid he) if they had followed my aduiſe, then had they doone well and wiſelie. This or much like was the effect of the ſhameleſſe and tyrannicall exerciſe of himſelfe, more méete to ſpeake with the voice of a beaſt, than of a man. Although in this parlement ſome diuerſitie there was of iudgement and opinion betwéene parties: yet notwithſtanding through the mercifull goodneſſe of the Lord, the true cauſe of the goſpell had the vpper hand, the papiſts hope was fruſtrat, and their rage abated: the order and procéedings of king Edwards time concerning religion was reuiued againe, the ſupremaſie of the pope aboliſhed, the articles and bloudie ſtatutes of quéene Marie repealed: bréeflie, the furious fierbrands of cruell perſecution, which had conſumed ſo manie poore mens bodies, were now extinct and quenched.]

A motion made in the parlement houſe to the quéene touching marriage, &c.

Moreouer in the time of this parlement, a motion was made by the common houſe, that the quéenes maieſtie might be ſued vnto, to grant hir graces licence to the ſpeaker, knights, citizens & burgeſſes, to haue acceſſe vnto hir graces preſence: to declare vnto hir matter of great importance, concerning the ſtate of this hir graces realme. The which petition being moued to hir grace, ſhe moſt honorablie agréed and conſented therevnto, and aſſigned a daie of hearing. When the daie came, the ſpeaker & common houſe reſorted vnto hir graces palace at Weſtminſter called the White hall. And in the great gallerie there, hir grace moſt honorablie ſhewed hir ſelfe readie to heare their motion and petition. And when the ſpeaker had ſolemnlie and eloquentlie ſet forth the meſſage (the principall matter whereof moſt ſpeciallie was to moue hir grace to marriage) whereby (to all our comforts) we might inioie (as Gods pleaſure ſhould be) the roiall iſſue of hir bodie to reigne ouer vs, &c. The quéenes maieſtie after a little pauſe made this anſwer following, as néere as I could beare the ſame awaie (ſaith Grafton.)

The queenes anſwer to the former motion of the parlement houſe.

Rich. Grafton.

AS I haue good cauſe, ſo doo I giue to you my hartie thanks for the good zeale and care that you ſéeme to haue as well towards me, as to the whole ſtate of your countrie. Your petition I gather to be grounded on thrée cauſes, and mine anſwer to the ſame ſhall conſiſt in two parts. And for the firſt I ſaie vnto you, that from my years of vnderſtanding, knowing my ſelfe a ſeruitor of almightie God, I choſe this kind of life, in which I doo yet liue, as a life moſt acceptable vnto him, wherein I thought I could beſt ſerue him, and with moſt quietneſſe doo my duetie vnto him. From which my choiſe, if either ambition of high eſtate offered vnto me by marriages (whereof I haue records in this preſence) the diſpleaſure of the prince, the eſchewing the danger of mine enimies, or the auoiding the perill of death (whoſe meſſenger the princes indignation was no little time continuallie preſent before mine eies, by whoſe meanes if I knew or doo iuſtlie ſuſpect, I will not now vtter them, or if the whole cauſe were my ſiſter hir ſelfe, I will not now charge the dead) could haue drawen or diſſuaded me, I had not now remained in this virgins eſtate wherein you ſée me. But ſo conſtant haue I alwaies continued in this my determination (that although my words and youth maie ſéeme to ſome hardlie to agrée togither) yet it is true, that to this daie I ſtand frée from anie other meaning, that either I haue had in times paſt, or haue at this preſent. In which ſtate and trade of liuing wherewith I am ſo throughlie acquainted, God hath ſo hitherto preſerued me, and hath ſo watchfull an eie vpon me, and ſo hath guided me and led me by the hand, as my full truſt is, he will not ſuffer me to go alone. The maner of your petition I doo like, and take in good part: for it is ſimple, and conteineth no limitation of place or perſon. If it had béene otherwiſe, I muſt haue miſliked it verie much; and thought in you a verie great preſumption, being vnfit and altogither vnméet to require them that may command, or thoſe appoint whoſe parts are to deſire, or ſuch to bind and limit whoſe duties are to obeie; or to take vpon you to draw my loue to your likings, or to frame my will to your fanſies. A guerdon conſtreined, and a gift fréelie giuen can neuer agrée. Neuertheleſſe, if anie of you be in ſuſpect, that whenſoeuer it maie pleaſe God to incline my hart to that kind of life, my meaning is to doo or determine anie thing wherwith the realme maie haue iuſt cauſe to be diſcontented; put that out of your heads. For I aſſure you (what credence my aſſurance maie haue with you I can not tell, but what credit it ſhall deſerue to haue, the ſequele ſhall declare) I will neuer in that matter conclude anie thing that ſhall be preiudiciall vnto the realme. For the weale and good ſafetie whereof, as a good mother of my countrie, I will neuer ſhun to ſpend my life. And whomſoeuer my choiſe maie light vpon, he ſhall be as carefull for the preſeruation of the realme as you, I will not ſaie as my ſelfe: for I cannot ſo certeinlie promiſe of another, as I doo ſurelie know of my ſelfe, but as anie other can be. And albeit it doth pleaſe almightie God to continue me ſtill in this mind, to liue out of the ſtate of marriage: it is not to be feared, but he will ſo worke in my hart, and in your wiſdoms, that as good prouiſion may be made in conuenient time, wherby the realme ſhall not remaine deſtitute of an heire that may be a fit gouernor, and peraduenture more beneficiall to the realme than ſuch ofſpring as may come of me. For though I be neuer ſo carefull for your well doings, and mind euer ſo to be: yet may mine iſſue grow out of kind and become vngratious. And for me it ſhall be ſufficient, that a marble ſtone declare that a quéene, hauing reigned ſuch a time, liued and died a virgine. To make an end, I take your comming to me in good part, and giue vnto you eftſoons my hartie thanks, more yet for your zeale, good will, and good meaning, than for your meſſage and petition.

Manie that for feare of perſecution in quéene Maries daies were fled the realme, and liued in voluntarie exile, now that all perſecution ceaſed by the gratious clemencie of this noble princeſſe quéene Eliſabeth, they returned with all conuenient ſpéed home into their natiue countrie, giuing to almightie God moſt humble thanks for that his mercifull deliuerance, in ſending them a gouernor, that not onelie permitted libertie of conſcience, but alſo was readie to aduance religion, and command frée exerciſe of common praier, preaching, and adminiſtration of the ſacraments, according to the right inſtitution of the primitiue churches. Fridaie the ſeauentéenth of Februarie, one of maiſter Hunnings ſeruants (that was alſo one of the takers of freſh fiſh for the prouiſion of the quéenes houſe) was ſet on the pillorie in Cheapſide in the fiſh market ouer againſt the kings head, hauing a bawdrike of ſmelts hanging about his necke, with a paper on his forehead written: For buieng ſmelts for twelue pence the hundred, and ſelling them againe for ten pence the quarter. He ſtood ſo likewiſe on the eightéenth and the twentith daie of the ſame moneth, euerie one of thoſe thrée daies from nine of the clocke till twelue. if by great ſute made to the councell by the lord maior of London, he had not beene pardoned and releaſed out of priſon. This penance was aſſigned to him by the queenes owne appointment, when to hir grace his treſpaſſe was reuealed. Preachers at Spittle.

This yeere in the Eaſter hollidaies on the mondaie preached at the Spittle doctor Bill, on the tueſdaie doctor Cox, & on the wedneſdaie doctor Horne: the firſt was hir maieſties chapleine, the other two had remained at Geneua, and in other places beyond the ſeas all queene Maries time. On low ſundaie maiſter Sampſon made the rehearſall ſermon: but when the lord maior and aldermen came to their places in Paules churchyard, the pulpit doore was locked, & the keie could not be heard of. Wherevpon the lord maior ſent for a ſmith to open the locke, which was doone, and when the preacher ſhould enter the place, it was found verie filthie and vncleanlie. Moreouer, the verger that had the cuſtodie of the keie, which opened the doore of the place where the prelats and other vſe to ſtand in the ſermon time, would not open the doore; but the gentlemen with a forme brake it open, and ſo came in to heare the ſermon. This diſorder chanced by reaſon that ſince Chriſtmaſſe laſt paſt there was not a ſermon preached at Paules croſſe, by meanes of an inhibition ſent from the councell vnto the biſhop of London, that he ſhould admit no preacher, becauſe of the controuerſie betwixt the biſhops and other of the clergie that were now returned into the realme, from the parties of beyond the ſeas.

The pulpit at Paules croſſe all beraied and beaſtlie.

A conference appointed concerning religion.

The laſt of March the parlement yet continuing, was a conference begun at Weſtminſter concerning certeine articles of religion betwixt the biſhops and other of the clergie on the one part, and certeine learned preachers of whome ſome had beene in dignitie in the church of England before that time on the other part. The declaration of the proceeding therin, and the cauſe of the breaking vp of the ſame conference by default and contempt of certeine biſhops, parties of the ſaid conference was publiſhed in a little treatiſe, and imprinted by Richard Iug and Iohn Cawood, printers to the queenes maieſtie, as here followeth. The queenes moſt excellent maieſtie, hauing heard of diuerſitie of opinions in certeine matters of religion amongſt ſundrie of hir louing ſubiects, and being verie deſirous to haue the ſame reduced to ſome godlie & chriſtian concord, thought it beſt by the aduiſe of the lords, and other of hir priuie councell, as well for the ſatiſfaction of perſons doubtfull, as alſo for the knowlege of the verie truth in certeine matter of difference, to haue a cōuenient choſen number of the beſt learned of either part, & to confer togither their opinions and reaſons, and therby to come to ſome good and charitable agreement.

The beſt learned of ech ſide to be choſen by this conference.

And herevpon by hir maieſties commandement certeine of hir priuie councell declared this purpoſe to the archbiſhop of Yorke (being alſo one of the ſame priuie councell) & required him that he would impart the ſame to ſome of the biſhops, and to make choiſe of eight, nine, or ten of them: and that there ſhould be the like number named of the other part: and further alſo declared to him (as then was ſuppoſed) what the matters ſhould be. And as for the time, it was thought meet to be as ſoone as poſſible might be agreed vpon. And then after certeine daies paſt, it was ſignified by the ſaid archbiſhop, that there was appointed by ſuch of the biſhops, to whome he had imparted this matter, eight perſons, that is to ſaie, foure biſhops, and foure doctors, who were content at the queenes maieſties commandement to ſhew their opinions; and (as he termed it) render account of their faith in thoſe matters which were mentioned, and that ſpeciallie in writing, although he ſaid they thought the ſame ſo determined, as there was no cauſe to diſpute vpon them.

The perſons choſen & the propoſitions alſo do hereafter follow.

It was herevpon fullie reſolued by the queenes maieſtie, with the aduiſe aforeſaid, that according to their deſire, it ſhould be in writing on both parts, for auoiding of much altercation in words; and that the ſaid biſhops ſhould, bicauſe they were in authoritie, & degree ſuperiors, firſt declare their minds and opinions in the matter, with their reaſons in writing: and the other number being alſo eight men of good degree in ſchooles, and ſome hauing beene in dignitie in the church of England, if they had anie thing to ſaie to the contrarie, ſhould the ſame daie declare their opinions in like manner. And ſo ech of them ſhould deliuer their writings to the other, to be conſidered what were to be improoued therein, and the ſame to declare againe in writing at ſome other conuenient daie; and the like order to be kept in all the reſt of the matters. All this was fullie agreed vpon with the archbiſhop of Yorke, and alſo ſignified to both parties. And immediatlie herevpon, diuerſe of the nobilitie and ſtates of the realme, vnderſtanding that ſuch a meeting and conference ſhould be, and that in certeine matters, wherevpon (the court of parlement conſequentlie following) ſome lawes might be grounded: they made earneſt meanes to hir maieſtie, that the parties of this conference might put and read their aſſertions in the Engliſh tong, and that in the preſence of them of the nobilitie, and others of the parlement houſe, for the better ſatiſfaction and inabling of their owne iudgements, to treat and conclude of ſuch lawes as might depend herevpon.

Order taken for quiet conference, and regard had of the biſhops according to their dignitie.

This alſo being thought verie reaſonable, was ſignified to both parties, and ſo fullie agreed vpon, and the daie appointed for the firſt meeting to be the fridaie in the forenoone, being the laſt of March at Weſtminſter church, where both for good order, and for honour of the conference, by the queenes maieſties commandement, the lords and others of the priuie councell were preſent, and a great part of the nobilitie alſo. And notwithſtanding the former order appointed, and conſented vnto by both parts, yet the biſhop of Wincheſter and his colleagues, alleging that they had miſtaken that their aſſertions and reaſons ſhould be written, and ſo onelie recited out of the booke, ſaid their booke was not readie then written: but they were prouided to argue and diſpute, and therefore would for that time repeat in ſpeech that which they had to ſaie vnto the firſt propoſition. This variation from the order, and ſpeciallie from that which themſelues had by the ſaid archbiſhop in writing before required, adding thereto the reaſon of the apoſtle, that to contend with words is profitable to nothing, but to ſubuerſion of the hearer, ſeemed vnto the queenes maieſties councell ſomewhat ſtrange: & yet was it permitted without anie great reprehenſion, bicauſe they excuſed themſelues with miſtaking the order, and agreed that they would not faile but put it in writing; and according to the former order, deliuer it to the other part. And ſo the ſaid biſhop of Wincheſter and his colleagues appointed doctor Cole deane of Paules, to be the vtterer of their minds, who partlie by ſpeech onelie, and partlie by reading of authorities written, and at certeine times being informed of his colleagues what to ſaie, made a declaration of their meanings, & their reaſons to their firſt propoſition. Which being ended, they were asked by the priuie councell, if anie of them had anie more to be ſaid: and they ſaid; No. So as then the other part was licenced to ſhew their minds, which they did according to the firſt order, exhibiting all that which they meant to be propounded in a booke written, which after a praier & inuocation made moſt humblie to almightie God, for the induing of them with his holie ſpirit, and a proteſtation alſo to ſtand to the doctrine of the catholike church, builded vpon the ſcriptures, and the doctrine of the prophets and the apoſtles, was diſtinctlie read by one Robert Horne bachellor in diuinitie, late deane of Dureſme.

*Afterwards biſhop of Wincheſter.

And the ſame being ended with ſome likelihood, as it ſéemed that the ſame was much allowable to the audience: certeine of the biſhops began to ſaie contrarie to their former anſwer, that they had now much more to ſaie to this matter. Wherein although they might haue béene well reprehended for ſuch maner of cauillation, yet for auoiding of any miſtaking of orders in this colloquie or conference, and for that they ſhould vtter all that which they had to ſaie: it was both ordered, and thus openlie agréed vpon of both parts in the full audience, that vpon the mondaie following, the biſhops ſhould bring their minds and reaſons in writing to the ſecond aſſertion, and the laſt alſo if they could, and firſt read the ſame, and that doone, the other part ſhould bring likewiſe theirs to the ſame. And being read, ech of them ſhould deliuer to other the ſame writings. And in the meane time the biſhops ſhould put in writing, not onelie all that which doctor Cole had that daie vttered: but all ſuch other matters as they anie otherwiſe could thinke of for the ſame: and as ſoone as they might poſſiblie, to ſend the ſame booke touching that firſt aſſertion to the other part, and they ſhould receiue of them that writing which maſter Horne had there read that daie, and vpon mondaie it ſhould be agréed what daie they ſhould exhibit their anſwers touching the firſt propoſition.

Another order taken for the next méeting to confer.

Thus both parts aſſented thereto, and the aſſemblie quietlie diſmiſſed. And therefore vpon mondaie, the like aſſemblie began againe at the place & houre appointed: and there (vpon what ſiniſter or diſordered meaning is not yet fullie knowne) though in ſome part it be vnderſtanded) the biſhop of Wincheſter and his colleagues, and eſpeciallie Lincolne, refuſed to exhibit or read, according to the former notorious order on fridaie, that which they had prepared for the ſecond aſſertion. And therevpon by the lord kéeper of the great ſeale, they being firſt gentlie and fauourablie required to kéepe the order appointed; and that taking no place, being ſecondlie as it behooued, preſſed with more earneſt requeſt: they neither regarding the authoritie of that place, nor their owne reputation, nor the credit of the cauſe, vtterlie refuſed that to doo. And finallie being againe particularlie euerie of them apart, diſtinctlie by name, required to vnderſtand their opinions therein: they all ſauing one (which was the abbat of Weſtminſter, hauing ſome more conſideration of order and his dutie of obedience than the other) vtterlie and plainelie denied to haue their booke read, ſome of them more earneſtlie than others, and ſome other more vndiſcréetlie and vnreuerentlie than others.

A new aſſemblie on the mondaie according to appointment.

Wherevpon giuing ſuch example of diſorder, ſtubborneſſe and ſelfewill, as hath not béene ſéene and ſuffered in ſuch an honourable aſſemblie, being of the two eſtates of this realme, the nobilitie and the commons, beſides the preſence of the quéenes maieſties moſt honourable priuie councell, the ſame aſſemblie was diſmiſſed, and the godlie and moſt chriſtian purpoſe of the quéens maieſtie made fruſtrate. And afterwards for the contempt ſo notoriouſlie made, the biſhops of Wincheſter and Lincolne, hauing moſt obſtinatelie both diſobeied common authoritie, and varied manifeſtlie from their owne order, and ſpeciallie Lincolne (who ſhewed more follie than the other) were worthilie committed to the tower of London, and the reſt (ſauing the abbat of Weſtminſter) ſtood bound to make daile their perſonall appearance before the councell, and not to depart the citie of London and Weſtminſter, vntill further order were taken with them for their diſobedience and contempt.

The ſtubburneſſe of the aduerſe part an occaſion to diſſolue this aſſemblie.

The three propoſitions wherevpon conference was determined to haue beene at Weſtminſter.

The biſhops and doctors ſat on the one ſide of the quéere at a table for them prepared, & the other learned men ſat at another table on the other ſide of the ſame quéere. And at the vpper end thereof at an other table ſat the quéenes maieſties councell, deſirous to haue ſéene ſome good concluſion of the ſaid conference, although (as ye may perceiue by that which is aboue recited) it came to ſmall effect. In this meane time, a treatie of peace, which had béene in hand the laſt yeare, firſt at Liſle, and after at the abbeie of Cercampe, a thrée leagues from Dorlens, betwixt the two kings of Spaine and France, was now renewed againe, and the deputies were appointed to meet at Chaſteau Cambreſi, a ſix leagues diſtant from Cambraie. For the king of Spaine, the duke of Alua, the prince of Orange, the biſhop of Arras, Rigomes de Silua earle of Mellito, monſieur Viglius Zwichem, knight and preſident of the priuie councell in the low countries, who neuertheleſſe came not, bicauſe he was letted by ſickneſſe. For the French king there came the cardinall of Loraine the coneſtable, the marſhall of ſaint Andrew, the biſhop of Orleans, and Claude de Aubeſpine, the ſaid kings ſecretarie. For the quéene of England, the biſhop of Elie, the lord William Howard baron of Effingham lord chamberleine to the ſaid quéene, doctor Nicholas Wotton deane of Canturburie and Yorke.

A treatie of peace betwixt the kings of Spaine and France.

The deputies or commiſſioners appointed for the princes.

For the duke of Sauoie, there were the earle of Stropiana, & the preſident of Aſti. And as a meane or mediatrix betwéene the parties, there was Chriſtierna dutcheſſe of Loraine, with hir ſonne the yong duke, which dutcheſſe, as well here, as before at Cercampe, trauelled moſt earneſtlie to doo good betwixt the parties, and to bring them to a finall accord, whoſe endeuor therein was to the great good liking & contentation of all the ſaid parties. After that this treatie had continued a long time, and now reſted nothing to ſtaie them fro concluding a generall peace, but onelie the article touching Calis, at length that matter was alſo accorded by a ſpeciall treatie betwixt the queenes maieſtie of England, & the French king, Guido Caualcanti a gentleman of Florence being the meane to bring the ſame to effect. The ſubſtance of which articles was, that Calis ſhuld reſt in the Frenchmens hands for the terme of eight yeeres, and at the end of that terme, they couenanted to render the ſame: or elſe for default, to forfeit vnto the quéenes highneſſe the ſumme of fiue hundred thouſand crownes; and for ſuertie hereof, to deliuer foure hoſtages, ſuch as hir maieſtie ſhould thinke ſufficient. And in caſe the towne were not deliuered at the end of the ſaid eight yeeres, though the monie were paid according to the couenants; yet notwithſtanding the right and title to the ſaid towne and countrie adioining, ſhould alwaies remaine and be reſerued vnto the crowne and realme of England. It was further concluded alſo, that a peace ſhould be framed and had betwixt the realmes of England and Scotland, and ſuch fortreſſes to be raſed as had béen built and made by the Scots and French on the borders towards England, as Haimouth and others.

Sir Iohn Maſon knight, ſecretarie for the French toong, was ſent ouer in poſt with inſtructions vnto the Engliſh commiſſioners, after whoſe comming, within two or thrée daies, a generall peace was concluded betwixt all the parties, the articles whereof not touching England, we haue of purpoſe omitted. But now after the concluſion of this peace, the ſaid ſir Iohn Maſon returned in poſt with the ſame: and ſo therevpon, the ſeuenth of Aprill, the ſaid peace was proclamed; to wit, betwixt the quéenes maieſtie on the one part, and the French king on the other, their realmes, dominions, and ſubiects; and likewiſe betwixt hir ſaid maieſtie and the king Dolphin and quéene of Scots his wife, their realmes, dominions, and ſubiects. This proclamation was made by Garter Norreie king at armes, accompanied with thrée other heralds, & fiue trumpettors: the lord maior of London & the aldermen in their ſcarlet gowns being alſo preſent, & riding in companie of the ſaid heralds.

The peace proclamed.

The ſame time alſo was another proclamation made vnder the quéenes hand in writing, inhibiting, that from thenſeforth no plaies nor interludes ſhould be exerciſed, till Alhallowes tide next inſuing. Vpon ſaturdaie the two and twentith of Aprill, the lord Wentworth, late deputie of Calis, was areigned at Weſtminſter, vpon an indictment of treaſon found againſt him, in the late queene Maries daies, for the loſſe of Calis: but he was acquited by his péeres, the lord marqueſſe of Northampton ſitting that daie as cheefe ſteward of England, vnder the cloth of eſtate. The eight of Maie, the parlement brake vp; in which parlement, beſide other things before recited, concluded, and paſſed in the ſame; a ſubſidie was granted to the quéenes highneſſe, of two ſhillings eight pence the pound of moueable goods, and foure ſhillings of lands, to be paid at two ſeuerall paiments, of euerie perſon ſpirituall and temporall, towards the better furniſhing of hir maieſtie with monie, for the neceſſarie charges which ſhe was preſentlie occaſioned to ſuſteine, finding the treaſure of the realme greatlie conſumed, and the reuenues of the crowne ſore diminiſhed, and the ſame crowne much indebted, by taking vp of notable ſummes of monie by waie of loane vpon intereſt, as well in the daies of hir brother K. Edward, as hir ſiſter quéene Marie. The fourtéenth of Maie being Whitſundaie, the ſeruice in churches began according to the booke of cõmon praier, ſet forth and eſtabliſhed in this laſt parlement, correſpondent to that which was vſed in the daies of hir brother king Edward. Vpon ſundaie the ſecond of Iulie, the citizens of London ſet forth a muſter before the quéenes maieſtie at Gréenwich in the parke there, of the number of 1400 men, whereof 800 were pikes, armed in fine corſelets, foure hundred ſhot in ſhirts of male, with morians, & two hundred halbarders armed in Almaine riuets: theſe were furniſhed forth by the crafts and companies of the citie. To euerie hundred two wiſlers were aſſigned, richlie appointed and appareled for the purpoſe. There were alſo twelue wardens of the beſt companies mounted on horſſebacke in coats of blacke veluet, to conduct them, with drums and fiffes, and ſix enſignes, all in ierkins of white ſattin of Bridges, cut and lined with blacke ſarſenet, and caps, hoſen, and ſcarfs according. The ſergeant Maiors, capteine Conſtable, and capteine Sanders, brought them in order before the quéenes preſence, placing them in battell araie, euen as they ſhould haue fought; ſo as the ſhew was verie faire, the emperours and the French kings ambaſſadors being preſent.

Plaies and enterludes forbidden for a time.
The lord Wentworth arreigned and acquited.

In this moneth alſo, the archbiſhop of Yorke, the biſhops of Elie, London, and others, to the number of thirtéene or fouretéene, being called before the quéenes councell, and refuſing to receiue the oth touching hir maieſties ſupremaſſe, and other articles, were depriued from their biſhopricks: in whoſe roomes and places, firſt for cardinall Poole, ſucceded doctor Matthew Parker, archbiſhop of Canturburie. In the place of Heth, ſucceeded doctor Yoong. In ſtéed of Boner, Edmund Grindall was biſhop of London. For Hopton, Thurlbie, Tunſtall, Pates, Chriſtoferſon, Peto, Coats, Morgan, Feaſie, White, Oglethorpe, &c: were placed doctor Iohn Parkhurſt in Norwich, D. Cox in Elie, Iewell in Saliſburie, Pilkenton in Dureſme, doctor Sands in Worceſter, maſter Dowman in Weſtcheſter, Bentam in Couentrie and Lichfield, Dauid in S. Dauids, Allie in Exceſter, Horne in Wincheſter, Scorie in Hereford, Beſt in Carleill, Bullingham in Lincolne, Scamler in Peterburie, Bartlet in Bath, Geſt in Rocheſter, Barlow in Chicheſter, &c. In like maner, were diuerſe deans, archdeacons, parſons, & vicars, remoued from their benefices, and ſome of them committed to priſon in the Tower, Fléet, Marſhalſea, and Kings bench.

Biſhops depriued and others ſucceeding.

Moreouer, about the ſame time were commiſſioners appointed to viſit in euerie dioceſſe within the relme, for the eſtabliſhment of religion, according to the order appointed by act and ſtatute, paſſed and confirmed in the laſt parlement. For London were appointed ſir Richard Sackuill knight, Robert Horne doctor of diuinitie, doctor Huic a ciuilian, and maiſter Sauage; who calling before them diuerſe perſons of euerie pariſh, ſware them to inquire and make preſentment accordinglie, vpon certeine iniunctions drawne and deuiſed, for the better accompliſhment and execution of that which they had in charge. Furthermore, about the ſame time, by vertue of an act eſtabliſhed in parlement, all ſuch religious houſes as were againe erected and ſet vp, were now ſuppreſſed, as the abbeies of Weſtminſter, the houſes of the nuns and brethren of the Sion and Shéene, the blacke friers of Gréenwich, &c. And on the twelfe of Auguſt being ſaturdaie, the high altar in Paules church, with the rood & the images of Marie and Iohn, ſtanding in the rood loft, were taken downe, & the prebendaries and petie canons commanded to weare no more their graie amiſes, but to vſe onelie a ſurplice in ſeruice time. This was doone by commandement of doctor Grindall, newlie elect biſhop of London, doctor Maie, then alſo newlie elected deane of Paules, and other the commiſſioners then appointed. Alſo on the euen of ſaint Bartholomew, the day and morrow after, were burned in Paules churchyard, Cheapeſide, and diuerſe other places of the citie of London, all the roods and other images of churches: and in ſome places, the coapes, veſtments, and altar clothes, bookes, banners, ſepulchers, and rood lofts, were likewiſe committed to the fier, and ſo conſumed to aſhes.

Ex I. S. 1113. Churches in London ſtriken & broken by tempeſt.

¶ The fift of September about midnight, fell a great tempeſt at London, in the end whereof, a great lightning, with a terrible clap of thunder ſtroke the ſpire (being ſtone) of the ſteeple of Alhallowes church in Bredſtreet, about a ten foot beneath the top, out of the which fell a ſtone that ſlue a dog, and ouerthrew a man plaieng with the ſame dog, and the ſpire of the ſteeple was ſo periſhed, that not long after the ſame was taken downe with leſſe charges to the pariſh, than the repairing would haue coſt. And at the ſame inſtant, by the ſame tempeſt, one of the ſouthdoores of S. Dioniſe church in Fenchurchſtreet, with the doore of the reueſtrie of the ſame church, were both ſtriken through and broken.]

An obſequie for the Frẽch king, Henrie the ſecond, in whoſe time Calis was loſt.

Vpon Fridaie the eight of September, was kept in Paules church of London a ſolemne obſequie for Henrie, the ſecond of that name, king of France, who departed this life, about the tenth of Iulie laſt paſt, of a wound receiued the 29 of Iune, in running at tilt in a ſolemne iuſts holden at Paris, in honor of the marriage celebrated betwixt his ſiſter the ladie Margaret of France, and Philibert duke of Sauoie. He was ſtriken on the viſer with a lance, as he ran againſt the counte de Montgomerie: the ſhiuers entring by the ſight of his headpeece, & perſing through his eie into his head, ſo periſhed his braine, that there was no meane to ſaue his life.

The maner of the obſequie

The obſequie for him was kept in verie ſolemne wiſe, with a rich hearſe, made like an imperiall crowne, ſuſteined with great pillers, and couered with blacke veluet, with a valence fringed with gold and richlie hanged with ſcutchions, penons, and banners of the French kings armes, without anie lights. And on the beere was laid a rich pall of cloth of gold, with a coat armor of the armes of France, and a creſt, with an imperiall crowne ſtanding vpon the beere: doctor Parker archbiſhop of Canturburie elect, doctor Barlow biſhop of Chicheſter elect, and doctor Scorie biſhop of Hereford elect, executing at the dirge of this euening ſong in Engliſh, they ſitting in the biſhop of Londons ſeat, in the vpper quéere, in ſurplices, with doctors hoods about their ſhoulders. The chéefe mourner was the marqueſſe of Wincheſter, lord treaſuror, aſſiſted with ten other lords mourners, with all the heralds in blacke, and their coat armours vppermoſt.

The chéefe mourners at this obſequie.

On the morrow being ſaturdaie, & ninth of September, a ſermon was preached by doctor Scorie, in place of doctor Grindall biſhop of London, who being appointed to preach that ſermon, was letted by ſickneſſe. After the ſermon, ſix of the lords mourners receiued the communion with the biſhops, which biſhops were in copes and ſurplices, onelie at the miniſtration of the ſaid communion. Which being finiſhed, there was a great dinner kept in the biſhop of Londons palace by Paules, where the mourners apparelled them, and ſo ended the ſolemnitie of the ſaid exequies. The biſhops had blacke gownes giuen them, and eight blacke coats a péece for their ſeruants, at the quéenes charges.

Six biſhops receiue the communion.

Ex I, S. pa. 1114. Embaſſador from Swethen receiued into England.

¶ About the laſt of September, Iohn duke of Finland, ſecond ſonne to Guſtauus king of Swethen, was ſent by his father to treat a marriage for his elder brother Ericus, with the quéenes maieſtie of England: he arriued at Harwich in Eſſex, and was there honorablie receiued and interteined by the erle of Oxford, which ſaid earle, and the lord Robert Dudleie, with a goodlie band of gentlemen and yeomen, conueied him to London, where he was receiued of diuerſe knights and gentlemen of the court, on the fift of October, and was with his traine of about the number of fiftie perſons well horſſed, conueied to the biſhop of Wincheſters place in Southwarke, where he was lodged during his abode here, and remoued from thence two daies before Eaſter homewards, and ſped of his meſſage as may appeare by that which followeth, taken out of Iohannes Lewenclaij comment. de bello Moſcorum.

The quéenes maieſtie ſued vnto out of Denmarke about mariage.

Ericus king of Swethen, ſonne of Guſtauus late king of the ſaid kingdome, hauing committed to priſon his brother Iohn duke of Finland, whome a little before he had imploied into England in an ambaſſage to the quéenes maieſtie, about the ſute for marriage, and had his ſute reiected, againe the ſecond time touched hir maieſtie in the ſame ſute notwithſtanding, to his great diſhonor, and (as it fell out) his iuſt diſgrace. He attempted the ſame matter with the yoongeſt daughter of Philip Lantgraue of Heſſen, at whoſe hand (hauing the ſecond time béene refuſed of hir maieſtie here) the matter being knowne there, he alſo not onelie receiued a deniall, but the ladie was by hir father beſtowed vpon Adolfe duke of Holſt, vncle of Frederike king of Denmarke, then enimie of the ſaid Ericus. Thus farre Iohannes Lewenclaij.]

Iohannes Lewenclaij.

¶ Cuthbert Tunſtall was tranſlated from London to Durham after the death of cardinall Wolſeie, of whome (beſides that which Holinſhed in this booke reporteth) I will ſaie a little, he being ſo reuerend a prelat, as the managing of the princes affaires by him doth well witneſſe, and this preſent age can yet well remember. This man (being of a mild condition) was borne at Hachaford in Richmondſhire, and (as Leland hath left in writing that he heard) the baſe ſonne of one Tunſtall an ancient gentleman: whoſe anceſtors (as I haue read) came into England with the conquerour, attending on him as his barbar, for which cauſe he beareth in his armes thrée combes as a note to poſteritie of the originall of his gentrie. Which biſhop although he is ſuppoſed to haue béene baſe borne (as manie noble capteins and other the valiant perſons of the world haue béene, whereof ſix hundred examples as hath the prouerbe might be produced) yet was he not baſe in lerning, eloquence, grauitie, and honorable calling both in ſpirituall & temporall affaires: both in ſeruice of the prince and in charge of his church. For (beſides manie other offices that he exerciſed) he was maiſter of the rols: ſundrie time ambaſſador to forreine princes, biſhop of London, and from thence (by vertue of Clement the ſeuenth his bulles to king Henrie the eight in yeare 1530 the fiue & twentith of March) aduanced to the ſée of Durham, and (by the kings letters) elected therevnto the yeare beforeſaid. In the which function he behaued himſelfe, as the worthineſſe of the eſtate required, and as the doctrine of the church in thoſe daies would permit; of which I meane not to intreat, neither of his fall or riſing: but will onlie meddle with méere temporall accidents, as one that hath not béene accuſtomed to die his pen in the bloud of mens conſciences, nor in the opinions of religion.

Tunſtall bare office.

Wherefore to omit all ſuch things, I ſaie of this biſhop, that he was a man ſingularlie learned (& as Caius tearmeth him Literatiſsimus) in the Hebrue, Gréeke, and Latine tongs; and did not onelie erect ſumptuous buildings for the mind and inward man (in furniſhing it when he was biſhop of London a librarie in Cambridge, with manie notable both written and printed bookes: compiling alſo manie other bookes, as well of diuinitie as of other ſciences, wherof at this daie his arithmetike is of great eſtimation through Europe) but did alſo (for the fleſh & outward man) build from the ground a moſt beautifull porch or gatehouſe (with a chapell annexed thereunto) of faire ſtone in the caſtell of Durham, withall adding vnto the ſaid caſtell certeine gates with iron bars and portculliſes ſupported with ſtrong walles of ſtone on each part for the more ſtrength againſt the enimie: not forgetting to make a water-conduit for the eaſe of waſhing (and to ſerue the other offices in the houſe) on the left ſide of the entrance into the ſaid caſtell. To which theſe ſumptuous deeds (for they are verie heroicall) may be added the gatehouſe built at Alnewike, and the tolboth in the market of Durham all of ſtone, with the reſt of the houſes of office next vnto the hinder part of the ſaid tolboth, which afterward (with other great liberalitie) he gaue to the citizens of Durham.

Buildings founded by Tunſtall, &c.

Laſtlie (at his owne charge) he new repared with ſtonework the third part of Tinbridge, which his predeceſſour Thomas Langleie recouered againſt the maior of Newcaſtell: and which, others his predeceſſors (as occaſion was offered therefore) did from time to time moſt ſtatelie repare. In the end about the latter reigne of Edward the ſixt (being by Ninian or Ninian, Menuille or Menille, accuſed, for that he ſomewhat fauoured the Romane religion, and was not ſo forward in furthering of the goſpell as that time required) he was for that cauſe depriued from his biſhoprike, from all other eccleſiaſticall gouernment, and committed to the tower: where he remained all the time of K. Edward. Afterward (by the benefit of quéene Marie) in the firſt yeare of hir reigne, he was reinueſted into his ſée of Durham, which he poſſeſſed all the time of hir gouernement: during which he was not ſo ſeuere an executor of the Romane canons againſt the proteſtants, as the other biſhops of England were.

Tunſtall depriued from his biſhoprike.

Tunſtall reſtored.

But he not continuing long (ſuch are the inconſtancies of our eſtates & vncerteinties of our troubles) he was againe (by the noble quéene Eliſabeth) depriued of his biſhoprike, after diſputation and conference had at Weſtminſter: in which he defended the Roman religion, in the firſt yeare of the ſaid Eliſabeth, about the truth of Chriſts goſpell: and was committed to Matthew Parker biſhop of Canturburie, who vſed him verie honourablie, both for the grauitie, learning and age of the ſaid Tunſtall. But he not long remaining vnder the ward of the ſaid biſhop, did ſhortlie after the eightéenth of Nouember in the yeare 1559 depart this life at Lambeth, where he firſt receiued his conſecration, being a man of ſuch age, as that he atteined to the number of fourescore & fiue yeares when he died. He was buried in the quéere of the church of Lambeth, whoſe funerall ſermon was doone by Alexander Nowell, then (& now in the yeare 1586) deane of Poules. Who taking this theame to intreat vpon, Bleſſed are they which die in the Lord, did there deliuer ſuch liberall & ſingular commendation of this man for his vertuous life, lerning, grauitie, and good ſeruice doone to manie princes of England, that more could not be ſaid of anie man, being ſpoken trulie. Such force hath vertue, that we ought to commend it euen in our enimies, ouer whoſe dead carcaſe in the ſaid church of Lambeth is laid a faire marble, in which is ingrauen this epitaph, of his deuiſed by doctor Walter Haddon:

This man was (as it ſhould appeare in ſtories) full of contumacie and ſelfe will, vntractable he was and of nature rebellious. For ſaith maiſter Fox in the reigne of king Edward, being caſt into the tower for his diſobedience, where he kept his Chriſtmaſſe thrée yeares togither, more worthie of ſome other place without the tower, if it had pleaſed God otherwiſe not to haue meant a further plague to this realme by that man. Howbeit he was indued with ſuch excellencie of lerning, and that of ſundrie ſorts, that of the learned he is noted for a mirror of that age wherein he liued: and albeit a papiſt, yet not depriuable of the praiſe which it pleaſed God to prouide for him (being an enimie vnto the truth, perhaps through feare as manie more) by thoſe rare and manifold good means wherewith he was adorned. Inſomuch that Leland, a man of a cleare iudgement and great inſight to diſcerne betwéene ſubſtantiallie and ſuperficiallie learned, comparing this biſhop Tunſtall with profound Budeus, ſaith as followeth:

In this meane time, through controuerſie raiſed betwixt the Scottiſh nobilitie, and the quéene Dowager of Scotland, which chanced eſpeciallie about matters of religion, certeine of the lords there minding a reformation therein; and the quéene reſiſting them to hir power, in purpoſe to mainteine the old popiſh religion, which ſome name catholike; diuerſe companies of ſouldiers and men of war were ſent out of France into Scotland to aid the ſaid quéene, where they were placed in diuerſe townes and forts, to the high diſpleaſure of the more part of the Scottiſh nobilitie: who lothing to be oppreſſed with ſtrangers in that ſort, were forced to ſue vnto the quéene of England for aid to expell the French, who ſought to ſubuert the ancient ſtate of that realme, and to annex the ſame vnto the crowne of France.

Anno Reg. 2. Trouble in Scotland.

Frenchmen ſent into Scotland.

The Scots ſue to the quéens maieſtie of England for aid againſt the French.

Their ſute was the better liked of, for that it was doubted, leaſt the Frenchmen (vnder pretenſe of bringing an armie into Scotland to appeaſe the Scots) might attempt ſome inuaſion here in England, conſidering that by procurement (as was thought) of the duke of Guiſe, vncle to the quéene of France and Scotland, a title ſhould ſéeme to be pretended by his néece, the foreſaid quéene, as might be gathered by manifeſt coniectures of the vſurping of armes, and ſo forth. The names of the lords of Scotland that made ſute for aid againſt the Frenchmen at this ſeaſon, were theſe: the duke of Chateau le reault, the earle of Arraine his ſonne, the lord Iames prior of ſaint Andrews; the earle of Argile, the earle of Glencarne, the earle of Rothouſe, the earle of Southerland, the earle of Mounteith, the earle of Huntleie, the earle of Cathnes, the earle of Erroll, the earle Marſhall, the earle of Morton, the earle of Caſſils, the earle of Eglenton, the earle of Montros, the lord Ruithuen, the lord Boid, the lord Ogletrée, the lord Erſkin, the lord Dromond, the lord Hume, the lord Roſe, the lord Chreighton, the lord Leuingſton, the lord Somerwell, the maiſter of Lindſeie, the maiſter of Marwell.

The lords of Scotland that were confederat togither againſt the French.

The quéenes maieſtie, with aduiſe of hir graces councell, conſidering of this weightie buſineſſe, and withall foreſéeing the malicious purpoſe of hir aduerſaries, and how the queene of Scots was in France married and gouerned, ſo as ſhe was not able to vſe the libertie of hir crowne, did thinke it beſt to preuent ſuch miſchiefs as might inſue, if timelie remedie were not vſed, to diſplace ſuch dangerous neighbours the Frenchmen, that began to neſtle themſelues thus ſtronglie ſo néere at hand for no good purpoſe, as eaſilie might be gheſſed. Herevpon was a power raiſed and ſent forth both by ſea & land, the duke of Norffolke being appointed generall, and ſent into the north, for the direction thereof. And firſt maiſter William Winter, appointed viceadmerall of the quéens nauie northwards, made ſaile toward Scotland, and waſting alongſt the coaſt in Iannarie, came into the Forth, & ſo to the road of Leith, and there caſt anchor, as well to impeach the landing of ſuch Frenchmen, as might happilie be ſent forth of France, to the aid of the French there, againſt the Scotiſh lords, named of the congregation; as alſo to keepe them that laie in Inſketh from vittels: and likewiſe to ſée that none of the Frenchmen by water ſhould paſſe to or from Leith: but to watch them ſo, as they ſhuld not inioy anie commoditie that might come to either place by the ſame water.

The quéenes maieſtie determineth to aid the Scots.

The lord Grey generall of the armie.

Moreouer, after that the armie by land was come togither into the north parts, and had ſoiourned at Berwike and thereabouts, the lord Greie of Wilton being appointed generall of the ſaid armie, departed with the ſame out of the bounds of Berwike, and marched to Coldingham, where they incamped that night. Saturdaie the thirtéenth of March, ſir Iames Croft, and ſir George Howard departed Berwike to the armie, with all the lances and light horſſemen, conteining the number of twelue hundred and fiftie horſſes. The number of the footmen amounted to aboue ſix thouſand in all. The chiefe gouernours of which armie were theſe: the lord Greie of Wilton lieutenant generall, ſir Iames Croft aſſiſtant with him in that charge, the lord Scrope lord marſhall, ſir George Howard generall of the men at armes and demilances, maiſter Barnabie Fitz Patrike his lieutenant, ſir Henrie Perſie generall of the light horſſemen, Thomas Hugghens eſquier prouoſt marſhall, Thomas Gower maſter of the ordinance, maſter William Pelham capteine of the pioners, Edward Randoll eſquier, ſergeant Maior, maſter Thomas Burrough, maſter Cutbert Vaughan, maſter Williams, and maſter Cornewall corporals.

Dunglaſſe.

This ſaturdaie at night the armie incamping at Dunglas, the horſſemen lodged in ſundrie villages néere about. Sir Iames Croft laie that night at Coberſpeth, in the lard of Whitlaies houſe. Sundaie the laſt of March, the armie remoued from Dunglas, and marching by Dunbar, there iſſued out of the towne certeine horſſemen and footmen, offering a ſkirmiſh: towards whome certeine of the Engliſh lances and piſtoliers, with certeine harquebutters, made forwards: but they kept themſelues within their ſtrength. Yet ſome of the Engliſh horſſemen approched them ſo néere, that in ſkirmiſh two of the enimies horſſemen, and one footman were ſlaine. The Engliſhmen receiued little damage, ſauing that Peter Mince, one of their horſmen was hurt there. This doone, the armie marched on to Linton brigs, where the footmen incamped that night. The horſſemen laie at Hadington, and in diuerſe other ſmall townes: and ſir Iames Croft laie at Clarkington, weſt of Hadington, at the lard of Cockburns houſe.

Linton brigs.

Salt Preſton.

Mondaie the firſt of Aprill, the campe remoued from Linton brigs vnto ſalt Preſton, and there incamped. This euening ſir Iames Croft, with diuers of the capteins in his companie, met with the earle of Arraine, the lord Iames prior of ſaint Andrews, the maſter of Maxwell, ſir William Kirkaudie lard of Grange, and diuerſe other of the Scotiſh nobilitie with thrée hundred horſſe in their traine. After they were met and had ſaluted each other, they rode altogither vnto ſalt Preſton, where at the end of the towne, my lord Greie lord lieutenant met them, and imbraced them, & ſo they lighted from their horſſes, and entered into communication for the ſpace of an houre, and after tooke leaue each of other, and ſo departed for that night.

The earle of Arraine accompanied with other of the Scotiſh nobilitie.

The duke of Chateau le rault and his companie.

Tueſdaie the ſecond of Aprill, my lord Greie, ſir Iames Croft, my lord Scrope, ſir George Howard, with diuerſe of the capteins, rode to Muſklebourgh church, and there taried the comming of the duke of Chateau le rault, for the ſpace of full two houres: at length he came accompanied with his ſonne, the earle of Arraine, the earles of Argile, Glencarne, Southerland, Menteith, and Rothes, the lord Iames prior of ſaint Andrews, the lord Ruthuen alias Riuen, the lord Ogletrée, the lord Boid, the maſter of Maxwell, the lard of Ormeſton, the maſter of Lindſeie, the biſhop of Gallowaie, the abbat of ſaint Colmes inch, the abbat of Culros, the lard of Pettirrow, the lard of Cunningham head, the lard of Grange, and diuerſe others. They were two hundred horſſe in traine.

The Engliſh and Scotiſh gentlemen meet, embrace, and conſult.

Vpon the dukes approch, they all lighted on foot, as well on the one part as the other: and after courteous embracings, and gentle ſalutations, they entred into the houſe of one William Atkinſon, néere to Andreſke church, and ſat there in councell the ſpace of two houres, & then departed for that night. The armie laie ſtill in campe at ſalt Preſton, from mondaie, till ſaturdaie, Palmeſundaie euen. On wedneſdaie, the third of Aprill, my lord Greie, ſir Iames Croft, and my lord Scrope, ſir George Howard, ſir Henrie Perſie, and diuerſe other capteins and gentlemen, rode vnto Pinkeie, a houſe of the abbat of Dunfermes, diſtant a mile and a halfe from the campe, where the earle of Arraine, and the lord Iames Steward, with diuerſe other noble men of Scotland méeting them, did conduct them into the ſaid houſe, where they had long conference togither, which ended, they went to dinner, and after dinner, they returned with my lord lieutenant to ſalt Preſton, and viewed the Engliſh campe. Thurſdaie the fourth of Aprill, fiue yoong gentlemen, appointed to paſſe into England for pledges, & bound thither by ſea, through contrarie winds were forced to come on land at ſalt Pannes. Their names were as follow.

The Scotiſh pledges appointed to paſſe into England.

The lord Claud Hamilton fourth ſonne vnto the duke of Chateau le rault, Robert Douglas halfe brother to the lord Iames Steward, Archebald Campbell lord of Loughennell, George Gream ſecond ſonne to the earle of Monteith. Iames Coningham ſonne to the earle of Glencarne: they were brought vp to ſalt Preſton, and remained there that night. Saturdaie the ſixt of Aprill, being Palmeſundaie euen, the campe raiſed from ſalt Preſton, and marched forwards. Halfe a mile from Leſterike, beneath a crag, called Arthurs ſeat, the duke of Chateau le rault, the earle of Arraine, the earle of Argile, the lord Iames prior of ſaint Andrews, and the reſt of the noble men of Scotland, accompanied with two hundred horſſemen, or thereabouts, and fiue hundred footmen, ſtaied for the comming of the Engliſh armie. Wherevpon the lord Greie, ſir Iames Croft, the lord Scrope, ſir George Howard, and ſir Henrie Perſie, repaired to them, and had conference there with the duke, and other of the Scotiſh lords that were in his companie. In the meane while the armie ſtaied: but yet at length, the horſſemen, horſſemen, the vauntgard and battell, were commanded to march foorth; who accordinglie paſſing forward alongſt by the place where the duke & Scotiſh lords ſtood, held vpon their waie, till they approched néere to Leſterike.

Sir James Croft, and ſir George Howard, went to talke with the quéene.

At their comming thither, Trombull the quéene regents trumpet, came to my lord lieutenant, and brought with him a ſafe conduct, giuen vnder hir hand & ſeale, for the ſafe repaire of ſir James Croft, ſir George Howard, and ſix others to accompanie them. Wherevpon they preparing themſelues to go to hir (after they had talked with my lord lieutenant, and the duke Chatelerault) they departed towards Edenburgh, where the ſaid quéene as then laie within the caſtell. There went with them maiſter Summerſet, maiſter Pelham, and foure other gentlemen. Whileſt they were in conference with the quéene, although an abſtinence of all hoſtilitie by appointment taken betwixt my lord Greie and the ſaid quéene ought to haue ceaſſed; the Frenchmen to the number of nine hundred, or a thouſand ſhot, backed with fiue hundred corſelets and pikes, & about fiftie horſſemen, were come foorth of Leith, vnder the conduction of monſieur Doiſell, and the countie Martigues, coronell of the French footmen.

My lord Greis meſſage ſent to the Frenchmen.

My lord Greie vnderſtanding thereof, came vp to the hill, appointed an officer at armes called Rouge Croſſe, to go vnto them, with commandement from him, that they ſhould retire their forces forth of the field into the towne of Leith: for if it were not for the promiſe which he had made to the quéene Dowager, he would cauſe them to depart, not much to their eaſe.

The herald dooing his meſſage, receiued anſwer, that they were vpon their maiſter and miſtreſſe ground, and therefore meant not to remooue from it. Rouge Croſſe returning with this anſwer, was ſent againe from my lord lieutenant, to command them eftſoons to go their way backe to Leith for if they did not, he would ſuerlie ſend them awaie with a miſchiefe. But ſcarſe had the herald doone this ſecond meſſage, when the Frenchmen ſtepping foorth, diſcharged a whole volée of their ſhot into the field againſt my lord Greie and his companie.

A ſharpe and long ſkirmiſh betwéene both parts. The Frenchmen repelled by the Engliſhmen.

Herevpon, the Engliſhmen and they fell in ſkirmiſh, which continued for the ſpace of foure houres and more, ſo hot & earneſtlie mainteined on both parts, that the like had not lightlie béene ſéene manie a day before. Yet at length, the Engliſhmen droue the French footmen ouer the hill, wan the crag from them, and put them from a chappell, where they had ſtood a great while, vſing it for a couert and ſafegard for them againſt the Engliſhmens ſhot.

Then the enimies that were in Leith ſhot off diuerſe péeces of their great artillerie out of the towne againſt the Engliſhmen, who on the other part brought foorth two field péeces, and couered them with a troope of horſſemen; and hauing planted them to ſome aduantage, diſcharged the ſame among the enimies: who perceiuing that, gaue place, & ſuddenlie the Engliſh demilances gaue a charge, brake in amongſt them, and ſlue diuerſe. To conclude, they were put from their ground, and forced to retier backe into Leith, being followed welnéere to the verie gates of that towne.

I. Churchyard. The number of the Engliſh and French ſlaine.

There were ſlaine in this ſkirmiſh of the French, about a ſeuen ſcore, and amongſt them twelue men of name, beſide ſome of them that remained priſoners. Of the Engliſhmen, there were alſo diuerſe ſlaine, and manie hurt. But if the ground had bin knowen to the Engliſhmen, and what aduantage was offered to them by that preſumptuous comming of the enimies ſo far from their hold, it was thought their whole power might eaſilie haue béene cut off, and vtterlie diſtreſſed.

The Frenchmen driuen into Leith.

After that this ſkirmiſh was ended, and the Frenchmen driuen into Leith, the armie incamped at Leſterike. The ſame daie the Scotiſh hoſtages were imbarked to paſſe into England. Towards euening, ſir James Croft, and ſir George Howard, returned from the quéene regent, after they had ſpent a long time in talke with hir.

On ſundaie the ſeuenth of Aprill, a new trench was caſt beſide the crag, and thereon two péeces of ordinance planted. The ſame daie, ſir James Croft, ſir George Howard, and ſir Henrie Perſie, went againe vpon aſſurance, to talke with the quéene Dowager.

Saint Nicholas Stéeple planted with two great hot péeces.

Mondaie the eight of Aprill, the Frenchmen ſhot at the Engliſh campe verie ſore out of S. Nicholas ſtéeple, where there were two great péeces placed for to annoie them, although they did no great hurt. But the ſame night, the Engliſhmen caſt a trench beyond the crag, and placed in the ſame trench certeine ſmall péeces of artillerie, which went off the next daie againſt the enimies: and they likewiſe ſhot off againe at the Engliſhmen; and ſo likewiſe on wedneſdaie the tenth of Aprill, on which daie, a great part of the carriages for the great ordinance, and diuerſe bullets for the ſame, were landed, and much thereof remoued, and brought to the innermoſt trench.

Ordinance landed.

Thurſdaie the eleuenth of Aprill, the great ordinance was landed, and two péeces thereof mounted into their carriages.

Good fridaie to ſome bad fridaie.

The twelfe of Aprill being good fridaie, a bullet of a great péece of ordinance, being ſhot out of Leith earlie in the morning, did light in the campe, and ſlue thrée men. The ſame night, they were anſwered againe with foure or fiue canons, and demicanons. Saturdaie was ſpent in warding the trenches, and mounting the great artillerie.

Warre maketh no difference of time.

Sundaie the fourtéenth of Aprill, being Eaſter daie, the Engliſhmen ſhot off in the morning all their great ordinance, and the Frenchmen anſwered them againe, and ſo they continued moſt part of that day, in ſhooting one at another. The footmen alſo ſkirmiſhed ſo, that diuerſe were hurt on both parts.

The pile of Blackeneſſe ſurrendred.

The ſame day, the pile of Blackneſſe was ſurrendred to maiſter Winter, vpon ſight of the canon. There were within it eightéene Frenchmen, who were brought awaie priſoners, and the houſe deliuered to maiſter James Hamilton.

Nine Frenchmen in womens apparell.

The ſame daie, nine Frenchmen apparelled like women, came foorth of Leith, and counterfeiting ſome like demeanor to the apparell wherein they were diſguiſed, trained one of the Engliſh ſkouts within their danger, whome they tooke, and chopped off his head, which they ſet vpon the top of one of their church ſtéeples.

Blacke mondaie.

The Frenchmen win the trench.

Mondaie the fiftéenth of Aprill about noone, there iſſued out of Leith a fiftie horſſemen, and about fiue hundred harquebuſiers: who making to the new trenches, were vpon the Engliſhmen that warded in ſuch wiſe vpon the ſudden, before they could be brought into anie order; that ſo entring the trenches, they ſlue and wounded no ſmall number: and poſſeſſing the trenches a while, ſtopped and cloied the touch holes of thrée péeces of the artillerie, tooke maiſter Maurice Barkeleie priſoner, and his enſigne.

Maiſter Barkeleie taken priſoner.

Brian Fitz Williams was ſore wounded, and a foule fright there was. The alarum being brought to the campe, ſir James Croft and other repaired toward the trench with all expedition, and perceiuing the Frenchmen to be maiſters of one of the trenches, he called to capteine Vaughan, commanding him with his band to enter the trench, and to relieue thoſe that were hardlie beſet of the Frenchmen.

The Frenchmen repelled, and ſome of them ſlaine.

This was doone with great manhood ſhewed by the ſaid Vaughan and others, who entring the trench, repelled the enimies, and ſlue ſixtéene of them that were in the trench. Capteine Summerſet and capteine Read with their bands followed them alſo, as they retired, and maiſter Arthur Greie, with certeine of his demilances, of whome he had the conduction, ſuddenlie came vpon them, and charging them with great courage, draue them into the towne, and made no ſmall ſlaughter of them. In which charge maiſter Arthur Greie was ſhot through the ſhoulder. The great artillerie in Leith was not idle, during this ſkirmiſh, diſcharging to the number of an hundred ſhot, greatlie to the annoiance of the Engliſh, and hinderance of the ſeruice, which elſe might by them haue béene atchiued. This night the Engliſhmen drew backe their ordinance, which the Frenchmen had cloied with nailes and wiers in the touch-holes, but the ſame were planted againe before daie. Moreouer, our pioners caſt a new trench along by the old chappell.

Maiſter Arthur Greie hurt in the ſhoulder.

A new ſupplie commeth to the armie, the capteines names.

An hot alarum of an houres continuance.

Ordinance planted in trenches.

Tueſdaie the ſixtéenth of Aprill, a ſupplie of two thouſand & two hundred footmen came to the campe, ouer whome were capteins, ſir Andrew Corbet, ſir Rowland Stanleie, ſir Thomas Heſketh, ſir Arthur Manwering, ſir Laurence Smith, maiſter Francis Tunſtall, maiſter Edward Littleton, capteine Caruell, Philip Sturleie, and Dauid Morris. They were garded with fiue hundred horſſemen: ſir Raſe Sadler, ſir Francis Leake, ſir Iohn Forſter, and ſir Nicholas Strange hauing charge to ſée them ſafelie conducted: who after they had brought them paſt all danger of enimies, left them in ſafetie by the waie, & were come a daie or two before them to the campe. Wedneſdaie the ſeuentéenth of Aprill, it rained ſore the more part of the daie; but yet the ſame night maiſter Winter cauſed diuerſe of the ſhipbotes, being verie well manned, to giue a great alarum at the ſide of the towne towards the water, diſcharging manie baſſes and harquebuſiers of Croke into the towne: the alarum was verie hot for the ſpace of an houre. During this buſineſſe there was a right pitifull crie made by the women and children within the towne. The pioners being applied in worke to make trenches, on fridaie all daie at night they placed certeine péeces of the ordinance in the trenches beſide the chappell.

The biſhop of Ualence and his companie.

A ſkirmiſh of two houres continuance.

Saturdaie the twentith of Aprill, manie péeces were ſhot off out of the trenches into the towne. There iſſued notwithſtanding out at the gates an hundred ſhot, which placed themſelues in the holes of the bankes, to haile ſuch of the Engliſhmen as came foorth to offer the ſkirmiſh. All this daie alſo the pioners, both Scots and Engliſh were occupied in making of a new trench néere to the towne. Sir Geruis Cliffon & capteine Read with their bands garded them, and two hundred lances. The ſame daie the reſidue of the great ordinance with armour was brought on land. Sundaie the one and twentith of Aprill, the biſhop of Ualence named Monluc, accompanied with ſir Henrie Perſie, and thrée hundred light horſſemen came to Leſterike: the lord lieutenant, ſir Iames Croft, the lord Scroope, and ſir Raſe Sadler met him at the further end of the ward that was ſet of purpoſe for his entring into the campe. After they had receiued him with ſalutations according vnto the manner, he was conducted by Rouge Croſſe the officer of armes from the campe into Edenburgh, and ſo went vp to the caſtell to conferre with the quéene Dowager. He was no ſooner entred into the caſtell, but that there iſſued foorth of Leith the number of two hundred Frenchmen about twelue of the clocke, and began a hot ſkirmiſh, which continued two houres, at the which diuerſe were ſlaine on both parts.

More ordinance planted.

The enimies ordinance diſplaced.

The ſame night the lord lieutenant cauſed nine péeces of the great ordinance to be planted in the new trench: ſo that the next daie being mondaie, the ſame péeces were ſhot off verie earlie, directlie towards the ſtéeple of ſaint Anthonies church. And although thoſe péeces laie a quarter of a mile off, the péeces of ordinance that laie on the ſame ſtéeple were diſmounted by them; and likewiſe thoſe that laie in the ſtéeple of ſaint Nicholas church, at the which diuerſe péeces were leuelled, and within ſix or ſeauen ſhot the péeces that laie in that ſtéeple were alſo diſplaced, and a gunner ſlaine that ſtood at one of them, the péece and the gunner comming tumbling downe both togither. In this church (as was reported) their ſtore of vittels and munition was laid, ſo that batterie was made againſt the ſame all that daie, and a great péece of the church wall beaten downe, and the ſtéeple defaced. The biſhop of Ualence, after he had talked with the quéene Dowager, returned to commune with the lords of the congregation.

A fort raiſed.

A ſkirmiſh.

The French repelled.

Tueſdaie the thrée and twentith of Aprill, being ſaint Georges daie, the pioners Scotiſh and Engliſh were buſilie applied in worke, about the caſting of trenches to make a fort; and ſtill the artillerie went off againſt the towne. Wedneſdaie the foure and twentith of Aprill about thrée of the clocke in the after noone, there iſſued out of Leith ſeauentéene horſſemen, who offered the ſkirmiſh: and vnder the place called little London, where they were buſie in fortifieng all that daie, thrée or foure hundred of their ſhot were placed readie to breake out, if occaſion ſerued. At length certeine of the Engliſh lances gaue a charge vpon their horſſemen, who therewith retiring, drew the Engliſhmen within danger of their ſhot. But although the Frenchmen that daie ſhewed themſelues verie valiant in ſkirmiſhing euen in the face of the Engliſh artillerie: yet being now egerlie purſued by thoſe lances, they were forced to retire without anie great hurt doone to the Engliſhmen, although the ſkirmiſh continued néere hand two houres. In this laſt charge yoong maiſter Browne was hurt.

The new fort called Montpelham.

Another ſkirmiſh.

Iames Hamilton taken priſoner.

Thurſdaie the fiue and twentith of Aprill, the pioners laboured ſore for the moſt part of the daie in finiſhing the new fort named Montpelham: to the gard whereof capteine Uaughan was appointed gouernor, with twelue hundred ſoldiors. This fort was raiſed on the ſouth ſide of the towne, the plot whereof was caſt ſquare, with foure bulworks at euerie corner, and twelue battering péeces planted in places conuenient within the ſame. This thurſdaie alſo, about fiue of the clocke in the after noone, there iſſued out of Leith on the eaſt ſide ſeauentie or eightie horſſemen, and two hundred harquebuſiers, offering the ſkirmiſh, towards whome certeine of the Engliſh light horſſemen roundlie made, and charging them, droue them backe to their footmen, who with their ſhot receiued the light horſſemen ſo ſharplie, that they were forced to retire. In which retire Iames Hamilton a Scotiſhman was taken priſoner, for the reſcue of whome the horſſemen made forward againe: but the enimies ſhot was ſo hot, that they were not able to recouer him; but yet they ſlue two of the French horſſemen in ſight.

Priſoners taken and ſlaine.

During the time of this ſkirmiſh, there was great ſhooting off with the great ordinance on both ſides, & much hurt doone as well to the Engliſh as French. This daie capteine Perith, and capteine Haies, hauing charge of a troope of light horſſemen vnder ſir Henrie Perſie, and the lord of Grange were taken priſoners before Dunbar; and to the number of twentie or thirtie others were likewiſe taken or ſlaine the ſame time. The ſame night alſo, two thouſand footmen with the pioners were ſent to the other ſide of the towne, beyond the canon milles, where the pioners caſt a trench for the ſafe lodging of the armie, which remoued the next day being fridaie, and the ſix and twentith of Aprill from Leſterike downe into the vallie by the ſaid canon milles called the red Braies, néere to the riuer ſide on the ſouth part of the towne of Leith. As the armie was thus remouing from Leſterike towards the ſaid place called the red Braies, the Frenchmen within Leith ſhot off manie of their great péeces of artillerie, but without dooing anie great hurt. As the armie was incamping, certeine of the enimies horſſemen and footmen ſkirmiſhed with the Engliſh lances and light horſſemen a long time; there were two Frenchmen ſlaine and their horſſes alſo. In the time of this ſkirmiſh two canons were conueied and planted in the new trench, which diſcharged diuerſe ſhots at the enimies.

The armie remoueth from Leſterike to the red Braies.

A ſkirmiſh, and what was doone in the ſame.

Saturdaie the ſeauen and twentith of Aprill, the great artillerie was planted aloft on the hill aboue the campe, within leſſe than a curriers ſhot of the towne walles, and the pioners were ſet a worke to caſt new trenches from the place where the ſame ordinance was lodged vnto Montpelham, drawing ſo néere vnto Leith, as the harquebus might reach them that watched and warded within the gréene bulworke. There iſſued out of Leith vnder the weſt bulworke certeine of the Frenchmen, the which were chaſed into the towne by the lard of Grange and others. The French kept the ſame daie a trench which they had made without the towne, continuallie ſhooting at the Engliſhmen in the campe: but the ſame night the Engliſhmen wan that trench from them, ſlue diuerſe of them therein, togither with their ſcout. And this doone, they gaue a great alarum to the towne both by land and water, the ſhipbotes ſhooting off againſt the towne verie hotlie, and they within the towne likewiſe at the Engliſhmen. The ſame night was the great ordinance planted, and maiſter Markham hurt. On ſundaie the eight and twentith of Aprill the ſaid great ordinance went off, and ſhot continuallie the more part of that daie. The biſhop of Valence departed the ſame daie towards Berwike: and this night ſir George Howard that had béene ſent backe to Berwike, to ſignifie to the duke of Norffolke the ſtate of the ſiege, returned with ſir Richard Lée, being conducted with fiue hundred horſſemen.

The planting of the great artillerie.

A trench woon from the enimies.

Great ordinance planted and diſcharged.

Mondaie the nine and twentith of Aprill, the péeces of the great artillerie were occupied in ſhooting off verie hotlie, and the French likewiſe ſhot off theirs, and comming foorth of the towne ſkirmiſhed with the Engliſhmen. This night the pioners made new trenches toward the ſouth bulworke. Tueſdaie the laſt of Aprill was ſpent in ſhooting off the great artillerie into the towne. About fiue of the clocke in the after noone, a ſudden fire was raiſed within the towne, which hugelie increaſed and continued the moſt part of that night. At the beginning when it firſt appéered, the Engliſh ordinance was ſhot off to the place where the fire was, which ſhot togither with helpe of the wind, and being verie great at that preſent, did maruellouſlie augment the ſame fire: yet neuertheleſſe the French at that preſent time offered a ſkirmiſh, and continued the ſame néere hand for the ſpace of two houres, manned their walles, and made the beſt prouiſion they might for doubt of ſome aſſault. It was indéed appointed, that certeine bands ſhould make an alarum to the towne: in ſo much that capteine Vaughan with diuerſe of the ſouldiors of Montpelham entred the ditch, and approching the walles, diſcouered the height of them. And notwithſtanding that the French did what they could to annoie them in the diches with currier ſhot, yet did capteine Vaughan ſtaie in the ditch a pretie while, and retired with his men without receiuing anie great hurt.

A ſkirmiſh.

A fire in Leith, and augmented with ſhot of ordinance and windie weather.

Capteine Vaughan.

Wedneſdaie the firſt of Maie, the Frenchmen ſet vp verie earlie in the morning their Maie poles in certeine bulworks, and fouretéene enſignes: the which being diſcouered of them in the campe, they ſaluted them with a peale of great ordinance, and likewiſe the Frenchmen anſwered them againe, and ſo continued the moſt part of that daie. The ſame daie Iohn Brian lieutenant to capteine Capell, wan a trench frõ the French at the weſt ſide of the towne, and in deſpite of them kept it all that daie with the loſſe onelie of one man. Thurſdaie the ſecond of Maie, the pioners made the trenches for the artillerie to be planted in batterie. The night following they remoued and placed the ſame artillerie in the new trench: and the next morning being fridaie and the third of Maie, about foure of the clocke, the ſame batterie went off, and continued all that daie. In the after noone of the ſame daie certeine Frenchmen iſſued out of the weſt bulworke, and ſkirmiſhing with the Engliſhmen on that ſide the water, returned without anie great hurt.

Maie poles ſet vp in Leith on Maie daie.

A trench woon from the French.

The night inſuing the pioners made a new trench by the citadell wherein they might lodge ſome ſhot, and capteine Vaughan with diuerſe of the bands in Montpelham gaue two falſe aſſaults to the towne, entred the ditches, and viewed the flankers: wherevpon the French ſhot off the ſame flankers, and manning their walles, ſhot off two or thrée volées of their ſmall artillerie, ſlaieng and hurting to the number of twentie of the Engliſhmen. Among other, little Norton loſt his life that night, and ſo at length the reſidue returned. Saturdaie the fourth of Maie, there were thrée enſigns appointed to gard the new trenches, and towards night, when the ward ſhould be reléeued, and the watch ſet, the Frenchmen that were in the trench vnder the citadell, made a ſallie vpon the ſudden. Wherevpon the Engliſhmen that garded the ſaid trench were conſtreined to abandon a great part thereof for a time: but yet the Engliſhmen eftſoons taking courage, laid to them afreſh, repelled them againe, & draue them backe into their owne trenches, ſlue foure of them in fight, and hurt manie others. This was the lot of warre, to be ouerthrowne by force of the enimie, as the poet ſaith:

Capteine Vaughan vieweth the enimies flankers.

The French repelled by the Engliſh.

Qui Martem experti, per vim ſubiguntur ab hoſte.

Whileſt this was in dooing, the French had ſtuffed their bulworks and rampters with curriers and harquebuſiers of Croke, as thicke as was poſſible, which went off without ceaſſing at the Engliſhmen, for the ſpace of an houre and more. The Engliſh artillerie planted in the trenches did anſwer them againe continuallie, and the great péeces did much hurt among them, in ſight of them that watched in the ſame trenches. The ſame night the Engliſhmen conueied two culuerings ouer the water to ſcowre the mils: and before the breake of the daie they had burnt one of the ſame mils. Sundaie the fift of Maie earlie in the morning at the reléeuing of the watch, and entring of the ward, foure ſouldiors that belonged to the great ordinance iſſued out, and ſet fier on the other mill, which burnt verie outragiouſlie without ceaſſing, for the ſpace of an houre or more. The French began to aſſemble towards the mill, in hope to haue quenched the fire, but they were deceiued: for ſuddenlie the Engliſhmen cut two holes through their trenches, & placing in the ſame the two demi culuerings, ſhot them off at the Frenchmen, ſo that they were driuen to forſake the mill, and in their retire ſome of them were ſlaine.

The mils burnt by the Engliſh and the French driuen from thenſe.

This daie alſo, as foure French gentlemen came foorth to diſcouer the Engliſh trenches, capteine Read commanded one of his ſouldiors to ſhot at them, but through miſhap his péece burſt, and a ſhiuer thereof flue out, and brake the arme of his ſaid capteine. Mondaie the firſt of Maie, the armie lieng quiet all the morning, in the afternoone the Engliſh ordinance on the further ſide the water began to ſhoot off againſt the enimies verie hotlie, ſo continuing till night. This daie the earle of Argile, and diuerſe other noble men of Scotland, came to Edenburgh with two thouſand horſſemen and footmen, who ſhewed themſelues in order of a muſter, on the hill vnderneth the caſtell. Which being perceiued of the French within Leith, they ſhot off thrée great péeces of artillerie at them, but (as God would haue it) without hurt, for two of the bullets lighted ſhort, and the third did fall in a garden within the towne of Edenburgh. The night inſuing, the great ordinance in the Engliſhmens trenches and bulworks continued ſhooting on euerie ſide. And hérewith commandement was giuen by the lord lieutenant, and the councell, that the whole armie ſhould be readie armed with their weapon and furniture according by midnight.

The aſſault giuen to Leith the ſeauenth of Maie.

The horſmen appointed to gard the field.

In the morning by two of the clocke the ſeuenth of Maie being tueſdaie, diuerſe bands paſſed forth towards the towne, and entring the ditches offered the ſcale: other capteins with their men approched the bulworks, and other there were appointed to enter beſide the mils. Beſide the Engliſh bands commanded thus to giue the aſſault, there were a thouſand Scots ioined with them, whereof fiue hundred with capteine Vaughan, and ſuch other capteins as were commanded to attempt the bulworke next to Montpelham, and other fiue hundred went with ſuch of the Engliſh capteins as were commanded to aſſault the breach beyond the water. Moreouer, as well the lances as light horſſemen were aſſigned to gard the fields; ſir George Howard with the lances kéeping betwixt the fort of Montpelham and the ſea weſtward, and ſir Henrie Perſie with the light horſſemen betwixt the campe and the ſea eaſtward. The reſt of the footmen that went not to the aſſault, were alſo appointed to gard the trenches and field, in ſuch wiſe as was thought expedient. So that perfect direction was giuen in euerie behalfe by the lord lieutenant, and other of the councell. And vpon warning giuen by capteine Randall ſergeant maior, ſuch as had béene commanded to giue the aſſault in their ſeuerall appointed places, preaſed forward with courage inough, and boldlie aduentured to clime the wals, & enter at the breaches, but yet their attempt wanted the wiſhed ſucceſſe: for what through the Frenchmens policie in ſtopping the currant of the riuer that night, and other deuiſes for their owne ſafegard, and the annoiance of the aſſailants: and what by reaſon of the vnfitneſſe of the ladders, being too ſhort by two yards and more, the aſſailants were repelled. For during the whole time of the aſſault, which continued for the ſpace of an houre and a halfe, the French ſhot off their flankers, and mainteined their ſhot from the wals ſo thicke, that it ſeemed a verie hell for the time.

The Engliſh men repelled by the policies and deuiſes of the French.

The number ſlaine & hurt at the aſſault.

They alſo hurled downe ouer the wals vpon the aſſailants heads, great plentie of ſtones, logs, and mightie péeces of timber, which did much hurt to the Engliſhmen and Scots, that forced themſelues to clime vp. But yet neuertheleſſe, manie there were that entred the towne in ſundrie places, of the which ſome came backe againe, although others were beaten downe and ſlaine. To conclude, at length all that eſcaped with life, were forced to retire with the loſſe of ſeauen or eight ſcore Engliſhmen, ſome haue ſaid two hundred, which were ſlaine outright, beſide thoſe that were wounded, being in number at the leaſt two or thrée hundred: and amongſt other, there were diuerſe capteins and gentlemen that were hurt, as ſir Thomas Heſketh, maſter Sutton, maſter Newport, maſter Conweie, capteine Wood, Thomas Fitton, with others. Vpon the repulſe thus giuen to our men by the French, they aduanced and ſet vp fouretéene enſignes preſentlie about the towne, and continued otherwiſe quiet all that daie. Wedneſdaie the eight of Maie in the afternoone, ſir George Howard, and ſir Richard Lée departed towards Barwike with certeine companies of horſmen for their ſafe conduction. Thurſdaie the ninth of Maie, the Frenchmen wrought verie earneſtlie within the towne, to fortifie the neceſſarie places, and repare the breaches, euen in the face of the Engliſh ordinance, which went off diuerſe times, and did them much hurt.

A ſupplie fro Barwike of foure hundred and fiftie ſoldiors.

Sir Francis Leake bringeth a ſupplie to the campe.

The ſame daie alſo the French had manned to the ſea wards a bote fraught with fiftie harquebuſiers, meaning to conueie them ouer to Inſketh: but the Engliſh ſhips diſcouering them, prepared certeine botes to encounter them, whereof they being aware, returned. Fridaie the tenth of Maie, maſter Inglebie, capteine Pickman, and capteine Browne, came to the campe from Barwike, with a ſupplie of foure hundred and fiftie ſouldiors. The ſame daie about ten of the clocke at night, there chanced a brall to fall out among the Scots that watched in the trenches néereſt vnto the towne of Leith on the weſt ſide, inſomuch that one of them fell to and killed an other: which diſorder being perceiued of the French within Leith, they iſſued out, and meant to haue vſed the vantage: but the Engliſhmen that watched néere vnto the Scots ſtaied the fraie, and did not onelie bring them to quiet, but alſo put the Frenchmen to flight. On ſundaie the twelfe of Maie, about midnight the Frenchmen, to the number of two hundred, ſallied forth of the towne, minding to giue a camiſado to the Engliſhmen, who kept watch that night in the trenches at the weſtſide of Montpelham; but they were deſcried, and certeine of them killed, and ſo had the repulſe. Wedneſdaie the fiftéenth of Maie, ſir Francis Leake came to the campe with a ſupplie of fiue hundred men from Barwike.

A ſkirmiſh betwéene the Engliſh and French.

The Frenchmen chaſed.

Thurſdaie the ſixteenth of Maie towards night, the Frenchmen to the number of one hundred footmen, and thirtie horſſemen, came abroad and ſhewed themſelues verie braue, ſkirmiſhing with the Engliſhmen at the weſt end of their towne. Tueſdaie the one and twentith of Maie, about ſeauen of the clocke at night, there iſſued forth of Leith ſix horſſemen, and one hundred footmen harquebuſiers, marching toward Montpelham to offer ſkirmiſh. Wherevpon capteine Vaughan went forth to them verie ſhortlie, and ſkirmiſhed with them a prettie while: and in the meane time, off went the great ordinance on both ſides. In the end the Frenchmen were driuen to retire into the towne, for the Engliſhmen ſhewed themſelues verie egre, and valiantlie charged their enimies, put them to retire, and chaſed them in at their gates, to the which they followed them right hardilie.

Summerſets mount.

Sir Peter Carew ſent from the court.

The ſame night, maiſter Francis Summerſet and other capteins were appointed to kéepe a fort built aboue the campe; and now finiſhed, tooke name of him being capteine thereof, and was after called Summerſets mount. The ſame daie a ſouldiour of capteine Druries band was hanged for going to Edenburgh, contrarie to a proclamation, inhibiting anie ſoldiour ſo to doo without ſpeciall licence. Wedneſdaie the two and twentith of Maie, ſir Peter Carew came to the campe, being ſent from the court. Thurſdaie the foure and twentith of Maie at ſeuen of the clocke at night, the French ſallied forth to the number of two hundred footmen, and twentie horſſemen, at the reléefe of the warders when the watch ſhould be ſet, meaning (as it appeared) to haue wonne the trenches from the Engliſhmen. Wherevpon a ſore ſkirmiſh followed, diuerſe ſlaine, and manie hurt on both parties: yet in the end the Frenchmen were driuen home by plaine force. This was at the weſt ſide of the towne, where they had fortified towards the ſea.

A ſore ſkirmiſh, wherein the French are diſcomfited.

An Engliſh hoie taken.

The ſame daie the Frenchmen of Dunbar tooke an Engliſh hoie laden with double béere, béefe, oxen, and flitches of bacon. Saturdaie the eight of Iune, ſir Iohn Neuill with thrée hundred men, capteine Bridges, and capteine Drurie, with other thrée hundred, ſet from Barwike towards the campe, where they arriued on mondaie the tenth of Iune, on which daie the quéene Dowager departed this life. The thirtéenth of Iune, ſir William Cicill, principall ſecretarie to the quéenes maieſtie, and doctor Wotton deane of Canturburie and Yorke came to Barwike, appointed commiſſioners on hir ſaid maieſties behalfe, to treat of an accord with the conte de Randon, and the biſhop of Valence, commiſſioners ſent for that purpoſe from the French king, and his wiſe Marie quéene of Scotland. The fouretéenth of Iune being fridaie, a certeine number of Frenchmen came foorth of Leith to gather cockles on the ſands towards Montpelham: which the Engliſhmen perceiuing, ſet vpon them, ſlue thréeſcore and ten, and tooke ſixtéene of them priſoners.

The quéene Dowager departeth this life.

The French gather cockles to their hinderance.

Sir William Cicill and doctor Wotton come to Edenburgh.

On ſundaie the ſixtéenth of Iune, the fore remembred commiſſioners came to Edenburgh: and as maſter ſecretarie and doctor Wotton paſſed the Engliſh forts and campe, they were ſaluted with a gallant peale of the harquebuſiers that ſhot off their harquebuſies verie liuelie. Mondaie the ſeuentéenth of Iune about eight of the clocke, an abſtinence of warre was concluded, warning being giuen by the diſcharging of two péeces of the great artillerie out of the caſtell; and then the Frenchmen ſhewed and aduanced themſelues vpon their rampiers. Saturdaie the two and twentith of Iune, the abſtinence was broken off, which till then had béene trulie kept and obſerued. Thurſdaie the fourth of Iulie, about thrée of the clocke in the after noone, the French came out of Leith, according to their accuſtomed maner to gather cockles. Wherevpon the lord lieutenant being at that preſent in Montpelham, ſent a drum vnto monſieur Doiſell to ſignifie to him that his ſouldiours had gone further without their bounds than they might doo by the order taken by the commiſſioners of both parts. Doiſell anſwered, that they were no ſouldiours, but poore people which went to gather cockles for their reléefe and ſuſtenance. The drum ſaid, that if they kept not themſelues within their appointed limits, my lord lieutenant meant to ſend them backe not greatlie to their eaſe: wherevnto Doiſell replied, that if he ſo did, he would doo the beſt he could to aid them. Herevpon the Engliſh horſſemen and footmen out of Montpelham gaue a charge vpon them, and ſlue of them to the number of fiftie, and tooke certeine of the reſidue priſoners. Fridaie the ſixt of Iune, about ſix of the clocke in the afternoone, iſſued out of Leith fouretéene horſſemen, and an hundred footmen, which offered the ſkirmiſh: but vpon the ſhooting off the great artillerie from Montpelham, they retired home againe into the towne.

Frenchmen ſtillons beaten as they gathered cockles.

Scattergood a gunners wiſe deceiuing the Frenchmen.

The night following about twelue a clocke, one Scattergood an Engliſhman that was a gunner, & had feined himſelfe to flée from the Engliſh campe for manſlaughter into Leith, and was receiued of the Frenchmen, beléeuing that he had meant no deceit, came out of the towne, after he had remained there about ſeauen daies: in which meane while he had vnderſtood fullie the ſtate of the towne, and now vpon his returne made relation therof as he knew. On ſaturdaie the ſixt of Iune, the lord Greie lord lieutenant, maſter ſecretarie Cicill, and ſir Rafe Sadler, betwixt thrée and foure of the clocke in the afternoone, gaue order that there ſhould no péece be ſhot, nor ſhew of hoſtilitie made till ſeauen of the clocke the ſame night: and herewith ſent ſir Gerueis Clifton vnto all the ſouldiors that warded in the trenches and bulworks on the weſt ſide of Leith, to command them to obſerue the like order. And ſir Iohn Neuill was ſent with like commandement vnto the ſouldiors that laie in Summerſets mount. The peace now in the meane time being concluded, on the morrow being ſundaie, and ſeauenth of Iune, ſir Francis Leake, and ſir Gerueis Clifton, accompanied with two French gentlemen, were ſent to the towne of Leith, to ſignifie vnto monſieur Doiſell, the biſhop of Amiens, la Broſſe, Martigues, and other the French lords and capteins, that they were come thither by commandement from the commiſſioners, to cauſe the peace alreadie concluded to be proclamed: which accordinglie was doone in maner as followeth.

Order taken for the reſtreining of all ſignes of hoſtilitie.

The peace concluded and word ſent to the French that it ſhould be proclamed.

The forme of proclaming the foreſaid peace betwéene the parties at hoſtilitie.

THe moſt mightie princeſſe, Elizabeth by the grace of God, quéene of England, France, & Ireland, defender of the faith, &c: and the moſt chriſtian king, Francis and Marie, by the ſame grace of God king and quéene of France and Scotland: haue accorded vpon a reconciliation of a peace and amitie to be inuiolablie kept, betwixt them, their ſubiects, kingdomes and countries. And therfore in their names it is ſtrictlie commanded to all maner of perſons borne vnder their obeiſances, or being in their ſeruice, to forbeare all hoſtilitie either by ſea or land, & to kéepe good peace each with other from this time forwards, as they will anſwer therevnto at their vttermoſt perils.

Immediatlie after this proclamation was ended, ſir Francis Leake and ſir Gerueis Clifton were brought to monſieur Doiſels lodging, where was prepared for them a great banket of thirtie or fortie diſhes: and yet not one either of fleſh or fiſh, ſauing one of the fleſh of a powdred horſſe, as a certeine perſon hath written that taſted thereof, as he himſelfe auoucheth. ¶ Héere then we ſée the courſe of war, the end whereof of neceſſitie muſt be peace. For when both parts are either wearied, weakened, ſlaughtered, or ſo diſcomfited, as that they be conſtreined to ſurceaſſe, leaſt they be ſlaine euerie mothers ſonne: then peace is ſought, and hard conditions receiued rather than it ſhall be refuſed. O that it were Gods will (ſaith Schardus writing of the accidents happening in the yeare 1570, which all men counted a fortunate and bleſſed yeare, albeit famine, the Turkiſh warre, the peſtilence, and moſt cruell ouerflowings of waters did then outragiouſlie take on: bicauſe thrée verie gréeuous warres, namelie the firſt of the Polanders againſt the Muſcouits, the ſecond of France within it ſelfe by ciuill diſſention, & the third betwéene the Sweueners and the Danes, were then finiſhed) O that it were Gods will (ſaith he) that kings and princes would be admoniſhed by examples in due time to conſult of peace, and to make much thereof, rather than after manie calamities ſuſteined and taken, to thinke how beneficiall and pretious it is. Then ſhould they without ſéeking or ſweating inioy thoſe things which to obteine they vndertake great voiages, and yet nothing néere their purpoſe without much bloudſhed, ſlaughter, and waſtfulneſſe; as ſometime verie wiſelie ſaid Cyneas to Pyrrhus, diſuading him from the Italiſh warre: and as one both learnedlie and fitlie writeth, ſaieng:

Ludendi vt faciat conſumpta pecunia finem:
Sic vbi vaſtatæ gentes lachrymantur & vrbes,
Aurea tum demum feruntur fœdera pacis.

Atque animos hominum ſaluis coaleſcere rebus!]

Whie this hiſtoriographer is ſo large in the deſcription of this ſiege of Leith.

Thus haue I béene more large in this matter concerning the ſiege of Leith, than may be thought peraduenture neceſſarie, ſith the thing is yet freſh in memorie: but bicauſe there came to my hands certeine notes of one or two perſons that were there preſent, and for helpe of their owne memories wrote the ſame, I haue thought it not impertinent to inſert the effect of them, that the ſame may ſerue to further thoſe that hereafter ſhall write the hiſtorie of this time more at large, ſith my purpoſe is not to continue the ſame otherwiſe than I find things noted in the abridgements of John Stow and Richard Grafton: except in ſome recitall of expeditions and iournies made, as this, and other into Scotland, and that ſame of the right honourable the earle of Warwike into Normandie, which I haue thought good to inlarge, according to ſuch notes as haue come to my hand, beſeeching the readers to accept the ſame in good part: and if anie thing be omitted, either in this place or anie other, that were as neceſſarie to be ſpoken of, as thoſe points which I haue touched, or afterwards may touch, to impute the fault to the want of good inſtructions, and not to anie negligence or lacke of good will in me to aduance euerie mans worthie doings according to his merits.

The articles of the peace at the ſiege of Leith.

But now concerning the articles of the peace, being about thirtéene in all, the chéefeſt may ſéeme to reſt héerein, that the French ſouldiours and men of warre ſhould depart out of the realme of Scotland within a ſhort time limited of twentie daies, as Ludouico Guiciardini hath noted; ſix ſcore of them onlie excepted, as thrée ſcore to abide in Inſketh, and thrée ſcore in the caſtell of Dunbar, they to be anſwered their wages at the hands of the eſtates of Scotland, and to be ſubiect vnto the lawes and ordinances of that realme. That the fortifications about Leith ſhould be razed and demoliſhed: and likewiſe the fort which had béene built and raiſed before the caſtell of Dunbar by the French, for a ſtrength thereto. That the Frenchmen ſhould not conueie into Scotland anie men of warre, or munitions without conſent of the parlement aſſembled of thrée eſtates of that realme. That the king and quéene of France & Scotland ſhould not frõ thenſeforth beare the armes of England, ſith the ſame apperteined onelie to the quéens maieſtie of England and to no other perſon.

The end of this peace thus concluded.

Sée more hereof in Scotlãd pag. 374.

Theſe and other articles were compriſed and eſtabliſhed in the concluſion of this peace, as well to the honour and ſuertie of the quéenes maieſtie of England, hir realmes, dominions, and ſubiects, as alſo for the wealth and preſeruation of the realme of Scotland, the nobles and other ſubiects of that realme. After that this peace then was fullie eſtabliſhed, agréed, and concluded, the Frenchmen were imbarked at Leith in Engliſh veſſels; thoſe onelie excepted that were appointed to remaine as pledges with the Engliſhmen till the ſhips came backe againe, and a few other that were permitted to paſſe through England into their countrie. Thus were the French forces remoued out of Scotland, a matter ſo much importing to the confirmation of peace betwixt vs and that realme, and alſo to the auoiding of further perils, that this iournie ended with ſo honorable and profitable a peace, concluded by the high induſtrie and prudent policie of our quéenes maieſties commiſſioners afore mentioned, may be accompted one of the moſt neceſſarie expeditions, and moſt beneficiall ſeruices that had béene made and put in practiſe in manie yeares before. For the quéenes maieſtie (as ſome haue trulie written) had not onlie hir chéefe deſire, by remoouing of the French hir dangerous neighbors, that were about to neſtle themſelues ſo neare hir elbow: but alſo a perfect peace with the Scots was therby procured, like to continue manie yeares (if the ſaid Scots ſhall not ſéeke their owne wo) being full vnable to aduantage themſelues by warres againſt vs, as to the wiſer and beſt ſort of them I truſt is not vnknowne.

The commendation of the foreſaid concluded peace.

The quéenes meaning in remoouing the French out of Scotland.

But to leaue the further conſideration of the benefit that may grow herof to this realme, vnto their iudgements that haue riper heads to vnderſtand the ſame: I will procéed, and herewith make an end of this matter, concerning the ſiege of Leith. After that the Frenchmen were departed, and the forts about Leith and Dunbar razed and demoliſhed, according to the couenants of peace, the quéenes maieſtie called backe hir armie without reteining anie péece within Scotland to hir owne vſe. In which honorable and vpright dealing, ſhe wan more fame and eſtimation, than if ſhe had ſeized and kept in hir poſſeſſion halfe the realme of Scotland: ſpeciallie regarding the perplexed ſtate of the people by war, which ſhe redreſſed by the eſtabliſhment of peace, a thing which ſhe alwaies loued, as the contrarie ſhe mortallie hated: as one hath noted of hir grace, ſaieng:

The quéenes armie reuoked out of Scotland.

Virgo pacis amans, quæ ſtat contraria bellis.

The quéenes maieſtie by the aduiſe of hir moſt honorable councell, meaning to aboliſh all corrupt, baſe, and copper monies then currant in this realme of England, coined in the times and reignes of king Henrie the eight, and king Edward the ſixt, to the great hinderance and decaie of the commonwealth of this realme, and therewith to reſtore vnto all hir ſubiects fine and pure ſterling monies, both of gold and ſiluer, to the great honor and benefit of the whole realme: publiſhed a proclamation on Michaelmaſſe euen before noone, that the teſton coined for twelue pence, and in the reigne of king Edward embaſed by proclamation to ſix pence, ſhould now forthwith (that of the beſt ſort marked with the portculeis) be currant for foure pence halfepenie: the ſecond marked with the greihound for two pence farthing: the third and worſt ſort not marked as afore, not to be currant at all, nor receiued for anie value. The grote to be currant for two pence, the former péece of two pence for a penie, &c.

It was not long after this, but that hir grace reſtoring to hir ſubiects fine ſterling monie, called all the ſaid baſe and corrupt coines into hir maieſties mint, allowing to them therefore after the rate before mentioned, ſo much of the ſaid fine monies as they brought in of the ſaid baſe monies. About the ſame time, hir grace alſo finding this realme greatlie vnfurniſhed of armour, munitions, and powder, for the defenſe thereof in time of neceſſitie, did ſo largelie and plentifullie prepare and cauſe to be brought into the ſame, ſuch ſufficient furniture of armour and weapons, as England hath iuſt cauſe to praiſe and giue thanks to God and hir maieſtie; for that it is certeine, that the realme was neuer ſo amplie ſtored nor prouided of all maner of kinds of

The quéens is gréeued with the loſſe of Paules ſtéeple & prouideth means to repare it.

The quéenes beneuolence to excite others.

Ouerſéers appointed to ouerſée the reparing of Paules.

The tenth of Aprill was one William Geffreie whipped, from the Marſhalſea in Southworke, to Bedlem without Biſhops gate of London, for that he profeſſed one Iohn Moore to be Chriſt our ſauior: on his head was ſet a paper, wherein was written as followeth: William Geffreie a moſt blaſphemous heretike, denieng Chriſt our ſauiour in heauen. The ſaid Geffreie being ſtaied at Bedlem gate, Iohn Moore was brought forth, before whome William Geffreie was whipped, till he confeſſed Chriſt to be in heauen. Then the ſaid Iohn Moore being examined, and anſwering ouerthwartlie, was commanded to put off his cote, doublet, and ſhirt; which he ſéemed to doo verie willinglie, and after being tied to the cart, was whipped an arrowes ſhot from Bedlem, where at the laſt he alſo confeſſed Chriſt to be in heauen, and himſelfe to be a ſinfull man. Then was Iohn Moore ſent againe into Bedlem, and Geffreie to the Marſhalſea, where they had laine priſoners nigh a yéere and a halfe, the one for profeſſing himſelfe to be Chriſt, the other a diſciple of the ſame Chriſt. On wedneſdaie the 4 of Iune, betwéene foure & fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, the ſtéeple of Paules in London being fired by lightning, braſt forth (as it ſéemed to the beholders) two or thrée yards beneath the foot of the croſſe, and from thence burnt downe the ſpire to the ſtone worke and bels, ſo terriblie, that within the ſpace of foure houres the ſame ſtéeple with the roofes of the church, ſo much as was timber or otherwiſe combuſtible, were conſumed, which was a lamentable ſight and pitifull remembrance to the beholders thereof. After this miſchance, the quéens maieſtie being much gréeued for the loſſe of ſo beautifull a monument, directed hir highneſſe letters to the maior of the citie of London, willing him to aſſemble the citizens to take ſome order for ſpeciall aid and helpe for the reparing againe of the ſaid monument. And ſhe of hir moſt gratious diſpoſition, to giue a comfort to others for the furtherance thereof, did preſentlie giue and deliuer in gold one thouſand markes, and a warrant for a thouſand lode of timber, to be taken out of hir maieſties woods or elſewhere: and the citizens of London granted one beneuolence, and thrée fiftéens to be forthwith paied. The clergie vnder the prouince of Canturburie granted the fortith part of the value of their benefices charged with firſt fruits, & not charged with firſt fruits the thirtith part. The clergie of the dioceſſe of London granted the thirtith part of their benefices in firſt fruits, and the twentith part out of firſt fruits. Now immediatlie by commandement of the quéenes highneſſe, hir priuie councell tooke order that ſix citizens of London, and two of the cleargie of the church of Paules, had charge and commandement to ouerſée and ſet forward this worke, who made ſuch expedition, that within one moneth next following the burning thereof, the whole church, that is to ſaie, all the foure great roofes of the ſame were couered with bords and lead, after the maner of a falſe roofe. And the greatneſſe of the worke diſpatched in ſo ſhort time could ſcarſelie be credited of anie, but of ſuch as ſaw and knew the ſame. And the cauſe of this great haſt was for feare of raine, which might haue periſhed the vawtes, to the deſtruction of the whole church, & the people that were therein. And before the ſaid yéere was fullie ended, all the ſaid iles of the ſaid church were made & framed of new & maine timber, & couered with lead, & fullie finiſhed. And the ſame yeare alſo, the great roofe of the weſt end was framed, and made of new & great timber in Yorkeſhire, & brought to London by ſea, and ſet vp & couered with lead, and fullie finiſhed. And in like maner within the ſaid yeare, the whole roofe and frame of the eaſt end of the ſaid church was made in Yorkeſhire, & brought by ſea to London, and there laid readie to be raiſed when the ſeaſon of the yeare ſerued. This one thing reſteth to be told, that by eſtimation of wiſe men, 10000 pounds more than is yet granted vnto it, will not perfect & finiſh the church and ſtéeple in ſuch ſort as it was before the burning thereof.

All the iles of Paules made and framed of new timber.

Ten thouſand pounds inſufficient to repare Paules as it was at the firſt.

In this meane time alſo, by reaſon of the quéenes maieſties letters directed to the maior and his brethren of the citie of London about the burning of Paules, there were certeine aldermen and commoners of the ſaid citie named and called togither by the authoritie of the maior, to deuiſe ſome good order and ſpéedie remedie for the reliefe and comfort of the ſaid citie, whenſoeuer anie chance of fire hereafter ſhould happen (as God forbid) within the ſaid citie or liberties thereof. And the perſons ſo called after ſundrie méetings, and with good aduiſement and deliberation, agréed and penned a certeine order for the ſpéedie remedie thereof, as well for the readie knowledge of the place, whereſoeuer the ſame fire ſhould happen, and for the ſudden extinguiſhment & ſuppreſſing of the ſame, as alſo for the ſafe kéeping of the goods of ſuch perſons in whoſe houſe anie fire ſhould chance. Which orders and rules vndoubtedlie would be to the great comfort & ſafetie of the citie and citizens of the ſame, if they were publiſhed and made knowen in time, and executed accordinglie. But what ſhould I ſaie? I can but lament, not onelie for this, but alſo for manie ſuch painefull and profitable labors, which for good gouernement of this citie had béene taken. For as ſoone as the talking thereof is doone, and the bookes framed and deliuered, ſo ſoone is it put in obliuion, and nothing at all thought vpon, vntill an houre after the miſchiefe be paſt.

Good orders nothing worth if they be not put in execution.

This yeare was choſen lord maior of London a worthie citizen named William Harper, one of the companie of the merchant tailors. This man wiſhing in his life time to benefit his countrie, founded a frée ſchoole in the towne of Bedford where he was borne, and now lieth buried, prouiding a competent ſtipend and liuing for a ſcholemaiſter, there to traine vp and inſtruct children in vertue and learning for euer. The fiftéenth of Nouember, the quéenes maieſtie publiſhed a proclamation, wherein ſhe reſtored to the realme diuerſe ſmall péeces of ſiluer monie, as the péece of ſix pence, foure pence, thrée pence, two pence, and a penie, thrée halfe pence, and thrée farthings. She alſo forbad all forren coines to be currant within the ſame realme, as well gold as ſiluer, calling them to hir maieſties mints, except two ſorts of crownes of gold, the one the French crowne, the other the Flemmiſh crowne. ¶ Thus did hir maieſtie in all hir actions directed to common vtilitie ſhoot at a certeine perfection, pureneſſe, and ſoundneſſe, as here in hir new ſtamps and coines of all ſorts; ſo alſo in Gods religion, ſetting the materiall churches of hir dominions frée from all popiſh traſh: which one hath aptlie noted by waie of compariſon, ſaieng:

Anno Reg. 4.

Monſtruous births in diuerſe places of England.

1562

This yeare in England were manie monſtruous births. In March a mare brought foorth a foale with one bodie and two heads, and as it were a long taile growing out betwéene the two heads. Alſo a ſow farowed a pig with foure legs like to the armes of a manchild with armes and fingers, &c. In Aprill a ſow farrowed a pig with two bodies, eight féet, and but one head: manie calues and lambs were monſtruous, ſome with collars of ſkin growing about their necks, like to the double ruffes of ſhirts and neckerchers then vſed. The foure and twentith of Maie, a manchild was borne at Chicheſter in Suſſex, the head armes, & legs thereof were like to an anatomie, the breaſt and bellie monſtruous big, from the nauill as it were a long ſtring hanging: about the necke a great collar of fleſh and ſkin growing like the ruffe of a ſhirt or neckercher, comming vp aboue the eares pleited and folded, &c.

France at diuiſion in it ſelfe by ciuill warres.

The quéenes maieſties miſtruſt of inconuenience, and the ſame remedied.

Sir Henrie Sidneie ſent ambaſſador into France.

An other ambaſſage in Iulie directed into France.

The realme of France being in great trouble about this ſeaſon, by the means of ciuill diſſention and warres that roſe betwixt the houſe of Guiſe and other of that faction vpon the one ſide, and the prince of Conde and other that tooke part with him on the contrarie ſide: the quéenes maieſtie informed how that the duke of Guiſe and his partakers hauing got into their poſſeſſion the perſon of the yoong king, vnder pretext of his authoritie, ſought the ſubuerſion of manie noble men and good ſubiects of the crowne of France, namelie ſuch as were knowne or ſuſpected to be zealous for a reformation to be had in matters of religion: hir maieſtie therupon conſidering, that if their purpoſe might be brought to effect, it was to be doubted that they would not ſo reſt; but ſéeke to ſet things in broile alſo within this hir realme of England, and other countries néere to them adioining: firſt as one that had euer wiſhed quietneſſe, rather than the troubles of warre, ſent ouer ſir Henrie Sidneie at that preſent lord preſident of Wales (a man of ſuch eſtimation as his word ought to haue deſerued credit) to trie if he might doo anie good to bring the parties to ſome attonement. But ſuch willfull headineſſe ſéemed to reſt in ſome that were chiefe of the one faction, that their deſire ſéemed altogither bent to enter into wars. Hir maieſtie yet hoping the beſt, appointed to ſend another honourable ambaſſage, which by their wiſedoms and good aduiſe might perſuade the parties vnto concord, whereby all due authoritie, honor, & dignitie might be reſtored to the king, and euerie other degrée kéepe their roomes and places as to them apperteined, but all in vaine. For this motion of a pacification to be had could take no place, neither might the will of the yoong king, or of his timorous mother, as it then ſéemed, be regarded, otherwiſe than as ſtood with the pleaſure & appointment of thoſe that were knowne to be the chiefe authors and furtherers of all thoſe troubles.

Ships of Lõdon, Exceſter, & Falmouth, ſpoiled by the French in Britaine, the thirtith of Iulie, and ninetéenth of Auguſt.

Whileſt the quéenes maieſtie therefore did thus trauell in reſpect of the ſuertie which hir grace bare to hir welbeloued brother the ſaid king, and to the commoditie and quietneſſe of both the factions, an open iniurie was offered to hir maieſtie: ſo as it might appeare what minds they bare towards hir, that had thus excluded and refuſed all offers & means to grow to ſome good and indifferent concluſion of peace. For whereas manie merchants, as well of London as of Exceſter, and other the weſt parts of hir realme, were ſoiourning for cauſe of traffike, in diuerſe ports and hauens of Britaine; and hauing diſpatched their buſineſſe, and got their lading abord, their ſhips were readie to hoiſe vp ſailes, and to returne each one towards the place from whence hée came, they were ſuddenlie areſted, their goods ſeized vpon, and they themſelues caſt in priſon: and ſome that in reuenge of ſuch offered iniurie attempted to make reſiſtance, were cruellie ſlaine, their ſhips conueied awaie, their goods confiſcat, without other pretenſe, but onelie that it was ſaid to them that they were Huguenots. Neither was this doone by priuat perſons, but by open violence of the gouernors & magiſtrats of thoſe places where the ſame diſorder was executed: ſo that it appeared from whence they had their commiſſion to vſe ſuch wrongfull dealing, and how farre the ſame would extend, if they might once haue time and occaſion to accompliſh their purpoſed intentions.

Letters taken from the quéens ambaſſadors ſeruants.

The French troubles touch moſt ÿ quéene of England.

Moreouer, when complaint of ſuch iniuries was made vnto the lawfull magiſtrats there, they found no redres at all. For what might the poore merchants profit by their plaints, when the packets of the ambaſſadors leters, directed to hir maieſtie, were taken from the bearer, & no puniſhment had againſt thoſe that committed ſo vnciuill an outrage? A thing that offended hir maieſtie ſo much more, for that as ſhe tooke the matter, there wanted no good will, either in the king, or his mother, or in the king of Nauarre, the kings generall lieutenant, to ſée ſuch a preſumptuous and vnrulie part puniſhed of their people: but rather that there lacked in them authoritie to haue it redreſſed. Furthermore, it greatlie gréeued hir, that the yong French king, hir déere brother was brought to ſuch a ſtreict, that he was nether able to defend the libertie of his people, nor the authoritie of his lawes, nor to deale vprightlie with other princes and potentats accordinglie, as by the bonds of leagues and of couenanted aliances had bene requiſite. Neither did ſuch diſorder in gouernement of the kingdome of France touch anie ſo much and particularlie, as the quéens maieſtie of England.

The chiefe cauſes that moued the quéenes maieſtie to ſend a power into France.

She therefore lamenting that the king and quéene mother ſhould be thus in the hands of them that procured all theſe troubles, and led vp and downe at their pleaſures, and driuen to behold the ſpoile and ſacking of diuerſe his cities, and miſerable ſlaughter of his ſubiects: and againe hir grace thinking it expedient to preuent that ſuch as were knowne to beare no good will, either to hir or hir realme, ſhould not get into their poſſeſſions ſuch townes and hauens as lais againſt the ſea coaſts of hir ſaid realme, whereby they ſtuffing the ſame with garriſons and numbers of men of warre, might eaſilie vpon occaſions ſeeke to make inuaſions into this hir ſaid realme, to the great annoiance of hir and hir louing ſubiects: at the requeſt of the French themſelues, thought it expedient to put in armor a certeine number of hir ſubiects, to paſſe ouer into Normandie, vnto ſuch hauens as néere approched vnto this hir realme of England, as well for the ſafegard of the ſame, as alſo for the reliefe and preſeruation of the inhabitants there: and other that profeſſed the goſpell, liuing in continuall danger to be murthered and oppreſſed, and therefore crauing hir aid to ſaue and deliuer them out of the bloodie hands of their cruell aduerſaries, that ſought their haſtie deſtruction.

The earle of warwike ſent into Normandie with an armie.

For the conduction therefore of ſuch forces as ſhe meant to ſend ouer at that preſent, ſhe ordeined the lord Ambroſe Dudleie earle of Warwike to be hir principall lieutenant, capteine generall, chiefe leader and gouernor of hir ſaid ſubiects, that ſhould in ſuch wiſe paſſe ouer into Normandie. Herevpon, the ſaid erle the ſeuentéenth of October, in this fourth yeare of hir maieſties reigne, tooke ſhipping at Porteſmouth in the hauen there, at one a clocke in the after noone, being abord himſelfe in the quéens ſhip, called the New barke, and ſetting forward, ſailed all that after noone, and the night following, directlie towards Newhauen, but in the morning about eight a clocke, when his lordſhip was within twentie miles of the town of Newhauen, the wind ſuddenlie changed cleane contrarie to his courſe: ſo that being driuen to returne about the next midnight, he arriued in the downes, and there remained at anchor, till about eight of the clocke in the next morning being mondaie, and then was ſet on land by bote at Sandon caſtell beſides Deale, and the ſame daie at night came to Douer, & there laie till fridaie at thrée of the clocke at after noone; and then taking ſhip againe, ſailed forth: but finding the wind nothing proſperous for his courſe, after he had lien all that night & the daie following, toſſing & tumbling on the ſeas, he was conſtreined to come backe againe, and arriued in the hauen of Douer, about ten of the clocke on ſaturdaie at night, and ſo remained there till tueſdaie next inſuing at thrée of the clocke in the after noone, and then went to ſhipboord againe in the ſaid ſhip called the New barke: and directing his courſe forwards, on thurſdaie morning about eight of the clocke, his lordſhip landed at Newhauen, where he was moſt ioyfullie receiued with a great peale of artillerie.

The earle of Warwike landeth at Newhauen.

The next daie, being fridaie, & the thirtith of October, there came to Newhauen from Diepe, fiftie light horſſemen Scots, brought by one of maiſter Billigrues ſeruants. On ſaturdaie the laſt of October, the earle of Warwiks commiſſion was proclamed in Latine, Engliſh, and French, by Blewmantell, purſeuant at armes: which being ended, his lordſhip went into the church, and there ſir Adrian Poinings knight marſhall gaue him his oth, and then my lord gaue the ſaid ſir Adrian his oth. And after him were ſworne Cutbert Vaughan controllor, Iohn Fiſher knight porter, William Bromfield maiſter of the ordinance, William Robinſon water bailiſe, and capteine Thomas Wood clearke of the councell. On mondaie the ſecond of Nouember, the earle of Warwike, with the knight marſhall, and the controllor, rode out of Newhauen to Hauteuille, and ſo towards Mondeuille, accompanied with all the horſſemen Engliſh and Scotiſh, and a thouſand footmen. The Scotiſhmen & Montgomeries band paſſed forth, and ſkirmiſhed with them of Mondeuille, and the Scots brought awaie with them a bootie of thrée hundred ſhéepe: but in the morning, they were returned backe againe by commandement of the earle of Warwike.

An oth receiued by the lord lieutenant, and other officers.

A ſkirmiſh betwéene the Scotiſhmen and them of Mondeuille.

Maiſter controllors ſouldiors went as far as Harflue, and there ſkirmiſhed with them of that garriſon, but without anie hurt to either part. My lord lieutenant riding all about the hils, viewed the countrie, and at night returned. On wedneſdaie the fourth of Nouember, a barke of Newhauen, belonging to Francis Clearke, brought into the hauen of the ſame towne, foure Britons laden with wines, to the quantitie of two hundred tuns of good Gaſcoigne wines, which they ment to haue brought to the enimies: but being thus taken as a good priſe, it was diſcharged in Newhauen, and ſtood the Engliſhmen and others of that towne in good ſtead. On fridaie the ſixt of Nouember, about nine of the clocke in the morning, a great alarum roſe in the ſaid towne of Newhauen: for vpon the hils on the north ſide of the towne, the Reingraue, and the ſonne of the viceadmerall of France, ſhewed themſelues, accompanied with two thouſand footmen, and fiue hundred horſſemen. And herewith, the Reingraue ſent a trumpettor to the towne, to aduertiſe the lord lieutenant, that he was on the hils there at hand; and that vnderſtanding his lordſhip was come into the countrie, and entred into Newhauen, if it would pleaſe him to promiſe vpon his honor, and by the faith of a gentleman, that he might come, and returne in ſafetie, he would be glad to come & ſée him. Wherevpon the lord lieutenant, taking with him certeine capteins and gentlemen, rode forth of the towne, and ſent before him ſir Adrian Poinings the marſhall, with Stephan Medcalfe hir maieſties trumpettor vnto the Reingraue, who talking with him, returned, and met with the lord lieutenant: who therewith paſſed forward, and méeting with the Reingraue, they imbraced each other, and conferred togither as they had occaſion. And the Reingraue told the lord lieutenant (among other talke) that he was come to be his neighbor, and ſo with ſuch merie ſpéech they communed togither: and after taking their leaue either of other, they returned vnto their homes.

A priſe of wines to the quantitie of two hundred tuns.

The earle of Warwike and the Reingraue talke togither.

The counte Montgomerie and monſieur Beauuois had ſome talke alſo with the Reingraue, caſting out bitter and ſharpe words in reproofe of the duke of Guiſe, and others that were of his faction. The Reingraue comming backe to his armie the ſame afternoone, forraied all the countrie, and droue awaie the moſt part of all the cattell that they might méet with: and comming to the church of Hauteuille, where an hundred and fiftie of Montgomeries band laie, they ſkirmiſhed with them, and in the end Montgomeries ſouldiors were forced to retire, and abandon the place, leauing it to the enimies; and comming awaie, withdrew the ſame night into Newhauen. The Almans the ſame euening, diuiding their armie into two parts, the one halfe of them went and lodged at Mondeuille, and the other halfe at Harflue. The morrow after, the Frenchmen that had abandoned the church of Hauteuille the night before, went thither againe, tooke and kept it againſt the enimies, in like manner as they held it before.

The church of Hauteuille recouered.

The eleuenth of Nouember, a proclamation was made in the name of the lord lieutenant, by the officer at armes Blewmantell, as well for good orders to be kept by the ſouldiors againſt the French inhabitants of the towne, & reforming of certeine gréeuances, whereof the French had made complaint: as alſo for their comming to church to heare common praier and preaching at due times, for the auoiding of vnlawfull games, whoredome, wicked othes, and other blaſphemies; and likewiſe concerning diuerſe other good orders to be obſerued, and diſorders to be eſchewed, as was thought neceſſarie to giue warning of, with condigne paines appointed for puniſhment of ſuch as ſhould tranſgreſſe in the ſame.

A proclamation for good orders to be kept by the ſouldiors.

On thurſdaie the twelfe of Nouember, there went out of the towne of Newhauen towards Harflue, thrée bands of Frenchmen, conteining about ſix hundred footmen; and ſuddenlie they were béeſet by the Almans and Frenchmen of the garriſon of Harflue: ſo that the French proteſtants were driuen to take a village called Grauille, where they mainteined the ſkirmiſh for the ſpace of two houres, till the lord lieutenant, hearing of the perill in which they ſtood, ſent forth with the controllor the number of a thouſand footmen, and all the Engliſh and Scotiſh horſſemen, and monſieur Beauuois with diuerſe French horſſemen: who comming before Harflue, fell in ſkirmiſh with the enimies, to whoſe ſuccor there iſſued forth of Harflue a great number of the Almans, both horſſemen and footmen. But the Engliſhmen behaued themſelues ſo valiantlie, that they beat them out of the field, and droue them in the end to the verie gates of their towne, with ſuch lionlike courage, as was woonderfull: chooſing rather to die in battell (if hap had ſo cut their cards) in an honeſt cauſe, than in their ſicke beds: as moued by the poets reaſon not amiſſe for a ſouldior to

The Engliſhmen retire to Newhauen with honor.

Priſes taken and brought to Newhauen

This ſkirmiſh was ſtoutlie mainteined and continued for the ſpace of thrée long houres. Their great artillerie was ſhot off freſhlie from the wals and bulworks. At length, when the night drew on, the retire was ſounded, and the Engliſhmen came their waie backe to Newhauen with honor, hauing loſt not paſt eight of their ſouldiors, that were ſlaine and ſix other hurt: whereas there was one of the enimies capteins ſlain in fight, with twentie ſouldiors, and another of their capteins, with diuerſe others of their numbers gréeuouſlie wounded. Monſieur Beauuois ſhewed himſelfe that daie verie forward and valiant, & ſo likewiſe did the Scotiſhmen. The thirteenth of Nouember, a pinneſſe of the Frenchmen that belonged to Newhauen, being gone forth the night before, brought into the hauen a ſhip laden with Rochell wines, fiue and twentie tuns, that was bound to paſſe vp to the enimies, and ſo eſteemed a good priſe. On the fourtéenth of Nouember, another ſhip fraught with twentie tuns of Gaſcoigne wines was brought in as a priſe, likewiſe taken by a barke of Newhauen, that belonged to a Frenchman, called Iehan de Bois, an earneſt aduerſarie to the papiſts.

A proclamation for harquebut ſhot.

An alarum vpon occaſion of fier made by the papiſts.

The ſeuenth of Nouember, a proclamation was made by Blewmantell, concerning orders taken and paſſed by the lord lieutenant, that no Engliſhman nor Frenchman ſhould ſhoot off anie harquebuſe within the towne; nor that anie Frenchman, except monſieur Beauuois, or monſieur Bricquemault, or their companies, ſhould be out of their lodgings after nine of the clocke at night till the next morning on paine of death: except in caſes of alarums. The twelfe of Nouember, about ſix of the clocke at night, one of the mils without the gate was ſet on fire by ſome of the papiſts (as was thought) whereof roſe a great alarum. The thirtéenth of Nouember, the Reingraue was ſéene on the north hils of the towne, with foure ſcore horſſemen: wherevpon the Scotiſh horſſemen, and thrée bands of footmen iſſued out, marching vp towards the ſame hils, in hope to méet with their enimies, but they were retired towards Mondeuille, and ſo nothing was doone. It was reported for a certeine truth, that the duke Daumale was there at that preſent with the Reingraue.

Execution.

A proclamation to reſtreine the outrage of ſouldiors.

Priſes brought to Newhauen.

A ſupplie of ſouldiors out of Eſſex arriue at Newhauen.

On wedneſdaie, the fiue and twentith of Nouember, one of capteine Cockſons ſouldiors was hanged in the market place: and an other that was brought thither likewiſe to be executed had his pardon, at the ſute of certeine French gentlemen. And herewith was proclamation made, that where it had béene proclamed afore, that none ſhould take anie thing forceablie from the French on paine of death, for breach whereof, ſuch execution was preſentlie doone: the lord lieutenant did by this proclamation eftſoons charge and command, that none vpon like paine ſhould breake or ſpoile anie houſe or ſhip: or take anie timber, wood, or anie other thing from the French, without their good will, conſent, and agreement. The ſame afternoone came into the hauen hoies and botes laden with wine, cider, perrie, wheate, béefe, biſquet, meale, and other prouiſion of vittels. Two French ſhallops of Newhauen had taken them beſides Hunflue, and beaten backe a ſhallop of the enimies, ſlaieng ten or twelue Frenchmen that came forth of Hunflue to haue ſuccored the hoies. The fiue and twentith of Nouember, there landed at Newhauen ſix hundred ſouldiors Eſſexmen, vnder the leading of Auerie Darſie, Reginald Higate, and William Twedie, each of them hauing his appointed number of two hundred to his enſigne.

A proclamation for the aſſembling of ſouldiors at ſaint Addreſſes.

Moreouer, where as well diuerſe prentiſes, as other Engliſhmen were come ouer, ſince the placing of the garriſon in that towne of Newhauen, not offering their ſeruice anie waie, other than by ſtragling abroad to ſéeke pillage, whereby they fell oftentimes into the hands of the enimies, both to the diſhonor of their countrie, & loſſe of their owne liues. For reformation hereof proclamation was made the laſt of Nouember, that all Engliſhmen within the ſaid towne, aboue the age of ſixteene yeares, and vnder thrée ſcore, being not reteined in the queens maieſties paie, ſhould at one of the clocke that preſent daie repaire to the bulworke called the bulworke of ſaint Addreſſes, there to preſent his name & perſon to the comptrollor, that order might be taken how to emploie them in ſome certeintie of ſeruice, vpon paine to euerie one failing hereof to ſuffer ten daies impriſonment, & alſo to be baniſhed the towne.

Sir Iohn Portinarie a Florentine, and an excellent enginer.

Sir Iohn More bringeth a ſupplie of ſoldiors to Newhauen out of Deuonſhire.

A preſent ſent by the Reingraue to the earle of Warwike.

The ſame daie the quéenes ſhip called the Hare, comming from Portſmouth, arriued at Newhauen; and in hir came ſir Iohn Portinarie, whoſe ripe ſkill, déepe iudgement, and great experience in matters of fortification had bred in him ſuch knowledge, as he may worthilie be called a maiſter in that ſcience. They were by the waie aſſailed by a French ſhip of foure ſcore and ten tuns and better: but they that were abord in the Hare, ſo manfullie acquited themſelues, that they vanquiſhed the enimies, tooke the ſame ſhip, & brought hir with them being laden with wines, which they meant to haue conueied to the aduerſaries in ſome garriſon. The ſame daie ſir Iohn More landed at Newhauen, bringing ouer with him fiue hundred ſoldiors out of Denſhire, for a ſupplie of the garriſon there. He himſelfe returned backe into England, but the ſoldiors were appointed to the leading of other capteins: ſo that Francis Summerſet, brother to the earle of Worceſter had thrée hundred of them; Oliuer Manners an hundred, and Edward Ormſbie the other hundred. On tueſdaie the eight of December monſieur de Beauuois, capteine Francis Summerſet, and capteine Edward Horſeie, with diuerſe other capteins, officers and gentlemen, rode to the Reingraue, lieng at a faire houſe not farre from Mondeuille, where they dined with him, had great and hartie chéere, and after returned againe to Newhauen. The ſame daie the Reingraue ſent for a preſent vnto my lord of Warwike, a great horſe, verie faire, with ſaddle and bridle; eſtéemed to be well worth an hundred pounds.

Edward Dudleie.

The caſtell of Tankeruille wonne by the Engliſhmen.

Moreouer, the ſame daie at night, the Double Roſe with certeine other botes and French ſhallops, paſſed forth of the hauen: Edward Dudleie, and capteine Iohn Ward being abord in the ſaid Double Roſe, with diuerſe other Engliſhmen & Frenchmen, to the number of a hundred good ſoldiors, who ſailing downe the riuer landed beſide Tankeruille, and laie cloſe all that night in the wood. And in the morning about nine of the clocke monſieur Bimar, enſignebearer to the counte Montgomerie, with ſix or ſeauen Frenchmen vnarmed went to the caſtell gate, and there fell in talke with monſieur Dimenée, who was capteine of that fortreſſe, hauing with him about ten ſoldiors that were appointed to remaine with him vpon the gard of the ſame caſtell. Whileſt they were thus in talke, the Engliſhmen and other Frenchmen comming forth of the wood that was there at hand, reared vp their ladders, which they had brought with them for that purpoſe, at the breach which was made the ſummer before by the duke Daumale; and entring by the ſame, came downe into the baſe court. Which thing when the French ſoldiors that kept talke with them within at the caſtell gate perceiued, they began to laugh. The capteine of the caſtell therwith turning his face, & beholding as good as thrée ſcore armed men within the caſtell at his backe, he ſuddenlie ſaid: Ha, ie ſuis voſtre, I am yours ſirs, and ſo yéelded with his ten ſoldiors. And in this ſort was the caſtell taken, & the capteine brought priſoner to Newhauen.

A ſkirmiſh before Harflue.

The French men beaten into Harflue.

On the twelfe of December, at ten of the clocke in the morning, the earle of Warwike, monſieur de Beauuois, and monſieur de Bricquemault, with all their horſſemen & thrée thouſand footmen, paſſed forth of Newhauen vnto Harflue, out of which towne there iſſued ſeauen hundred Reiſters of the retinue of the counte Reingraue, and thrée hundred footmen, who fell in ſkirmiſh with the French and Engliſhmen verie hotlie: but at length the Engliſhmen draue them to the verie gates of Harflue, and ſlue them euen at the ſame gates, and vpon the walles of the towne; inſomuch that they were conſtreined to ſhut their gates, and off went the ordinance from the gates and bulworks, diſcharging bullets amongſt the Engliſh ſoldiors fréelie. But yet there were not ſlaine paſt ſeuen of the Engliſh part, albeit diuerſe were hurt and wounded, & amongſt other was monſieur de Beauuois ſhot into the ſide of the necke through his gorget, and capteine Antwiſell through the arme. Moreouer, whereas they carried forth with them foure barrels of gunpowder to mainteine the ſkirmiſh, through negligence by ſetting fire in the ſame, there were to the number of twentie gréeuouſlie burned. Of the enimies were ſlaine that daie aboue thirtie, and hurt aboue fiftie. Manie of their horſſes were alſo ſlaine in this ſkirmiſh, which continued aboue thrée houres. As the Engliſhmen were returning backe, the Reingraue with two hundred horſſes, and a certeine number of footmen, was laid faſt by in an ambuſh, thinking to haue cut off part of their men: but he failed of his purpoſe. For the lord lieutenant marching with his men in battell araie, brought them home in ſafetie, without other impeachment. The ſeauentéenth of December, the counte Montgomerie, and ſir Hugh Paulet arriued at Newhauen in one of the quéenes ſhips called the Aid.

Monſieur Beauuois & capteine Antwiſell hurt.

A proclamation for obſeruing of orders.

The ninetéenth of December a proclamation was made for orders to be obſerued, concerning the imbarking of ſuch ſoldiors as were licenced to depart by paſſeport or otherwiſe: and likewiſe prohibiting the taking into anie veſſell anie drie fiſh, wine, ſugar, or anie houſhold ſtuffe without ſpeciall licence of the lord lieutenant. Whileſt things paſſed thus in Normandie at Newhauen & thereabouts, where the earle of Warwike & other valiant capteines were readie to make proofe of their high proweſſe in time & place as occaſion might ſerue, there ended his life at home that honorable baron, and right famous capteine in his daies William lord Greie of Wilton, knight of the moſt noble order of the garter, and at that preſent gouernor of Berwike, and warden of the eaſt marches againſt Scotland. He deceaſed the fiue and twentith of December, in the yéere 1562, at Cheſhnut in Hertfordſhire, then the houſe of Henrie Denie eſquier that had married miſtreſſe Honor Greie, the ſaid lord Greies onelie daughter. ¶ The ſix and twentith of December the counte de Montgomerie tooke ſhipping at Newhauen rode, accompanied with foure hundred harquebutters Frenchmen, and ſailed to Déepe, there to be gouernor of that towne. He went in an Engliſh barke belonging to Nicholas Malbie ſecretarie to the earle of Warwike lord lieutenant.

The death of the lord Greie of Wilton.

The third of Ianuarie a ſhallop that was ſent the ſame morning from Newhauen, laden with béere and other vittels to paſſe vnto Tankeruille, was aſſailed about Harflue, by a ſhallop of Hunflue, which droue the hoie to the ſhore: ſo as the Engliſhmen forſooke their hoie, and came running to Newhauen, to declare what had happened. Herevpon the lord lieutenant ſent forth foure French ſhallops by water, and the horſſemen with ſix hundred footmen paſſed forth by land, and vſed ſuch diligence, that they came euen as the Frenchmen were haling vp the hoie towards Harflue: and ſkirmiſhing with the Frenchmen (being foure ſcore good harquebutters) for the ſpace of a long houre, at length recouered the hoie, and tooke thrée of their ſhallops with their ordinance, which they brought to Newhauen, with the loſſe of one onelie man, an harquebutter of capteine Zouches band. The fourth of Ianuarie in the morning, the Engliſh ſcout, being thirtie good harquebutters, were ſet vpon by the enimies that droue them vnto the verie gates. They ſhot alſo with their harquebuſſes into the towne, and ouer the mount roiall among the Engliſh ſoldiors. They hurt at that preſent thrée of the ſcouts; but when they perceiued the Engliſhmen were in a readineſſe to approch them, they departed, being in number thrée hundred horſſemen and a thouſand footmen, ſoldiors of Mondeuille and Harflue. The fift of Ianuarie were apprehended capteine Blondell, capteine Moucombell, monſieur Dimenée, and Vitanna with others, for ſome conſpiracie or traitorous practiſe which they went about, and had maliciouſlie contriued. The ſame daie capteine Edward Horſeie with his two hundred ſoldiors, & capteine Francis Blunt with his hundred tooke ſhipping at Newhauen rode, and ſailed to Déepe, there to remaine with the counte Montgomerie, whoſe wife the counteſſe Montgomerie went alſo with them to hir huſband the ſame time.

A hoie recouered which the French had taken.

Certeine apprehended for conſpiracie.

On the ſaturdaie following, the twelfe daie after Chriſtmaſſe, being the ninth of Ianuarie, a great tempeſt of wind and thunder happened in the towne of Leiceſter, which vncouered two and fortie baies of houſes, and ouerthrew manie, renting and tearing them in péeces, in a ſtrange and maruellous maner. The people that were aſſembled that daie in the market place to buie and ſell their vſuall chafer, wares, and commodities, were ſore amazed and aſtonied with the hidiouſneſſe of that moſt outragious & violent tempeſt. On thurſdaie the 14 of Ianuarie at one of the clocke in the morning, there iſſued forth of Newhauen thréeſcore horſſemen, and a thouſand footmen, all Engliſh; & comming to Mondeuille, where the Reingraue laie, gaue to them within an alarum, but neither the Reiſters, nor the Almane footmen, nor French that were within that towne would come forth: and therefore after the Engliſhmen had tarried there the ſpace of foure houres, they returned backe againe to Newhauen.

A great tempeſt in Leiceſter.

The fiftéenth of Ianuarie, at one of the clocke in the afternoone, there iſſued forth of Newhauen thréeſcore horſſemen, and fiftéene hundred footmen, which comming to Harflue, gaue a [illegible] alarum to that towne; but none of the garriſon there would come forth: wherevpon the Engliſhmen returned home againe to Newhauen. The ſixtéenth of Ianuarie, the caſtell of Tankeruille was ſurrendred to the Reingraue, after he had laine about it eight daies, with two thouſand horſſemen and footmen. It was now yéelded by compoſition (after it had béene kept by the ſpace of thirtie eight daies) that thoſe within ſhould depart with bag and baggage, the gallie being ſent from Newhauen to fetch them awaie. There were no more within it at that time when it was thus deliuered: but capteine Iohn Ward, capteine Edward Dudleie, and capteine Saule, his lieutenant Rileie, with ſeuentie Engliſh ſouldiers, & thirtie French. The 19 of Ianuarie, there landed at Newhauen capteine Tremaine, with 50 horſſemen verie well appointed to ſerue the quéenes maieſtie there. The foure and twentith of Ianuarie, Francis Clerke Frenchman arriued at Newhauen, with two tall ſhips of his owne, right well appointed for the wars, bringing with him thrée rich priſes, valued at about fiftie thouſand crownes, one of them was a mightie great hulke, laden with wood & allume. The 26 of Ianuarie, capteine Tremaine with all his horſſemen, & capteine Clerke with his Scotiſh horſmen, and 600 footmen, went forth of Newhauen towards Mondeuille, & by the waie in a little village, there was a French capteine came forth of Mondeuille, named monſieur Emerie, hauing with him thirtie ſouldiers, where falling in hand to ſpoile the ſame village, the pezzants about gathered themſelues togither, and ſet vpon him and his ſouldiers. Now whileſt they were thus in fight, the Scotiſh horſſemen came ſuddenlie vpon them, tooke the ſaid capteine ſore wounded, ſlue twelue of his ſoldiers, & tooke fouretéens other of them priſoners, whome with their capteine wounded (as he was) they brought home the ſame night vnto Newhauen.

The thrée and twentith of Ianuarie, a proclamation was made for orders to be obſerued by the ſouldiers, and other reſiants within the towne of Newhauen, concerning politike gouernement thereof, as well for the better defenſe againſt the enimies without, as the quiet demeanor of the men of warre and inhabitants within. The fift of Februarie, two ſhips of Britons laden with Gaſcoigne wines, butter, bakon, lard, ſalt, and other vittels, were brought into Newhauen by a ſhallop of Killebeuf, that was reſiant with other Frenchmen in Newhauen, ſeruing againſt the papiſts, and had taken thoſe two veſſels, as they were going to vittell the enimies.

A proclamation for the obſeruing of orders.

A priſe brought to Newhauen.

The ſixt of Februarie thrée faire mightie ſhips of warre, belonging to Francis Clerke, brought into Newhauen thrée rich priſes, laden with ſackes, baſtards, ſugar, orenges, graines, and other merchandizes. This Clerke had not béene forth paſt ſix wéeks at this time, and yet he had got aboue eightéene priſes, well worth by iuſt valuation the ſumme of fiftie thouſand pounds. On ſaturdaie the ſixt of Februarie, a ſouldier of capteine Appleyards band was executed in the market place; for that contrarie to order taken and publiſhed afore that time by proclamation, he had not onelie drawen his weapon againſt another ſouldier, but alſo maimed him, and plaied other lewd parts in contempt of the lord lieutenants commandements. There was another alſo condemned to die, and two others adiudged to loſe their hands: but the lord lieutenant of his mercifull clemencie granted to thoſe thrée his pardon, for their paſſed offenſes. On ſundaie the ſeuenth of Februarie, was Hunflue ſummoned by an herald, ſent from the French admerall, monſieur de Chatillon. On mondaie the eight of that moneth, the ſaid admerall came before Hunflue, with ſix thouſand horſſemen Reiſters, and other of his owne retinues, beſide footmen, and a thouſand horſmen of the countries thereabout. And about ſix of the clocke at night there was a great peale of ordinance ſhot off at Newhauen for a welcome to the ſaid admerall.

Thrée other priſes of ſackes, baſtards, &c.

A ſouldier executed for fighting contrarie to the orders in that caſe giuen.

Thrée other pardoned.

The admerall of France ſummoneth Hunflue.

The twelfe of Februarie, the French gallies of Newhauen paſſing forth, and wafting about Hunflue to ſéeke aduentures, in hope of ſuertie, by reaſon the lord admerall of France laie therby at Touque, rode at an anchor: whileſt ſome of them that were abord in hir went on land, to gaine ſomwhat of the enimies. But they within Hunflue perceiuing this, made out their great gallies, with fiftie good mariners and ſouldiers, who comming vpon the gallies of Newhauen lieng at anchor, put hir in great danger of taking. For there were but fiftéene men left abord in hir at that preſent, wherof thrée of them were Engliſhmen, who perceiuing in what danger they ſtood, waied anchor with all ſpéed, and drew towards the ſhore, to take in the reſt of their companie; and getting them abord vnto them, they manfullie ſtood to their defenſe, being in all but foure and twentie men. Neuertheleſſe, they ſo behaued themſelues, that continuing in fight aboue a long houre, at length they ouercame their enimies, ſlue ſeuen of them outright, wounded ſeuen and thirtie, tooke their gallie and brought hir to Newhauen, with thirtéene bels, diuerſe copes, and church ornaments, ſhéepe, and other ſpoiles, which they had got abroad in the countrie, togither with thrée and fortie good priſoners, and the artillerie which was found abord in the foreſaid great gallie, wherewith ſhe was verie well appointed and furniſhed.

The great gallie of Hunflue taken.

Of the French proteſtants there were but thrée ſlaine and ſix hurt, and one of the thrée Engliſhmen was alſo hurt. As it hath béene crediblie reported, the French proteſtants might thanke thoſe thrée Engliſhmen that were with them in their gallies for that their good hap: for if they had not manfullie ſtood to it at the firſt, and beſtowed ſuch artillerie as they had abord with them freſhlie againſt the enimies, the French had yéelded. But by Gods good helpe, and their worthie courage, the victorie remained on their ſide. The fourtéenth of Februarie there came from the lord admerall of France, lieng then at Touque, monſieur de Rohen, and monſieur de Grandemont, a knight of the order, monſieur Telegnie the admerals ſonne in law, and diuerſe other French gentlemen, to confer with the lord lieutenant, who receiued them right gladlie, and made them great chéere. They remained in Newhauen till the eightéenth of Februarie, and then departed and went to Caen, whither the ſaid lord admerall was remoued, & had entred the towne, & laie within it, preparing with all ſpéed to beſiege the caſtell.

The ſame daie that the French lords departed from Newhauen towards Caen, monſieur Briquemault, and ſir Nicholas Throckmorton knight arriued at Newhauen in one of the quéenes ſhips called the Aid. There were ſent to him from Newhauen the fiue & twentith of Februarie, ſeuen canons, two demie culuerings, & one minion. On the morrow following being fridaie, and ſix and twentith of Februarie, ſir Nicholas Throckmorton knight, monſieur Briquemault, and monſieur Beauuois, with a thouſand ſouldiers French, and as manie Engliſh, to wit, capteine Zouch, capteine Twedie, capteine Higate, ech of them with two hundred: capteine Iohn Ward, capteine Parkinſon, capteine Saule, maſter Whéeler, and capteine Fiſher with his band, each of them with his hundred, and capteine Pelham with the labourers were imbarked in the rode at Newhauen, and ſailed forth towards Caen, to come to the ſiege which the admerall of France had laid to the caſtell there.

The ſame daie as the counte Montgomerie had imbarked at the hauen of Diepe in an Engliſh veſſell, and was comming towards Newhauen, there came out from Feſtampe thrée ſhallops, by the appointment of the Reingraue (as was ſaid) which made towards Montgomerie, whoſe meaning when he perceiued, he ſet vpon the ſtrongeſt of the ſame ſhallops, ſo that there followed a ſharpe conflict betwixt them, but in the end the victorie fell to Montgomerie, the ſhallop being taken, the capteine and maiſter ſlaine, and thrée Engliſh vittellers reſcued, which the ſaid ſhallops had taken. Montgomerie herewith arriuing at Newhauen, and bringing his priſe with him was ioifullie receiued, and after he had talked a while with the lord lieutenant and the councell, he went abord againe and ſailed to Caen, there to confer with the admerall.

Baieulx, Faleiſe, and S. Lo, yéelded to the admerall.

The firſt of March in the morning they began to batter the caſtell of Caen, in ſuch wiſe that about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, they within began to parlée, but it tooke none effect: and then went off the artillerie againe till night, and in the morning the batterie eftſoones began. And before that two tires of the ſaid artillerie had gone off, they within offered to parlée againe, and finallie agréed by compoſition to yéeld; and ſo on that tueſdaie by ten of the clocke, the caſtell was ſurrendred into the hands of the French admerall, and the marqueſſe Dalbeuf, and other that had the place in kéeping, departed in ſafetie. On wedneſdaie the third of March, the towne of Baieulx was alſo yéelded vnto the lord admerall of France, and on the morrow following Faleiſe, and afterwards S. Lo, with diuerſe other townes and caſtels, yéelded likewiſe vnto him. The tenth of March the great gallie and the foiſts were ſent awaie from Newhauen, with a canon and ſhot and powder vnto Hunflue; where they met with monſieur de Mouie, that came thither with a faire companie of horſſemen and diuerſe footmen French, and of Engliſhmen, capteine Cuttie with his two hundred, and capteine Fiſher with his hundred.

The canon laid to the caſtell of Hunflue.

It is yéelded.

The canon which came from Newhauen was immediatlie planted, and about ten of the clocke in the forenoone it was ſhot off, and after it had béene ſix times diſcharged, they within began to parlée, and in the end they agréed to yéeld vp the caſtell vnto monſieur de Mouie, with condition, that their ſouldiers and men of warre might depart onelie with their rapiers and daggers, leauing all the reſidue of their mooueables behind them. And according to this capitulation, capteine Lion with his hundred ſouldiers, and capteine Nicholas with his hundred, and fiftie other ſouldiers which were within departed, and left the caſtell vnto monſieur de Mouie, whereby his ſouldiers, as well Engliſh as others, gained greatlie by the ſpoile.

There was alſo a proclamation made in the name of the king & admerall, that no capteine, burgeſſe, ſouldier, mariner, or other of the French nation within the towne or without, ſhould draw anie weapon, nor picke anie quarrell, nor vſe anie iniurious words againſt anie man to mooue them to wrath, ſpeciallie againſt the Engliſhmen on paine of death: nor that anie burgeſſe or inhabitant, of what qualitie or condition ſoeuer, except capteins, gentlemen, and ſouldiers, receiuing paie, ſhould beare anie weapon on the like paine.

The ſixtenth of Maie was proclamation made, that all Frenchmen, being within the towne of Newhauen, otherwiſe called Haure de Grace, as well men, women, as children, ſhould depart the towne, betwixt that preſent time and ſix of the clocke at night on the next daie being mondaie, except ſurgians, apothecaries, bakers, butchers, ſmiths, maſons, lockſmiths, carpenters, and other ſuch artificers, vpon paine to be attached as good and lawfull priſoners, and their goods to be confiſcat.

The lord lieutenants proceeding to be gathered by his proclamations.

By the tenor of theſe ſeuerall proclamations it maie appeare, that the lord lieutenant proceeded nothing rigorouſlie againſt the French, in remoouing them foorth of the towne; although it maie be, that ſome which had to deale therein, dealt hardlie inough with them. But in ſuch caſes there muſt of neceſſitie be ſome diligent heedfulneſſe vſed, for otherwiſe in ſuch packing awaie, ſome might peraduenture carie with them too much, & others too litle. But howſoeuer this mater was handled, true it is, that it was thought expedient to auoid the French out of the towne. For after the duke of Guiſe was ſlaine before Orleance, and that the parties were agreed, as by edict of the pacification publiſhed in March laſt paſt it maie appeare, the whole deuiſes as well of them of the one religion as the other tended to this end, how to recouer the towne of Newhauen out of the Engliſhmens hands, either by practiſe or open force. And ſuch intelligence was vſed betwixt the French within that towne, and the enimies without to bring this to paſſe, that the Engliſh could aſſure themſelues no more of the one than of the other, and ſo were driuen for their owne ſafeties, to rid the towne of ſo doubtfull partakers.

The Engliſhmen for their owne ſuertie were forced to double their watch nightly.

The ſeuen and twentith of Maie, proclamation was made, that all maner of furniture and apparell, apperteining to ſhips within the garriſon, hauen, or rode of the towne of Newhauen, ſhould be brought in: or a note to be giuen therof in writing to the lord lieutenant and councell there, before twelue of the clocke the next day.

The Reingraue with his forces.

Saturdaie the two and twentith of Maie, about one of the clocke in the morning, the Reingraue with fiue hundred horſmen, and twentie two enſignes of footmen, came downe to the village called Lheure, neere vnto the new fort, which by order of the lord lieutenant was latelie before begun to be built, ſir Iohn Portinarie being chiefe deuiſer of the fortifications about the ſame. The enimies meaning was, to haue taken the ſame fort by a ſudden aſſault: but the Engliſh ſcouts looking well to their charge, gaue intelligence to the lord lieutenant thereof, who incontinentlie going to the bulworke roiall, ſet out by the poſterne capteine Iohn Ward with his hundred ſouldiers, and capteine Parkinſon with his hundred, to paſſe to the fort, there to be an aid and defenſe to them that laie in the ſame.

An alarum giuen to the new fort by the Reingraue.

About three of the clocke in the morning, the Reingraue ſuddenlie with his bands of horſſemen and footmen gaue them in the fort an hot alarum; and immediatlie the earle of Warwike gaue in charge to theſe capteins, Read, Appleyard, Tuttie, Zouch, Antwiſell, Ward, Morton, and Parkinſon, hauing with them a thouſand footmen, and twentie horſmen, to ſet vpon the enimies in the village of Lheure, neere adioining to the ſaid new fort, where the valiant Engliſh ſouldiers ſhewed well the wonted valure of their worthie anceſtors, giuing ſuch an hardie onſet vpon their aduerſaries, that greater manhood had not lightlie appeared in any incounter, than was vſed by thoſe martiall capteins, and their warlike bands at that preſent, to the high honor of their countrie: inſomuch that they beat backe their enimies, ſlue and tooke of them to the number of foure hundred, beſide thirtie faire horſſes, and an enſigne, which one Eaſtwike lieutenant to capteine Antwiſell got.

The hardie onſet of the Engliſhmen made vpon their aduerſaries.

Amongſt the numbers of them that were ſlaine, there were found aboue thirtie handſome gentlemen and verie well appointed. To conclude, the Engliſhmen behaued themſelues ſo manfullie on each ſide, that by plaine force of armes they droue the enimies quite out of the village, & after ſet it on fire, bicauſe the enimies ſhould not come to incampe therein, as their purpoſe was to haue doone at that preſent.

The Almans put to flight.

Another ſkirmiſh.

The ſix and twentith of Maie, the Frenchmen in number about three thouſand horſſemen and footmen came downe towards the windmils, neere to the bulworke called ſaint Addreſſes, againſt whom the Engliſh horſemen and footmen iſſued foorth of the towne, giuing them a right hot ſkirmiſh, which continued for the ſpace of two houres, inſomuch that there were ſlaine of the French to the number of 200; beſide an hundred and aboue that were hurt. On the Engliſh ſide that daie were loſt about a dozen or thirtéene perſons, and amongſt others, was capteine Tremaine ſlaine, and manie hurt. To conclude, the Engliſhmen like hardie and worthie ſouldiers wan and kept the field, ſo as the Frenchmen in the end were driuen to retire, and beſides other loſſes which they receiued, they had aboue fiftie of their horſſes killed and hurt.

The Frenchmen driuen to retire.

Capteine Horſeis valiance.

In this ſkirmiſh, being one of the notableſt that had béene lightlie ſéene manie a daie before, capteine Horſeie ſhewed worthie proofe of his moſt valiant courage, winning to himſelfe ſuch commendation, as the ſame will not be forgotten, whileſt anie ſhall remaine aliue that beheld his manfull dealings: being ſuch at that preſent, as deſerue to be regiſtred in the booke of fame, & to continue with poſteritie for euer. On ſaturdaie the fift of Iune at ſeuen of the clocke at night, the Reinſgraue hauing laid in the village of Lheure an ambuſh of ſix hundred horſſemen, and fiftéene hundred footmen, there came downe alſo betwéene the abbeie and the village called Engleſield towards the towne, the number of a thouſand footmen, which began a verie hot ſkirmiſh, firſt at the new fort, comming euen hard to the ditches, where the Engliſhmen manfullie incountered them. Herewith alſo the Reinſgraue appointed other to come downe, and approch the bulworks of ſaint Adreſſes, ſaint Francis, & ſaint Michaell, and to (conclude) round about the towne: ſo that there were of them to the number of ſix thouſand that were imploied in this ſkirmiſh, which was mainteined right fercelie for the ſpace of two hours, with verie ſharpe and cruell fight: in the end the enimies were forced to giue place, with the loſſe of fiue hundred of their men, Almans, Frenchmen, Gaſcoignes, and Spaniards.

Another ſkirmiſh.

The number which the french loſt in this ſkirmiſh.

The Engliſhmen verelie in this ſeruice ſhewed, that they were nothing degenerat from the ancient race of their noble progenitors. Beſides thoſe that were ſlaine on the French part, amongſt whom was one of their capteins of good account amongſt them, they tooke alſo Baſſompeere an Almane, coronell ouer ten enſignes of footmen. The preſence of the lord lieutenant was not wanting that daie, both to incourage his worthie ſouldiers, and alſo to ſée them applied with weapon and munition, ſo as they ſhould not be vnprouided of anie thing that was néedfull for ſeruice. Of Engliſhmen there was hurt capteine Gilbert, and capteine Pelham, and about fiftéene other hurt and ſlaine. The ſeuenth of Iune capteine Edward Dudleie arriued at Newhauen, with an hundred ſouldiers. The morrow after, the firſt canon ſhot light within the towne of Newhauen, néere to the bulworke of ſaint Addreſſes, ſtriking into the houſe where capteine Whéeler was lodged, which ſhot being brought to my lord of Warwike by Blewmantell purſeuant at armes, his honor beholding it, reioiſed thereat, and ſaid, by Gods grace he would anſwer them againe.

Edward Dudleie.

The ninth of Iune arriued at Newhauen thrée capteins with their bands, of an hundred a péece, being of the garriſon of Berwike: to wit, capteine Tremaine, capteine Cornewall, & capteine Carew. Edward Randoll alſo landed there the ſame daie, appointed to be knight marſhall. For ye muſt vnderſtand, that ſir Adrian Poinings, being knight marſhall vpon his returne into England, was otherwiſe emploid, and went not backe againe: and then was ſir Thomas Finch of Kent appointed to go ouer to ſupplie the roome of knight marſhall: who making his prouiſion readie, ſent ouer his brother Eraſmus Finch to haue charge of his band; and his kinſman Thomas Finch to be his prouoſt marſhall, whileſt ſtaieng till he had euerie thing in a readineſſe to paſſe ouer himſelfe. At laſt, he imbarked in one of the quéenes maieſties ſhips called the Greiehound, hauing there aboord with him, beſide thréeſcore and ſix of his owne retinue, fourtéene other gentlemen, two of them being brethren to the lord Wentworth, Iames Wentworth, and Iohn Wentworth, with diuerſe others, who in the whole (accounting the mariners) amounted vnto the number of 200 perſons and vpward. And as they were on the fartheſt coaſt toward Newhauen, they were by contrarie wind and foule weather driuen backe toward the coaſt of England; and plieng towards Rie, they forced the capteine of the ſhip, a verie cunning ſeaman named William Maline, and alſo the maiſter and mariners, to thruſt into the hauen before the tide, and ſo they all periſhed, ſeuen of the meaner ſort onlie excepted, whereof thrée died ſhortlie after they came to land.

A new ſupplie of Berwike ſouldiers.

Capteine Randoll appointed knight marſhall.

Sir Thomas Finch.

Sir Thomas Finch drowned.

The dead bodie of ſir Thomas Finch amongſt others was caſt on ſhore, & being knowne, was conueied home to his houſe, and there buried in his pariſh church. After this miſchance, and loſſe of that worthie gentleman, the ſaid Edward Randoll was appointed knight marſhall, who ordeined a right ſufficient perſonage, capteine Iohn Shute, to be his prouoſt marſhall. The fiftéenth of Iune, capteine Richard Sanders, and capteine William Saule, with their bands of an hundred ſouldiers a péece, and capteine Darcie, with two hundred, arriued at Newhauen: and the morrow after arriued capteine Roberts with another hundred of ſouldiers. And on the ſeuentéenth of Iune, being thurſdaie, ſir Francis Knolles, vicechamberleine of the quéenes maieſties houſe landed there, béeing ſent ouer by hir maieſtie and hir councell, to view the ſtate of the towne.

Edward Randoll prouoſt marſhall.

A ſupplie of ſouldiers arriue at Newhauen.

Sir Francis Knolles arriuall.

On fridaie the eightéenth of Iune, a ſergeant of capteine Blunts band, and a ſouldior of capteine Darcies band, were executed in the market place of Newhauen, for drawing their weapons againſt their capteins, and forſaking their appointed places of warding, and ſuch other lewd parts which they had committed. The fiue and twentith of Iune, proclamation was made, that no ſouldior of the new fort ſhould reſort to the towne of Newhauen, without licence of his capteine, or ſome of his principall officers, on paine of death: or that anie man ſhould preſume to paſſe the limits of the ſaid new fort, except vpon occaſion of ſeruice, in companie of his capteine or lieutenant, on like paine. And this order was taken, becauſe diuerſe ſtragling abroad, had béene taken priſoners, and ſlaine by the enimies, to their owne reproch, & hinderance of the princes ſeruice. The eight and twentith of Iune, the Frenchmen came downe to the village of Lheure, & there verie néere to the fort began to ſkirmiſh with the Engliſhmen. There were of them ten enſignes of footmen, and two hundred horſſemen. This ſkirmiſh laſted thrée houres, and yet there were not paſt foure ſlaine. The night following, they placed fiue canons betwixt the towne and the brickehils, and likewiſe they placed other péeces of their artillerie at the foreſaid village of Lheure, ſo that they ſhot both into the towne and fort.

Execution of ſouldiors for drawing vpon their capteins.

A proclamation forbidding reſort of ſouldiors to Newhauen without licence.

A long ſkirmiſh without anie great hurt.

Canons placed to beate the towne.

The firſt of Iulie about midnight, they iſſued forth of their trenches, and ſkirmiſhed with the Engliſh ſcouts, droue them vnder the bulworke of ſaint Addreſſes, and there perceiuing that the Engliſhmen had a priuie ſallie out, after a long ſkirmiſh they retired. They had meant to haue ſet the mils belonging to the towne on fire: but they had ſuch plaie made them, that about thrée of the clocke in the morning, they became to be quiet, and left the Engliſhmen in reſt, hauing doone to them little or no hurt at all. The great ordinance on both ſides was not idle, whileſt this ſkirmiſh was in hand. The ſecond and third of Iulie, there landed nine hundred ſouldiors that came forth of Northfolke and Suffolke, yellow clokes and blew clokes verie well appointed, hauing to their capteins Ferdinando Liggens, Philip Sturlete, Iohn Highfield, and Edward Driuer. Alſo there came the ſame time fiftie carpenters, ſixtéene ſawyers, and eight ſmiths in hir works. Moreouer, on the third daie of Iulie, about ten of the clocke at night, the French gaue a great alarum to the towne, beat in the ſcouts: but incontinentlie iſſued forth fiue hundred ſouldiors out at the ſallieng place, vnder the gréene bulworke, and beat the Frenchmen backe into their trenches, and kept them waking all that night.

Capteine Sanders hurt and dieth.

Ordinance planted and diſcharged in great numbers.

The ordinance in the ſtéeple diſmounted.

The ſame time, capteine Sanders was hurt with a ſhot in the leg, whereof he ſhortlie after died: other loſſe at that time the Engliſhmen receiued not. The fift of Iulie, a proclamation was made for ſouldiors to reſort in time of alarums, vnto that part & quarter, which was aſſigned to their capteins, and not to abſent themſelues from their enſignes, whether it were at alarums, watch, ward, or other ſeruice. The ſixt of Iulie, about thrée of the clocke in the morning, the enimies planted thrée canons, and thrée culuerings, diſcharging that morning to the number of foure ſcore and ten ſhots: but perceiuing they did little hurt, they ſtaied their ſhooting, ſauing that now and then they ſhot into the bulworke, and ouer it into the towne: they alſo leuelled a péece, and ſhot it off towards the new gallie, ſlue therein two men, and hurt thrée or foure other. The ſame daie, a canon and a culuering were ſent forth of the towne to the new fort. The twelfe of Iulie, about foure of the clocke in the morning, the French laid batterie to the bulworke of ſaint Addreſſes, continuing the ſame all that daie. They alſo diſmounted the ſame daie the ordinance in the ſtéeple of Newhauen, and beat downe the great bell, cleane defacing the ſtéeple. They diſcharged that daie againſt the towne (as was gathered by due eſtimation) to the number of twelue hundred canon ſhot.

William Robinſon killed. William Bromfield hurt.

A new ſupplie of Wiltſhire and Gloceſterſhire men.

The galeaſſe burnt by caſualtie.

The ſame euening was William Robinſon eſquier, waterbailiffe of the towne of Newhauen ſlaine with a ſhot; and alſo William Bromfield maiſter of the ordinance hurt with the ſame, and being conueied ouer into England, he ſhortlie after died of that hurt. The fourtéenth of Iulie, ſir Hugh Paulet knight landed at Newhauen, bringing with him eight hundred ſouldiors out of Wiltſhire and Gloceſterſhire. The ſame daie came the Frenchmen downe to the number of thrée thouſand, euen hard to the gates of the towne, beating the Engliſhmen out of their trenches: but yet in the end, they were forced to retire, and of Engliſhmen there were not paſt twentie ſlaine, and about an hundred hurt. But the Frenchmen (as was eſtéemed) loſt aboue foure hundred horſſemen and footmen, albeit they tooke from the Engliſhmen at that preſent a culuering, which was ſet forth to annoie them. But their force at that time was ſuch, as they preuailed, & ſo retired with that péece, though they well paied for it. The ſame daie alſo in the after noone, the little galeaſſe called the Fox, went out of the hauen, fraught with fiftie men, to flanke alongſt the ſhore, and to beate the Frenchmen with hir ſhot; but as ſhe was ſhooting off at them, a linnen ſtocke fell into a barrell of powder and ſet it on fire togither with the veſſell, ſo that ſhe ſuddenlie ſanke, and all that were aboord in hir were loſt, ſauing fiftéene that ſaued themſelues by ſwimming.

The coneſtable of France commeth to the ſiege.

The coneſtable ſummoneth the towne.

Sir Hugh Paulets anſwer to the coneſtable.

Capteine Montnes. Capteine Leighton.

The one and twentith of Iulie, the coneſtable of France, accompanied with the marſhals Montmorancie and Burdillon, and manie other lords and knights of the order, came to the abbeie of Grauille, where the marſhall Briſſacke was lodged, who had the generall charge in the armie, before the comming of the ſaid coneſtable. They dined togither there in the ſaid Briſſacks lodging, and after dinner they ſat in councell togither how to procéed in the ſiege. Fridaie the thrée and twentith of Iulie, the coneſtable came into the trench that was caſt ouer againſt the bulworke of ſaint Addreſſe, alongſt by the ſea ſide, and ſent his trumpet to ſummon the towne. The lord lieutenant appointed ſir Hugh Paulet to go forth, & make the anſwer in his name: which was in effect, that the quéens maieſtie of England had appointed him and others to kéepe that towne; and therefore they meant not to deliuer it to anie other perſon, without hir graces eſpeciall commandement. In the meane time, there were diuerſe of the Engliſh capteins and gentlemen, which accompanied the ſaid ſir Hugh, offered the wine which they had brought out of the towne with them in flagons of ſiluer and guilt, vnto ſuch capteins and gentlemen as accompanied the trumpet by commandement of the coneſtable, to ſuruieie the ſtate of the trenches, and Paliſad, as the French writers themſelues confeſſe. Amongſt others, there was capteine Montnes the lieutenant of one of the enſignes coronels of monſieur Dandelot, with whom capteine Leighton, being of acquaintance, had ſome talke.

The caſtell battered.

Cutbert Vaughan departeth this life, his worthie praiſe.

Windmils ſet on fire.

Richlieu maiſter of the campe hurt.

The Engliſhmen and Frenchmen were no ſooner departed, they to their trenches, and the Engliſhmen into the towne, but that the enimies hauing planted that morning eight canons in batterie againſt the caſtell, and the bulworke of the hauen, cauſed the ſame to be ſhot off, continuing the ſame till wedneſdaie at noone, being the eight and twentith of Iulie. There were ſix other canons alſo planted by them in the meane ſpace, which likewiſe made batterie to the caſtell, and to the townegate. In this meane time alſo, Cutbert Vaughan comptrollor, departed out of this life, a ſkilfull man of warre, and no leſſe circumſpect than hardie, both to preſerue thoſe which he had vnder his conduction, and to incourage them to doo manfullie, when time thereto ſerued. Saturdaie, the foure & twentith of Iulie, the batterie ſtill continuing as before, certeine péeces were bent alſo to beat and trauerſe the hauen. The Engliſhmen therefore ſetting fire on two windmils that ſtood there, abandoned a trench which they kept: and the Paliſad, capteine Poiet, lieutenant of an other of the enſignes coronels of the French footmen vnder monſieur Dandelot, entred with his band, and tooke poſſeſſion of a tower that ſtood at the end of the ſaid Paliſad. The French yet had hot abiding there, notwithſtanding all the diligence and policie which they could vſe to lodge there in ſafetie. Among others, capteine Richlieu maiſter of the campe, was hurt in the ſhoulder with an harquebuſe ſhot.

Monſieur de Eſtrée.

Monſieur de Caillac.

The marſhall Montmorancie cauſed a platforme to be raiſed, ioining to the Paliſad, where about euening the ſame daie he planted foure péeces of artillerie. On ſundaie the fiue and twentith of Iulie, monſieur de Eſtrée, great maiſter of the artillerie, accompanied with the ſeneſhall of Agenois, vſed all diligence that might be to place the artillerie for batterie: wherevnto alſo, monſieur de Caillac applied himſelfe by the coneſtables commandement, who had compounded a matter in variance betwixt him and monſieur de Eſtrée. This ſundaie and mondaie following, they were verie buſie to bring their purpoſe in that behalfe to paſſe, & likewiſe to aduance their trench vnto the ſide of the breach. The marſhall de Burdelon abode in the trench there all ſundaie, and loſt two of his gentlemen. The mar-

The bulworke of ſaint Adreſſes battered.

ſhall Montmorencie, accompanied with diuerſe lords & knights of the order, remained all mondaie in the trenches, to prepare things readie for the batterie, not without ſome danger of his perſon. For the ſtones that were beaten with the bullets comming out of the towne flew verie faſt about his eares, of the which there was one that lent him a blow on the ſhoulder, an other of them philipped him on the fingers, and lighting alſo in other parts of his bodie, if his armor had not defended him the better, he had not eſcaped without further harme. The ſame daie, the prince of Conde and the duke of Montpenſier came to the campe, and alighting at the coneſtables lodging, went from thence to the trenches, to relieue the marſhall Montmorencie, and to ſupplie his roome, whileſt he might in the meane time go to ſup with his father, and ſo take his reſt. Monſieur Deſtree, and the other that had charge about the planting and ordering of the artillerie, vſed ſuch dilgence, and were ſo earneſtlie called vpon and incouraged by the prince of Conde, continuallie remaining in the trenches, that on tueſdaie in the morning, the artillerie began to batter the bulworke of ſaint Adreſſes, and other places.

Thus we ſee things in opinion vnpoſſible, by induſtrie poſſible.

The great inuaſion of peſtilence in Newhauen.

This was doone not without great danger of the pioners and men of war that garded them, for as the French deſperatlie made their approch, ſo they were made by Engliſh gunners to taſt the bitter fruit that the canon & culuerings yeelded. But ſuch was the multitude of the Frenchmen that were now aſſembled togither, in hope to recouer that towne, which being poſſeſſed by the Engliſh, cut off all traffike from Rouen and Paris, and ſo conſequentlie from the cheefe parts of the whole realme of France, that with their generall aid, and drawing the water downe to the ſea, the mariſhes were made paſſable and firme ground, which to men of great experience was thought a thing vnpoſſible. The caſtell, the walles, and other defenſes of the towne were battered, breaches made, and the trench which before the comming of the coneſtable, was but brought to the point ouer againſt the bulworke of ſaint Addreſſes, was now within foure daies aduanced neere hand the ſpace of two miles, vpon the cauſeie or breach which was all of ſtone, without anie earth to couer them: ſo that they were driuen to make the beſt ſhift they could with woolſacks, ſandbags, baſkets and fagots. Yet all this had neuer come to paſſe, nor could haue beene wrought without infinit ſlaughter, and far more loſſe of French bloud, that neceſſarilie ſhould haue beene ſpilt, if the great mortalitie of peſtilence which entred the towne about the beginning of the ſummer, throgh a malicious infection, had not ſo greatlie increaſed, that it ſlue & tooke awaie dailie great numbers of men, beſide thoſe that being ſicke thereof, eſcaped with life; but were yet ſo feeble and weake; that they were not able to helpe themſelues, nor to doo anie ſeruice auailable at all.

Additions to Lanquet.

The high valiancie of the earle of Warwike.

There died ſo manie dailie through the vehemencie of the infection, that the ſtreets laie euen full of dead corpſes, not able to be remooued or buried, by reaſon of the multitude that periſhed. Herewith they were greeuouſlie annoied for want of freſh vittels; but cheeflie of freſh waters, which the enimie by long ſiege had cut off. And now the ſhot of the canon, lieng within ſix and twentie paſes of the towne, was ſo terrible, as the like had not lightlie beene heard of: and ſundrie breaches therewith were alreadie made; namelie two verie great and eaſie for the enimies to enter. All theſe dangers and miſeries notwithſtanding, the worthie earle of Warwike with his capteins and ſoldiors in couragious order ſtood at thoſe ſeuerall breaches, readie to defend the ſame, if the enimies had preſumed to haue giuen the aſſault, nothing afraid of death nor bloudie wounds; before which he preferred the ſeruice of his prince. And albeit the aduenture was great, yet by his owne example he incoraged other to caſt awaie all dread of danger, and to ſhew themſelues bold, which to a ſoldior in battell is a whetſtone to ſet him on edge. And ſurelie in this point he was warriorlike minded, if a man may allow the poets words in the like ſenſe:

Res magnæ non abſque graui diſcrimine fiunt,
In dubijs prodeſt generoſa audacia rebus.

Which when the coneſtable perceiued, he cauſed a trumpet to ſound the blaſt of imparlee, that talke might be had for the concluding of a compoſition betwixt both the parties. This offer, conſidering that ſore contagious mortalitie wherwith the towne was moſt greeuouſlie infected, hauing ſo greatlie infeebled the Engliſh forces within the ſame, was thought not vnmeet to be receiued. Herevpon, after a ſallie made by the Engliſhmen, and a faire ſkirmiſh betwixt them and the Frenchmen that laie afore the fort de Lheure, on the tueſdaie the ſeauen and twentith of Iulie maiſter William Pelham capteine of the fort, with another gentleman and a trumpetter, went forth by appointment, and was receiued firſt by monſieur de Loſſes, who brought him to the marſhall Montmorencie, and after by his appointment went with him by the Reingraues campe to the coneſtable: and till his returne a truce was accorded on that ſide of the fort. After that maiſter Pelham had talked a ſpace with the coneſtable, the matter was put ouer till the next daie, and ſo he returned.

Capteine Pelham went forth to talke with the commiſſioners.

The commiſſioners appointed to talke with the coneſtable.

The morrow after being wedneſdaie, and the eight and twentith of Iulie, the coneſtable about ſeauen of the clocke came to the end of the trenches next to the towne, where ſir Maurice Denis treaſuror of the towne, ſir Hugh Paulet, capteine Horſeie, capteine Pelham, capteine Iohn Shute prouoſt marſhall, and Nicholas Malbie ſecretarie to my lord lieutenant came forth, and paſſed ouer the hauen to commune with him. And during the parlee betwixt them, a truce was accorded and aſſented to by both parts: the which neuertheleſſe was broken two ſeuerall times through the vnrulie inſolencie of certeine harquebutters. And though by the good diligence of the capteins they were incontinentlie quieted and ſtaied: yet the valiant earle of Warwike, ſtanding at a breach in his hoſe and dublet in ſight of his enimies, was by a lewd ſoldior of the French (contrarie to the law of armes) ſhot through the thigh with an harquebuſe. The coneſtable and the Engliſh commiſſioners appointed, had long conference togither; and before they concluded, the marſhals Montmorencie and Burdeſſion (and at length the marſhall Briſſac alſo) came to the place where they were thus in parlee: but the coneſtable tooke vpon him to haue onelie authoritie to accept or refuſe ſuch conditions as ſhould be offered, or agreed vnto by the Engliſh commiſſioners in this treatie. And ſo at length they paſſed certeine articles in forme as followeth.

The articles of agreement touching the ſurrender of Newhauen.

FIrſt, that the earle of Warwike ſhould render againe the towne of Newhauen into the hands of the ſaid coneſtable of France, with all the artillerie and munitions of war then being in that towne, and belonging to the French king and his ſubiects.

2 Item, that he ſhould leaue the ſhips that were in the ſaid towne at that preſent, belonging either to the king or his ſubiects, with all their furniture: and generallie, all ſuch merchandize and other things, being likewiſe at that preſent within that towne, as either belonged to the king or his ſubiects.

3 Item, for the more ſuertie of the premiſſes, the ſaid earle ſhould preſentlie deliuer into the hands of the ſaid coneſtable, the great tower of the ſaid hauen, ſo that the ſoldiors which were placed therin enter not into the towne: and that the ſaid earle of Warwike ſhould cauſe the gates there towards the towne to be warded, till it were in the poſſeſſion of the ſaid coneſtable, without planting anie enſigns on the ſaid tower, according to the ſaid agréement; and alſo that the ſaid earle ſhould deliuer foure ſuch hoſtages as the ſaid coneſtable ſhould name.

4 Item, that the next daie, by eight of the clocke in the morning, the ſaid earle ſhould withdraw his ſoldiors which are in the fort, to deliuer it immediatlie into the hands of the ſaid coneſtable, or ſuch as ſhould be by him appointed to receiue the ſame at the ſaid houre.

5 Item, that all priſoners which haue béene taken before the ſaid hauen, ſhould be deliuered on either ſide, without paieng anie ranſome.

6 Item, that the coneſtable ſhould for his part ſuffer the ſaid earle of Warwike, and all thoſe that are in garriſon in the ſaid Newhauen to depart with all things whatſoeuer that belonged to the quéene of England and hir ſubiects.

7 Item, that for the departure as well of the ſaid earle, as the remouing of his ſoldiors, and other things before rehearſed, the ſaid coneſtable agréed to giue them ſix whole daies, beginning the morrow then next following; to wit, the nine and twentith of Iulie: during which ſix daies, they might franklie and fréelie take and carrie awaie all the ſaid things. And if wind or foule weather ſhuld hinder, that their paſſage could not be made within the ſaid terme, in this caſe the ſaid coneſtable ſhould grant them ſuch further time of delaie, as might be thought reaſonable.

8 Item, the ſaid coneſtable did likewiſe permit, that all the ſhips and Engliſh veſſels, and all other that ſhould be appointed for the portage and conueieng awaie of the ſaid things, ſhould ſafelie and fréelie paſſe into and fro the ſaid hauen, without anie ſtaie or impeachment, either by the French armie or anie other. The ſaid foure hoſtages were appointed to be maſter Oliuer Maners, brother to the earle of Rutland, capteine Pelham, capteine Horſeie, and capteine Leighton. In witneſſe wherof, the ſaid lords, the coneſtable of France, & the earle of Warwike ſigned theſe articles the eight and twentith of Iulie, 1563.

Additions to Lanquet.
The earle of Warwike commended.

Thus the earle of Warwike, as he had (during the whole time of his abode there in that towne of Newhauen) ſhewed himſelfe a right hardie & valiant capteine; ſo now in the end he prooued himſelfe to be both prudent and politike. For by accepting of theſe honorable conditions to go with all armor, munition, ſhips, goods, bag and baggage, in anie wiſe apperteining or belonging either to the quéenes maieſtie, or to anie of hir graces ſubiects, he ſaued the liues of a great number, which otherwiſe ſcaping the ſcourge of the infectiue plague, muſt néeds haue fallen vnder the edge of the ſword. The coneſtable, during the time of the parlée, ſent his yoongeſt ſonne monſieur de Thorrée to the king and quéene mother, to aduertiſe them of the treatie of this peace. And after it was once concluded and ſigned by the erle of Warwike, he ſent his eldeſt ſonne the marſhall Montmorencie, to preſent the ſame vnto them at Criquetot, halfe waie betwéene Newhauen and Feſcampe, who were right ioifull of the news: and the next daie they came to the campe, ſhewing great ſignes of their conceiued gladneſſe, for the recouering of that towne thus out of the Engliſhmens hands.

The French king commeth to the campe before Newhauen.

On ſaturdaie the moſt part of the Engliſhmen tooke ſhip and departed homewards: for glad might he thinke himſelfe that could get ſooneſt out of that vnwholſome and moſt vnſauorie aire. Manie ſicke perſons yet were left behind, impotent and not able to helpe themſelues. The miſerie whereof Edward Randoll eſquire high marſhall of the towne (who was appointed to tarrie and ſée the vttermoſt of the compoſition accompliſhed) perceiuing, moued with naturall pitie of his countrimen relinquiſhed without comfort, cauſed the ſaid ſicke perſons to be caried abord, not ſparing his owne ſhoulders, at that time féeble and full of the plague, himſelfe and his men ſtill bearing & helping the poore creatures on ſhipbord. A rare fact worthie reward, and no doubt in remembrance with God, the true recorder of mercifull deſerts. Thus was the towne of Newhauen reduced againe into the hands of the French, more vndoubtedlie through the extreme mortalitie that ſo outragiouſlie afflicted the ſoldiors and men of warre within the ſame, than by the enimies inforcements, although the ſame was great, and aduanced to the vttermoſt of the aduerſaries power.

Maiſter Edward Randoll full of pitie and commiſeration.

Beſides the meaner ſort of thoſe that died of the peſtilence during the ſiege, theſe I doo find noted as chiefe: Cutbert Vaughan comptrollor of the towne, Francis Summerſet coſine to the earle of Worceſter, Auerie Darcie brother to the lord Darcie, Iohn Zouch brother to the lord Zouch, Edward Ormeſbie, Thomas Drurie alias Poignard, Richard Croker, Iohn Cockſon, Thomas Kemiſh, Iohn Proud, William Saule, Wilfreid Antwiſell. Beſides theſe being capteins in chiefe dieng there in that towne, or elſe ſickening there and dieng vpon their returne into England, there were diuerſe other gentlemen, and ſuch as had charge, which likewiſe ended their liues by force of that cruell and moſt gréeuous peſtilent infection. There were diuerſe alſo that were ſlaine, as well by canon ſhot, as otherwiſe in the field in ſkirmiſh, as both the Tremains brethren of one birth, Nicholas and Andrew, capteine Richard Sanders, with maſter Robinſon, and maſter Bromfield, of which two before ye haue heard: alſo one Leighton a gentleman, & diuerſe mo whoſe names I know not, worthie neuertheleſſe to be remembred & placed in ranke with ſuch worthie men, as in their countries cauſe haue loſt their liues, and are therefore by writers regiſtred to liue by fame for euer.

But now to paſſe to other matters at home. As ye haue heard, the plague of peſtilence being in the towne of Newhauen, thorough the number of ſouldiors that returned into England the infection therof ſpread into diuerſe parts of this realme: but eſpeciallie the citie of London was ſo infected, that in the ſame whole yeare, that is to ſaie, from the firſt of Ianuarie 1562, vntill the laſt of December, in 1563, there died in the citie and liberties thereof (conteining one hundred & eight pariſhes) of all diſeaſes twentie thouſand, thrée hundred, thrée ſcore and twelue: and of the plague being part of the number aforeſaid, ſeuentéene thouſand, foure hundred, and foure perſons. And in the outpariſhes adioining to the ſame citie, being eleuen pariſhes, died of all diſeaſes in the whole yeare, thrée thouſand, two hundred, foure ſcore and eight perſons: and of them, of the plague two thouſand, ſeuen hundred, thirtie and two. So that the whole number of all that died of all diſeaſes, as well within the citie and liberties, as in the outpariſhes, was twentie thrée thouſand ſix hundred and thréeſcore: and of them there died of the plague, twentie thouſand one hundred thirtie and ſix.

Thréefold plague to the poore citizens of London.

Couent garden néere to Charingcroſſe. At the ſame time in Eſſex a man was torne all to péeces as he was carieng haie, his barne was borne downe, and his haie burned: both ſtones and trées were rent in manie places. The councell of king Philip at Bruxels commanded proclamation to be made in Antwerpe and other places, that no Engliſh ſhip with anie cloths, ſhould come into anie places of the low countries: their colour was (as they ſaid) the danger of the plague, which was at that time in London, & other places of England. Neuertheleſſe they would gladlie haue gotten our wolles, but the quéenes maieſtie thorough ſute of our merchant aduenturers cauſed the woll fléet to be diſcharged, and our cloth fléet was ſent to Emden in eaſt Friſeland, about Eaſter next following, in the yeare of our Lord 1564. Forſomuch as the plague of peſtilence was ſo hot in the citie of London, there was no tearme kept at Michaelmaſſe. To be ſhort, the poore citizens of London were this yeare plagued with a thréefold plague, peſtilence, ſcarſitie of monie, and dearth of vittels, the miſerie whereof were too long here to write: no doubt the poore remember it, the rich by flight into the countries made ſhift for themſelues, &c.

Lightning & thunder in December.

An earthquake was in the moneth of September in diuerſe places of this realme, ſpeciallie in Lincolne & Northamptonſhires. After the election of the maior of London by the councels letters, the quéens maieſties pleaſure was ſignified vnto ſir Thomas Lodge then maior, that forſomuch as the plague was ſo great in the citie, the new maior elected ſhuld kéepe no feaſt at the Guildhall, for doubt that thorough bringing togither ſuch a multitude, the infection might increaſe. For that wéeke there died within the citie and out pariſhes, more than two thouſand: wherefore ſir Iohn Whight, the new maior, tooke his oth at the vttermoſt gate of the tower of London. From the firſt daie of December, till the twelfe, was ſuch continuall lightning and thunder, eſpeciallie the ſame twelfe daie at night, that the like had not béene ſéene nor heard by anie man then liuing.

In the moneth of December was driuen on the ſhore at Grimſbie in Lincolnſhire a monſtruous fiſh, in length ninetéene yards, his taile fiftéene foot broad, and ſix yards betwéene his eies, twelue men ſtood vpright in his mouth to get the oile. For that the plague was not fullie ceaſſed in London, Hilarie tearme was kept at Hertford caſtell beſide Ware. This yeare the thirtéenth of Aprill, an honorable and ioifull peace was concluded, betwixt the quéenes maieſtie and the French king, their realmes dominions and ſubiects: and the ſame peace was proclamed with ſound of trumpet, before hir maieſtie in hir caſtell of Windſor, then being preſent the French ambaſſadors. And ſhortlie after, the quéenes grace ſent the right honourable ſir Henrie Careie lord of Hunneſdon, now lord chamberleine (of whoſe honourable and noble deſcent it is thus written

The plague (thanks be to God) being cleane ceaſſed in London, both Eaſter and Midſummer tearmes were kept at Weſtminſter. ¶And here by the waie to note the infection of this plague to haue béene diſperſed into other countries beſides England, it is read in Schardius In epitome rerum geſtarum ſub Ferdinando primo imperatore, that the peſtilence did ſo rage in Germanie, and poiſoned ſuch peopled places, namelie Norimberge, Francford, Magdburge, Danſke, Hamburgh, and their borders, that by eſtimation (ſaith he) there died of that contagion to the number of thrée hundred thouſand. A grieuous ſcourge of God (ſaith mine author) howbeit verie few thereby ſo terrified, that they reformed their wicked liues. Which plague in Germanie I therefore doo here repeat, bicauſe by all likelihoods it is to be gathered, that as it raged in the ſame yeare both there and here; ſo the cauſe maie be all one that bred ſo venemous an effect.]

The quéenes progreſſe thorough Cambridge.

There was on the vigill of S. Peter a watch in the citie of London, which did onelie ſtand in the higheſt ſtréets of Cheape, Cornehill, and ſo forth to Algate: which watch was to the commons of the ſame citie as chargeable, as when in times paſt it had béene commendablie doone. The fift of Auguſt, the quéenes maieſtie in hir progreſſe came to the vniuerſitie of Cambridge, and was of all the ſtudents (being inueſted according to their degrées taken in the ſchooles) honourablie and ioifullie receiued in the Kings college, where ſhe did lie during hir continuance in Cambridge. The daies of hir abode were paſſed in ſcholaſticall exerciſes of philoſophie, phyſicke, and diuinitie: the nights in comedies, and tragedies, ſet forth partlie by the whole vniuerſitie, and partlie by the ſtudents of the Kings college, to recreat and delight hir maieſtie, who both heard them attentiuelie, and beheld them chéerefullie.

At the breaking vp of the diuinitie act, being on wedneſdaie the ninth of Auguſt (on the which daie ſhe rode thorough the towne, and viewed the colleges, thoſe goodlie and ancient monuments of kings of England hir noble predeceſſors) ſhe made within ſaint Maries church a notable oration in Latine, in the preſence of the whole learned vniuerſitie, to the ſtudents great comfort. ¶A copie whereof I haue ſet downe, as I receiued it in writing at the hands of one that then was preſent, and noted the ſame as hir maieſtie vttered it. Whoſe words vnto me in a letter, wherewith the ſame oration was ſent, I doo here ſet downe Bona fide. This hir maieſties extemporall oration (ſaith he) lieng among my papers theſe twentie yeares and more, I thought good now to ſend to you, that if anie occaſion be fitlie offered in the diſcourſe of hir highneſſe reigne, you maie (if you pleaſe) inſert it. In truth, I my ſelfe neuer elſewhere read it, which hath made me euen religiouſlie to preſerue it. Maſter Abraham Hartwell in his Regina literata, dwelling vpon this onelie argument of hir comming and doings at Cambridge, glanceth in a diſtich or twaine at the effect hereof. But this is the thing it ſelfe, as I my ſelfe (as moſt vnworthie) being both an eare and alſo an eie witneſſe, can teſtifie.

Ex I.S.pa.1123 Creation of a baron namelie ſir Robert Dudleie barõ of Denbigh.

¶The creation of ſir Robert Sutton aliàs Dudleie knight of the garter, and maſter of the horſſe, to the quéenes maieſtie, who was created baron of Denbigh, and after earle of Leiceſter on Michaelmaſſe daie at ſaint Iames, with the gift of the manour of Killingworth, and other things there to him and his heires, to the yéerlie value of foure and twentie pounds & better. Firſt, the ſaid lord attended on the quéenes highneſſe, to the chappell, and from the chappell to ſeruice, and when he was returned to the chamber of preſence, the ſaid lord with other departed to the lord chamberleins chamber, and ſhifted them: the ſaid lord Robert in his ſurcot with the hood, his mantle borne before him by the lord Hunſton, and led by the lord Clinton lord admerall by the right hand, and the lord Strange on the left hand, in their parlement robes, Garter bearing the patent, & before him the officers of armes, and ſo procéeded into the chamber of preſence, where the quéenes highneſſe ſat vnder the cloth of eſtate with the noblemen on ech ſide of hir, the ambaſſador of France was alſo preſent with another ſtranger an Italian.

The ſtate attendance at this creation.

And when the ſaid lord with the other came in the quéenes ſight, they made their obeiſance thrée times, the ſaid lord knéeled downe: after the which Garter preſented the letters patents to the lord chamberleine, and he preſented the ſame to the quéenes highneſſe, who gaue it to ſir William Cecill ſecretarie, who read the ſame with a lowd voice, & at the words of Creamus the lord of Hunſdon preſented the mantle to the quéens maieſtie, who put on the ſame, whereby he was created baron of Denbigh for him and his heires. Then the patent was read out to the end, after the which he deliuered it to the quéene againe, and hir highneſſe gaue it to the ſaid lord, who gaue hir maieſtie moſt humble thanks, and he roſe vp and departed to the chamber they came from, the trumpets ſounding before him.

Then he ſhifted him of thoſe robes, and put on the robes of eſtate of an earle, and being led by the earle of Suſſex on the right hand, and the erle of Huntington on his left hand, the earle of Warwike bearing his ſword the pomell vpward, and the girdle about the ſame, all in their robes of eſtate, the lord Clinton lord admerall in his parlement robes, bearing his cap with the coronall, Garter before him bearing his patent, and the other officers of armes before him, they procéeded as afore into the chamber of preſence, where, after they had made their obeiſance, the ſaid earle knéeled downe, and Garter deliuered his patent to the lord chamberleine, who gaue the ſame to the quéenes maieſtie, & hir highneſſe gaue the ſame to ſir William Cecill ſecretarie to read, who read the ſame. And at the words Cincturam gladij, the earle of Warwike preſented the ſword to the quéenes highneſſe, who girt the ſame about the necke of the ſaid new earle, putting the point vnder his left arme, and after hir maieſtie put on his cap with the coronall. Then his patent was read out to the end, and then the ſaid ſecretarie deliuered it againe to the quéene, and hir highneſſe gaue it to the ſaid new erle of Leiceſter, who gaue hir humble thanks for it.

And then he aroſe and went into the councell chamber to dinner, the trumpets ſounding before, and at dinner he ſat in his kirtle, and there accompanied him the foreſaid ambaſſador of France, and the ſaid Italian, with diuerſe other erles and lords. And after the ſecond courſe, Garter with the other officers of armes, proclamed the quéenes maieſties ſtile, and after, the ſtile of the ſaid earle, for the which they had fiftéene pounds, to wit, for his baronie fiue pounds, & for his earledome ten pounds, and Garter had his gowne of blacke veluet garded with thrée gards of the ſame, laid on with lace, lined through with blacke taffata, and garded on the inner ſide with the ſame, and on the ſléeues eight and thirtie paire of aglets of gold. The ſecond of October in the afternoone, and on the morrow in the forenoone, was a ſolemne obſequie at Paules church in London, for Ferdinando late emperor departed. ¶Of this emperor it is ſaid, that lieng ſicke, and ſo ſicke that Zichard a precher of his court then preſent could not hold him vp: howbeit comming at laſt to himſelfe and ſomewhat in recouerie, he ſaid to the ſtanders by; You thought that I would neuer come againe, naie mine houre is not ſo ſoone: I doo certeinlie know that I ſhall not die before Whitſuntide. The ſeauenth of October at night, from eight a clocke till after nine of the clocke, all the north parts of the element ſeemed to be couered with flames of fire, proceeding from the northeaſt and northweſt, toward the middeſt of the firmament, where after it had ſtaied nigh one houre, it deſcended weſt: and all the ſame night (being the next after the change of the moone) ſeemed nigh as light as it had beene faire daie. The twentith of Nouember in the morning, through negligence of a maiden with a candell, the ſnuffe falling in an hundred pounds weight of gunpowder, three houſes in Bucklerſburie were ſore ſhaken, and the maid died two daies after. The one and twentith of December began a froſt, which continued ſo extremlie, that on Newyeares euen, people went ouer and alongſt the Thames on the iſe from London bridge to Weſtminſter. Some plaied at the football as boldlie there, as if it had beene on the drie land: diuerſe of the court being then at Weſtminſter, ſhot dailie at pricks ſet vpon the Thames: and the people both men and women went on the Thames in greater numbers, than in anie ſtreet of the citie of London. On the third daie of Ianuarie at night it began to thaw, and on the fift daie was no iſe to be ſeene betweene London bridge and Lambeth, which ſudden thaw cauſed great floods and high waters, that bare downe bridges and houſes, and drowned manie people in England: eſpeciallie in Yorkſhire, Owes bridge was borne awaie with others.

About this time, for the queenes maieſtie were choſen and ſent commiſſioners to Bruges, the lord Montacute knight of the honourable order of the garter, doctor Wotton one of hir maieſties honourable councell, doctor Haddon one of the maſters of requeſts to hir highneſſe, with others: maſter doctor Aubreie was for the merchant aduenturers of England: they came to Bruges in Lent, Anno 1565, and continued there till Michaelmaſſe following, and then was the diet prolonged till March in the yeare 1566, and the commiſſioners returned into England.

The marqueſſe of Baden and the ladie Cicilie his wife, ſiſter to the king of Swethen, who came into this land in the moneth of September laſt paſt (as before is declared) being then by the quéenes eſpeciall appointment at their arriuall honorablie receiued by the lord Cobham, an honorable baron of this realme, and the ladie his wife one of the quéenes maieſties priuie chamber, now in the moneth of Aprill 1566 departed the realme againe, the marqueſſe a few daies before his wife, being both conducted by a like perſonage the lord of Aburgauennie to Douer. Certeine houſes in Cornehill, being firſt purchaſed by the citizens of London, were in the moneth of Februarie cried by a belman, and afterward ſold to ſuch perſons as ſhould take them downe, and carie them from thence: which was ſo doone in the moneths of Aprill and Maie next following. And then the ground being made plaine at the charges alſo of the citie, poſſeſſion thereof was by certeine aldermen in the name of the whole citizens, giuen to the right worſhipfull ſir Thomas Greſham knight, agent to the quéenes highneſſe, there to build a place for merchants to aſſemble in, at his owne proper charges: who on the ſeuenth daie of Iune laid the firſt ſtone of the foundation (being bricke) and foorthwith the workemen followed vpon the ſame with ſuch diligence, that by the moneth of Nouember, in An. 1567. the ſame was couered with ſlate. The commiſſioners before named, appointed for the matters of Flanders, kéeping their diet at Bruges, agréed to refer the whole matter to the princes on both ſides: and if they could not agrée, then the merchants to haue fortie daies to repare home with their merchandize, and in the meane time all things to ſtand as they were then. The one and thirtith of Auguſt, the quéenes maieſtie in hir progreſſe came to the vniuerſitie of Oxford, and was of all the ſtudents, which had looked for hir comming thither two yeares, ſo honorablie and ioifullie receiued, as either their loialneſſe towards the quéenes maieſtie, or the expectation of their fréends did require. Concerning orders in diſputations and other academicall exerciſes, they agréed much with thoſe which the vniuerſitie of Cambridge had vſed two yeares before. Comedies alſo and tragedies were plaied in Chriſts church, where the quéenes highneſſe lodged. Among the which the comedie intituled Palemon and Arcit, made by maiſter Edwards of the quéenes chappell, had ſuch tragicall ſucceſſe, as was lamentable. The fift of September after diſputations, the quéene at the humble ſute of certeine hir nobilitie, and the K. of Spaines ambaſſador, made a bréefe oration in Latine to the vniuerſitie; but ſo wiſe and pithie, as England may reioiſe that it hath ſo learned a prince, and the vniuerſitie may triumph that they haue ſo noble a patroneſſe. The ſixt of September after dinner, hir grace comming from Chriſts church ouer Carfox, and ſo to S. Maries, the ſcholers ſtanding in order according to their degrées euen to the eaſt gate, certeine doctors of the vniuerſitie did ride before in their ſcarlet gownes and hoods, & maiſters of art in blacke gownes and hoods. The maior alſo with certeine of his brethren did ride before hir in ſcarlet to the end of Magdalen bridge, where their liberties ended: but the doctors and maiſters went forward ſtill to Shootouer, a mile and more out of Oxford, bicauſe their liberties extended ſo far: and there after orations made, hir highnes with thanks to the whole vniuerſitie bad them farewell, and rode to Ricote.

The quéene maketh an oration to the vniuerſitie.

Shane Oneil, who had moſt traitorouſlie rebelled againſt the quéenes maieſtie in Ireland, and had done manie great outrages in the parts of Vlſter, was this yeare with his great loſſe manfullie repelled from the ſiege of Dundalke by the garriſon therof: and afterward through the great valiancie and foreſight of ſir Henrie Sidneie knight of the order, and lord deputie of Ireland, he was ſo diſcomfited in ſundrie conflicts, with the loſſe of thrée thouſand fiue hundred of his men, that now foreſéeing his declination to be imminent, he determined to put a collar about his necke, and diſguiſing himſelfe, to repaire to the lord deputie, and penitentlie to require his pardon to haue his life. But Neil Mackeuer his ſecretarie, who had incited him to this rebellion, perſuaded him firſt to trie & treat the fréendſhip of certeine wild Scots, that then laie incamped in Clan Iboie, vnder the conducting of Alexander Oge, and Mac Gilliam Buſke, whoſe father and vncle Shane Oneil had latelie killed in an ouerthrow giuen to the Scots. Neuertheleſſe he well liking this perſuaſion, went to the ſaid campe the ſecond of Iune, where after a diſſembled interteinement, & quaffing of wine, Gilliam Buſke burning with deſire of reuenge for his fathers and vncles death, and miniſtring quarrelling talke, iſſued out of the tent, and made a fraie vpon Oneils men, and then gathering togither his Scots in a throng, ſuddenlie entred the tent againe, who there with their ſlaughter ſwords hewed in péeces Shane Oneil, his ſecretarie, and all his companie, except a verie few which eſcaped by flight.

The emperor Maximilian inueſted into the order of the garter.

On ſaint Iohns euen at night was the like ſtanding watch in London, as had béene on ſaint Peters euen in the yeare laſt before mentioned. This yeare the emperour Maximilian the ſecond of that name, being elected into the moſt honourable order of the garter, the right honourable Thomas earle of Suſſex, &c: knight of the ſame moſt noble order, was appointed by the quéenes maieſtie to go vnto the ſaid emperour, with the ſaid order of the garter, according to his ſaid election. Who being honorablie accompanied with the lord North, ſir Thomas Mildmaie knight, Henrie Cobham eſquier, one of the penſioners, and others, departed from London the fiue and twentith of Iune 1567, vnto Douer, and there imbarked, landed at Calis, and his traine at Dunkirke, and ſo paſſed through the low countries to Antwerpe in Brabant, where he was honourablie receiued by the Engliſh merchants and others, and being there went to viſit madame de Parma, regent of the ſaid countries, then reſident within the ſame towne.

From thence he paſſed vnto Colen, where as his lordſhip and traine mounted the riuer of Rhene, & by ſundrie continuall daies iourneies paſſed by the citie of Ments or Magunce, vnto Oppenham, & there taking his waie by land, paſſed through the countrie by the cities of Wormes and Spires till he came to Vlmes, ſtanding on the riuer of Danow, where hée arriued the one and twentith of Iulie: and the thrée and twentith his lordſhip rode in poſt to Auſpurge, called in Latine Auguſta Vindelicorum, nine Dutch miles from Vlmes. From thence he departed the fiue and twentith of Iulie, and met with his traine at Donwert, being come thither vpon flotes downe by the ſaid riuer of Danow. And departing from thence on the fourth of Auguſt, he paſſed by Stoan & Cremz, by the ſaid riuer of Danow, and ſo arriued at the citie of Vienna the fift of Auguſt in this foreſaid yeare 1567, where hée was receiued of the lord Smeckouites, hauing twelue horſſes readie with their footclothes for his lordſhip, and the moſt reſpected of his traine, and ſo brought him to the preſence of the emperour, at that preſent within his caſtell there in that citie, by whom he was right honourablie receiued, and afterwards conducted to his aſſigned lodging, where as all prouiſion was prepared and made at the emperours charges. Here his lordſhip continued till the fouretéenth of Ianuarie. In which meane time the emperour verie often (as time ſerued) had the ſaid earle foorth with him, vnto ſuch paſtimes of hunting the hart, boare, and ſuch like, as the plentifulneſſe of that countrie yéeldeth. Moreouer, during the time of his lordſhips abode there at Vienna, Charles archduke of Auſtria and Carinth arriued in that citie, whom my lord went to ſalute.

The which fourteene hulkes did mainteine their fight for the ſpace of two houres. And after that they did perceiue that they could not preuaile, hauing taſted of the ordinance of the queens ſhips to their great hurt, as well in ſlaughter of their men, as alſo in ſpoile of their ſhips, the ſaid Holſtock and his companie tooke eight of the ſaid hulks, whereof ſix were ſent into the riuer of Thames. The inſcription or writing ouer the ſouth gate of the new churchyard.

¶ On the ſouthſide thereof, ouer a folding gate this inſcription is grauen in ſtone in great letters: Thomas Ro miles, cùm prætor eſſet Londinenſis, hunc locum Reipublicæ, in vſum publicæ ſepulturæ communem, ſuo ſumptu dedicauit: Anno Domini 1569. Which writing I haue here recorded, for that in viewing the ſame, I ſaw ſome of the letters defaced and vtterlie made awaie: which in time might likewiſe befall to the reſidue, and ſo the memorie of the gentleman there fixed to ſo good an end baniſh and die. He alſo of a godlie motion builded a conuenient roome in Pauls churchyard, on the ſouthſide of the croſſe, to receiue a certeine number of hearers at the ſermon time: as may appeare by ſome remembrances of his name there fixed. Howbeit, this gentleman thus well diſpoſed, and like inough to haue proceeded in more ſuch godlie actions, was called out of this life the next yeare immediatlie following, forgoing all the pompe of this life, with no leſſe good will, than he was forward by death to paſſe to eternall reſt. His bodie was buried in Hacknie church, in the ſouthſide of the chancell, where (beſides a monument of himſelfe and his wife) this epitaph remaineth to be read in faire great letters, as followeth:

Ambaſſadors from Muſcouie land at tower wharfe.

The ſeuen and twentith of Auguſt, Andrew Gregorenich Sauin, ambaſſador from Muſcouie, landed at the tower wharfe, and was there receiued by the lord maior of London, the aldermen and ſhiriffes in ſcarlet, with the merchants aduenturers in cotes of blacke veluet, all on horſſebacke, who conueied him riding through the citie to the Muſcouie houſe in Seding lane, there to be lodged. The earle of Northumberland and weſtmerland rebelled.

On thurſdaie the ninth of Nouember, Thomas Perſie erle of Northumberland receiued the queens maieſties letters to repaire to the court. And the ſame night, other conſpirators perceiuing him to be wauering and vnconſtant of promiſe made to them, cauſed a ſeruant of his, called Beckwith (after he was laid in his bed) to buſtle in, and to knocke at his chamber doore, willing him in haſt to ariſe, and ſhift for himſelfe, for that his enimies (whome he termed to be ſir Oſwold Wlſtrop, and maiſter Vaughan) were about the parke, and had béeſet him with great numbers of men. Whereupon he aroſe, & conueied himſelfe awaie to his kéepers houſe. In the ſame inſtant they cauſed the bels of the towne to be rong backeward, and ſo raiſed as manie as they could to their purpoſe. The next night the earle departed thenſe to Branſpith, where he met with Charls earle of Weſtmerland, and the other confederats. Then by ſundrie proclamations, they abuſing manie of the queens ſubiects, commanded them in hir highneſſe name, to repaire to them in warlike maner, for the defenſe and ſuertie of hir maieſties perſon; ſometimes affirming their doings to be with the aduiſe and conſent of the nobilitie of this realme, who in déed were wholie bent (as manifeſtlie appeared) to ſpend their liues in dutifull obedience, againſt them and all other traitors, ſometimes pretending for conſcience ſake to ſéeke to reforme religion: ſometimes declaring that they were driuen to take this matter in hand, leaſt otherwiſe forren princes might take it vpon them, to the great perill of this realme.

The earles abuſe the quéene and hir ſubiects.

Vpon mondaie the thirteenth of Nouember, they went to Durham with their banners diſplaied. And to get the more credit among the fauorers of the old Romiſh religion, they had a croſſe with a banner of the fiue wounds borne before them, ſometime by old Norton, ſometime by others. As ſoone as they entred Durham, they went to the minſter, where they tare the bible, communion bookes, & other ſuch as were there. The ſame night they went againe to Branſpith. The fourteenth daie of the ſame moneth, they went to Darington, and there had maſſe, which the earles and the reſt heard with ſuch lewd deuotion as they had. On thurſdaie the ninth of Nouember, Thomas Perſie erle of Northumberland receiued the queens maieſties letters to repaire to the court. And the ſame night, other conſpirators perceiuing him to be wauering and vnconſtant of promiſe made to them, cauſed a ſeruant of his, called Beckwith (after he was laid in his bed) to buſtle in, and to knocke at his chamber doore, willing him in haſt to ariſe, and ſhift for himſelfe, for that his enimies (whome he termed to be ſir Oſwold Vlſtrop, and maiſter Vaughan) were about the parke, and had beeſet him with great numbers of men. Wherevpon he aroſe, & conueied himſelfe awaie to his keepers houſe. In the ſame inſtant they cauſed the bels of the towne to be rong backeward, and ſo raiſed as manie as they could to their purpoſe. Then by ſundrie proclamations, they abuſing manie of the queens ſubiects, commanded them in hir highneſſe name, to repaire to them in warlike maner, for the defenſe and ſuertie of hir maieſties perſon; ſometimes affirming their doings to be with the aduiſe and conſent of the nobilitie of this realme, who in deed were wholie bent (as manifeſtlie appeared) to ſpend their liues in dutifull obedience, againſt them and all other traitors, ſometimes pretending for conſcience ſake to ſeeke to reforme religion: ſometimes declaring that they were driuen to take this matter in hand, leaſt otherwiſe forren princes might take it vpon them, to the great perill of this realme.

Vpon mondaie the thirteenth of Nouember, they went to Durham with their banners diſplaied. And to get the more credit among the fauorers of the old Romiſh religion, they had a croſſe with a banner of the fiue wounds borne before them, ſometime by old Norton, ſometime by others. Lord Leonard Dacres rebelleth.

About the later end of Ianuarie, Leonard Dacres of Harleſeie began to rebell, and procured the people of the north parts to aſſiſt him: ſo that he raiſed to the number of thrée thouſand men. Of whoſe attempts when the lord Hunſdon lord warden of the eaſt marches, and gouernor of Berwike heard, he prepared to go againſt him: and hauing with him ſir Iohn Forſter lord warden of the middle marches, they ſet forward towards the place where they thought they ſhould find him. They had with them 300 choſen ſoldiors of the garriſon of Berwike, and twelue hundred borderers, and other of the garriſons there about the borders: ſo that they were in all fiftéene hundred footmen and horſſemen. They marching therewith forth approched néere to a towne and caſtell called Naworth, which was in the kéeping of the ſaid Leonard Dacres. And vpon a more, through the middle whereof a litle riuer called Chelt hath his courſe, the ſaid Leonard Dacres the two and twentith of Februarie was readie with his power in order of battell, ranged & ſet in arraie after the forme of a triangle, compaſſed and inuironed about with horſſemen. There were amongſt them manie deſperat women that gaue the aduenture of their liues, and fought right ſtoutlie. Manie therfore were ſlaine on both ſides, to the number at the leaſt of thrée hundred perſons. But ſuch was the forward valiancie of the lord Hunſdon, that his people incoraged by his example (whome they might ſée ſo noblie acquit himſelfe, in aduenturing ſo farre as anie other of the whole troope) behaued themſelues in ſuch manfull wiſe, that the victorie in the end fell to him and his companie: and the ſaid Leonard Dacres was forced to flée from his ſéelie ſlaine and miſerable people, taking his waie into Scotland, ſo faſt as his horſſe might beare him. Captaine Reade and the other capteins and ſoldiors of Berwike bare themſelues right valiantlie, and ſhewed proofe of their ſkill and hardie manhood in this ſkirmiſh. They come to Iedworth and are interteined.

The lard of Seſford with the principals of his alies ſubmit themſelues.

of the lard of Ferniherſt, being parcell of hir ſons lands, which likewiſe was ouerthrowne, raſed, and burned, with all other caſtels, piles, townes, and villages, all alongſt the ſaid countrie, till they came to Crailing, ioining there with the lord lieutenants power. This towne was likewiſe burned and ſpoiled. Thus they paſſed the riuer of Tiuet, raſing, burning and ſpoiling the caſtels, piles, ſtone houſes, townes, and villages alongſt that riuer, vntill they came to Iedworth, where they lodged for that night, and were of the magiſtrats of that towne courteouſlie receiued, who had made indifferent good prouiſion for the armie, both of vittels for men, and of haie and prouender for horſſes. Whervpon proclamation was publiklie made in the name of the lord lieutenant, that no Engliſhman (vpon paine of death) ſhould diſturbe or wrongfullie take awaie anie thing from anie of the inhabitants of the ſame towne, without diſburſing readie monie therefore. Which thing did ſo much content the Scots, that the next daie the lard of Seſford, warden of the middle marches of Scotland, with all the principals of his alies and kinred, came in to the lord lieutenant, ſubmitting themſelues to him, and were receiued into aſſurance: for that neither he nor anie of them had at anie time receiued the Engliſh rebels, neither aided nor aſſiſted them, neither yet made anie inuaſion into England. And whereas ſome of their men, and tenants, without their knowledge had treſpaſſed in ſuch behalfe, they were contented to abide and ſtand vnto the erle of Suſſex his order, for their ſaid men and tenants. And herevpon neither they nor anie of theirs receiued anie hurt: but by his lordſhips commandement were preſerued from ſuſteining anie damage either in bodie or goods: ſo glad he was of their ſubmiſſion, and no leſſe glad to giue them occaſion to be carefull in performance of obedience. Unto which compaſſion God (no doubt) had inclined the noble mans hart, according to the poet words in this ſenſe verie true:

——— mollia pectora reddit
Ad pietatis opus, flammis vt cera liqueſcens
In varias formas fictoris ducitur arte.

The caſtell of Ferniherſt burned.

At Minto both the armies met.

The Scots of Howike their breach of couenant.

The nineteenth daie, the armie was diuided into two ſeuerall parts, whereof one paſſing ouer the riuer of Tiuet, burned the caſtell of Ferniherſt, vtterlie ſpoiling the ſame, and all other caſtels & townes [illegible]ged to the lards of Ferniherſt, Hunthill, [illegible] Coſſ, and ſo paſſed to Minto, where both the ar[illegible] méeting, ioined togither againe, being not paſt [illegible] foure miles from Howike, whither they marched directlie, [illegible]ding to lodge there that night, bicauſe the bail[illegible] of the towne had offered to receiue th[illegible] and to make prouiſion for the ſoldiour[illegible] neceſſarie, they paieng readie monie f[illegible] the inhabitants to be aſſured not t[illegible] in bodie or goods, as was promiſed. But th[illegible] breaking the couenant before the comming [illegible] the armie, had vncouered their houſes, carried the thatch into the ſtréets, and there ſet it on fire: and this doone they fled their waies with moſt part of their goods. So that when the armie approched, there was ſuch a thicke ſmoke, that no man might ſcarſelie enter the towne: and ſo for that night the ſoldiours ſuffered great lacke of vittels, lodging, and prouiſion, as well for themſelues as their horſſes. But the fire which the Scots had of a malicious purpoſe and ſubtiltie thus begun, was by the diligent induſtrie of the Engliſhmen ſo increaſed: that both the thatch and timber of the whole towne was conſumed to aſhes, a ſtone houſe perteining to the lard of Drumlanerike onlie excepted, wherein the lord lieutenant laie that night. And bicauſe the ſaid Drumlanerike was a friend aſſured, the ſaid houſe was ſpared, with all the goods and corne therein, whereof there was great plentie.

Why the lord of Drumlanerikes goods were ſaued from the fire, &c.

An houſe of the lard of Buclewghs blowne vp with powder.

Nothing but waſt & ſpoile by fire and ſword.

The twentith of Aprill, the armie marched toward a faire proper houſe, belonging to the lard of Buclewgh, which was blowne vp with powder and vtterlie ruinated. Here the armie was againe diuided as before by the ſaid lord lieutenant his appointment, and marching by north the riuer of Tiuet towards England, they burnt and ſpoiled all ſuch caſtels, piles, townes and villages, as were belonging to the ſaid lards of Ferniherſt and Buclewgh their kinſmen, alies, and adherents, & came that night againe to Iedworth, and there lodged. The one and twentith of Aprill, the armie diuiding it ſelfe againe, the one part vnder the leading of the marſhall ſir William Drurie, paſſed to the riuer of Bowbent, and there Tiuidale and Riddeſdale men méeting him, all on both ſides that riuer was burnt and ſpoiled. The other part of the armie marching by the riuer of Taile, waſted and burnt in like maner there all that was found on both ſides that riuer, belonging wholie to the lard of Buclewgh, his kinſmen, alies and adherents.

The lord lieutenants purpoſe to beſiege Hume caſtell.

What caſtels & piles were ouerthrowne and ſpoiled in this voiage.

This doone, they returned againe néere to Kelſeie, where the lord lieutenant lodged for that night, meaning to haue beſieged Hume caſtell. For the accompliſhment whereof, the ſame night the lord of Hunneſdon and his companie went to Warke, to bring from thence the daie next following the great artillerie. But bicauſe the cariage horſſes were returned to Barwike, this could not be brought to paſſe, & ſo the lord lieutenant with the whole armie returning into England the two & twentith of Aprill, came that night to Barwike. In this iourneie there were raſed, ouerthrowne and ſpoiled, aboue fiftie caſtels and piles, and more than thrée hundred townes and villages: ſo that there were verie few in Tiuidale and thoſe parties there abouts, which had either receiued the Engliſh rebels, or by inuaſion indamaged the Engliſh borders, and good ſubiects inhabiting vpon the ſame, that had left to them either caſtell, pile or houſe, for themſelues, their fréends, or tenants, beſide the great loſſe of goods which were waſted, taken awaie or conſumed by this armie vnder the lord lieutenant.

The lord Scrope with his power.

The marches of England garded againſt the enimie.

Now in the meane while that he with his power thus afflicted the aduerſaries on that ſide, the lord Scrope warden of the weſt marches the eightéenth of Aprill entered Scotland on that ſide, with ſuch forces as he had aſſembled. And the firſt night they incamped at Egleſham, and in the morning at the diſlodging of the campe, that towne was burnt; and paſſing forward through the countrie, they burnt and ſpoiled diuerſe other townes, almoſt till they came to Dunfriſe, and had diuerſe conflicts with the enimies, gaue them ſundrie ouerthrowes, tooke manie of them priſoners. And hauing accompliſhed his purpoſe, to his high praiſe and commendation, his lordſhip returned in ſafetie with his people into England; hauing burnt in that iourneie theſe places following: Hoddon, Trailebrow, old Cockpoole, Sherington, Blackeſhaw, Banke end, Rowell, Logher wood, Bride kirke, and others. During theſe inuaſions thus made into Scotland in that ſeaſon, the marches of England were ſo ſtronglie garded in all places by the lord Euers, ſir George Bowes, and others; that the Scots durſt not ſo much as once offer to make anie inuaſion: ſo that in abſence of the armies, there was not ſo much as an houſe burnt, or a cow driuen out of the Engliſh borders.

The ſix and twentith of Aprill, the earle of Suſſex lord lieutenant, accompanied with the foreſaid lord of Hunneſdon, maſter Drurie, and diuers other capteins and ſouldiours, to the number of thrée thouſand or thereabouts, ſet from Barwike about fiue of the clocke in the afternoone towards Warke, where they arriued about nine of the clocke in the night: and continuing there till the next morning, in the meane time he put things in order neceſſarie for the aſſiegging of Hume caſtell, the winning whereof his lordſhip ſeemed to haue vowed. About the breake of the daie he ſent forth maſter Drurie, with certeine horſmen and ſhot before, to inuiron that caſtell, and to chooſe there ſuch a plot of ground, where he might incampe beſt in ſafetie frō the ſhot of the ſame. Which the ſaid maſter Drurie accordinglie performed, and there remained till the comming of the ſaid lord lieutenant with the armie; who ſetting forward the footbands, cariage, and ordinance, made haſt to follow. But yet yer he could paſſe the riuer of Tweed, and ſet ouer all the men, ordinance and carriage, it was almoſt ten of the clocke. Heere at this riuer, the lord lieutenant cauſed all the horſſemen to ſtaie and to take ouer the footmen.

The marſhall ſent before to Hume caſtell.

The order taken by the earle of Suſſex for the ſafetie of the armie.

Hume caſtell beſieged.

This doone, with good circumſpection he appointed the demilances and other horſſemen to remaine behind in the rereward, and put the footmen in the battell, for the more ſafegard of themſelues, the ordinance and cariages. Then his lordſhip himſelfe with his owne ſtandard, and the lord of Hunneſdons guidon, marched forward towards Hume caſtell, commanding the reſt of the armie with the ordinance to follow after, and ſo about one of the clocke in the afternoone, he came before the caſtell: out of the which the enimies ſhot at his ſtandard verie hotlie; but (God be praiſed) without dooing hurt either to man or horſſe, and incamped vnder a rocke or crag (which the marſhall had poſſeſſed) with his band of horſſemen and certeine footmen, as in a place moſt apt from danger of ſhot out of the caſtell. Heerewith a companie of curriours and caliuers were put forward, and appointed to take an other rocke neerer to the caſtell, which ſhot at them in the ſaid caſtell; and the defendants within it anſwered them againe verie roundlie, although without anie great hurt on either part.

The earle of Suſſex vieweth the caſtell of Hume.

A Mount raiſed at the lord lieutenants commandement.

In the meane time the lord lieutenant himſelfe, accompanied onelie with the marſhall maſter Drurie, rode ſundrie times round about the caſtell to view and ſurueie the ſame: at whome they within ſhot verie ſore, both with their great artillerie and ſmall ſhot; yet miſſing them, as God would, though verie narrowlie. About ſix of the clocke in the euening came the whole battell, ordinance and cariages, with enſignes ſpread, ſhewing themſelues verie brauelie; at whome alſo the caſtell ſhot luſtilie: but as God would haue it, without hurting either man or boie. They lodged vnder another rocke neere adioining vnto the lord lieutenant vpon the weſt ſide, where there were appointed more ſmall ſhot to go to the trench, which ſhadowed themſelues vnder the old wals of the houſes, which the Scots had burnt before the comming of the Engliſhmen, and occupied them ſo within the ſaid caſtell, that one of them could not ſo ſoone looke out at a loope, but three or foure were readie to ſalute him: and keeping them in ſuch ſort, that they durſt not well ſhew their heads; the capteine of the pioners the ſame night by commandement of the lord lieutenant, raiſed a mount vpon the northeaſt ſide of the caſtell, whereupon the peeces of artillerie might be planted in batterie.

Batterie made againſt Hume caſtell.

The maſter gunner within the caſtell hurt.

This worke was ſo well applied, and with ſo great diligence aduanced, that by fiue of the clocke in the next morning it was finiſhed. The eight and twentith of Aprill, the marſhall maiſter Drurie verie earlie rode about the caſtell, to ſurueie and view euerie thing: which doone, the great ordinance was brought to the appointed place, and bent againſt the caſtell, to wit, three canons, and two falcons. Heerewith alſo the lord lieutenant cauſed ſummons to be giuen vnto them within to yeeld. And about ſeauen of the clocke the ſame morning, the whole tire began to go off, and a great ſhowt was made by the armie, to the great terrour of the defendants, and of all the countrie neere adioining. The foreſaid peeces continued ſhooting till two of the clocke in the afternoone, diſcharging within that ſpace a three ſcore ſhots. During the time of this batterie, there was no great ſtore of ſhot diſcharged by the great peeces within the caſtell, bicauſe their maſter gunner within, after he had firſt ſhot off a peece, and doone no hurt therewith, as he was about to ſhoot againe, the maſter gunner of the two Engliſh falcons hauing eſpied him, tooke his leuell ſo right, that diſcharging therewith one of the falcons, he diſplaced the enimies peece, and ſtroke the gunners leg off, whereby their great ordinance within ceaſſed, which was an happie turne for the Engliſhmen.

The Scots ſue for a reſpit of time.

The capteins within Hume caſtell.

The lord lieutenant ſweareth.

About two of the clocke they within ſent forth a trumpet vnto the lord lieutenant, requiring a reſpit that they might talke with the marſhall maſter Drurie, and to ſend a meſſenger to the lord Hume their maſter, to know his further pleaſure: for that being put in truſt by him with the keeping of that fortreſſe, they could not giue it vp without his conſent. And then vpon the returne of the meſſenger, they truſted to giue his lordſhip contented anſwer. The marſhall maſter Drurie talked with them twiſe, and the lord lieutenant was contented to grant vnto William Trotter, and Gilbert Greie the lord Humes wiues brother (being principall capteins appointed to the keeping of the ſaid caſtell) three houres reſpit: with condition, that they ſhould not vſe therein anie ſubtiltie, or for the delaieng of time: ſwearing by his honour, that if they ſo did, he would not depart the field till he had woone it by force: and further, that there ſhould not one of them eſcape with life.

The lord lieutenants commandement on paine of death.

They being brought in doubt of their owne ſafeties hereby, ſent one in poſt togither with a ſeruant of maſter Druries the marſhall, to the lord Hume. And preſentlie heerevpon they ſhewed themſelues vpon the walles and rampires of the ſaid caſtell: but immediatlie the lord lieutenant ſent to them a commandement, ſtrictlie inhibiting them, that not one of them ſhould once on paine of death looke ouer the wals or rampires, to the end to view [illegible] of the batterie, forſomuch as in the time of [illegible] was againſt the law of armes ſo to doo. But [illegible] the meſſenger that was thus ſent to the lord Hume, comming to him, declared in what c[illegible] his houſe and people ſtood, who being (as was ſup[illegible]ſed) not ſo farre off, but that he might heare how [illegible]ſtilie the Engliſh canons did canuaſſe and batter his Humiſh caſtell walles, did now agree to meet the marſhall maſter Drurie two miles diſtant from the ſaid caſtell, and there to commune further with him in that matter.

The caſtell of Hume deliuered to the marſhall.

Vpon the comming backe of the meſſenger with this anſwer, the lord lieutenant thought good to ſend the ſaid maſter Drurie vnto the place appointed: who comming thither met with the ſaid lord Hume. And after they had debated the matter togither, at length the lord Hume was contented that the caſtell ſhould be ſurrendered into the hands of the lord lieutenant; with condition, that his people therein might depart with life: which the lord lieutenant was contented to grant, ſo that there were no Engliſh men among them. Heerevpon about eight of the clocke in the euening, the gates were opened, and the keies deliuered to the marſhall, who preſented them to the lord lieutenant: and then the lord Hunneſdon, the ſaid marſhall, and diuerſe other gentlemen entered into the caſtell, and by & by tooke poſſeſſion thereof in the quéene of Englands name, pulled downe their banner of defiance, and in place thereof ſet vp the Engliſh banners, againſt all thoſe in Scotland that would ſaie the contrarie.

Two Engliſh men ſtaied and after executed.

The Scots that were within it, being in number an hundred thrée ſcore and eight perſons, were put out in their common wearing apparell, without armour, weapon, or anie baggage. They comming to the lord lieutenant that was then at the place of the batterie on horſſebacke, preſented themſelues to him: who according to his word and promiſe of honour, cauſed them to be ſafelie conducted through the watch and ſcouts, to ſuch place as they required. Amongſt them there were two Engliſhmen, the one of them named Hilliard, the earle of Northumberlands man, the other was a vagarant perſon, or a roge (as we may call him) named William God ſaue hir alias Lions, which both were caried to Barwike, & there executed the thirtéenth of Maie next inſuing. In all this ſiege there were but foure perſons ſlaine on both parts, two Scots, & two Engliſhmen: but there were manie hurt as well on the one part as the other. The caſtell of Hume being thus wonne, the lord lieutenant the morow after placed therein to kéepe the houſe to the quéenes maieſties vſe, capteine Wood, and capteine Pikman, with two hundred ſouldiours. This doone, his lordſhip returned towards England and came to Barwike. During this ſiege there were diuerſe townes and villages, ſituate within thrée or foure miles of the campe, ſet on fire by the Engliſhmen, and vtterlie ſpoiled. The lord lieutenant vpon his returne to Barwike, ſtaied there for a time verie euill at eaſe, hauing in trauell about the ſiege taken ſuch cold, as therewith he was brought into an extreame ague.

Capteine Wood and capteine Pikman.

The lord lieutenant ſicke of an ague.

The fourth of Maie, his lordſhip ſent maiſter William Drurie the marſhall of Barwike, accompanied with diuerſe gentlemen and capteins, hauing with them about two thouſand ſouldiours, to take Faſt caſtell: the which vpon the firſt ſummons was deliuered into his hands, who receiuing the keies being preſented to him, entered the hold, and tooke poſſeſſion thereof, in the quéenes maieſties name: and expelling the Scots, being about the number of halfe a ſcore (who according to couenant were ſuffered to depart with their liues ſaued) he put ten, or (as ſome haue) fouretéene Engliſhmen into that caſtell, which were thought able and number ſufficient enough to kéepe it againſt all the power of Scotland, the ſituation thereof is ſo ſtrong.

John Stow. Engliſhmen put into the caſtell to kéepe it.

In this meane time the troubles increaſing among the Scots, by reaſon of the murther committed in the perſon of the earle of Murreie the late gouernour, the duke of Chatellerault, and other his partakers gathered a power of thrée thouſand men, and comming to Lithquo, midwaie betwixt Sterling and Edenburgh, remained there for a time, and afterwards came to Edenburgh, in purpoſe to make warre againſt the lords of the kings part, who hauing ſent to the earle of Lennox, then remaining in England, earneſtlie requeſted him to repaire into Scotland. Wherevpon he by the quéenes maieſties licence, tooke his iourneie thitherwards, and came to Barwike, where he was alſo viſited with ſickeneſſe, and ſo remained certeine daies in that towne. And vnderſtanding that the ſaid duke of Chatelleraults power was ſuch, that the lords of the kings ſide were not able to come togither, nor he to go to them without the quéene of Englands aid, he humblie ſued vnto hir maieſtie by letters to haue ſome power by hir appointment to conduct him into Scotland, and there to aid him and the other lords of that ſide againſt their aduerſaries the duke and his complices. Hérevpon by hir maieſties commandement, the earle of Suſſex, as yet not fullie recouered of his ſickneſſe, ordeined maſter William Drurie the marſhall of Barwike, with ſuch forces as were thought conuenient to go with the ſaid earle of Lennox, for the execution of ſuch exploits in ſeruice as ſéemed moſt expedient. And about the ſame time, to wit the firſt of Maie, the lord Scroope lord warden of the weſt marches, made a rode into Scotland, incamping the firſt night on the hither ſide of the water of Annan, and the next daie marched towards the water of Milke, burning and ſpoiling all on that ſide of Annandale, namelie the lard Iohnſons lands, finding ſmall reſiſtance, ſauing that the forreie was a little troubled with a fortie or fiftie Scots horſſemen, and ſo hauing doone his pleaſure, he quietlie returned, without receiuing other impeachment: notwithſtanding the lord Herries was in Dunfriſe, hauing gathered a great power in purpoſe to hinder his enterpriſe.

The earle of Chatellerault his complices purpoſe war againſt the kings part.

Maſter William Drurie goeth with the earle of Lennox againſt the earle of Chatellerault, &c.

But now to returne to the earle of Suſſex, who hauing inſtituted ſir William Drurie generall of thoſe bands that ſhould paſſe with the earle of Lennox into Scotland: bicauſe each gentleman, ſouldior, and ſeuerall bands ſhould dutifullie obeie the ſaid ſir William their new ordeined generall in all points of warlike order, the ſaid earle made an oration in ſuch pithie forme and manner, as throughlie expreſſed the whole ſubſtance of the ſeruice, the vnſuertie of the ſeaſon, the ſtrange and malicious dealing of diuerſe aduerſaries: which points he ſo cunninglie handled, as the excellencie of a perfect orator appeared fullie in his ſpeach. At whoſe eloquence the herers rather ſéemed aſtonied than vnſatiſfied in anie point or parcell of thoſe matters: for he opened the verie bowels of rebellion, the practiſes of enimies, and ſuborning of traitors: and therefore perſuaded euerie honeſt mind to haue a dutifull conſideration of his prince and countrie, in the defenſe and libertie whereof, both life, lands, and goods, are alwaies to be offered.

The lord lieutenants oration implieng obedience of the ſouldiors to their new generall.

After which oration in reſpect of further aduancement as the cuſtome is (for ſeruice paſt, and incouragement to procéed in the like worthie doings) he made theſe knights: Sir William Drurie, ſir Thomas Manners, ſir George Careie, and ſir Robert Conſtable, and placing the ſaid ſir William Drurie the appointed generall in full authoritie, he committed them to God, and the good conduct of their chéefeteine. Now hauing heard the lord lieutenant thus ſpeake, and ſéeing the means that he vſed to incourage them againſt the enimie; how could they one with another but vow in mind, euen with the hazzard of their hearts, to performe to their power no leſſe than he in ſpéech implied? How could they (I ſaie) but venture life and lim, hauing ſo often ſéene the perillous enterpriſes which he himſelfe vndertooke againſt forren hoſtilitie, as to his owne danger ſo to the high praiſe of his heroicall proweſſe: and not without deſert, as one verie well noteth, ſaieng:

Knights made by the earle of Suſſex.

Comes Suſſexius Camerarius.

The ſame daie being the eleuenth of Maie, diuerſe foot bands with ſhot and armed pikes were ſet forward into Scotland, with certeine péeces of artillerie, powder, and munition in good quantitie. Firſt capteine Brickwell with his enſignes departed the towne, and then the companies of capteine Read, capteine Caruell, capteine Game, capteine Lamberd, and capteine Erington. Theſe old bands of Barwike conteined fiue hundred ſouldiours.

After them followed the companie of ſir Robert Conſtable, their ſergeant maior of thrée hundred ſhot, and the companie of ſir Thomas Maners of two hundred ſhot. Laſtlie marched foorth capteine Iohn Conſtable, and capteine Barwike with two hundred armed men. Theſe twelue hundred footmen with fiue enſignes marched that night to Coldingham. Alſo for the better aſſurance of couenants and promiſes made on the behalfe of ſuch lords of Scotland, as had made ſute for this aid to be ſent into their countrie for their aſſiſtance againſt them of the contrarie faction, there were certeine hoſtages ſent into England by the ſame lords as it was thought expedient, for doubt of double dealing. The twelfe of Maie, they marched forward, and the ſame daie ſir William Drurie, the earle of Lennox, and the other new made knights, with the horſſemen, departed from Barwike, and at the Péece néere to Dunglas they ouertooke the footmen, and the ſame night all the horſſemen and footmen came and incamped togither at Dunbar, being in all not paſt ſixtéene hundred men. They had foure field péeces with them, & good ſtore of powder. The next day being the thirtéenth of Maie, and Whitſun euen, they made ſuch ſpéed in their march, that they came vnto Edenburgh, where they found the earles of Morton, Mar, Glencarne, the lords Rithwen, Lindſeie, Simple, Glames, Methuen, Ogiltre, and Catcart, with diuerſe other gentlemen.

The duke of Chatellerault breaketh vp his campe.

The yoong king at Sterling.

Héere alſo they vnderſtood that the duke of Chatellerault and his partakers were departed from Lithquo, whither they were retired backe againe from Edenburgh, on knowledge had that the Engliſhmen were comming forwards towards them. The fouretéenth and fiftéenth day they laie ſtill in Edenburgh, and the morrow after being the ſixtéenth of that moneth, they marched forwards to Lithquo, and lodged in that towne that night, where they receiued aduertiſements that the ſaid duke of Chatellerault had broken vp his campe, after he had vpon his departure from the ſaid towne of Lithquo attempted the winning of the caſtell of Glaſco, & miſſing his purpoſe there, was driuen to retire with diſhonour. The next morning being wedneſdaie, the armie marched forwards, and the footmen laie that night at a place called Faukirke, a ſix miles from Lithquo: but the generall with the horſſemen rode ſix miles further vnto Sterling, where they ſaw the yoong king. The next daie being the eightéenth of Maie, ſir Robert Conſtable, Sargent Maior, with the reſt of the capteins of the twelue hundred Engliſh footmen, & two hundred Scots footmen, the which were moſt part ſhot, marched a long iourneie, and came to lodge that night at Glaſco, and the generall ſir William Drurie came to them with the horſſemen, and the moſt part of the noble men of Scotland that were on the kings ſide, which entred the towne and lodged in the ſame, with manie horſſemen and footmen.

The generall goeth to view Dunbreton,

The duke of Chatellerault (as ye haue heard) had béene there, and beſieged the caſtell that belonged to the king, but hearing of the Engliſhmens comming two daies before their approching thither, he raiſed his ſiege, and departed thence, with the loſſe of nine and twentie of his men. The ninetéenth of Maie, ſir William Drurie generall of the Engliſh power, being determined aforehand on a iourneie towards Dunbreton, ſent foorth that morning before certeine vantcurrours on horſſebacke, to ſtaie all ſuch as they found vpon the waie. This doone, he tooke with him certeine gentlemen, and ſome ſhot, and rode foorth towards Dunbreton, to view the ſtraits and ſituation of that caſtell, within the which were at that preſent the lord Fleming, that tooke vpon him as capteine thereof, the archbiſhop of ſaint Andrewes, and other their adherents, fréends to the duke of Chatellerault, and enimies to the lords that were about the king.

The generall ſendeth to know who was within the caſtell, &c.

Lord Fleming is required to come to parle with the generall.

The diſhonorable dealing of the lord Fleming.

After ſir William Drurie had viewed the caſtell, and taken the plot of the ſituation thereof, he ſent his trumpettor to know who were within it, and to whoſe vſe they kept it. They within the caſtell required to know what he was that ſent to know the ſame. It was anſwered that it was the quéene of Englands generall of hir forces there in Scotland that made the demand. Wherevnto anſwer was returned, that they knew well he was not ſo ignorant as he ſéemed (as in deed he was not) but that he did well know that this caſtell was, and of long time had béene kept by the lord Fleming: and that accordinglie by him, his fréends and ſeruants it was now mainteined. Which anſwer being reported to the generall, he ſent againe his trumpettor, to know if the lord Fleming would come foorth and parlée vpon aſſurance of honour to returne ſafelie. Wherevnto the lord Fleming conſented, although not meaning ſo to doo: but by a ſubtill practiſe (as was thought) intended to wind him within danger. For there were ſome harquebuſiers ſecretlie couched in couert, within whoſe reach when the generall was come himſelfe alone on horſſebacke, moſt diſhoneſtlie (his trumpettor not yet being returned) they ſhot at him with great deſpite, meaning to haue killed him, without anie regard to the law of armes, or feare of God. But through the goodnes of the Lord almightie, that wicked practiſe miſſed the pretenſed effect: for that worthie Engliſh knight receiued no bodilie hurt, but perceiuing their dealings, with a bold courage he beſtowed his piſtols as fréelie at them as they did their harquebuſe ſhot at him, and ſo returned to his companie backe againe in ſafetie, yéelding to God due honour and thanks for his mercifull deliuerance from ſuch a murtherous practiſe of his deadlie foes.

Sir William Drurie goeth againe towards Dunbreton.

He ſendeth to view the ground where he ſhould meet with the lord Fleming.

This is a common fault in the Scots.

Scottiſh honeſtie.

Vpon a new occaſion to vnderſtand the certeintie of that, whereof he had ſome inkling, the one and twentith of Maie, ſir William Drurie accompanied with the ſaid gentlemen and horſſemen, went againe towards Dunbreton, to parlée with the lord Fleming vpon his further promiſe, that he would méet him thrée miles from the ſaid caſtell. Whervpon the ſaid ſir William Drurie ſent an Engliſhman and a Scottiſhman to view the ground, which ſhould be appointed foorth for their méeting, which they found to be ſo néere to the caſtell, as was ſubiect to all their ſhot both great and ſmall, and cleane contrarie to the promiſe: and ſo they declared to the capteine named Iohn Fleming, that was ſent foorth of the caſtell to appoint the ſame, how it was neither indifferent nor méet for ſuch a purpoſe. The capteine anſwered, that his maiſter was a man of honour, and ſtood vpon the ſame, and therefore would not hazard himſelfe among horſſemen wholie without the danger of the péece. Whereto the meſſengers replied, that the lord Fleming for his late euill dealing, was not to be credited in this caſe; neither comparable to the generall of the Engliſh armie, for he was there for the quéene of England. And further they ſaid, that forſomuch as they had of late dealt ſo vniuſtlie contrarie to promiſe and the law of armes, and therby ſo greatlie cracked their credits, ſtained their honeſties and honour: they could not but wiſh that their generall ſhould be well aduiſed, yer he did hazard himſelfe anie more within their danger vpon their ſlipperie promiſes, except they would appoint ſome other place of parlée, as might be thought indifferent, according to their former offers, which would not be granted, and ſo they departed. Immediatlie therevpon, to ſhew ſome péece of their double dealings, and vnfaithfull practiſes towards the Engliſhmen: the Scots within the caſtell preſentlie ſent after the meſſengers ſengers a culuering ſhot for a farewell. Thus did they by practiſe iuſtifie the opinion that ſtrangers to them haue long conceiued of their dealing: and which he ſaw full well (perhaps alſo prooued in ſome part) that ſaid of the Scotiſh nations vntruſtineſſe, &c:

The lord Flemings double dealing.

Sir George Careis ſute.

T. Churchyard.

Sir William Drurie then perceiuing that the meaning of the lord Fleming was not to deale ſimplie in this matter, touching a conference to be had betwixt them, returned to Glaſco, where ſir George Careie being maruellouſlie inflamed with that vnhoneſt dealing of the lord Fleming, made earneſt ſute to the generall that he might ſend to him and offer him the combat in triall of this quarrell, ſith it was more requiſit that a gentleman ſouldier ſhould ſtand in thoſe queſtions than a generall, conſidering his calling and office. The generall thanked ſir George verie courteouſlie, but yet ſaid, that it ſtood him vpon to ſearch out theſe matters to the vttermoſt (as he would haue doone in deed) were not his commiſſion and charge (as was well knowne) to be otherwiſe imploied: Yet (quoth he) ſith your ſute is ſo reaſonable (and the whole companie and lawes of armes alloweth of it) I grant your requeſt, and therein doo as beſt ſhall ſeeme to your birth and eſtimation. Herevpon ſir George Careie ſtreightwaies deuiſed a letter of challenge, and deliuered it to an herald to beare from him vnto the ſaid lord Fleming, the tenour whereof here inſueth.

A letter of challenge ſent to the lord Fleming.

The lord Fleming charged with treacherie.

LOrd Fleming, if either your birth or bringing vp had wrought in you a noble mind, or eſtimation of credit, hardlie would you haue ſo much forgotten and ſtained your honour, as in a parlee of late with our generall you did. At whom vilelie and vnhonorablie ſhooting, you falſed that aſſurance of warre which ſouldiers ſubmit themſelues vnto: and trained him to your treaſon vnder truſt, a thing heretofore not accuſtomed, nor preſentlie to be allowed of. He aſſuredlie pretending your owne and your freends good, commoditie to your countrie, and quietneſſe to the ſtate, twiſe abaſed and ſubmitted himſelfe, comming nfer with you thereof: but your pride ioined harmefull meaning, to thoſe that you profeſſe to, and ſelfe wilfull vaineglorie, without cauſe refuſed that which reaſon and honour comman d you to haue doone. Therfore, bicauſe his calling preſentlie with his charge better than yours, and m ne not inferior; I ſummon you reaſonablie to excuſe that fault ſuppoſed to be yours, or elſe to mainteine that traitorous act with your perſon againſt mine in fight, when, where, or how you dare. Otherwiſe I will baffull your good name, ſound with the trumpet your diſhonour, and paint your picture with the heels vpward, and beare it in deſpite of your ſelfe. In the meane time I attend your anſwer. From Glaſco, the 22 of Maie 1570.

with pride, harmefull meaning and vaineglorie.

The lord Flemings defenſe againſt the charge of treacherie.

GEorge Careie, I haue receiued your braineleſſe letter, making mention of my falſe and treaſonable dealing againſt your generall, in ſhooting vnder truſt, ſo vilelie againſt my honour and truth, traitorouſlie trained him vnder my truſt: which is altogither falſe and vntrue. And howbeit your generall came by the houſe of Dunglas by my appointment, which I ſuffered, and I appointed one place of meeting, ſix men of either partie which he refuſed, and he departed, and certeine of his companie came bragging vp the riuers ſide towards the houſe, viewing the ſame and the ground thereabouts, ſhooting your harquebuſſes againſt the ſame: I could doo no leſſe but preſent you with ſuch as I had. Whereas you write of your generals calling to be preſentlie better than mine, and yours not inferiour; when your generall challengeth me therof, I ſhall giue anſwer. And as for you, I will not be inferiour to a better than you, or anie ſouldier vnder your generals charge. Whereas you ſummon me (as you call it) reaſonablie to excuſe that falt ſuppoſed to be mine owne, or elſe to mainteine that traitorous act with my perſon againſt yours: you ſhall wit, I haue gentlemen of honour, ſeruant ſouldiers to me, as ye are to your generall, which may be your fellowes, ſhall defend the ſame againſt you and your falſe and vntrue inuented writing: and were not the charge I preſent, or how ſoone I can be relieued of the ſame, I ſhould lowlie my perſon to meet you ſix Engliſh miles, or anie other perſon. Howbeit ye be but one ſouldier, aſſure your ſelfe from this daie forth, I will not receiue no ſuch inuented meſſage, for I haue little to doo with Engliſhmen, ye may raile vpon my honorable name as ye pleaſe. You ſhall haue as honorable gentlemen as your ſelfe againſt you fighting. Take this for anſwer.

Lord Fleming beareth him bold of his gentrie.

Iohn lord Fleming.

The replie of ſir George Careie vpon the lord Flemings anſwer.

LOrd Fleming, often the Flemings after noone anſwer ſmelleth more of wine than wit. But as to that common crime, the cuſtome of their countrie yeeldeth them part of pardon; ſo your common acquaintance with the ſame condition, knowne to be verie great, ſhall to me ſomewhat excuſe your witleſſe writing, wherein firſt you diſalow my right recitall of your traitorous dealing, by tearming it falſe and vntrue. For anſwer, know this, the truth my pen hath written, by the witneſſe of a number; and my hand I vow ſhall mainteine the ſame before the world at all times. But you in denieng it, haue both falſlie and vniuſtlie lied in your throte, and dare neither defend nor diſprooue that in deeds, which in words you haue doone. Whereas you write, that our generall paſſed Dunglas, by your appointment which you ſuffered, therein you doo manifeſtlie ſaie vnhonorablie and vntrulie; for that you had no knowledge of our firſt comming, but ſaluted vs with your ſhot: and we likewiſe ſkirmiſhed with your men euen at their owne ſtrength, vntill we viewed the ground about at our pleaſure. And touching the appointment of ſix of either part, eaſilie that maie be knowne to be a plaine lie: ſeeing we had neither parlee nor conference with you before, to appoint place or meeting. But whereas you ſaie, you could doo no leſſe but preſent vs with ſuch as you had, therein you confeſſe and acknowledge the diſhonour and treaſon that I charged you withall, taking vpon your ſelfe that fault, which I ſuppoſed to haue bin of your ſeruants, for our generall retired his companie farre from him. And his trumpet being with you, approched himſelfe alone to haue parled, when vnder truſt you diſcharged two harquebuſſes againſt him: an act rather ſeemelie for a cowardlie traitor, than one that profeſſeth to be a ſouldier.

Sir George Carie voweth to mainteine no leſſe than he hath written.

The lord Fleming in ſeeking to excuſe accuſeth himſelfe the more manifeſtlie.

Finallie, whereas you let me wit, that you haue gentlemen of honour, ſeruant ſouldiers vnto you, that maie be my fellowes, which ſhould defend the chalenge: that toucheth ſo néere your ſelfe, as with honor you ſhould not haue refuſed it. Firſt I thinke ſcorne to be anie waies inferior to you, though but a ſouldier, too honourable a name for you, being better in birth, and vnſteined with reproch as you haue béene. Secondlie, I haue more, and as good gentlemen vnder my conduct, as your ſelfe haue vnder your charge, which ſhall anſwer as manie as you can bring, if with number ye meane to combat, and will put them to that which you dare not doo your ſelfe. But aſſure you, my quarell ſhall remaine euerlaſting, except the proofe of your owne perſon againſt mine maie end it: and when you ſhall dare come out of your crowes neſt, I will be readie to ride an hundred Scottiſh miles, to méet with you in anie indifferent place. And vntill that time, I ſhall account you deuoid of honeſtie & honor, vnworthie to march vpon ground, or keepe companie with men. From Hamilton, the 29 of Maie 1570.

Sir George Careie his anſwer to the lord Flemings brag of his gentrie.

Oh valiant heart!

Subſcribed George Careie.

Though manie waies were ſought by meſſage and otherwiſe, to moue the lord Fleming to defend with battell the fault and follie committed: yet it would not be; for he ſhifted off the matter, ſo as it well appéered, it was but loſt labor further to attempt him therein. The two and twentith of Maie, the earle of Lennox, accompanied with the earle of Glencarne, the lord Simple, and other his friends, feodaries & alies, muſtered on the moore before the towne of Glaſco the number of foure thouſand horſſemen and footmen, that were there aſſembled to ſerue him, in preſence of ſir William Drurie, and other of the Engliſh capteins. The thrée and twentith of Maie, ſir William Drurie, the earle of Lennox, and other the Scottiſh lords, and the whole armie marched towards the caſtell of Hamilton, and ſending a trumpettor, and one with him to parlée with the capteine named Andrew Hamilton, he agreed to come foorth, and one other with him, to talke with ſir William Drurie, and one other gentleman, ſuch as he ſhould thinke good to bring with him to a place ſomewhat diſtant, as well from the caſtell as the campe.

A muſter of Scottiſhmen to the number of 4000.

The armie goeth toward Hamilton.

Herevpon ſir William Drurie with his ſword and target, and ſir George Careie with a caſe of piſtols went foorth to the appointed place, whither the capteine of the caſtell alſo with an halbert, and one other with him, hauing likewiſe a caſe of piſtols, came according to appointment. But after they had talked togither, and that the capteine would not in anie wiſe conſent to deliuer vp the caſtell, he with his aſſociat returned to their hold againe, & the Engliſh generall, with ſir George Careie, came backe to the campe, and therevpon the Engliſh ordinance was preſentlie placed about the caſtell, and ſhot verie ſore all that night: but did no great hurt, by reaſon they were but field péeces, and not fit for batterie. They in the caſtell likewiſe ſhot verie ſore at the Engliſhmen, but did no great harme, ſauing that there were thrée of the footmen hurt. In the palace which was a prettie houſe the ducheſſe of Chatellerault was at that time reſident, to whom ſir William Drurie did repaire, offering hir all the courteſie he might, with all that to hir apperteined, willing hir not to feare anie thing: and for hir more aſſurance, he committed hir to the charge of ſir Thomas Maners.

Sir William Drurie talketh with the capteine of Hamilton caſtell.

The Engliſh ordinance ſhooteth at the caſtell.

The ducheſſe of Chatellerault committed to the charge of an Engliſh knight.

The foure and twentith of Maie, the generall gaue ſummons vnto the caſtell. And bicauſe they within ſtood ſtiffelie in deniall to make ſurrender thereof vnto him, he was driuen to ſend to Striueling for ſome great péeces of ordinance méet to make batterie. In the meane time, the earles of Lennox and Morton with the horſſemen, and ſome ſhot, marched into the countrie to a verie faire houſe of the abbat of Kilwinnings néere adioining, whoſe name was Gawen Hamilton, which houſe they burnt and vtterlie defaced, ſpoiling it, and raſing it downe to the earth. They burnt and ſpoiled alſo ſeuentéene houſes more belonging to men of that ſurname, ſituate néere thereabouts, wherof one belonged vnto a lard that had married with the ſiſter of James Hamilton of Bodwele haugh, which ſlue the regent. There were alſo burnt ſeuen other faire houſes belonging to others that were not of that ſurname: but yet were of their friends and alies. Moreouer, there were diuerſe other of their kinred and alies that came in with humble ſubmiſſion, and aſſured themſelues, firmelie promiſing from thenſefoorth their obedience to the king.

Great ordinance ſent for.

The earles of Lennox and Morton.

The abbeie of Kilwinning burnt.

The fiue and twentith of Maie ſir William Drurie the generall retired his people vpon a pollicie from the caſtell, and left it without either watch or ward for that night. The next daie he ſent ſir George Careie to the caſtell with a trumpettor, to know if they within would deliuer it vp, before the great ordinance ſhould come, which the capteine vtterlie refuſed to doo. Wherevpon the ſmall ſhot clapt ſuddenlie round about the houſe, and kept them within occupied, till that a whole culuering & a demie culuering came to them from Sterling, the which with foure of the Engliſh ſmall field péeces were in the night following planted againſt the caſtell, and being ſhot off, a bullet of one of the great péeces paſſed through the walles into the caſtell.

The caſtell ſummoned.

The caſtell of Hamilton battered.

The ſeuen and twentith of Maie about foure of the clocke in the morning, the generall ſent a trumpettor to giue ſummons againe to the caſtell: vnto whome the capteine anſwered, that he cared not for them, & ſo bad them doo their worſt, for he would not yéeld the place to them at anie hand. Wherevpon immediatlie the whole tire began to plaie in ſuch ſort, that within foure volées both ſides of the houſe were battered through: at the ſight whereof the capteine was ſo diſmaied, that foorthwith he cried for parlée, and ſo the ſhot was ſtaied. Now vpon humble ſute the capteine was admitted to ſpeake with the generall, and ſo comming to talke with him, at length he agreed to yéeld: wherevpon, the prouoſt marſhall was ſent into the caſtell to take poſſeſſion thereof. The generall permitted them verie courteouſlie to depart with their furniture, and other ſuch ſtuffe as they could carie with them. There [illegible] of the houſe nine and thirtie perſons one a [illegible] foure and thirtie men, thrée boies, and two [illegible] and therewith was the caſtell blowne vp an [illegible] and the armie laie that night in the towne, and [illegible] places about it.

The caſtell eftſoones ſummoned.

The capteine of the caſtell demandeth parlée.

The next daie, being the eight and twentith of Maie they departed from thence: the earles of Lennox, Mar, and Glencarne, with other of the nobilitie of Scotland of the kings part taking their leaues, with their companie returned to Glaſco: and ſir George Careie with the horſſemen came that night to Lithquo, where alſo the reſt of the Engliſh forces met. A caſtell called Combernawd belonging to the lord Fleming was yéelded to the generals hands, who vpon bond of aſſurance that the houſe ſhould remaine at the deuotion of the quéene of England, was contented to ſpare it from fire and ſpoile. But this was not the firſt nor laſt courteſie which the generall ſhewed in this iournie, vnto ſuch as in anie reſpect were thought worthie of his fauour. Amongſt other the ladie of Lidington being great with child, miſtruſting hir ſelfe (or hir huſbands double dealing towards our countrie) in great feare began to flie. But ſir William Drurie hearing thereof, ſent hir word he came not to make warres with women, but rather to ſhew pitie to the weake and comfortleſſe:

The ladie of Lidington.

leſſe, and therevpon ſhe ſtaied, and had no further harme.

The nine and twentith of Maie, when the armie ſhould diſlodge from Lithquo, the generall called for the prouoſt of the towne, and commanded him to prepare with all expedition, to receiue a iuſt puniſhment and correction thorough the whole towne for treaſon, and vnpardonable offenſes committed: and declaring that the inhabitants thereof had ſuccoured and ſupported traitors to the realme of England, and likewiſe to their owne king, contrarie to the leagues and quietneſſe of both the realmes of England and Scotland, for which cauſe he was fullie reſolued to ouerthrow that towne & receptacle of traitors. If therefore there were anie women in childbed or impotent people within that towne, he gaue warning thus aforehand to conueie them out of it: and herewith alſo commanding each capteine & ſouldier vnder his charge, to ſée due execution of that which he purpoſed in this behalfe to haue doone, he willed the prouoſt to appoint a place conuenient, into the which the goods of the towne might be brought, to the end that the ſame ſhould neither bée ſpoiled by the Engliſh ſouldiers, neither yet conſumed through vehemencie of fire, but to be preſerued all wholie to the Scotiſhmens vſe. Further, he granted, that euerie noble mans lodging and capiteins houſe ſhould bée ſaued from fire.

Th. Church-yard.

The towne of Leith threatned to be burned.

But now the time being come for this determined execution, the earle of Morton, that ſtill accompanied the Engliſh generall, offered himſelfe as an interceſſor to intreat and ſue for a pardon, bringing afore the generall a multitude of wailing people, whoſe mournfull and moſt pitious cries were lamentable and verie importunat. The generall hearing their requeſts, made anſwer, that for manie cauſes the towne ought to be deſtroied, conſidering how diuerſe enimies (whoſe inſolent practiſes were not ſuffered) had alwaies there a common reſort to erre of their wicked deuiſes; and further (quoth urteſie that is ſhewed to ſuch places of re- ath imboldened the reſt of Scotland to vſe o- lence and ſecret villanies, to the preiudice of glorie, hinderance of the weale publike, and of good lawes and policies: and therefore it fit and moſt méet for a warning to thouſands in aſe of extremitie, to raſe out ſuch monuments ſchiefe. But at length, notwithſtanding theſe words vttered by ſir William Drurie, the people of all ſorts preaſſed about him, & made ſuch pitifull cries and ſorowfull noiſe, with children ſucking of their mothers breaſts, that he taking ruth of their miſerable eſtates, at this their lamentable ſute, and ſpeciallie at the great inſtance of the earle of Morton, who came bareheaded to ſpeake for them, the generall was contented to ſaue the towne and people therein: taking good band and aſſurance of the prouoſt and chiefeſt of the towne, that they ſhould follow the campe, and at all times appeare when they were called for at Berwike, and there to ſubmit themſelues, their towne and goods, to the clemencie of the quéens highneſſe; and to ſuch order as the earle of Suſſex hir maieſties generall lieutenant ſhould by conſent thinke neceſſarie: to which band & conditions they of Lithquo agréed. And for that their regent was ſlaine, & none ſince inſtituted to whome they had giuen faith of allegiance; they confeſſed, that none might command them anie waie without licence of him, to whome they had made this band, ſith to him both their promiſe and obligation was paſſed. And in this ſort they continued bound to him for their good behauiors.

The earle of Morton, an interceſſor for the towne of Lithquo.

Lithquo ſpared from determined deſtruction.

The prouoſt and other enter bands.

The duke of Chatelleraults palace in Lithquo was yet burnt and raſed, and marching to another houſe belonging to the ſaid duke, called Benſle, diſtant from Lithquo about a mile or more; they likewiſe burned the ſame. Thus hauing doone their pleaſures at Lithquo, and in the countrie about that towne, they marched from thenſe to a proper houſe and caſtell, belonging to the lord Seton, called Neitherie, which the enimies had fortified. But yet when the ladie of that houſe came to the generall, and made humble petition on hir knées for his fauor, offering to him the keies of that place in moſt humble wiſe; ſhe found ſuch courteſie at his hands, that with condition that ſhe & a baron with hir ſhould enter bands for aſſurance, that the caſtell ſhould euer afterwards remaine at the quéene of Englands pleaſure, he tooke hir the keies againe, leauing hir in poſſeſſion of hir houſe and goods, without dooing hir anie further diſpleaſure.

The duke of Chatelleraults palace burned.

Neitherie.

The ladie Seton.

This night the armie came to Edenburgh, where certeine of the companie that made haſt to get thither ſomewhat before the reſt, receiued ſome diſcourteſie: for they were ſpoiled in the ſtreets of their furniture, & ſuch other things as they had about them. But when the generall with the reſt of the armie was come néere to the towne, and had knowledge of ſuch foule diſorder, he thought not good to enter the towne, without ſtanding ſo ſure on his gard, that he ſhould not néed to doubt any double dealing, or crooked meaſure. Which ſure handling of the matter did not onelie ſhew the deuiſer thereof to haue good conduct and experience: but in verie déed auoided no ſmall inconuenience and miſchiefe, that by the enimies was finelie contriued (through a fraie to be made in the ſuburbs) ſo that a great ſlaughter had burſt out ſuddenlie, and no ſmall bloudſhed followed, if God and good guiding of the people had not ſtaied and turned awaie that imminent danger. To be ſhort, the generall ſent ſir Thomas Maners with two bands of ſouldiors, vnder one enſigne, to ſeize vpon the gates at their firſt arriuall, and ſo the pretenſed conſpiracie was happilie preuented; for the reſidue of the power was no ſooner entred the towne, but that kéeping themſelues in order to cléere the ſtréets, and to command the inhabitants the better, they ſpent that night ſtanding on their gard, as the caſe required. When the morning was come, ſir William Drurie ſmelling out the couert practiſe, and naughtie meaning of ſome, demanded iuſtice and ſtrict puniſhment of ſuch offenſes and things as he would truelie laie to the charges of ſome in that towne: and told them flatlie, if remedie were not the ſooner prouided, and ſatiſfaction made for the follies and outrage committed, he would be quicklie reuenged, to the diſpleaſure and ſhame of all the contriuers of that ſame mad and miſchéeuous preſumption.

Some of the Engliſh armie ſpoiled in Edenburgh.

T. Churchyard.

Sir Thomas Maners with his two bands vnder one enſigne.

Herevpon, not onelie ſuch things as had bin taken from thoſe few ſouldiors, which firſt entred the towne ouer night, were not onelie reſtored: but diuerſe malefactors were alſo deliuered to the generall, to be executed and ordered by his diſcretion; who ſéeing their ſubmiſſion, mercifullie & franklie ſent them awaie vnto their capteins: & ſo theſe broiles were pacified and things ſet in quiet. After they had reſted in Edenburgh a two daies, the firſt of Iune they diſlodged. The generall comming to Seton the chiefe caſtell & houſe of the lord Seton, the ladie was readie there alſo to preſent him the keies, with like humble ſubmiſſion as before: and therevpon receiued the like fauor for this houſe, as was ſhewed to hir for the other. That night they lodged at Hadington. It was determined that the pile of Anderwike ſhould haue béene ouerthrowne: but vpon ſute and bands taken of diuerſe gentlemen, the place was ſpared, and the offendors receiued to mercie.

Reſtitution made of things taken awaie from the ſouldiors.

Seton caſtell ſpared at the ſute of the ladie.

Anderwike ſaued from ruine by occaſion.

And ſo the next daie, the generall with the horſemen came through to Berwike, a iournie of two and thirtie long miles.

The happie ſucceſſe of the foreſaid viage vndertaken by the Engliſh.

The footbands lodged the ſame night at Coldingham with ſir Robert Conſtable, who the next daie the third of Iune came with them vnto Berwike. And ſo ended this iournie, to the great commendation of the generall and capteins: and conſequentlie to all the gentlemen and ſouldiors that had béene foorth in the ſame, as well for the good ſucceſſe which it pleaſed God the author of all good and proſperous euents to grant to them, as alſo for their dutifull obedience to all warlike diſcipline, their painfull trauels ſuſteined, their manlie forwardneſſe and ſkilfull practiſe in martiall policies ſtill ſhewed; as occaſion of ſeruice was anie where offered. But now to returne to the dooings at home.

A bull from Rome hanged on the biſhop of Londons gate.

Whileſt this iournie was made (as ye haue heard) into Scotland, the fiue & twentith of Maie in the morning was found hanging on the biſhop of Londons palace gate in Pauls churchyard, a bull which latelie had béene ſent from Rome, conteining diuerſe horrible treaſons againſt the quéens maieſtie: for the which one Iohn Felton was ſhortlie after apprehended, and committed to the tower of London.

The Nortons executed.

The ſeauen and twentith of Maie, Thomas Norton and Chriſtopher Norton of Yorkſhire, being both condemned of high treaſon for the late rebellion in the north, were drawen from the tower of London to Tiborne, and there hanged, headed, and quartered.

Conſpiracie in Norffolke and wherevpon it tooke beginning.

In this yeare alſo conſpired certeine gentlemen with other in the countie of Norffolke, whoſe purpoſe was on Midſummer daie at Harleſtone faire, with ſound of trumpet and drum to haue raiſed a number, and then to proclame their diueliſh pretenſe againſt ſtrangers and others. This matter was vttered by Thomas Ket one of the conſpiracie vnto Iohn Kenſeie, who foorthwith ſent the ſame Ket with a coneſtable to the next iuſtice, before whome and other their iuſtices he opened the whole matter. Whervpon maiſter Drue Drurie immediatlie apprehended John Throckmorton, and after him manie gentlemen of the citie of Norwich, and the countie of Norffolke, who were all committed to priſon, and at the next ſeſſions of goale deliuerie at the caſtell of Norwich, the ſeauentéenth of Julie before ſir Robert Catlin knight lord chéefe iuſtice, Gilbert Gerard the quéenes attornie generall, and other iuſtices, ten of them were indicted of high treaſon, and ſome others of contempt. Diuerſe of them were condemned, and had iudgement the one and twentith of Auguſt: and afterward thrée of them were hanged, bowelled, and quartered, which were John Throckmorton of Norwich gentleman, who ſtood mute at his arreignment, but at the gallows confeſſed himſelfe to be the chéefe conſpirator, and that none had deſerued to die but he, for that he had procured them. With him was executed Thomas Brooke of Rolſbie gentleman on the thirtith of Auguſt; and George Dedman of Cringleford gentleman was likewiſe executed the ſecond of September.

The fourth of Auguſt, the duke of Norffolke was remoued from the tower of London to the Charterhouſe néere vnto Smithfield. The ſame date was arreigned at the Guildhall of London, John Felton, for hanging the foreſaid bull of pope Pius Quintus on the gate of the biſhop of Londons palace: and alſo two yoong men for coining & clipping of coine, who all were found guiltie of high treaſon, and had iudgement to be drawne, hanged, & quartered. The eight of Auguſt John Felton was drawen from Newgate into Paules churchyard, and there hanged on a gallows new ſet vp that morning before the biſhops palace gate; and being cut downe aliue, he was bowelled and quartered. After this, the ſame morning the ſhiriffes returned to Newgate, and ſo to Tiborne with two yoong men, which were there executed for coining and clipping, as is aforeſaid.

The duke of Norffolke remoued. Felton arreigned with other offenders, and all condemned.

Felton and others executed for treaſon.

The two and twentith of Auguſt the earle of Suſſex, lord lieutenant generall for the quéenes maieſtie in the north, and the lord Scroope warden of the weſt marches, with diuerſe others, marched from Carleill with the quéens armie and force of the north as well of horſſemen as footmen into Scotland, paſſing ouer the riuers of Eſke, Leuine & Sarke, which riuer of Sarke parteth England and Scotland, and ſo to Dornocke wood belonging to Edward Urone, the lord of Bonſhow, and then to Annan a ſtrong houſe of the lord Harris, which they raſed and ouerthrew with others thereabouts: from thenſe to Hodham, which they burnt and blew vp: from thenſe to Kennell, a towne belonging to the lord Cowhill, which they burnt: from thenſe to Donfriſe, which they ſacked and ſpoiled of ſuch paltrie as the fugitiues had left, and alſo raſed and ouerthrew a ſumptuous houſe belonging to the quéene of Scots, in the kéeping of the lord Harris. Then paſſing the riuer of Longher, they burnt and ſpoiled Cowhilles, and Powtracke, and returned to Donfriſe, and ſo to the towne of Bankend, which they burnt, with another houſe perteining to william Maxwell of the Iles, and ſo to the caſtell of Carlauarocke ſtanding in a mariſh, iuſt to the arme of the ſea, which parteth Annerdale and Galloway; which caſtell they blew vp, and returned homeward, tranſporting their ordinance ouer quickſands and bogs, where neuer the like was doone before, and ſo came to Dornocke wood.

A iourneie into Scotland by the earle of Suſſex.

Waſt by fire and ſword in Scotland.

The eight of Auguſt they marched towards Carleill, where (by the waie) they burnt and ouerthrew two houſes, the one being Arthur Greams alias Carleill, the other rich George, two notable théeues. The ſame daie at night after the lord lieutenants comming to Carleill he made knights, ſir Edward Haſtings, ſir Francis Ruſſell, ſir Ualentine Browne, ſir William Hilton, ſir Robert Stapleton, ſir Henrie Curwen, ſir Simon Muſgraue. This yéere the fift of October chanced a terrible tempeſt of wind and raine both by ſea and land, by meanes whereof manie ſhips periſhed, & much hurt was doone in diuerſe parts of the realme, as by a little pamphlet ſet foorth thereof by Thomas Knell miniſter appéereth, the effect whereof inſueth. About midnight the water ouerflowed ſo much, that men were faine to forſake their beds, & one woman drowned, where alſo were loſt a great number of ſhéepe, oxen, kine, horſſe, and other cattell. Among other there, one maiſter Cartwright gentleman, hauing his houſe inclosed round about, the water came in ſo much, that a cart being laden with thornes did ſwim about the ground. Hée loſt by the ſame floud, ſhéepe, and other cattell, to the value of an hundred pounds. The ſame gentleman had a cloſe gate by the high waies ſide, where the water ran ouer ſo extremelie, that at the fall thereof it made ſuch an hole, that it was fortie foot déepe: ſo that no man could paſſe that waie without great danger. To the filling vp of the ſaid hole or pit, was caſt in by the men of the ſaid towne fiue and twentie lodes of faggots, & twentie lodes of horſſe doong, which ſaid faggots and horſſe doong filled not the hole. Alſo one maiſter Lée at the friers in Bedford, hauing a faire yard, wherein was great ſtore of elmetrees, whereof thréeſcore were blowen downe, with the roots pulled cleane out of the ground. Alſo he had a cloſe of conies that were cleane deſtroied.

Tempeſt by ſea and land which did much hurt.

Tho. Knell. what hurt this tempeſt did in Bedfordſhire.

A woonder of an hole made in the ground by a water courſe.

The ſea brake in betwixt Wiſbich and Walſocken, and at the croſſe keies drowning Tilneie, and old Lin, ſaint Marie Teding, ſaint Marie Tid, ſaint Johns Wauple, Walton & Walſocken, Emnete, Jarmans, and Stow bridge, all being the ſpace of ten miles. At the croſſe keies the goodman of the inne had built an houſe with a ſtrong foundation ioining vnto an other houſe being old and not ſo ſtrong, wherein were certeine gheſts. And when the water came in ſo violentlie, the goodman of the houſe being in the ſtronger houſe, called the men out of the old houſe, and they would haue gone downe the ſtairs, but the water was ſo high that they could not come downe, wherefore they went backe againe, and brake an hole into the other houſe, where they went thorough, and the laſt man was no ſooner in, but the old houſe fell downe. The walles of the houſes were broken downe, and the horſſes that were tied at the manger (which was made faſt in the ground) did ſwim in the water, when the ſtable was cleane carried awaie, vntill the waters were aſſwaged, and were ſaued aliue, and the people were conſtreined to get vp to the higheſt parts of the houſe, and ſo to be carried awaie in botes.

what hurt this tempeſt did in the countie of Norffolke.

At Yarmouth a great part of the bridge was carried awaie. The houſe vpon the hauen called the hauen houſe, wherein was one Nicholas Joſſellin the hauen man & his ſon, with all their tooles, were caried into the mariſhes ſix miles from the hauen, where it ſtood vpright, and where they abode long without meat or drinke. Alſo at Jermans Bridgeſtréet was verie much hurt doone by the extreame floods that were there. Alſo one Thomas Smith of Yarmouth loſt a ſhip, with ſeauen men and a boie in it. Alſo at Newarke by Yarmouth were loſt twelue ſaile. Alſo a great hulke, laden with oile and pitch, was loſt at Worreie ſand, and about twentie men loſt therein, and thirtie ſaued by the hulke bote. Theſe townes and villages were ouerflowne, that is to ſaie, Wiſbich, Guiſborne, Parſon Droue, and Hobſhouſe. This Hobſhouſe being an almes houſe (and the water breaking downe the wals of it) the wind blew the clothes off from the bed of a poore man & his wife: who who being cold, awaked, and ſuddenlie ſtept out of his bed to reach vp his cloths, and ſlipt vp to the bellie in water, and then he thinking himſelfe to be in danger (as he was in deed) and knowing the beſt waie to eſcape the danger of the water, he tooke his wife on his necke, and carried hir awaie, and ſo were both ſaued.

What hurt this tempeſt did in Lincolneſhire.

Threeſcore ſea veſſels loſt in this tempeſt.

At the ſame time in Wiſbich was a garden, a tenniſe plaie, & a bowling allie walled about with bricke (which was worth twentie pounds by yeare to the owner) was quite deſtroied by the water. Mumbie chappell, the whole towne was loſt, except three houſes. A ſhip was driuen vpon an houſe, the ſailers thinking they had beene vpon a rocke, committed themſelues to God: and three of the marriners lept out of the ſhip, and chanced to take hold on the houſe top, and ſo ſaued themſelues: and the wife of the ſame lieng in childbed, by climing vp into the top of the houſe, was alſo ſaued by the marriners, hir huſband and child being both drowned. Likewiſe, the church was wholie ouerthrowne except the ſteeple. Betweene Boſton and Newcaſtell were threeſcore ſea veſſels, as ſmall ſhips, craires, and ſuch like, loſt vpon the coaſts of Boſton, Humerſton, Marſh chappell, Tetnie, Stepneie, Mercots, Kelbie, & Grimſbie, where no ſhip can come in without a pilot, which were all loſt, with goods, corne, & cattell, with all the ſalt cotes, where the chiefe and fineſt ſalt was made, were vtterlie deſtroied, to the vtter vndoing of manie a man, and great lamentation both of old and yoong.

Great loſſe of cattell both great and ſmall.

Scripture abuſed.

Wentford bridge, being verie ſtrong, of eight arches in length, had three of the arches broken, and cleane carried awaie. Maſter Smith at the ſwan there had his houſe (being three ſtories high) ouerflowed vnto the third ſtorie, and the wals of the ſtable were broken downe, and the horſſes tied to the manger were all drowned. Manie men had great loſſe, as well of ſheepe, kine, oxen, great mares, colts of the breed of the great horſſes, and other cattell innumerable, of which the names manie of them ſhall here follow. Maſter Pelham loſt eleuen hundred ſheepe at Mumbie chappell. In Summercote were loſt fiue hundred ſheepe, that were of the inhabitants there. Alſo betweene Humerſton & Grimſbie were loſt eleuen hundred ſheepe of one maſter Spenſers, whoſe ſheepheard about middaie, comming to his wife, aſked his dinner: and ſhe being more bold than manerlie, ſaid, he ſhould haue none of hir. Then he chanced to looke toward the mariſhes where the ſheepe were, and ſaw the water breake in ſo fiercelie, that the ſheepe would be loſt, if they were not brought from thenſe, ſaid, that he was not a good ſheepheard that would not venture his life for his ſheepe, & ſo went ſtreight to driue them from thenſe, but he & his ſheepe were both drowned, and after the water being gone, he was found dead, ſtanding vpright in a ditch.

What hurt this tempeſt did in Huntingtonſhire.

A man wonderfullie preſerued from drowning.

Maſter Thimblebie loſt two hundred and twentie ſheepe, maſter Dimocke loſt foure hundred ſheepe, & maſter Marſh fiue hundred, maſter Madiſon loſt a ſhip, maſter William Aſkugh of Kelſeie, ſir Hugh Aſkugh, maſter Merin, maſter Fitz Williams of Maplthorpe, loſt by eſtimation twentie thouſand cattell, one and other. Borne was ouerflowne vnto the midwaie of the height of the church. Steeping was wholie carried awaie, where was a waine lode of willow tops, the bodie of the waine with the willowes carried one waie, and the axiltree and wheeles an other waie. In the towne of ſaint Edes, the water flowed into the towne in ſuch abundance, that it ran thorough the towne and church, being in the middeſt therof, hauing about the churchyard a bricke wall of two yards high, was ſo ouerflowne, that botes were rowed ouer it, without touching of the ſame. Alſo a little from Huntington, were three men riding vpon the cauſeie, being then ouerflowne (the water on the cauſeie being not deepe) and thinking no danger therein, chanced to come into a place where the water had galled awaie the earth, and the grauell, were carried awaie with the water: and willowes growing on both ſides the waie, two of them caught hold on the willowes, and left their horſſes, and ſaued themſelues: and the third chanced to catch a verie little twig of willow betweene his fingers, hauing verie little hold, and forſaking his horſſe, which was carried a great waie from him, had much paine to keepe his hold on the twig, and hold his head aboue the water, and his horſſe returning with force againſt the ſtreame, came againe vnto him, and vnder him: by which meanes he ſet his feet vpon him, and gat better hold of the willow, and ſo ſaued himſelfe, and the horſſe was immediatlie carried awaie, that he neuer ſaw him after.

Hurt in Buckinghamſhire by this tempeſt.

Alſo Holland, Leuerington, Newton chappell in the ſea, long Stutton & Holbich were ouerflowne. And in this countrie alſo was great loſſe of cattell. In the low parts in Moreland, in a little towne called Cliffield, there was a man, his wife, and a ſucking child in hir armes ouerwhelmed and ſlaine by the violence of the waters, and of the boiſterous winds. The water called Auen, that paſſeth by the towne called Stratford vpon Auen, did run with ſuch violence, that meeting with the water called the Seuerne, droue it backe ten miles againſt the courſe, ouerflowing much ground, and drowning much cattell. In Newport panell were two houſes ouerthrowne, and in one of them an old man and an old woman were ouerwhelmed and ſlaine. And in the ſame towne, on the backe ſide of the Saracens head, the water ſprang out of the hard grauellie ground, and flowed ſo faſt, that certeine merchants (ſitting there at dinner) were faine to riſe and depart from thenſe to ſaue themſelues. Sir Henrie Leie knight (dwelling at Quarrington) loſt by the flouds the number of three thouſand ſheepe, beſides horſſes and other cattell, a great number.

Hurt in Suſſex by this ſudden inundation of waters.

A ſtrange euent wrought by the inflowing of the water.

In the Wiſh at Rie (a place ſo called) the water came in ſo ſuddenlie, and flowed ſo high about midnight, that it was eight or nine foot high in mens houſes: inſomuch that if one William White had not called them vp, ſome of them had like to haue beene drowned. And the ſame William White hauing a bote, fetcht a great companie of them out of their windowes, and carried them to drie land as faſt as he could fetch them, which were in great danger and feare, and glad to eſcape with their liues. Moreouer, the water came in ſo vehementlie there, that it brake into the mariſhes, and made ſuch waie, that where of late yeares, and now before this great floud came, a cockebote could not paſſe in at a low water, now a fiſherman drawing ſix foot water and more maie come in at a low water, and at a full ſea the greateſt ſhip that the queenes maieſtie hath may come in, and haue good harborough there. The continuance of the ſame will not onelie be profitable to the moſt part of the inhabitants there, but alſo commodious vnto all the queenes ſubiects trauelling by ſea.

And whereas one of the owners of a great part of the ſame mariſhes had certeine poles ſet vp therein (and being verie meet and in conuenient place of the ſame mariſh) for the drieng of their fiſhing nets, and receiued monie yeerelie of thoſe that dried their nets there ſufficientlie inough: yet he cauſed his ſeruant to pull vp the poles, and laie them in an houſe ſtanding in the ſame mariſh: and alſo commanded his ſeruant to giue them warning, that they ſhould no more hang their nets there, except they would come and compound with him for it. And the ſame night (by Gods prouidence) it came ſo to paſſe, that according to his ſaieng (though contrarie to his good will and mind) they are not like to hang their nets there anie more, bicauſe of the depth of the water is ſo great, and like to continue. In hope of continuance of the ſame new opened hauen, certeine men of the ſame towne haue begun to build faire barks to trauell the ſeas, the which in continuance of time will be a great furtherance to the maintenance of the quéenes nauie. At the blacke ſhore end, before the ſaid floud, no bote could paſſe further than the ſhore end; and now a bote that draweth ſix foot water maie come in at a low water. Without the barre, the water is déeper than it was by two foot and more in the chanell.

A new hauen and the ſame like to continue.

Hurt in Kent by the ſame tempeſt and breaking in of the ſtreams.

At Prum hill mariſh, foure miles from Rie, the water came in ſo outragiouſlie, that it brake downe the mariſh wals, one maſter Burie being owner thereof, who loſt by the ſame a thouſand one hundred thréeſcore and two of his ſhéepe, and it is thought that the mariſh is neuer like to be gotten againe. Alſo at Erith breach, a mariner riding by the mariſhes, ſéeing two maidens in the mariſhes, and perceiuing the waters breaking in ſo faſt, that the maides were not like to eſcape, rode vnto them, and one of them gat vp behind him, & the other tooke hold on the horſſe taile, and by that means were both ſaued from drowning. In the ſame mariſh were drowned a great number of ſhéepe. Alſo there in a mariſh land that was ſowne, were two boies kéeping crowes in the after noone, & ſéeing the water breaking in ſo vehementlie, gat them into a cart that was not farre from them, where they were faine to tarrie vntill the next tide, which came in ſo boiſterouſlie, that it had like to haue ouerthrowne both the cart & boies. And the one of them being more ſtronger than the other, kept the other in his armes, where he with cold, wet, and feare, died: ſo that he was faine to let him fall from him into the water, when he perceiued that he was paſt recouerie. A little from that place were alſo drowned a thouſand ſhéepe, and alſo manie other cattell.

A boie drowned after he was dead.

After dinner, hir grace returning through Cornehill, entred the Burſſe on the ſouthſide, and after hir highneſſe had viewed euerie part thereof aboue ground, eſpeciallie the Pawne, which was richlie furniſhed with all ſorts of the fineſt wares in the citie, ſhe cauſed the ſame Burſſe by an herald and a trumpet, to be proclamed the Roiall exchange, ſo to be called from thenſeforth, and not otherwiſe.

The ſeuentéenth of Februarie at a place called Kinnaſton, néere Marlech hill in the countie of Hereford, was ſéene the ground to open, and certeine rockes with a péece of ground remooued, and went forward the ſpace of foure daies, making at the firſt a terrible noiſe as it went on the earth. It remooued it ſelfe betwéene ſix of the clocke in the euening, & ſeuen the next morrow fortie paſes, carrieng great trées and ſhéepecotes, ſome ſhéepecotes with thréeſcore ſhéepe in them, ſome trées fell into the chinkes, other that grew on the ſame ground, grow now as firmelie on a hill; and ſome that ſtood eaſt, ſtand weſt; and thoſe that ſtood weſt, ſtand eaſt. The depth of the hole where it firſt brake out is thirtie foot, the breadth of the breach is eight ſcore yards, and in length aboue twentie ſcore yards. It ouerthrew Kinnaſton chapell. Alſo two high waies be remooued nigh one hundred yards, with the trées of the hedgerowes. The ground in all is ſix and twentie acres: and where tillage ground was, there is paſture left in place; and where was paſture, there is tillage ground gone vpon it. The ground as it remooued draue the earth before it, & at the lower part ouerwhelmed the ground, ſo that it is growen to a great hill of twelue fadams high. It remooued from ſaturdaie till mondaie at night following, and ſo ſtaied.

Moreouer this yeare about Candelmas, ſir Thomas Sackuille, baron of Buckhurſt was ſent in ambaſſage from the quéenes maieſtie to Charles the ninth French king, as well to congratulate for his marriage with the daughter of the emperour Maximilian, as for other weightie affaires. And as his ambaſſage was great, ſo was his charge no leſſe in furniſhing himſelfe and traine accordinglie, being both in number and furniture ſuch in euerie point, as did apperteine; and his receiuing and interteinement in France by the king and others was agréeable thereto, for he was receiued vpon the coaſt by the gouernours of the fortified townes right honorablie by order from the king. Among other the baron of Bournoiſell was one, who being verie well mounted and appointed, left not his lordſhip before he came to the court, and from thenſe accompanied him backe vntill his imbarkement homewards.

Sir Thomas Sackuille ambaſſador to the French king.

His interteinement verie honorable.

In the maine countries he was accompanied with the gouernours and nobles of the places about. And in the good townes where he paſſed, he was preſented by the chiefe magiſtrates, wherein their good wils were to be thankefullie accepted, though his lordſhips rewards far ouervalued their preſents. At his approch néere to Paris he was incountred on the waie for courteſie ſake, by two marqueſſes of Trans and Saluces; this being of the houſe of Sauoie, and the other of the worthie familie of Foix. Theſe wanted not ſuch as accompanied them, and the ſame euen of the beſt ſort. At the lord ambaſſadors firſt audience, which was at the caſtell of Madrill, otherwiſe called Bullogne néere Paris (where the king then laie) the quéenes Almane coches verie branelie furniſhed were ſent to Paris for him, in one of the which his lordſhip with the marqueſſe of Trans rode towards the court, verie narrowlie eſcaping from a ſhrewd turne and great miſchance, by reaſon the ſame coch was ouerthrowen by the Dutch wagoners their negligence, who in a brauerie galloping the field made an ouer ſhort turne, wherewith the marques was ſore bruſed.

The firſt place of the lord ambaſſadors audience.

The lord ambaſſador at his arriuall at the place was right honorablie receiued, he was banketted by diuerſe, and that verie ſumptuouſlie: which by him was not left vnrequited to the vttermoſt, and rather with the better. For his liberalitie vnto the French was verie large, but his reward at the kings hands was onelie a chaine waieng a thouſand French crownes. At that preſent there was a great dearth & ſcarſitie of vittels in France. The riuer of Saine that runneth through Paris was not paſſable with veſſels, by reaſon of the great froſts: and thereby not onelie all kind of vittels, but alſo haie and wood hard to come by, and not to be had but at exceſſiue prices, the countrie thereabouts hauing before béene ſore harried and ſpoiled by the ciuill tumults. By reaſon whereof, not onlie the lord of Buckhurſt for the ſpace he remained there, but alſo ſir Henrie Norrice (now lord Norrice) and maiſter Francis Walſingham hir maieſties ambaſſadors, ligiers ſucceſſiuelie, were driuen to an increaſe in expenſes, paieng for euerie thing they bought an higher price than ordinarilie had béene accuſtomed.

A parlement at weſtminſter.

A ſubſidie.

Iuſts at weſtminſter at the tilt, tourneie and barriers.

Doctor Storie executed for high treaſon.

After that the lord Buckhurſt had béene feaſted and banketted by the king, and other of the French nobilitie, and had accompliſhed the points of his ambaſſage, he tooke leaue of the king, & departed homewards, arriuing here in England a little before Eaſter. The ſecond of Aprill a parlement began at Weſtminſter, wherein was granted to the quéenes maieſtie (toward hir great charges, in repreſſing the late rebellion in the north, and purſuing the ſaid rebels and their fautors, which were fled into Scotland) by the cleargie a ſubſidie of ſix ſhillings in the pound; and by the temporaltie two fiftéens, with a ſubſidie of two ſhillings and eight pence in the pound. The firſt, the ſecond, and third of Maie was holden at Weſtminſter before the quéenes maieſtie a ſolemne iuſt at the tilt, tourneie and barriers. The chalengers were Edward earle of Oxford, Charles Howard, ſir Henrie Lée, and Chriſtopher Hatton eſquier, who all did verie valiantlie; but the chiefe honour was giuen to the earle of Oxford. The firſt of Iune, Iohn Storie a doctor of the canon law, who before had béene condemned of high treaſon, was drawen from the tower of London to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered, his head was ſet on London bridge, and his quarters on the gates of the citie. Of this monſter diſguiſed in the likeneſſe of a man, it is verie materiall to record what maiſter Fox hath noted in his hiſtorie.

Stories education and birth.

Storie a bloudie perſecutor.

Storie inuenting new torments for the martyrs.

Storie apprehended.

¶This doctor Storie (ſaith he) being an Engliſhman by birth, and from his infancie not onelie nuzled in papiſtrie, but alſo euen as it were by nature earneſtlie affected to the ſame, & growing ſomewhat to riper yeares, in the daies of quéene Marie became a moſt bloudie tyrant, and cruell perſecutor of Chriſt in his members, as all the ſtories of martyrs almoſt doo declare. Thus he raging all the reigne of the foreſaid quéene Marie, againſt the infallible truth of Chriſts goſpell, and the true profeſſors thereof, neuer ceaſed till he had conſumed to aſhes two or thrée hundred bleſſed martyrs, who willinglie gaue their liues for the teſtimonie of his truth. And thinking their puniſhment in fire not cruell inough, he went about to inuent new torments for the holie martyrs of Chriſt; ſuch was his hatred to the truth of Chriſts goſpell: but in the end the Lord looking vpon the affliction, and cruell bloudſhedding of his ſeruants, tooke awaie quéene Marie the great piller of papiſtrie. After whome ſuccéeded ladie Eliſabeth now quéene of England, who ſtaieng the bloudie ſword of perſecution from raging anie further, cauſed the ſame doctor Storie to be apprehended, and committed to ward with manie other his complices, ſworne enimies to Chriſts glorious goſpell.

Storie conueied himſelfe ouer the ſeas, where he continued a bloudie perſecutor.

Storie obteined a commiſſion to ſearch for Engliſh bookes.

The ſaid Storie hauing béene a while deteined in priſon, at the laſt by what means I know not, brake foorth of hold, and conueied himſelfe ouer the ſeas, where he continued a moſt bloudie perſecutor, ſtill raging againſt Gods ſaints with fire and ſword. Inſomuch as he growing to be familiar and right déere to duke Dalua in Antwerpe, receiued a ſpeciall commiſſion from him to ſearch all the ſhips for goods forfeited, and for Engliſh bookes and ſuch like. And in this fauour and authoritie he continued there for a ſpace, by the which meanes he did much hurt, and brought manie a good man and woman to trouble, and extreme perill of life through his bloudthirſtie crueltie. But at the laſt the Lord (when the meaſure of his iniquitie was full) procéeded in iudgement againſt him, and cut him off from the face of the earth, according to the praiers of manie a good man, which came to paſſe in order as followeth.

Storie intendeth the ouerthrow of England.

A platforme laid to apprehend Storie.

Storie ſearched the Engliſh ſhips for bookes, and is apprehended and brought into England.

It being certeinlie knowne (for the brute thereof was gone foorth into all lands) that he not onelie intended the ſubuerſion and ouerthrow of his natiue countrie of England by bringing in forren hoſtilitie, if by anie means he might compaſſe it; but alſo dailie and hourelie murthered Gods people: there was this platforme laid (by Gods prouidence no doubt) that one maiſter Parker a merchant ſhould ſaile vnto Antwerpe, and by ſome means to conueie Storie into England. This Parker arriuing at Antwerpe, ſuborned certeine to repaire to doctor Storie, and to ſignifie vnto him, that there was an Engliſh ſhip come fraught with merchandize; and that if he would make ſearch thereof himſelfe, hée ſhould find ſtore of Engliſh bookes, and other things for his purpoſe. Storie hearing this and ſuſpecting nothing, made haſt towards the ſhip, thinking to make the ſame his preie; and comming aboord ſearched for Engliſh hereticall books (as he called them) & going downe vnder the hatches, bicauſe he would be ſure to haue their bloud if he could, they clapped downe the hatches, hoiſed vp their ſailes, hauing (as God would) a good gale, and ſailed awaie into England, where they arriuing preſented this bloudie butcher and traitorous rebell Storie, to the no little reioiſing of manie an Engliſh heart.

Storie a traitor hanged, drawne and quartered.

He being now committed to priſon, continued there a good ſpace: during all which time, he was laboured and ſolicited dailie by wiſe and learned fathers, to recant his diueliſh & erronious opinions, to confirme himſelfe to the truth, and to acknowledge the quéenes maieſties ſupremaſie. All which he vtterlie denied to the death, ſaieng that he was ſworne ſubiect to the king of Spaine, and was no ſubiect to the quéene of England, nor ſhée his ſouereigne quéene. And therefore (as he well deſerued) he was condemned (as a traitor to God, the quéenes maieſtie, and the realme) to be drawne, hanged, and quartered, which was performed accordinglie, he being laid vpon an hurdle, and drawne from the tower along the ſtreets to Tiburne, where he being hanged till he was halfe dead, was cut downe and ſtripped. And (which is not to be forgot) when the executioner had cut off his priuie members, he ruſhing vp vpon a ſudden gaue him a blow vpon the eare, to the great woonder of all that ſtood by. And thus ended this bloudie Nemrod his wretched life, whoſe iudgement I leaue to the Lord.]

A combat appointed at Tuthill but not tried.

The eightéenth of Iune, in Trinitie terme, there was a combat appointed to haue béene fought for a certeine manour & demaine lands belonging thereunto, in the Ile of Hartie, adioining to the Ile of Shepeie in Kent. Simon Low & Iohn Kime were plaintifs, and had brought a writ of right againſt Thomas Paramore, who offered to defend his right by battell. Wherupon the plaintifs aforſaid accepted to anſwer his challenge, offering likewiſe to defend their right to the ſame manour and lands, and to proue by battell, that Paramore had no right nor good title to haue the ſame manour and lands. Herevpon

Thorne and Nailer combatants.

vpon the ſaid Thomas Paramoꝛe bꝛought befoꝛe the iudges of the common plées at Weſtminſter, one George Thoꝛne, a big, bꝛoad, ſtrong ſet fellow; & the plaintifs Henrie Nailer, maiſter of defenſe, and ſeruant to the right honourable the earle of Leiceſter, a pꝛoper ſlender man, & not ſo tall as the other. Thoꝛne caſt downe a gantlet, which Nailer tooke vp, vpon the ſundaie befoꝛe the battell ſhould be tried. On the next moꝛow, the matter was ſtaied, & the parties agréed, that Paramoꝛe being in poſſeſſion ſhuld haue the land, & was bound in fiue hundꝛed pounds to conſider the plaintifs, as vpon hearing the matter the iudges ſhould award. The quéenes maieſtie abhoꝛring bloudſhed, & (as the poet verie well ſaith) was the taker vp of the matter, in this wiſe. It was thought good, that foꝛ Paramoꝛes aſſurance, the oꝛder ſhould be kept touching the combat, and that the plaintifs Low and Kime ſhould make default of appearance; but that yet ſuch as were ſuerties foꝛ Nailer their champions appearance, ſhould bꝛing him in; and likewiſe thoſe that were ſuerties foꝛ Thoꝛne, ſhould bꝛing in the ſame Thoꝛne in diſcharge of their band: and that the court ſhould ſit in Tuthill fields, where was pꝛepared one plot of ground, of one and twentie yards ſquare, double railed foꝛ the combat. Without the weſt ſquare a ſtage being ſet vp foꝛ the iudges, repꝛeſenting the court of the common plées.

The maner of all things in redinesse for the combat.

All the compaſſe without the liſts was ſet with ſcaffolds one aboue another, foꝛ people to ſtand and behold. There were behind the ſquare where the iudges ſat, two tents, the one foꝛ Nailer, the other foꝛ Thoꝛne. Thoꝛne was there in the moꝛning timelie, Nailer about ſeauen of the clocke came thoꝛough London, apparelled in a dublet, and gallie gaſcoine bꝛéches all of crimſin ſattin, cut and raſed, a hat of blacke veluet, with a red feather and band, befoꝛe him dꝛums and fifes plaieng. The gantlet caſt downe by George Thoꝛne was boꝛne befoꝛe the ſaid Nailer vpon a ſwoꝛds point, and his baſton (a ſtaffe of an ell long made taper wiſe tipt with hoꝛne) with his ſhield of hard leather was boꝛne after him, by Aſkam a yeoman of the quéenes gard. He came into the palace at Weſtminſter, and ſtaieng not long befoꝛe the hall dooꝛe, came backe into the Kings ſtréet, and ſo along thoꝛough the Sanctuarie and Tuthill ſtr[illegible] into the field, where he ſtaied till paſt nine of the [illegible]k, and then ſir Jerome Bowes bꝛought him to his tent: Thoꝛne being in the tent with ſir Henrie Cheinie long befoꝛe.

The lord chiefe iustice set and his associats with him.

About ten of the clocke, the court of common plées remoued, & came to the place pꝛepared. When the loꝛd chiefe iuſtice, with two other his aſſociats were ſet, then Low was called ſolemnlie to come in, oꝛ elſe to loſe his wꝛit of right. Then after a certeine time, the ſuerties of Henrie Nailer were called to bꝛing in the ſaid Nailer, champion foꝛ Simon Low. And ſhoꝛtlie therevpon, ſir Jerome Bowes, leading Nailer by the hand, entred with him the liſts, bꝛinging him downe that ſquare by which he entred, being on the left hand of the iudges, and ſo about till he came to the next ſquare, iuſt againſt the iudges, and there making courteſie, firſt with one leg and then with the other, paſſed foꝛth till he came to the middle of the place, and then made the like obeiſance, and ſo paſſing till they came to the barre, there he made the like courteſie, and his ſhield was held vp aloft ouer his head. Nailer put off his netherſtocks, and ſo barefoot and barelegged, ſaue his ſilke ſcauilones to the ankles, and his dublet ſléeues tied vp aboue the elbow, and bareheaded, came in, as is afoꝛeſaid. Then were the ſuerties of George Thoꝛne called to bꝛing in the ſame Thoꝛne: and immediatlie ſir Henrie Cheinie entering at the vpper end on the right hand of the iudges, vſed the like oꝛder in comming about by his ſide, as Nailer had befoꝛe on that other ſide: and ſo comming to the barre with like obeiſance, held vp his ſhield. Pꝛoclamation was made that none ſhould touch the barres, noꝛ pꝛeſume to come within the ſame, except ſuch as were appointed.

Nailer prepareth himselfe to the incounter against Thorne.

The lord chiefe iustice toucheth the present case.

After all this ſolemne oꝛder was finiſhed, the loꝛd chiefe iuſtice rehearſing the maner of bꝛinging the wꝛit of right by Simon Low, of the anſwer made thereunto by Paramoꝛe, of the pꝛocéeding therein, and how Paramoꝛe had challenged to defend his right to the land by battell, by his champion Thomas Thoꝛne, and of the accepting the triall that was by Low with his champion Henrie Nailer: & then foꝛ default of appearance in Low, he adiudged the land to Paramoꝛe, & diſmiſſed the champion, acquiting the ſuerties of their bands. He alſo willed Henrie Nailer to render againe to George Thoꝛne his gantlet. Whereto the ſaid Nailer anſwered, that his loꝛdſhip might command him anie thing, but willinglie he wold not render the ſaid gantlet to Thoꝛne except he could win it. And further he challenged the ſaid Thoꝛne to play with him halfe a ſcoꝛe blowes, to ſhew ſome paſtime to the loꝛd chiefe iuſtice, & to the other there aſſembled. But Thoꝛne anſwered, that he came to fight, & would not plaie. Then the loꝛd chiefe iuſtice commending Nailer foꝛ his valiant courage, cōmanded them both quietlie to depart the field, &c.

Nailer challengeth Thorne at a few blowes.

A woman burnt at Maidston for poisoning.

On the ſixtéenth of Julie, Rebecca Chamber, late wife to Thomas Chamber of Herietteſham, was found culpable of poiſoning the ſaid Thomas Chamber hir huſband, at the aſſiſes holden at Maidſtone in the countie of Kent. Foꝛ the which fact ſhe (hauing well deſerued) was there burnt on the next moꝛrow. The ſeuenth of September, the duke of Noꝛffolke was remooued from the Charterhouſe, to the tower of London pꝛiſoner. The two and twentith of September deceaſſed John Jewell biſhop of Saliſburie, in his life a moſt eloquent and diligent pꝛeacher, but a far moꝛe painefull and ſtudious wꝛiter, as his woꝛkes remaining doo beare witneſſe, wherby his fame ſhall neuer die. The ninth of Nouember, a ſermon was pꝛeached in Paules church at London, by maiſter William Foulks of Cambꝛidge, to giue thanks to almightie God foꝛ the victoꝛie, which of his mercifull clemencie it had pleaſed him to grant to the chꝛiſtians in the Leuant ſeas, againſt the common enimies of our faith, the Turks, the ſeuenth of October laſt paſt. His theame was taken out of the ſixtéenth pſalme of Dauids pſalter, the fourth verſe.

The assemblie at this sermō.

There were pꝛeſent at this ſermon, the loꝛd maioꝛ of London ſir William Allen, with the aldermen and craftſmen in their liueries. And in the euening there were bonefiers made through the citie, with banketting and great reioiſing, as good cauſe there was, foꝛ a victoꝛie of ſo great impoꝛtance vnto the whole ſtate of the chꝛiſtian common-wealth. In the which were taken one hundꝛed and thirtie veſſels, that is, one hundꝛed and ſeuentéene gallies, and thirtéene galleots, beſide other veſſels that were bonged, abandoned, and let go at large abꝛoad in the ſeas, as gallies, foiſts, and galleots, to the number of fourescoꝛe, oꝛ thereabouts. And of their chiefeteins ſlaine in that bloudie battell, theſe we find by name as pꝛincipall: Halie Baſſa high admerall of the whole nauie, Amar Beie capteine of the Janiſſaries, Aſſan Beie the ſonne of Barbaroſſa, with his ſonne Mehemet Beie gouernoꝛ of Miteſlene, Gider Beie gouernour of Chio, Capſan Beie gouernour of the Rhodes, Peruis Aga gouernour of Affrica otherwiſe Mahometa, Muſtafa Scelnbie high treaſuroꝛ, Aſis Chehagi capteine of Gallipolis, Tramontana chiefe maiſter of the Turkiſh

Some yet affirme, that there were ſlaine of them in all, to the number of one and twentie thouſand, although other ſpeake but of fifteene thouſand. But Contareno writeth, that there were ſlaine and taken 29990. Of which number he reckoneth 3846 to haue remained priſoners, and among them were theſe perſons of name, Mahemet Beie, Sainus Beie, and Sirocho Beie. There eſcaped yet from this diſcomfiture, Partau, generall of all the men of warre and ſouldiors by land, Ochialie, Murate Raie with his ſonne, and Hali Genoueſe, and with them about fortie gallies, foiſts, and fregats. Moreouer, there were found in the Turkiſh gallies that came into the hands of the chriſtians, one hundred and ſixteene double canons, two hundred ſixtie and fiue demie canons, and ſixteene other great peeces of braſſe. For it is to be remembred, that not onelie the Turkiſh gallies, but alſo the chriſtians were throughlie armed, furniſhed, and appointed with men, munition, and ordinance in euerie behalfe.

In Halie Baſſa his gallie there were aboord three hundred harquebuſiers Ianiſſaries, and an hundred archers. In the gallie of Don Giouan de Auſtria chiefe admerall of the chriſtians, were foure hundred harquebuſiers Spaniards, of the tierſe of Sardigna, beſide a great number of lords and gentlemen, and alſo beſide the rowers: and in euerie other gallie were 200 fighting men at the leaſt, beſide the rowers, & in ſome 300, & other ſome 400 according to the mould of the veſſels. The number of the chriſtian gallies and galliots, were in all two hundred and two, beſides ſix great galleaſſes. The Turks had their gallies, galliots, and foiſts, to the number of two hundred and fiftie, as appeareth by the account afore made, of thoſe that were taken, abandoned, and eſcaped. There were deliuered and ſet at libertie, about twelue thouſand, ſome ſay fourteene thouſand chriſtian captiues, whome the Turks kept for ſlaues, and had them chained there aboord with them in their gallies. But this victorie was not got without great loſſe of the chriſtians, for beſide Auguſtine Barbarigo, the principall prouiditore of the Venetians, there died ſeuenteene other gentlemen of Venice, being men of good eſtimation, Iohn Cardone, & Barnardine Cardone Spaniards, Virginio and Horatio Urſini Romans, Troilo, Sabello, Marco Molino, beſides diuerſe other nobles and gentlemen of name, as well Italians, as Spaniards, and Almans.

In all, there died of the chriſtians to the number of ſeauen thouſand ſix hundred fiftie and ſix, beſide thoſe that were hurt, being in like number to them that were ſlaine, among whom was don Iohn de Auſtria, generall of all the chriſtian armie there, Sebaſtian Veniero the Venetians generall, & the counte de Santa Fiore with diuerſe others. Moreouer, there were chriſtian gallies bouged, three of the Venetians, one of the popes, one belonging to the duke of Sauoie, and another to the knights of Malta. There was one alſo taken & led awaie by Ochialie, and his companie. Such was the ſucceſſe of this battell, which continued for the ſpace of ſix houres, in the end whereof the victorie remaining with the chriſtians, cauſed no ſmall reioiſing through all parties of chriſtendome. For if this victorie had beene followed, with his gratious helpe and aſſiſtance that was the giuer thereof, the proud and loftie horne of the Iſmaelite had beene ſo bruiſed, as peraduenture his courage would haue quailed to put forth the ſame ſo ſpeedilie as he did. But ſuch is the malice of the time, that the chriſtians haue more pleaſure to draw their weapons one againſt another, than againſt that common enimie of vs all, who regardeth neither proteſtant nor catholike (they may be ſure) thoſe of the Greekiſh church nor others, as if the mercifull prouidence of the Lord of hoſts doo not in time diſappoint his proceedings, it will be too ſoone perceiued, though happilie too late to ſtop the breach, when the flood hath got head, and once woone paſſage through the banke.

Contareno.

The ſpace how long the battell continued.

A common fault among chriſtians.

It were therefore to be wiſhed of all thoſe that tender the ſuertie of the chriſtian commonwealth, that princes would permit their ſubiects to liue in libertie of conſcience, concerning matters of faith: and that ſubiects againe would be readie in dutifull wiſe, to obeie their princes in matters of ciuill gouernment, ſo that compounding their controuerſies among themſelues, with tollerable conditions, they might emploie their forces againſt the common enimie, to the benefit of the whole chriſtian world, which (the more is the pitie) they haue ſo long exerciſed one againſt another, to each others deſtruction. And as for matters in variance about religion, rather to decide the ſame with the word, than with the ſword, an inſtrument full vnfit for that purpoſe, and not lightlie vſed nor allowed of by the ancient fathers in time of the primitiue church. But ſith this is rather to be wiſhed than hoped for, by anie apparant likelihood, conſidering the ſtrange contrarietie of humors now reigning among men in ſundrie parts of chriſtendome, let vs leaue the ſucceſſe of our wiſh to the pleaſure of God, the author of all good haps, who ruleth the harts of princes (as the poet ſaith verie trulie

The fourth of Maie Walter Deuereur, lord Ferrers of Chartleie, and vicount of Hereford was created earle of Eſſex; and Edward Fines lord Clinton and Saie high admerall of England was created earle of Lincolne. The eight of Maie the parlement began at Weſtminſter, and that ſame daie in the parlement, by the quéenes maieſties writs, ſir Henrie Compton knight, lord of Compton in the Hole, ſir Henrie Cheinie knight lord of Todington, ſir William Paulet knight of Baſing, & ſir Henrie Norris knight lord of Ricot, were called barons into the higher houſe. In this parlement, for ſo much as the whole realme of England was excéedinglie peſtered with roges, vagabunds, and ſturdie beggers, by meanes whereof dailie happened diuerſe horrible murthers, thefts, and other great outrages: it was enacted, that all perſons aboue the age of fouretéene yéeres, being taken begging, vagarant, & wandering diſorderlie, ſhould be apprehended, whipped, and burned through the griſtle of the right eare, with a hot iron of one inch compaſſe for the firſt time ſo taken.

Earles of Eſſex and Lincolne created.

Barons made.

Roges burnt through the eare.

Martin Bullocke hanged at the well with two buckets.

The foure & twentith of Maie, Martine Bullocke was hanged on a gibet by the well with two buckets in Biſhops gate ſtréet of London, for robbing, and moſt ſhamefullie murthering of a merchant named Arthur Hall, in the parſonage of S. Martine by the ſaid well. This Martine had procured the ſaid Arthur Hall to come to the ſaid parſonage, to buie of him certeine plate. But after the ſaid Arthur had well viewed the ſame, he ſaid; This is none of your plate, it hath doctor Gardeners marke, and I know it to be his: That is true ſaid Martine Bullocke, but he hath appointed me to ſell it, &c. After this talke, whileſt the ſaid Arthur was weieng the plate, the ſame Martine fetcht out of the kitchin a thicke waſhing béetle, and comming behind him ſtroke the ſaid Arthur on the head, that he felled him with the firſt ſtroke; and then ſtrake him againe, and after tooke the ſaid Arthurs dagger, and ſticked him, and with his knife cut his throte: and after would haue truſſed him in a Danſke cheſt, but the ſame was too ſhort. Wher vpon he tumbled him downe a paire of ſtaires, and after thinking to haue buried him in the cellar, his legs being broken with the firſt fall, and ſtiffe, he could not draw him downe the cellar ſtairs being winding. Wherfore he cut off his legs with an hatchet, and in the end truſſed him with ſtraw in a drie vat; and ſaieng it was his apparell and bookes, cauſed the ſame to be carried to the water ſide, and ſo ſhipped to Rie. But as God would haue it, there was ſuſpicion gathered againſt the murtherer, wherby he was examined before alderman Branch then one of the ſhiriffes of London; but ſo ſmall likelihood appéered that he ſhould be guiltie, that there was an honeſt man dwelling in ſaint Laurence Pontneis named Robert Gée a clothworker, who ſuppoſing the offendor to be cléere in the matter, vndertooke for his forth comming. Wherevpon Bullocke being ſuffered to go at libertie, ſlipt awaie, firſt to Weſtminſter; and there taking bote, paſſed vp the riuer: and comming on land beyond Kingſton, paſſed forth till he came to Okingham, in the forreſt of Windſore, an eight miles beyond the towne of Windſore: and from thenſe (what moued him, I leaue to the ſecret iudgement of God) he came backe againe vnto London, lodging at the red lion in Holborne.

He hath libertie notwithſtanding his offenſe.

In the meane time the foreſaid Gée, vpon knowledge had that Bullocke was withdrawen out of the waie, was not onelie had in ſome ſuſpicion, but alſo committed to ward: albeit ſo as he had libertie to take order to ſend abrode ſuch as ſhould make ſute after Bullocke. And amongſt other that went forth, one of his ſeruants was ſent to Rie, whither the drie vat was conueied: and comming thither, the ſame drie vat was opened, wherein the mangled corps of Hall was found: whereby the truth of the matter came to light, and by the good prouidence of God, the reuealer of ſuch euill facts, Bullocke was at the verie ſame time diſcouered at the place in Holborne afore mentioned, and there apprehended, did receiue (as ye haue heard) due puniſhment for his heinous and moſt wicked offenſe.

Earle of Lincolne and other ambaſſadors into France.

The ſix and twentith of Maie, the right honorable earle of Lincolne, departed from London towards France ambaſſador, being accompanied with the lord Dacres, the lord Rich, the lord Talbot, the lord Sands, and the lord Clinton, ſir Arthur Chambernowne, ſir Ierome Bowes, and ſir Edward Haſtings knights, with diuerſe other gentlemen, who taking ſhip at Douer, cut ouer to Bullongne, where they were verie honorablie receiued, and conueied by iournies to Paris, where they were lodged in a houſe of the kings named le chaſteau de Louure, being attended vpon of the kings officers.

The maner of the ambaſſadors interteinment.

Fiue daies after they went to the king at a houſe called Madrill, where the king with his two brethren, the admerall, & the moſt part of the nobles of France met them a diſtance from the place, & brought them to the houſe: where they dined, and abode till ſundaie following, from whence the king and his nobles with the nobles of England came to Paris. The king, his two brethren, & our ambaſſador riding in one coch togither, and the nobles of England and France being ſo placed alſo in coches, came to the ſaid caſtell of Louure, and there dined. After dinner the king, our ambaſſador, with the nobilitie of both realmes, went to a church named ſaint Germane, where the French king, his brethren, and nobilitie heard euenſong. The noblemen of England withdrawing them into a chappell till euenſong was doone, were then fetched thenſe by the nobles of France to the king and his brethren that awaited their comming, where was confirmed the league which had béene concluded at Blois the ninteenth of Aprill, deputies being there for the French partie, Francis Montmorencie, Reinold Birago, Sebaſtian de Laubeſpine, and Paule de Foix: and for the quéene of England, ſir Thomas Smith, and maiſter Walſingham ambaſſadors.

League with France confirmed in France.

This being doone, they departed without the wals of Paris, to a garden of pleaſure, where they ſupped. After ſupper, the king departed to his place of Madrill, and the nobles of England vnto the caſtell of Louure. On mondaie, the admerall feaſted the nobles of England: vpon tueſdaie, the duke of Aniou the kings brother, and on wedneſdaie the duke of Alanſon his yonger brother, and ſo paſſed in feaſting and banketting, with rich gifts on both parts. On fridaie, the nobles of England tooke leaue of the king, and on ſundaie came to ſaint Denis, and after to Bullongne, where they tooke ſhip, and returned into England the fourth of Iulie.

The ambaſſadours returned out of France.

The duke of Norffolke beheaded.

The ſecond of Iune in the morning, betwéene the houres of ſeuen and eight, Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke, was beheaded on a ſcaffold newlie ſet vp on tower hill. ¶ This execution in a ſhort time was ſpred abroad, for fame, which (as the poet ſaith in few words ——— volat leuibus ſublata per æthera pennis)

had ſounded the ſame farre and néere: inſomuch that in tract of time, as men had leaſure to laie their collections togither, among other things this is recorded: euen of ſtrangers. For the execution of an honorable perſonage muſt néeds be ſo much the more notorious, as his miſdéed is diſhonorable. Touching the duke therefore this I find in Schardius (howſoeuer he came to the knowledge thereof) a moderne hiſtorien, and doctor of the lawes in Baſill.

Schardius in reb. geſt. ſub Maximil. imperat. ſecundo pag. 2513.

The duke of Norffolke, who (as we haue ſaid) was condemned for treaſon the ſixteenth daie of Ianuarie, was brought out of the tower of London, to a plaine hard by, which they call the hill; in the middeſt whereof a ſcaffold had béene builded manie yeares ago ſeruing for execution: which being old was both rotten and ruinous. For quéene Eliſabeth hauing with mercie gouerned hir commonwealth, there was no puniſhment inflicted there vpon anie for the ſpace of fourtéene yeares. Wherefore a new ſcaffold muſt néeds be made.

Foren exe ons heere in ſpite of the quéenes vnbloudie gouernment.

Which when the duke at ſeuen of the clocke in the morning had mounted, hauing on a ſilken doublet, & a long gowne of like fine ſtuffe, all blacke, earneſtlie he beheld the people round about with his cap on his head. Now when he had ſtood ſtill a prettie while, and caſt his eies vpon the ſcaffold, he asked whereabouts he might beſt ſtand to ſpeake vnto the people: For the ſcaffold was foure ſquare, and the people came flocking from all places. Now when he was directed to the eaſt ſide thereof, and the people had muttered and whiſpered diuerſlie among themſelues, maſter Alexander Nowell deane of Paules beſought them that were preſent to be ſilent and ſtill. Then began the duke to ſpeake to the people as followeth.

It is no rare thing (good people) to ſée a man come hither to die, albeit ſince this quéens moſt bleſſed reigne I be the firſt, I praie God I be the laſt. The people ſaid Amen. It is a hard matter for a man of my calling to vſe long ſpéech in ſuch an audience, either for that audacitie ſerues me not, or for that comming to ſuch an end as I doo, the feare of death troubleth me: and therfore I beſéech you all heartilie to beare with me, I will not be long, I will make a ſhort ſpéech and diuide my talke into thrée parts. And firſt concerning my offenſe towards my prince, wherein ſome thing I haue to confeſſe againſt my ſelfe, and in ſome thing to cléere my ſelfe. I come not to complaine againſt my péeres, I doo acquit them, I haue deſerued to die, it is not vnknowne. I haue dealt with the quéene of Scots in verie great and high matters, without making my prince priuie therevnto, otherwiſe than I ought to haue doone.

The duke confeſſeth his offenſe againſt the quéenes maieſtie.

There is one thing, which greatlie grudgeth my conſcience, that is: when I was firſt deliuered out of this place, I made a ſubmiſſion, & promiſed the Q. neuer to deale further in that matter; and yet contrarie to my promiſe I meant & did otherwiſe, I am ſorie for it. It was reported I made a vow and tooke a ſolemne oth, and receiued the communion vpon it, that is not true: the other was too much. It was reported alſo I went about to deſtroie the citie of London: I take God to my witneſſe I neuer meant to hurt this citie. I haue dealt with ſuſpected perſons, and ſuch as haue ſhewed themſelues enimies to the ſtate; eſpeciallie one I will name, to wit one Radulpho, whome I neuer talked withall but once, and then I liked not his dealing, he ſhewed me two letters which he ſaid came from the pope.

He is ſorie for the violating of his promiſe made to the quéene.

He maketh ſhew to cléere himſelfe in diuerſe points.

Then ſaid one of the ſhiriffes of London, Good my lord be ſhort; he ſaid, I will be ſhort, I haue not much to ſaie, good gentlemen beare witneſſe, I come not to cléere my ſelfe. I ſaw two letters, the one inciphered and the other diſciphered. I was charged to confeder with the rebels, I take God to witneſſe I did neuer. The ſecondarie interrupted him and ſaid, I praie you my lord go not about to cléere your ſelfe, you haue béene tried as honourablie, as anie noble man hath euer béene in this land: I praie you make ſhort, for the houre is paſt, it is vpon the perill of their liues (meaning the ſhiriffes) they can not ſuffer you.

He meaneth confeſſion of his religion.

Or I praie you giue me leaue a little; I do confeſſe my fault. This is my confeſſion, I do confeſſe it, notwithſtanding my religion. It hath béen reported I haue béene a papiſt, a confederer with papiſts, a friend to them and a mainteiner of them and of their religion: I take God to witneſſe I am none, nor euer was a papiſt ſince I knew what religion ment. I haue had friends, yea familiar friends, yea peraduenture ſeruants that haue béene papiſts, with whom I haue borne: but I take God to witneſſe I am none, I vtterlie defie the pope and his religion, and I hope to be ſaued onlie by my faith in Ieſus Chriſt: and I vtterlie abhorre all mans traditions. And if at anie time I did giue countenance to anie papiſt, whereby anie good man or the church was offended, I aſke them mercie: there is no man that alloweth better of this religion than I do. Then he was deſired againe to be ſhort. Now touching the goodneſſe of the queenes maieſtie, I am much bound to hir grace. I do thanke hir humblie for that ſhe hath forgiuen all my offenſes, and hath prolonged my life ſo long. You ſée how good ſhe hath béen to me, I haue béene looked for here long before this time, God ſend hir long ouer you to reigne, ſhe hath promiſed me to be gratious to my poore orphan children. God grant my death maie end all troubles. And if anie of you haue anie one faction, or two, or thrée, or mo, let him giue ouer & forſake it. Manie wiſh and deſire diuerſe things: but they know not what they wiſh. They ſéeke their owne deſtruction. If euerie man ſhould haue his wiſh, God knoweth how manie would repent, whatſoeuer they are.

He confeſſeth himſelfe much bound to the quéenes maieſtie.

He exhorteth to beware of factions.

The quéene hath promiſed in my death to forgiue all, and I praie God that ſhe maie liue manie yeeres. I remember well the words of that good father and holie martyr Latimer. He told the people, that for their wickedneſſe God would take awaie his bleſſing from them. I praie God the contrarie, that your good life maie be ſuch, that God maie turne awaie thoſe plagues that he hath thretned. He ſpake it in an honorable place, in the pulpit, before king Edward: yet let not this place diſcredit my words. I praie God preſerue the quéens maieſtie, and that ſhe maie liue and reigne ouer you manie yeares: euen to the worlds end, which I beléeue that ſome one aliue ſhall ſée. Then he knéeled downe and praied, and maſter Nowell knéeled downe by him and wept, with manie others. His praier was vnto God for the continuance of the truth of his goſpell; he praied alſo inſtantlie for the quéenes moſt proſperous reigne, and knéeling vpon his knees he ſaid two pſalms, to wit Miſerere and Domine ne in furore, and in the firſt pſalme he praied to build the wals of Ieruſalem, according to the pſalme. Maſter Nowell ſaid, That is meant of Chriſts church. I know that well (ſaid he) I meane not the church of Rome, I abhorre it, but the church of England and of all the world whereſoeuer it be.

He putteth the people in mind of Latimers words vttered before king Edward.

He praieth and manie more with him: the effect of his praier.

I haue forgotten one thing, I thanke thée God that haſt put me in mind of it. I forgiue all the world and I aſke all the world forgiueneſſe: and I proteſt before God, if I knew anie particular man I had offended, I would namelie aſke him forgiueneſſe. Then he read the other pſalme, wherein adulterie is mentioned, and when he came to that point, he ſaid: I would I were as cleare in euerie thing as in that, ſauing for thought, and that is as euill. Then he ſaid a collect, and in the end he ſaid, In manus tuas Domine, &c: in Latine and Engliſh. And then he deſired the people to praie for him while he liued, for (quoth he) I looke not to haue anie excuſe after my death. Then he imbraſed ſir Henrie Leie, and after a few ſecret words betwéene them, Maſter Nowell ſtood vp and ſaid to the people, He doth deſire you all with one voice to ſaie Lord haue mercie vpon him, and after to ſaie no more words, nor to make anie ſhout or ſhritching for troubling of him in his laſt viſitation. Then the duke knéeled downe, and maſter Nowell bowed himſelfe towards him with manie imbraſings, and tooke there leaue each of other. Then the executioner deſired him knéeling to forgiue him: and he tooke him by the hand and forgaue him, and then requeſted ſight of the axe; Maſter Nowell ſaid, The ſight will trouble you. He anſwered; No, let me ſée it: but he ſhewed it not, & then he laied his necke vpon the blocke. Then the executioner ſaid; My lord your head lieth not well. I will make it lie well, ſaith he, & therewith lifting vp his bodie he laid his necke euen vpon the blocke, which doone it was cut cleane off at one ſtroke. This was the end of the duke of Northfolke, a man whoſe life God had limited, as alſo the eſtate wherein he ſometimes flouriſhed: both which (as all things elſe) in a ſhort time vaniſhed. Let all degrées therefore learne, both by precept and example to know God principallie, ſecondlie their ſoucreigne Gods annointed, and finallie themſelues to be ſubiects; forgetting their owne honour, which puffeth men vp manie times with the wind of vainglorie, euen to their owne ouerthrow, whileſt they become inſolent, and dreame that the tranſitorie aduancements of this world will make them princes, princes péeres; naie (O monſtrous madneſſe) gods, whereas all things are mutable and momentanie, and the higher that a man dooth clime, the greater is his fall; as verie aptlie ſaith the poet in theſe words:

He aſketh all the world forgiueneſſe, &c.

He iuſtifieth himſelfe againſt the filthie ſinne of adulterie.

He knéeleth downe and ſubmitteth himſelfe to the axe.

The diſcourſe and catalog of all the dukes of England by creation or deſcent ſince the time of the conqueſt.

TWo ſentences, the one an Italian prouerbe, the other an old Engliſh byword haue mooued me to make this collection (at the requeſt of an other) of all the dukes of England. Firſt the Italian ſaid that France cannot abide anie treaſurors, England anie dukes, nor Scotland anie kings, the truth whereof néed no confirming examples to be ſet downe, ſith (as ſaith the philoſopher) things ſubiect to the ſenſe néed no further proofe. Secondlie the Engliſh ſaieng hath béen, that a Nag of fiue ſhillings ſhall beare all the dukes of England & Scotland, being ſpoken in no ſenſe of diſgrace to that honorable title: but onelie to ſhew that the time ſhould come, wherein there ſhould be no dukes in England or Scotland. How true the ſame is in England, and likelie againe to be in Scotland (being once before verified in that realme, for about fiue years paſt, there was no duke there alſo when the duke of Linenx was baniſhed) euerie man dooth well perceiue. For the death of this Thomas duke of Northfolke, being the laſt of that honour hath iuſtified the ſame in England. And the turmoils in Scotland may perhaps ſhortlie verifie the ſame in that countrie, in which there were neuer ſo few dukes, as that they cannot make the firſt and ſmalleſt number: for being but one in that countrie, and he verie yoong (which is the duke of Linenx) if he ſhould miſcarie, the ſame would againe alſo be as true there as it is now héere. For which cauſe to perpetuat the memories of ſuch antiquities and titles of honor, as age hath conſumed with the perſons which inioied ſuch prehemences in England, I will from the firſt creation of anie duke ſince the conqueſt recite the creation, deſcent, and ſucceſſion of all the dukes of England, ſhewing firſt the time of the creation of ſuch dukes, & ſecondlie the deſcent of all ſuch dukes as are lineallie iſſued out of that crea-

Edward the blacke prince, duke of Cornwall.

Edward (the eldeſt ſonne of king Edward the third) being ſurnamed the blacke prince, was made duke of Cornewall the eleauenth of Edward the third, in the yeare of our redemption 1337, when he was yet but yong. This yong prince was the firſt duke in England ſince the conqueſt, and Cornewall was by that creation the firſt place that was erected to a dukedome. Which duke, being the flower of chiualrie in his time, died about the fiftith yéere of king Edward the third, in the yeare of Chriſt 1376, and was buried at Canturburie.

Henrie Plantagenet duke of Lancaſter.

Henrie Plantagenet alias Tort Colle (bicauſe his head leaned ſomewhat to one ſhoulder like the great Macedone king Alexander, whoſe valure in feats of armes this Henrie did alſo imitate) being ſonne to Henrie of Monmouth earle of Lancaſter, was in like ſort earle of Lancaſter by deſcent. After which he was created earle of Darbie, as ſome ſaie in the eleauenth yeare of Edward the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1337, other ſaie in the fouretéenth yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of our ſaluation 1340. He was created duke of Lancaſter as ſome haue in the ſix & twentith yeare of Edward the third, as other haue the ſeauen & twentith, and as the third ſort haue the eight & twentith yeare of Edward the third. He was lord ſteward of England, & lieutenant of Guines. This man was wiſe, glorious in fortune, and full of honor in feates of armes, whileſt he was yong: he died the fiue and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of Chriſt 1361, being one of the firſt knights which were made at the firſt inſtitution of the honorable order of the garter, and the ſecond duke that was made in England. He had iſſue two daughters & heires, Mawd maried to William duke of Bauare, earle of Henalt, Zeland & Holand, which after became mad; & Blanch maried to Iohn of Gant, fourth ſonne to Edward the third.

Iohn of Gant duke of Lancaſter.

Iohn Plantagenet, ſurnamed of Gant in Flanders, where he was borne, the fourth ſonne to king Edward the third, was firſt by his father in the fiue and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of Chriſt 1361, made duke of Lancaſter, ſo that he was duke of Lancaſter, earle of Lincolne, Saliſburie, Darbie and Leiceſter, king of Caſtile & Lirne, and ſteward of England. He married thrée wiues, the firſt was Blanch the daughter and heire of Henrie duke of Lancaſter, earle of Leiceſter, Lincolne, Sariſburie & Darbie, in whoſe right he obteined all thoſe titles of honor, whome he maried in the thirtith thrée yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of our Lord 1359, and by hir had iſſue Henrie Plantagenet duke of Hereford: Philip married in the tenth yeare of Richard the ſecond (in the yeare of Chriſt 1386, as ſome ſaie; or rather 1385, as others haue) to the king of Portingale: and Eliſabeth married to Iohn Holland erle of Huntington. His ſecond wife was Conſtance eldeſt daughter to Peter king of Caſtile, whom he maried in the ſix & fortith yeare of Edward the third, being in the yeare of Chriſt 1372, by whome he had iſſue Margaret maried to the king of Caſtile, which Conſtance died in the yere of Chriſt 1394, as ſaith Ypodigma. His third wife was Katharine the widow of Otho Swinford, and daughter to ſir Paten Ruet alias Guien king at armes, whom he maried in the nintéenth yeare of king Richard the ſecond, being the yere of Chriſt 1395, or as ſome ſaie 1396, by this woman he had before mariage Thomas Beaufort, Iohn Beaufort, Henrie Beaufort cardinall of Wincheſter, & Iane maried to Rafe Neuill earle of Weſtmerland, all which children were in the twentith of Richard the ſecond, being in the yeare 1396, legitimated by parlement; at which time the ſaid Iohn of Gant gaue them the ſurname of Beaufort.

*2- fol.

This Iohn of Gant was alſo earle of Richmond and conſtable of France in the time of Richard the ſecond, who made him alſo duke of Aquitaine in the fourtéenth yeare of his reigne, being the yeare 1390. This Iohn of Gant died in the two & twentith yeare of Richard the ſecond, in the yeare 1398, or as ſaith Ypodigma 1399, & was buried in the quéere of ſaint Paules church of London, on the north ſide.

Henrie Pla tagenet du of Lancaſt and Heref king of E land.

Henrie Plantagenet alias Henrie of Bollinbroke ſo ſurnamed of the place of his birth, the eldeſt ſon of the ſaid Iohn, was by inheritance duke of Lancaſter, earle of Leiceſter, Saliſburie, Darbie, and Lincolne: he was created duke of Hereford by Richard the ſecond, who made him earle of Darbie, in the ninth yeare of his reigne, in the yeare of Chriſt 1386, and after made him duke of Hereford in the 21 yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of Chriſt 1397. Which Henrie of Bollinbroke maried in the 9 yéere of the reigne of Richard the ſecond, in the yeare of Chriſt 1386 Marie the ſecond daughter, & one of the heires of Humphrie Bohune earle of Hereford & Eſſex, and coneſtable of England, which woman died in the yéere of Chriſt 1394, about the eightéenth yéere of Richard the ſecond. This Henrie was after king of England by the name of Henrie the fourth.

Lionell Pl tagenet du of Claren

Lionell Plantagenet ſurnamed Lionell of Antwerpe in Brabant, becauſe he was there borne, being the third ſon of king Edward the third, was erle of Vlſter in Ireland by his wife, and created duke of Clarence in the 36 yéere of Edward the third, in the yéere of Chriſt 1462: but other ſaie he was made duke in the 33 yeer of Edward the third. He had two wiues, the firſt Eliſabeth, ſome ſaie Eleanor (but rightlie as I doo ſuppoſe) the daughter of William Burgh earle of Vlſter, by whom he had iſſue Philip maried to Edmund earle of March; the ſecond wife was Ielant or Vielant daughter to Galeas duke of Millane, to whom he was maried, as ſaith the Engliſh chronicle, in the two and fortith yéere of Edward the third, in the yéere of Chriſt 1368: which yéere the Italians count 1367, by whom he had no iſſue. This Lionell was ſomtime regent of France, & died 1368.

Edmund Plantage duke of Yo

Edmund of Langleie, fift ſon to Edward the third made earle of Cambridge about the ſix and thirtith yéere of Edward the third, being the yéere of Chriſt 1361, was made duke of Yorke in the eight, or (as ſome haue) the ninth yéere of the ſaid king Richard the ſecond. He in the ſix and fortith yéere of king Edward the third, in the yéere that the word became fleſh 1372, married Iſabell one of the daughters of Peter king of Caſtile, and ſiſter by the mother to Conſtance ſecond wife to Iohn of Gant duke of Lancaſter, brother to this Edmund, who was about the twentith yéere of Richard the ſecond protector of England, while the king was in Ireland, which Iſabell died in the yéere of Chriſt 1394, being about the eightéenth yéere of Richard the ſecond, & by the kings commandement was buried in the friers of Langleie. This Edmund had iſſue by his wife Iſabell Edward earle of Rutland, and duke Albermerle, Richard earle of Cambridge, and one daughter called Conſtance married to Thomas lord Spenſer: he died the ſecond (as ſome haue) or rather the third (as others haue) of Henrie the 4, in the yéere of Chriſt, as hath Ypodigma 1402, and was buried at Langleie.

Edward Plantage duke of Al bermerle an Yorke,

Edward Plantagenet ſon and heire of Edmund of Langleie duke of Yorke, was in the fouretéenth of Richard the ſecond created erle of Rutland in his fathers life, in the yéere of Chriſt 1390, and in the twentith yeare of Richard the ſecond, or rather the 21 of the ſame king, being the yeare of Chriſt 1397, he was made duke of Albermerle or Aumerle, and after his fathers death he was duke of Yorke: he was ſlaine at the battell of Agincourt, in the third yeare of Henrie the fift, being the yeare of Chriſt 1415, he married Margaret, or rather more trulie Philip the ladie Fitzwater, and widow to ſir Iohn Gollafer knight, baſtard ſonne to ſir Iohn Gollafer of Cercedone or Sareſdone knight in Oxfordſhire. And here becauſe I haue mentioned the name of Gollafer, although it be digreſſing from my firſt purpoſes, onelie to treat of the dukes of England, I thinke it not amiſſe to ſaie ſomewhat of theſe two knights, of the Gollafers, ſir Iohn the father, and ſir Iohn the ſonne. This ſir Iohn Gollafer the father being the ſonne of Iohn Gollafer eſquier (whoſe anceſtors as farre as I can learne had their firſt originall from Roger Gollafer of Cercedone in the time of king Iohn, and was buried in Domo capitulari de Bruera in com. oxon.) married Anne the daughter and heire of ſir Thomas Langleie lord of Langleie in Oxfordſhire (now at this daie in the yeare 1585, by grant of quéene Eliſabeth, in the poſſeſſion of Robert Sutton or Dudleie earle of Leiceſter) which Anne died ſhortlie after without anie iſſue by him. After whoſe death this ſir Iohn Gollafer married Iſabell the ladie of Miſſenden (dwelling at Miſſenden) and of Queintone in Buckinghamſhire, ſhe being daughter to ſir Barnard Brocas. But this ſir Iohn Gollafer hauing no iſſue by the ſaid Eliſabeth, and deſirous by ſome meanes or other to continue his name (which yet he could not make perpetuall nor of anie long continuance) made choiſe in the life of his wife Iſabell of another woman, whome he vſed for procreations cauſe, and by hir had iſſue two baſtards, one called Iennet Pulham after prioreſſe of Burnham by Windſore, and an other baſtard called after the father Iohn Gollafer, who in following time became a knight. Afterward this ſir Iohn the father died at Queintone in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand, thrée hundred, ſeauentie and nine, falling partlie in the ſecond and third yeare of R·2 ~~Henrie the fourth~~, and was buried at the Graie friers in Oxford, whoſe wife Iſabell was after buried in Miſſenden priorie.

After the death of this ſir Iohn the father, ſir Iohn Gollafer knight his baſe ſonne being lord of Langleie, married Phillip ladie Fitzwater, after maried to this duke of Yorke (as before is ſaid) which ſir Iohn Gollafer died at Wallingford, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand, thrée hundred, ninetie and ſix, being the twentith yeare of Richard the ſecond, and was buried at Weſtminſter, néere vnto the toome of Richard the ſecond. Which ladie Philip died in the time of Henrie the ſixt, and was buried at Weſtminſter, néere vnto hir huſband, whoſe ſtatelie toome is yet extant, on the ſouth ſide almoſt directlie oueragainſt the toome of Richard the ſecond. Thus this much for the name of Gollafer; and ſo againe to the dukes of England.

Thomas Plantagenet ſurnamed of Woodſtocke duke of Gloceſter.

Thomas Plantagenet, otherwiſe called Thomas of Woodſtocke, ſixt ſonne to king Edward the third, was created earle of Buckingham, the firſt yeare of Richard the ſecond, in the yeare one thouſand, thrée hundred, ſeauentie and ſeauen, the daie of his coronation before dinner. This man was high conſtable of England, and created duke of Gloceſter, in the eight yeare of Richard the ſecond, of whom is more eſpeciall mention made in the treatiſe of the conſtables of England, pag. 867.

Thomas Holland, brother by the mothers ſide to king Richard the ſecond, and ſonne to the lord Thomas Holland (earle of Kent, in the right of Iane, daughter and heire to Edmund Plantagenet, ſurnamed of Woodſtocke earle of Kent) was aduanced to the title of duke of Surreie in the two and twentith yeare of king Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand, thrée hundred, ninetie and ſeauen, he maried Alice the daughter of Richard Fitzallen earle of Arundell. He had iſſue ſix daughters & heires; Margaret married to Iohn Beaufort earle of Summerſet, and marqueſſe Dorſet; Alice maried to Thomas Montacute earle of Saliſburie; Eliſabeth, married to Iohn lord Neuill ſonne to Rafe Neuill the firſt earle of Weſtmerland, and after his death to Edward Charelton lord Powis; Ioane married to Edmund of Langleie duke of Yorke; and Bridget a nun at Barking. This man with others, at a parlement held the firſt yeare of Henrie the fourth, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand, thrée hundred, ninetie and nine, was depriued of his name of duke, & of all honours, togither with the dignities belonging to a duke, & was after in the ſame yeare (rebelling againſt king Henrie the fourth) taken by the men of Circeſter, and beheaded in the ſame towne, after that he had cauſed the towne to be ſet on fire.

Shortlie after which, in the yeare of Chriſt 1413, being in the thirtéenth of Edward the fourth, this duke was found dead in the ſea betwéene Douer & Calis; but how he came there none could certenlie declare. He died without iſſue, leauing his ſiſter Anne his heire, maried (as before) to Iohn Neuill brother to Rafe earle of Weſtmerland.

Robert Were duke of Ireland.

Robert Were earle of Oxford and marqueſſe of Dubline was in the yéere of Chriſt 1386, in the tenth of Richard the ſecond created duke of Ireland, he died without iſſue at Louaine in great penurie and vexation of mind, as hath Ypodigma, in the yéere of Chriſt 1392, being about the ſixtéenth of king Richard the ſecond, he maried the daughter of Ingerame de Couſſe earle of Bedford, and after diuorced from hir he married Lancecrona one of meane parentage.

Margaret Segraue ducheſſe of Norffolke.

Margaret ladie Segraue the daughter and heire of Thomas Brotherton earle of Norffolke and marſhall of England, was created ducheſſe of Norffolke in the one and twentith yeare of king Richard the ſecond, ſhe had two huſbands, whereof the firſt was John lord Segraue; by whom ſhe had iſſue Eliſabeth married to John Mowbreie the third of that name. But in the end the matter was ſo ordered, that this duke of Norffolke was baniſhed for euer: whervpon taking his iourneie to Jeruſalem, he died at Venice in his returne frō the ſaid citie of Jeruſalem in the firſt yeare of king Henrie the fourth, about the yeare of our redemption 1399. He was created marqueſſe Dorſet and duke of Summerſet by king Henrie the ſixt, he was made regent of Normandie, and loſt the whole countrie to the French: for which after his comming out of Normandie in the nine and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, he was on the ſixt of December the ſame yeare, being the yeare of our Lord 1450, apprehended and put vnder arreſt, and his goods by the commons fowlie deſpoiled and caried awaie from the Blacke friers. Quos mors quos Martis ſors ſæua, ſuæq; ſororis
Bella proſtrarunt, villæ medióque necarunt,
Mors ſic occiſos tumulauerat hîc ſimul ipſos,

Et medium ſine quo vult hîc requieſcere nemo,

Henrie Beaufort duke of Summerſet.

Henrie Beaufort eldeſt ſonne to Edmund duke of Summerſet was after the death of his father erle Morton, marqueſſe Dorſet, and duke of Summerſet, he was capteine of Calis; who with other nobles in the nine and thirtith of Henrie the ſixt ſlue the duke of Yorke at the battell of Wakefield, in the yeare of our redemption 1460; according to the accompt of England. Shortlie after which, K. Henrie the ſixt, whom this duke ſupported all that he could, was depoſed, & Edward the fourth crowned. Touching which depoſing of the one, & crowning of the other, although it be impertinent to the treatiſe of the dukes of England, hauing here ſo good place therfore, I will ſet downe ſuch verſes as I haue found in I. Whethamſted, adding further ſuch other verſes alſo as I find in him, concerning a battell fiercelie fought at Ferrbrig in Yorkeſhire, in this ſort:

In the yeare of Chriſt 1460.

X. numero ſeni lapſi ſunt circiter anni,
Poſtquam ſucceſſit lex iuris, iuréue rexit,
Anglorum regnum vis non ius rexerat ipſum

Hæc ſpes plebis erat, cleri chorus hæcq; putabat.
Det ceu ſperatur regnum Deus vt ſtatuatur,
Et plebs tranquillè viuat clerus atq; quietè.

Then of the time of that former recited warre, in which the northerne men were ouercome, there were theſe verſes made, vpon the exceſſe and euill which they outragiouſlie committed in the ſouth parts of England, without regard of God, obedience to their naturall prince, reuerence to the church, loue to their natiue countrie, or benefite to themſelues:

The battell of Ferribrig the thirteenth of March in the yeare 1461, according to the accompt of the that begin the yeare at Ianuarie.

Furthermore, touching the title of the ſame king Edward the fourth to the gouernement of the kingdome of England, and of his right and truth thereunto were theſe following verſes compoſed, to declare the depoſition of king Henrie the ſixt, as beforeſaid in the coronation of Edward the fourth, and how the ſame kingdome of England, with all the members thereof, did belong to Edward the fourth, as vnto the rightfull lineall heire to the ſame with his pedegrée, prouing the ſame alſo in this ſort:

[a] King Edward yͤ third.
[b] Lionell duke of Clarence third ſonne to Edward the third.
[c] Iohn of Gant fourth ſonne to Edward the 3.
[d] Henrie the fourth.
[e] Henrie the fift.

[l] King Henrie the ſixt his diſpoſition deſcribed.
[m] Henrie the fift.
[n] Henrie the ſixt.
[o] Edward erle of March, after king Edward the fourth.

Thus after this long digreſſion from the matter of the duke of Summerſet, bicauſe I would ſet downe all the verſes of Whethamſted, I muſt yet alſo ad other verſes found in his regiſter, mentioning ſome part of the doings of the northerne men before ſpoken of: which verſes although they ſhould haue gone before, yet I thinke better here than not at all to write them in this ſort. Shortly after the foreſaid battell of Wakefield wherin the duke of Yorke was ſlaine, and before the depoſing of king Henrie the ſixt, he had a battell at S. Albons, called the ſecond battell of S. Albons with the northern men (following the quéene & this duke of Sūmerſets faction) & now were come as far as S. Albons, on Shrouetueſdaie the ſeuentéenth daie of Februarie in the ſaid yeare of Chriſt 1460, where the king was put to flight, and fled to the quéene. Touching which battell alſo, thus writeth that learned abbat of ſaint Albons Iohn Whethamſted in his ancient regiſter:

The 17 of Februarie 1461 after the account of ſuch as begin the yeare at Ianuarie.

Thus to returne to the duke of Summerſet, we ſaie that afterward in the firſt yeare of king Edward the fourth, the ſaid duke of Summerſet fled to Yorke to king Henrie the ſixt, and the quéene, who altogither fled from thenſe to Berwike, and ſo to Edenburgh. Wherevpon by parlement in the firſt yeare of Edward the fourth 1461, this duke was atteinted, and his goods and lands ſeized for the king. But after that time king Edward the fourth beſieging the caſtels of Bamburgh, Dunſtenburgh, and Alnewike, this duke of Summerſet and others yéelded thoſe forts to the king on Chriſtmas éeuen, in the third yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption 1463. For which cauſe this duke was taken againe into the kings fauour, who gaue him a thouſand marks by yeare, whereof he was neuer paid. Notwithſtanding all which, in the yeare following, being the fourth yeare of Edward the fourth, in Maie, in the yeare of Chriſt 1464, this duke with others raiſed an armie againſt the king, in which battell he was taken (with Robert erle of Hungerford) by Iohn Neuill earle of Northumberland, and beheaded. He died without lawfull iſſue, leauing behind him a baſe ſonne called Charles Summerſet, by king Henrie the eight created earle of Worceſter.

Edmund Beaufort duke of Summerſet.

Edmund Beaufort ſonne of the foreſaid Edmund, and brother and heire to this laſt Henrie duke of Summerſet, was alſo duke of Summerſet. This man in the eleuenth yeare of Edward the fourth, being the yeare of Chriſt 1471, fléeing into the church of Teukeſburie at the battell of Teukeſburie (which quéene Margaret the wife of Henrie the ſixt and hir ſonne prince Edward had againſt king Edward the fourth) loſt then the field. After which this duke was taken out of the church, and was there beheaded in the ſaid eleuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, and died without iſſue.

Richard Plãtagenet duke of Yorke.

Richard Plantagenet, ſonne and heire to Richard earle of Cambridge, was created duke of Yorke by king Henrie the ſixt: he was alſo earle of Cambridge, Ulſter and March, lord of Wigmore and Clare, lieutenant of the realme of France and duchie of Normandie. Of this man ſée more in the protectors of England.

George Plantagenet duke of Clarence.

George Plantagenet the ſecond ſonne to Richard duke of Yorke, was make duke of Clarence by his elder brother king Edward the fourth when he came to the crowne, in the yeare of Chriſt 1461, being the firſt yeare of his reigne. Of this George I haue ſomwhat intreated in my diſcourſe of the coneſtables of England, pag. 869, and in my diſcourſe of the protectors of England.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Gloceſter.

He tooke ſhip to performe his baniſhment the third of Maie, and ſailed towards France, but was on the ſea incountered by a ſhip of the tower named the Nicholas, by which he was taken and beheaded, and his bodie caſt vp at Douer ſands, and buried in the charterhouſe at Hull. He maried Alice the daughter and heire of Thomas Chaucer, ſon to that famous poet Geffreie Chaucer, by which wife the maner of Ewelme, commonlie called Newelme in Oxfordſhire came to the Pooles. Fratres Amyclæi Pollux cum Caſtore
Potuere ſic cum morte depaciſcier,
Vt cùm alter illorum eſſet mortuus, tamen
Alter ſupereſſet, & reuerſus ſortibus
Viciſsim vterque vtriuſque morte viueret.
Cur Parca nunc crudelior eſt, quàm olim fuit?
Fratres duos nuper ea, quales hactenus
Nec vidit vnquam, nec videbit Anglia
Lumina duo, duóque propugnacula
Fortiſsima virtutis, reique publicæ,
Crudelis ab vno perêmit funere.
Virtus nequaquam illam, nec egregia indoles
Mouit, nec Edwardi regis, nec optimæ
Matris, neque totius gemitus Britanniæ.
O dura dura mors! ô ſæua numina!

Henrie Fitz Roie duke of Richmont.

Henrie Fitz Roie the baſe ſon to king Henrie the eight, begotten vpon Eliſabeth Blunt the ladie Talboiſe, was by his father firſt created earle of Summerſet and Northampton, and after duke of Richmont. This duke was verie forward in the knowledge of toongs, and alſo in knightlie actiuitie; as may appéere by due conſideration of the hiſtorie in place where he is mentioned. He loued Iohn Leland the reuerend antiquarie, who preſented vnto the ſaid duke a booke of copies, whereby he might learne to write Romane letters great & ſmall, as appéereth by this hexaſtichon, which I find among the ſaid Iohn Lelands written epigrams in this maner ſet downe:

Ad illuſtriſſimum Henricum ducem Richmontanum.

Quo Romana modo maiuſcula littera pingi,
Pingi quo poſsit littera parua modo,
Hic liber ecce tibi ſignis monſtrabit apertis
Princeps, Aonij ſpes & alumne gregis:
Qui tibi ſi placeat (quod certè ſpero futurum)
Maxima pro paruo munere dona dabis.]

He died without iſſue the two and twentith of Iulie, in the eight and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, in the yéere of our redemption 1536, and was buried at Thetford in Norffolke, hauing maried Marie the daughter of Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke.

Then king Henrie being dead, he in the firſt yeare of king Edward the ſixt, which was the yéere of our redemption 1546, was made protector of England, and immediatlie therevpon created duke of Summerſet, being vncle by the mothers ſide vnto the ſaid king Edward the ſixt. This man had manie honors and offices, as maie appéere by his ſtile, which he prefixed before a miſſiue perſuaſorie ſent to the Scots for the marriage of their yoong quéene Marie to our yoong king Edward the ſixt in this ſort: Edward by the grace of God duke of Summerſet, earle of Hertford, vicount Beauchampe lord Seimor, vncle to the kings highneſſe of England, gouernor of his moſt roiall perſon, and protector of all his realmes, dominions, and ſubiects, lieutenant generall of his maieſties armies both by ſea and land, treaſuror and earle marſhall of England, gouernor of the iles of Gerneſeie and Ierſeie, and knight of the moſt honorable order of the garter, &c. This ſtile he had, which I haue béene the more willing to ſet downe, becauſe I doo not remember that anie ſubiect did with like ſhew publiſh anie ſuch ſtile before his time. Which honors he did not long inioie: for were it for malice of ſome of the nobilitie, diſdaining ſuch honor; or for cauſe in him offending the laws, or for his ouer careleſſe good diſpoſition, that ſuſpected no ſuch euill from his enimies: he was the ſecond time on the ſixt of October in the fift yéere of king Edward the ſixt, being the yeare of Chriſt 1551 committed priſoner to the tower, and the two and twentith daie of Ianuarie following he was beheaded at tower hill, and buried in the tower chappell. He had two wiues, whereof the firſt was Katharine the daughter of ſir William Filioll of Woodland knight, by whome he had a ſon called Edward: his ſecond wife was Anne the daughter of ſir Edward Stanhope, by whom he had iſſue Edward earle of Hertford, Henrie now liuing, and Edward, with Anne (married the third of Iune, in the fourth yéere of the reigne of king Edward the ſixt, in the yéere one thouſand fiue hundred and fiftie to Iohn lord Dudleie, eldeſt ſonne to Iohn earle of Warwike and duke of Northumberland) Ione, Marie, Katharine, and Eliſabeth.

Henrie Greie duke of Suffolke.

Henrie Greie marqueſſe Dorſet, lord Ferrers of Groobie, Harrington, Boneuile and Aſtlie, was at Hampton court created duke of Suffolke, on the eleuenth of October, in the fift yéere of the reigne of king Edward the ſixt, being the yéere of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and one: who in the firſt yéere of quéene Marie, being the yéere of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and thrée, ſuppoſing that the quéene would marrie a ſtranger, did flie into Leiceſter and Warwikeſhires with a ſmall companie, making proclamation againſt the quéenes marriage with the prince of Spaine: but the people inclined not vnto him. Wherevpon a companie being ſent out after him, vnder the leading of the earle of Huntington, the firſt daie of Februarie proclamation was made at London, that the duke was diſcomfited and fled with his two brethren. After which the tenth of Februarie, the duke with his brother ſir Iohn Greie was brought from Couentrie (where he remained thrée daies after his taking, in the houſe and cuſtodie of Chriſtopher Warren alderman of that towne) by the earle of Huntington, & attended with thrée hundred men to the tower. Where remaining a certeine ſpace, he was on the thrée and twentith of Februarie beheaded at tower hill; and buried in the chappell of the tower (as I haue heard.) He married Francis one of the daughters to Charles Brandon duke of Suffolke, by whom he had iſſue Iane, married to Gilford the ſonne of Iohn duke of Northumberland, and died without iſſue; Katharine and Marie.

Iohn Sutton of Dudleie duke of Northumberland.

Iohn Sutton of Dudleie created by king Henrie the eight vicount Liſle, being admerall, lord great chamberleine, lord great maiſter and earle of Warwike, was after on the eleuenth daie of October, the fift yéere of king Edward the ſixt, being the yéere of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and one, created duke of Northumberland. He, after the death of king Edward, tooke armes, and proclamed quéene Iane, daughter to Henrie duke of Suffolke; meaning to exclude quéene Marie. But ſhortlie after perceiuing quéene Marie to be proclamed at London, this duke did alſo proclame hir at Cambridge. Notwithſtanding all which he was arreſted in the kings college there by one maiſter Sleg ſergeant at armes, and after anew arreſted by the earle of Arundell, Henrie Fitzallen (ſent thither for that cauſe) who brought him to London, where this duke was the fiue and twentith of Iulie, in the ſaid firſt yeare of queene Marie commited to the tower. Shortlie after which, he was the eighteenth of Auguſt following arreigned at Weſtminſter, there condemned, and beheaded on tower hill the two and twentith of the ſame moneth: whoſe bodie with the head was buried in the tower, he being the laſt duke that was created in England. He maried Iane the daughter of ſir Edward Gilford knight, the ſiſter and heire to ſir Henrie Gilford knight, of whoſe children I will not ſpeake, bicauſe they are yet freſh in memorie. And thus farre Francis Thin, touching the creation and the ſucceſſion in lineall deſcents of all the dukes of England ſince the conqueſt.

French ambaſſadors frō Charles the ninth came into England.

About the ninth of Iune, Francis duke of Montmorencie, chiefe marſhall of France, gouernour and lieutenant of the Ile of France, generall to Charles the ninth king of France, and Paule de Foix of the priuie councell of the ſaid king, and Bertrand de Saligners, lord de la Mothfenelon, knights of the order of S. Michaell, ambaſſadors for the ſame king, arriued at Douer. The fourteenth daie they ſhot London bridge toward Summerſet houſe at the Strand, where they were lodged. The fifteenth daie being ſundaie, the ſaid ambaſſadors repaired to the White hall, where they were honourablie receiued of the queenes maieſtie, with hir nobilitie: and there in hir graces chappell, about one of the clocke in the after noone, the articles of treatie, league or confederacie and ſure friendſhip (concluded at Blois the ninteenth of Aprill as is afore ſhewed) betwixt the queenes maieſtie, and the French king being read, the ſame was by hir maieſtie and his ambaſſadors confirmed to be obſerued and kept, without innouation or violation, &c. The reſt of that daie, with great part of the night following, was ſpent in great triumph, with ſumptuous bankets.

League with France confirmed at weſtminſter.

S. Georges feaſt at windſor.

The eighteenth of Iune, the feaſt of ſaint George was holden at Windſor, where the French ambaſſadors were roiallie feaſted, & Francis duke of Montmorencie was ſtalled knight of the moſt honourable order of the garter. The eight and twentith daie of Iune, the forenamed ambaſſadors departed from London toward France. ¶ The fourteenth of Iune, Thomas lord Wharton deceaſed in his houſe of Chanon row at Weſtminſter. The thirteenth daie of Iulie, the queenes maieſtie at Whitehall made ſir William Cicill lord of Burghleie, lord high treaſuror of England: lord William Howard, late lord chamberleine, lord priuie ſeale: the earle of Suſſex, lord chamberleine: ſir Thomas Smith principall ſecretarie: and Chriſtopher Hatton, eſquier capteine of the gard.

Sir William Cicill lord treaſuror, lord priuie ſeale, lord chamberleine, with other officers.

A treatiſe of the treaſurors of England ſet downe out of ancient hiſtories and records, as they ſucceeded in order of time and in the reigne of the kings.

Collected by Francis Thin in this yeare of Chriſt 85.

This adorning of ſir William Cicill knight, lord Burghleie with the honour of lord treaſuror of England, hath rowſed my enuied pen thorough the malicious barking of ſome (who ſuppoſe nothing well but what they doo themſelues, whereby gaine maie riſe vnto their poſteritie) in this liberall ſort to ſet downe the names and times of ſuch treaſurors as haue liued in England, as hereafter I will doo the chancellors, and that with as good authoritie as theſe ſecret backbiters can challenge anie cunning to themſelues, who ſuppoſe euerie blaſt of their mouth to come forth of Trophonius den, and that they ſpake from the triuet. As I will not arrogate anie thing to my ſelfe, for in truth I ſaie with Socrates, Hoc tantùm ſcio quòd nihil ſcio, or derogate from them that which their worthineſſe maie merit: ſo ſhall I be glad (ſith nothing is at the firſt ſo perfect, but that ſomewhat maie be either augmented or amended to and in it) that this maie whet thoſe enuious perſons to deliuer anie thing to the world, that maie in comptrolling my labours benefit their countrie, which if they will not doo, let them ceaſe their euill ſpeeches: for Qui pergit dicere quæ libet, quæ non vult audiet. And truelie for mine owne part, I will Canere palinodiam, and yeeld them an honourable victorie, if anie better ſhall be produced: and be heartilie glad, that truth (which is all that I ſeeke) maie be brought to perfection. Now how well I haue done it, my ſelfe muſt not be iudge, deſiring pardon of ſuch as either with wiſe modeſtie can or ought to iudge, or with rare antiquities can or will correct what I haue doone; if thorough ignorance we haue committed anie eſcapes or imperfections: further promiſing, that if hereafter we eſpie any of our owne error; or if anie other either friend for good will, or aduerſarie for deſire of reprehenſion ſhall open the ſame vnto me: I will not for defenſe of mine eſtimation, or of pride, or of contention by wranglings or quarrelling vpon authorities, hiſtories and records, wilfullie perſiſt in thoſe faults: but be glad to heare of them, and in the whole and large diſcourſe of the liues of the lord treaſurors (almoſt perfected) corrected them. For (as I ſaid) it is truth of antiquities that I ſeeke for, which being had (either by good intention of my wellwilling friends, or by occaſion and reprehenſion of my enuious emulators) I greatlie eſteeme not. And ſo to the matter.

Saint Dunſtane.

Saint Dunſtane (for I vſe that name more for antiquities than deuoutneſſe cauſe) was treaſuror to Eadred or Eldred king of England, who began his reigne in the yeare that the word became fleſh, nine hundred fortie and ſix: of whome thus writeth Matthew Parker in his booke of the archbiſhops of Canturburie, in the life of Odo Seuerus the two and twentith biſhop of that ſee: Edmundo (the king of England) defuncto, Eadredus corona regia ab Odone redimitus, & rem publicam adminiſtrans, Dunſtanum (vt in eius vita plenius patebit) tam ſingulari amore proſequutus eſt, vt omnes regni theſauros illius cuſtodiæ commendaret.

Hugoline.

Hugoline was treaſuror and chamberleine to Edward the confeſſor, he gaue Deane and Southbrigh to Weſtminſter, which Edward the confeſſor did afterward confirme to that houſe.

Odo biſhop of Baieux.

Odo halfe brother to William the conqueror erle of Kent biſhop of Baieux and chiefe iuſtice of England, was treaſuror in the time of the conqueror, who had at his death (as ſaith Anonymus M.S.) ſixtie thouſand pounds, Excepto auro, & gemmis, & vaſis, & palys.

Geffreie lord Clinton.

Geffreie lord Clinton treaſuror and chamberleine to Henrie the firſt, he about the thirteenth yeare of Henrie the firſt, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand, one hundred and twelue, did found the priorie of Kenelworth, and was after accuſed of treaſon in the one and thirtith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Henrie the firſt: but (as it ſeemed) reſtored (in ſhort time after) to the kings fauour.

Ranulph biſhop of Durham.

Ranulph biſhop of Durham, was treaſuror to the king, whome Florentius Wigornienſis calleth Præcipuum regis placitatorem & regni exactorem, whoſe laſt word Exactor ſome men doo Engliſh treaſuror. Of this man is more ſaid in the chancellors of England.

Roger biſhop of Sariſburie.

Roger biſhop of Sariſburie treaſuror & chancellor of England, as appeareth by Leland, writing in this ſort: Roger biſhop of Sarum treaſuror & chancellor to Henrie the firſt, made the caſtell of Vies ſuch a coſtlie and ſo ſtrong a fort, as was neuer before nor ſince ſet vp by anie biſhop of England. The kéepe or dungeon of it ſet vpon a hill caſt by hand, is a péece of worke of incredible coſt. There appeare in the gate of it ſix or ſeauen places for portculices, and much góodlie building was in it. It is now in ruine, and part of the front of the towers of the gate of the kéepe, and the chappell in it, were carried full vnprofitablie to the building of maſter Beintons houſe at Bromhame, ſcant thrée miles off. There remaine diuerſe góodlie towers, yet in the vtter wall of the caſtell: but all going to ruine. The principall gate that leadeth into the towne is yet of great ſtrength, and hath places of ſeauen or eight portculices. Thus much Leland in his commentaries of England, which I haue here ſet downe, partlie to proue Roger biſhop of Saliſburie to be treaſuror, and partlie to commit to the world all ſuch collections and notes as I can get of his. Beſides which, to proue the ſame Roger treaſuror at the latter end of the reigne of Henrie the firſt, togither with William de Pontlearch at the entering of king Stephan into England, thus writeth one Anonymall chronicle M.S. Stephanus cùm intrauit Angliam, Rogerū Sereſberienſem & Willielmum de Pontlearcus cuſtodes theſaurorum ad ſe traduxit: which William de Pontlearch was a witneſſe with William Stigill to a certeine charter which Ranulph biſhop of Durham made to the moonkes of Durham, commonlie called S. Cutberts moonks, wherein he confirmed to them Blakeſtone, Standrop and Sandropſhire, with the wood of Henworth on the eaſt part of Marneburne, as farre as it goeth to the ſea. This Roger biſhop of Saliſburie died in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand, one hundred, thirtie and nine, being about the fourth yeare of king Stephan, of whome mention is made in the chancellors of England.

William de Pontlearch.

Nigellus biſhop of Elie.

Nigellus the ſecond, biſhop of Elie, nephue to Roger biſhop of Sarum, and treaſuror to Henrie the firſt, was aduanced vnto that biſhoprike of Elie, in the yeare of our redemption, one thouſand, one hundred, thirtie and thrée, the fift calends of Iune, being the thrée and thirtith yeare of the reigne of Henrie the firſt, at whoſe going downe to be inſtalled in the ſaid biſhoprike, he was receiued, with ſuch ioie, that all the whole ſtréet of Elie thorough which he ſhould paſſe, was hanged with curteins and carpets, with ſeats ſet on ech ſide; and the moonks, canons, and clerks, méeting him with proceſſion, with diuers other prieſts ſtanding round about them. After his inſtallation he returned to the diſpatch of the affaires of the kingdome, committing the charge of his biſhoprike to one Raſe ſometime a moonke of Glaſtenburie, and now become an apoſtata. Great contention was betwéene this man and king Stephan. He bought the treaſurorſhip for the ſumme of foure hundred marks of Henrie the ſecond for his ſonne Richard Filius Nigelli, or Fitz Nele, otherwiſe called Richard of Elie. He gouerned the biſhoprike ſix and thirtie yeares, as moſt ſaie, and builded ſaint Iohns college in Cambridge.

But touching the time of his death, and the years of his biſhoprike, I cannot as yet ſet downe anie thing perfectlie; but onelie this contradiction found in the written booke of Elie, which I ſuppoſe to haue riſen by the negligence of the tranſcriber: which is, that he gouerned the ſée of Elie ſix and thirtie years, and died in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred ſixtie and ſix, the third calends of Iune, the firſt houre of the ſixt ferie or fridaie. Which by no account can fall to be true, accounting from the time of the firſt obteining of the biſhoprike in the thrée and thirtith yeare of Henrie the firſt, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred thirtie and thrée. For if you adde the ſix and thirtie yeares of his gouernement to the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred thirtie and thrée, then muſt he die in the yeare of grace one thouſand one hundred ſixtie and nine. And if you will haue him to die in the yeare one thouſand one hundred ſixtie and ſix, then can he gouerne but thrée and thirtie yeares: which thrée and thirtie added to the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred thirtie and thrée, in which he began his gouernement, as all authors agrée, make the value of one thouſand one hundred ſixtie and ſix years of our Lord. So that conſidering the diſcordancie of the time of his death found in the written booke of his life, we cannot (I ſaie) as yet ſet downe anie certeintie of his death. Though I ſuppoſe that to be the trueſt which I find in Triuet, who affirmeth that he died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred ſixtie and nine, and the fiftéenth of king Henrie the ſecond, after that he had gouerned ſix and thirtie yeares. He was honorablie buried in the church of ſaint Ethelred of Elie before the altar dedicated to the holie croſſe.

Richard of Elie.

Richard de Elie or Fitzneale, ſonne of the ſaid Nigellus biſhop of Elie, was made treaſuror to K. Henrie the ſecond, by the purchaſe of his father Nigellus, when the king went to the wars of Tolous. Of whom the hiſtorie of Elie writeth, that after the buriall of Nigellus his father, this Richard being alſo an enimie to the church of Elie, as his father had béene before, made haſt to paſſe ouer the ſeas to king Henrie the ſecond, fearing that ſome euill would be prepared againſt him, if the church ſhould haue ſent anie other thither before him. At whoſe comming to the king, he accuſed the moonks of manie things, and did therewith ſo edge the king againſt them, that the king ſending into England, charged by Wannerus one of his chaplens, that the prior of Elie ſhould be depoſed, & the moonks with all their goods to be proſcribed and baniſhed. This man being treaſuror to king Henrie the ſecond, the treaſure of the ſaid Henrie the ſecond at his death came vnto one hundred thouſand marks; notwithſtanding the exceſſiue charges of the king manie waies. Which Richard being biſhop of London, by the name of Richard the third, and the kings treaſuror, was choſen to that ſée in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred eightie and nine, being the firſt yéere of king Richard the firſt, and was conſecrated biſhop at Lambeth, by Baldwine archbiſhop of Canturburie, in the yeare of Chriſt 1190: he died the fourth ides of September, in the yéere of grace 1198, being the ninth yeare of king Richard the firſt.

William of Elie.

William of Elie being of kin to the laſt Richard biſhop of London, was treaſuror to king Richard the firſt, and to king Iohn. To which William then treaſuror, Richard his kinſman the biſhop of London An. Dom. 1196 being the ſeuenth yeare of the reigne of Richard the firſt, and the ſame number of yeares of the gouernment of the ſaid Richard in the biſhoprike of London, did giue all his houſes in Weſtminſter, which the ſaid William did long after giue to the abbat and moonks of Weſtminſter, as by the charter therof appéers by me in this ſort abridged:

Vniuerſis Chriſti fidelibus, ad quos præſens ſcriptum peruenerit, Gulielmus de Elie quondam regum Angliæ theſaurarius ſalutem. Nouerit vniuerſitas veſtra me dediſſe, &c: Deo & monachis Weſtminſter, &c: pro animabus Richardi & Iohannis regum Angliæ, & pro anima Richardi London epiſcopi, &c: domos meas, & curiam cum pertinentibus in villa Weſtminſter, &c: quas habui ex dono Richardi epiſcopi London, & quæ ſunt de feodo Weſtminſter, &c: teſtis Euſtachius Fauconbridge domini regis theſaurarius, &c. He died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred twentie two, being the ſixt yeare of the long reigne of king Henrie the third, as noteth Matthew Paris and Weſtminſter, who write that then Obijt Guliel- mus Elienſis Angliæ theſaurarius.

A deane of Paules treaſuror.

A deane of Paules was treaſuror to the king, as appeereth by Mat. Parker, in the life of Hubert archbiſhop of Canturburie, writing after this maner: Eodem tempore (which was a time betweene the creating of Hubert archbiſhop of Canturburie in the yeere of Chriſt 1194, being the firſt yeere of Richard the firſt, and the death of the ſaid Richard the firſt, which fell in the yeere of Chriſt 1199) eccleſiæ Paulinæ decanus ærarij regij cuſtos fuit, ſiue vt vocant theſaurarius, and ſo goeth on with a diſcourſe of his miſerable death.

Walter Greie biſhop of Worceſter.

Walter Greie biſhop of Worceſter, whom ſome call treaſuror, in the eleuenth of king John, whereunto I do not yet agree, leauing it to the iudgment of other, and to the finall receiuing or reiecting of him, in the large booke of the whole liues of the lord treaſurors of England.

Gefferie archdeacon of Norwich.

Gefferie archdeacon of Norwich, treaſuror to king John, who forſooke his maiſter the king excommunicate by the pope: as writeth Matthew Parker in the life of Stephan Langton archbiſhop of Canturburie, in theſe following words: Inter quos (meaning the biſhops which durſt not openlie publiſh the excommunication of the king, but ſecretlie caſt libels about the high waies, which gaue notice thereof) quum ad fiſcum regium Gaufridus Noruicenſis archidiaconus negotijs regijs intendens ſediſſet, cœpit aſſidentibus exponere excommunicationis ſententiam, in regem iam latam, affirmauítque non eſſe tutum capellanis & eccleſiaſticis dignitatibus beneficijſque affectis ſeruire regi amplius. Ideóque aulam deſerens, ad eccleſiaſtica beneficia (quæ regis ſeruicio acquiſierat) receſſit. Rex hunc tam proditoriè ſe deficientem per Williel. Talbot militem præhendi & ad ſe reduci fecit, eúmque in publica cuſtodia ſeruatum (donec ſiue pœnæ, ſiue conſcientiæ tædio pertæſus vitæ fuit, & expirauit) detinuit: whoſe maner of death is in this ſort ſet downe by Matthew Paris pag. 305, that he was committed to priſon, vbi poſt dies paucos rege præfato (which was king John) iubente capa indutus plumbea, tam victualium penuria quàm ipſius capæ ponderoſitate compreſſus migrauit ad dominum. Much about which time (as I ſuppoſe) which was the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand, two hundred and nine, being about the eleuenth yeare of K. John, the checker was by the king remoued from London to Northampt[illegible]hatred of the Londoners) vntill Chriſtmaſſe.

John Ruthall

J[illegible]n Ruthall Cuſtos officij theſaurarij, as is prooued out of [illegible] records of the excheker, had that office in the thi[illegible]eare of Henrie the third, in the yeare 1219.

Euſtace de Fauconbridge biſhop of London.

[illegible]uſtachius de Fauconbridge, a iuſtice to receiue fin[illegible], chancellor of the excheker and treaſuror to Henrie the third, being biſhop of Rocheſter, was made biſhop of London, in the yeere of our redemption one thouſand two hundred twentie & one, being the fift yeere of king Henrie the third. Which Euſtachius in the yeare 1222, with the deane & chapter of London, had great ſutes againſt William abbat of Weſtminſter: he was treaſuror in the third yeare of king Henrie the third, being about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and nineteene: he died the daie before the calends of Nouember in the yeare of Chriſt 1228, being the thirteenth of king Henrie the third, and is buried on the ſouth ſide of the queere of Paules (beſides Henrie Wengham) vnder a faire monument of marble, ouer whome on the wall is this inſcription: Hic iacet Euſtachius de Fauconbridge quondam epiſcopus huius eccleſiæ, qui multa bona contulit miniſtris eccleſiæ ſancti Pauli.

John de Fontnes or Founteins.

Iohannes de Fontibus, or John de Fontnes was biſhop of Elie, and treaſuror in the ninth & eleuenth yeere of king Henrie the third, and before as I take it. This man being abbat of Fontnes, and as authors ſaie, Vir ſimplex & iuſtus, ac recedens a malo; was at Weſtminſter made biſhop of Elie in the yeare of Chriſt 1220, he died after that he had bin biſhop fiue yeeres & od moneths in the yeare of Chriſt 1225, being the ninth yeare of Henrie the third, & was buried in the church of Elie, toward the altar of S. Andrew.

Walter Malclerke biſhop of Caerleil.

Walter Malclerke or ſkilleſſe clerke, treaſuror of England, was made biſhop of Carleill in the yeare of our Lord 1223, being about the ſeuenth yeare of Henrie the third, who in the yeare of Chriſt 1233, being the ſeauenteenth of the ſaid king, was by the counſell of Peter de Laroches biſhop of Wincheſter not onelie remoued from his office of treaſurorſhip, but alſo put to the fine of 100 marks, which he paied, with the loſſe of certeine holds, giuen to him by charter during his life. After which he would haue fled beyond the ſeas, but entring the ſhip at Douer, he and all his were ſtaied and euillie intreated by the kings ſeruants. This man in the yeare of Chriſt 1246, being the thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, did on the daie of Peter and Paule at Oxenford enter into the habit of the frier preachers. After which, in the yeare of Chriſt 1248, being about the two & thirtith of Henrie the third, he ſurrendred his ſoule to God.

Ranulph Briton.

Ranulph Briton by ſome is made treaſuror of England; but vntrulie as I ſuppoſe: for in truth he was but treaſuror of the chamber, for anie thing I can learne, and remoued from that place in the ſixteenth yeare of king Henrie the third, in the yeare of Grace 1232, in whoſe place came Peter de Riuall. Of this Ranulph is mention made in the chancellors.

Peter de Orial.

Peter de Oriall, in Latine called Petrus de Riuallis, was treaſuror of the chamber, and treaſuror of the king, chamberleine of England and Ireland, gardian of all the forreſt of England, of all the eſcheats, of all the ports of the ſea, and of all the priſes of England and Ireland; being ſo deere to the king as hath Matthew Weſtmin ter, that Expulſis caſtrorum cuſtodibus per totam fere Angliam, rex omnia ſub ipſius Petri cuſtodia commendarat. This man was made treaſuror after Walter Malclerke in the yeere of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie and three, being about the ſeuenteenth yeare of king Henrie the third, and in the eighteenth yeare of king Henrie the third, who (as I gather) was togither with Peter biſhop of Wincheſter, Stephan de Segraue, & Robert Paſſelew, called to account in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie foure, for the kings treaſure and ſeale euillie imploied & kept, Whervpon Peter de Riuallis hid himſelfe in the cathedrall church of Wincheſter, for the king remoued Peter biſhop of Wincheſter and Peter de Riuallis, by the perſuaſion of Edmund of Abindon biſhop of Canturburie, as they before had remoued Walter Malclerke. After which it ſeemeth, that growing into fauor againe, this Petrus de Riuallis was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie and ſeuen, being the one & fortith yeere of king Henrie the third, made treaſuror of the chamber. For thus writeth Matthew Paris: Circa feſtum ſancti Michaelis (which was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie and ſeuen) mortuo Hurtaldo domini regis conciliario & clerico ſpeciali ac theſauriaro de camera regis, ſubrogatur Petrus de Riuallis. After which alſo, about the yeare of Chriſt 1260, being about the 44 yeare of Henrie the third he fell againe in the like diſgrace, & was inforced to accompt for all offices which he had poſſeſſed. Vnder this Peter de Riuallis did Robert Paſſelew keepe the kings treaſure.

Robert Paſſelew whether treaſuror of England or no.

Touching which Robert Paſſelew, whome ſome will haue onelie treaſuror of the chamber, ſome to be treaſuror of England, and ſome to be onelie vnder-treaſuror vnder Peter de Riuallis, I will ſet downe out of ſeuerall authors what I haue read thereof, leauing to the reader to thinke thereof what he liſt at this time, ſith I determine fullie heereafter (not hauing now leiſure therefore) to define the ſame in my large volume of the liues of the lord treaſurors. Thus therefore touching him writeth Matthew Parker. Quo etiam tempore (which was in the yeare of Chriſt 1244, being about the eightéenth yeare of Henrie the third) Robertus de Paſſelew, qui in theſauris regijs cuſtodiendis & augendis totus verſatus eſt, eóque nomine regi charus, ab eccleſiæ cathedralis Ciceſtrenſis canonicus, qui regi placere ſtuduerant, Ciceſtrenſis epiſcopus electus eſt. Quod Bonifacius Cantuarienſis archiepiſcopus indignè tulit, & epiſcopis prouinciæ ſuæ conuocatis, indifficilimis quibuſdam & nodoſis quæſtionilus per Lincolnienſem epiſcopum compoſitis ſeriò examinauit, deinde electione reciſſa hunc Robertum repulit, & Richardum quendam de Wiz loco ſuo (inconſulto rege) ſubſtituit. Next writeth Matthew Weſtminſter, that in the yeare of Chriſt 1233, being the ſeuentéenth of Henrie the third, the nobilitie accuſed manie of the kings councellors, amongſt whome they placed Robertum Paſſelew theſaurarium. Againe a little after he ſaith, Et ſic abſcondit ſe iterum Robertus Faſſelew, qui poſt Walterum Carleolenſem officium theſaurarij adminiſtrauerat. Of whoſe death Matth. Paris writeth thus, Eodem quoque anno (which was 1252, being the fiue and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third) octauo idus Iunij, obijt apud Waltham Robertus Paſſelew archidiaconus Lewis, &c: whom I will héere leaue, although not in that place in which he ſhould come, if I had once reſolued with my ſelfe that he had béene treaſuror of England. But bicauſe I had to ſpeake of him with Peter de Riuallis, I thought héere in one place to ſet downe what I had read of them both; and ſo to ioine them after their death, which were ſo faſt ioined in offices during their liues.

Hugh Pateſhull.

Hugh Pateſhull, treaſuror of the excheker, which was treaſuror of the gréene war, or of the ſeale, was alſo treaſuror to the king in the eightéenth and ninetéenth yeare of his reigne, and after made iuſtice of all England: as Matthew Paris hath ſet downe in theſe words, Rex autem fretus conſilio ſaniori (in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand, two hundred, thirtie & foure, being the eightéenth yéere of king Henrie the third) Hugonem de Pateſhull clericum filium videlicet Simonis de Pateſhull, qui quandoq; habenas moderabatur totius regni iuſticiarij, virum fidelem & honeſtum, loco prædictorum (which were Stephan Segraue chéefe iuſtice of England, & Peter de Riuallis treſuror) ſubrogauit. Adminiſtrauerat enim idem Hugo officium ſcaccarij antea laudabiliter, ſecundum quod appellatur ſecretum ſigillum cuſtodiendo, & definitam pecuniam a vicecomitibus recipiendo: quare plenior fides eſt ei adhibita, paterna fidelitate teſtimoniũ fidei perhibente. He was confirmed biſhop of Couentrie in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand, two hundred, and fourtie, being the twentie fourth yeare of Henrie the third, who (hauing béene the kings treaſuror before) did now with great ſolemnitie take his leaue of the barons of the excheker with teares, & they all roſe vp & kiſſed him. Of whoſe election (in the yéere of Chriſt 1239) to that biſhoprike, thus further writeth the ſaid Matth: touching the monks of Couentrie. Eligerunt ſecundũ prædictam formam dominũ Hugonẽ de Pateſhull, &c: canonicum ſancti Pauli London: & domini regis cancellarium, in epiſcopum & cuſtodem animarum ſuarum. Concerning whome I collected this note out of the regiſter of Weſtminſter, that Philip de Coleuille knight, the ſonne of William Coleuille, the ſonne of Agnes Foliot, gaue to Richard abbat of Weſtminſter all his part of the inheritance which was Robert Foliots, brother to the ſaid Agnes, in Langden, Morton, and Chalncie; witneſſes, Rafe biſhop of Chicheſter chancellor, and Hugh Pateſhull treaſuror in the nintéenth yere of the reigne of Henrie the third, which Pateſhull Matthew Weſtmin: in the yere of Chriſt 1234, calleth Summum theſaurariũ.

Galfridus Templarius.

Galfridus Templarius, whom ſome will haue treſuror, but by what reaſon I cannot conceiue as yet, & therfore will not obſtinatlie reiect him, nor haſtilie receiue him into this place of the treaſuror: of this man is more ſpoken amongſt the chancellors.

William Hauerhull.

William Hauerhull, a canon of Paules church in London, was made treaſuror to king Henrie the third, the yeare of our redemption 1240, being the foure and twentith of the reigne of the ſaid Henrie, in which place he continued in the eight and twentith yeare of the ſaid Henrie the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1244, he died at London in the yéere 1252, being the ſix and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, as ſaith the addition to Matthew Paris fol. 1128, after which the ſaid author fol. 1226, laied his death in the yeare of Chriſt 1255, being the nine & thirtith yeare of king Henrie the third, ſuch error is crept into hiſtories by the negligence of the tranſcriber; but I ſuppoſe the firſt note of his death to be the truer, bicauſe the ſame is confirmed by Mat. Weſt. ſpeaking in the ſaid yeare 1252 of the death of this man, for whoſe epitaph theſe following verſes were made:

Hîc Hauerhulle iaces prototheſaurarie regis,
Hinc Hauerhulle gemis non paritura talem:*
Fercula culta dabas, empyrea vina pluebas,
Amodo ſit Chriſtus cibus & eſca tibi.*

*Pariunt.
*Potus.

I haue alſo read a note of one William Hauerhull (which might be this man) which ſaith that William Hauerhull the ſonne of Bathmarus de Hauerhull, gaue houſes in Cheapſide to the abbeie of Weſtminſter, and that one Thomas de Hauerhull was the ſonne and heire of William Hauerhull.

Richard de Barking.

Richard de Barking abbat of Weſtminſter, as witneſſeth the liues of the abbats, was one eſpeciall councellor to Henrie the third, chiefe baron of the excheker, and treaſuror of England, who I ſuppoſe did follow William Hauerhull. For his death, which happened on the thrée and twentith daie of Nouember in the thirtith yeare of king Henrie the third, in the yeare of Chriſt 1246, after that he had béene abbat foure and twentie yeares, muſt néeds proue him to be treaſuror before Philip Louell: yea and peraduenture (as is moſt likelie) before Hugh Pateſhull. Yet Matthew Parker, ſpeaking of the death of Hauerhull, will néedes haue Philip Louell to [illegible] William Hauerhull, as after ſhall appeare. Th[illegible] Richard de Barking was buried in Weſt[illegible]inſter church, before the middle of the altar in our la[illegible] Capell in a tombe of marble, which after in the t[illegible] William Colcheſter abbat of that place was [illegible] downe by frier Combe a ſacriſt of that houſe of Weſtminſter, who laid a faire plaine marble ſtone ouer him with this preſent epitaph thus inſcribed:

Richardus Barking prior & poſt inclytus abbas,
Henrici regis prudens fuit iſte miniſter:
Huius erat prima laus, inſula rebus opima,
Altera laus éq; Thorp, cenſus, Ocham, decimæq;,
Tertia Mortone caſtrum ſimili ratione,
Et regis quarta de multis commoda charta,
Clementis feſto mundo migrauit ab iſto,
M. Domini C. bis, xl. ſextóq; ſub anno,
Cui detur venia parte pia virgo Maria.

Philip Louell.

Philip Luuell, or Louell, was in this order aduanced to the office of treaſuror, as appeareth by theſe words of Matthew Paris vpon the death of William Hauerhull. Et cùm crederetur quòd dominus rex Iohannem Franciſcum officio Willielmi (which was Hauerhull) ſubrogaret, fabricatis rumoribus quòd idem Iohannes in partibus remotis Angliæ Borealibus (vt contra quoſdam religioſos plantauerat) obijſſet, conſtituit dominus rex Philippum Louell clericum, virum prudentem, facundum & generoſum in loco memorati Willielmi ſuum theſaurarium, ſaurariũ, quod factum eſt apud ſanctũ Albanũ, procurante vt dicitur Iohanne Manſell amico Philippi ſpeciali. This man was treaſuror in the 35 and ſo vntill the 42 yeare of Henrie the third, & was in the ſame yeare depoſed by the barons, he died at Hameſlete, in the yeare of Chriſt 1259, whoſe executors were Philip Louell & Robert de Mercenton. But his goods after his death the king commanded to be confiſcat. And heere before I go any further, I thinke it not amiſſe to note that ſome haue miſtaken themſelues in the accompt of the kings treaſuror much about this time, making theſe perſons Walter Brudell & Peter Catchporke or Chaceporke to be the kings treaſuror, which by no accompt of yeares can be true, for they were the queenes and not the kings treſurors, as may appeere both by Mat. Paris and Mat. Weſtmin. whereof the firſt writeth thus: obijt & Walterus de Brudell eiuſdem reginæ theſaurarius, which he placeth in the yere of Chriſt 1255, being the thirtie ninth yeare of king Henrie the third. Of the ſecond perſon Chaceporke thus writeth Mat. Weſt. in the yeare of Chriſt 1254: Veniens autem rex ad mare nec ventum habẽs proſperum, apud Boloniam moratus eſt inuitus, vbi obijt Petrus Chaceporc natione Pictauenſis, reginæ theſaurarius & regis clericus & conciliarius ſpecialis. And thus this much by the waie of the two treaſurors of the queens, ſuppoſed by ſome (but not rightlie) to haue beene the kings.

John Crakehall.

John Crakehall archdeacon of Bedford was treaſuror in 42, 43, 44 yeare of Henrie the third, to whom the king in the fortie fourth of his reigne, being the yeare of Chriſt 1260, gaue a prebendarie, wherin being inueſted, he was from thence remooued by a former collation therof made to one John le Gras. The ſaid Crakehall after died the ſame yere at London.

John abbat of Peterborow.

John abbat of Peterborow was by the barons in the 44 yeare of Henrie the third made treaſuror, as the other officers of the king alſo were, Nicholas of Elie was then made chancellor, & Hugh de Spenſer cheefe iuſtice, which office of treaſurorſhip this John continued, in the 46 yeare of Henrie the firt, 1262.

Nicholas de Elie.

Nicholas de Elie ſo called bicauſe he was archdeacon of Elie, was treaſuror to the king in the ſeuen and fourtith of Henrie the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1263, whereof I haue ſeene this note of record. Memorandum quòd in craſtino Paſchæ, Anno 47 H. 3. In præſentia Rogeri le Bigot comite Norfolke & mariſchalli Angliæ, Hugo le Bigot, Arnoldi de Berkeley baron. de ſcaccario magiſtri, Iohannis de Chiſull cancellar. regis, &c. Recepit magiſter Nicholaus archidiaconus Elienſis theſaurarius ſubſcripta in theſauraria dom. regis, &c. This man as before appeereth had bin chancellor, of whom is mention made in my following tretiſe of the chancellors.

Thomas de Wimundham.

Thomas Wimundham. This man being chiefe chanter of Lichfield, was by the barons in the yeare of Chriſt 1258, in the one and fourtith yeare of king Henrie the third, made treaſuror (at the excheker) of the ſeale or place where the writs be ſealed with greene wax, after which he was treaſuror to the king in the 50, 51, & 52 yeares of king Henrie the third.

John Chiſull.

John Chiſull ſometime chancellor was treaſuror in the foure & fiftith yeare of Henrie the third, being about the yeare of Chriſt a thouſand two hundred three ſcore and nine. He was deane of Paules, choſen biſhop of London in the yeare of Chriſt a thouſand two hundred ſeuentie and three, and conſecrat to that place in the yeare of Chriſt a thouſand two hundred ſeuentie & foure, in which place he continued about fiue yeares, and died in the yeare of our redemption 1279, being in the ſeuenth yeare of the reigne of the victorious prince king Edward the firſt of that name. See more of this Chiſull in my following diſcourſe of the chancellors.

Philip de Eie.

Philip de Eie was treaſuror (as appeareth by the records of the excheker) in the 56 yeare of king Henrie the third, and in the firſt yeare of king Edward the firſt, partlie falling in the yeare of our redemption 1272, and 1273.

Joſeph de Chancie.

Joſeph de Chancie, whom one anonymall author calleth John de Chancie, but not rightlie as I ſuppoſe, was treſuror in the ſecond yeere of the ſcourger of the Scots king Edward the firſt, being the yeare of our redemption 1274.

William biſhop of Bath.

William Gifford biſhop of Bath and Welles was treaſuror to Edward the firſt, he was remooued to Yorke in the yeare of Chriſt 1265, this man is by manie chronicles, and that perhaps moſt trulie called Walter Gifford. He died in the ſeuenth yeare of king Edward the firſt, being the yeare of our redemption 1279 as hath Nicholas Triuet. Of this man ſee more in the chancellors of England.

Robert Burnell.

Robert Burnell biſhop of Bath and Welles chancellor of England, and treaſuror to king Edward the firſt, is by the Welſh hiſtorie pag. 328, called chiefe iuſtice of England. Leland reporteth that an abbat told him how that a biſhop Burnell built the caſtell of Acton Burnell. Of this man ſhall be more ſpoken hereafter in the chancellors of England.

Joſeph de Chancie.

Joſeph de Chancie the ſecond time treaſuror to king Edward the firſt, in the firt yeare of the ſaid king, being the yeare of our redemption 1278, was alſo prior of S. Johns Jeruſalem in Anglia, as I take it; and by an other name called the lord of S. Johns or of the knights of the Rhodes in England.

Thomas Becke.

Thomas Becke archdeacon of Dorceſter, was treaſuror in the ſeuenth yeare of king Edward the firſt, being the yeare of our redemption 1278 as ſome haue, but 1279 as other haue (by the witneſſe of Leland, out of a monke of Glaſtenburie) in his booke De aſſertione Arthuri, reciting the words of the ſaid monke in this ſort.

Anno Domini 1267*: Eadueardus rex Henrici tertij filius, venit cum regina ſua Glaſconiam. Die verò Martis proxima ſequenti, fuit rex & tota curia accepta ſumptibus monaſterij. Quo die in crepuſculo, fecit apperiri ſepulchrum inclyti Arthuri, vbi in duabus ciſtis imaginibus & armis eorũ depictis, oſſa dicti regis miræ groſſitudinis ſeparata inuenit. Imago quidem reginæ coronata, imaginis regiæ corona fuit proſtrata, cum abſciſſione ſiniſtræ auriculæ; & veſtigijs plagæ vnde moriebatur: inuenta eſt ſcriptura ſuper his ſingulis manifeſta. In craſtino, videlicet die Mercurij rex oſſa regis, regina oſſa reginæ, pallijs pretioſis reuoluta, in ſuis ciſtis recludentes, & ſigilla ſua apponentes, præceperunt idem ſepulchrum ante maius altare celeriter collocari, retentis externis capitibus propter populi deuotionem; appoſita huiuſmodi ſcriptura: Hæc ſunt oſſa nobiliſſimi regis Arthurij, quæ anno dominicæ incarnationis* 1278*, decimo tertio calendas Maij, per dominum Eadueardum regem Angliæ illuſtrem hîc fuerunt ſic collocata, præſentibus Leonora ſereniſſima eiuſdem regis conſorte, & filia domini Ferandi regis Hiſpaniæ, magiſtro William de Middleton nunc Norwicenſi electo, magiſtro Thoma de Becke archidiacono Dorſitenſi & prædicti regis theſaurario, domino Henrico de Laſciæ comite Lincolniæ, domino Amideo comite Subaudiæ, & multis magnatibus Angliæ.* Thus farre the moonke of Glaſtenburie.

Richard de ware.

Richard Warren or de Ware abbat of Weſtminſter, was made abbat about the yeare of Chriſt 1260, being about the foure and fortith yeare of king Henrie the third, who was made treaſuror, as hath John de Euerſden, in the yeare of our redemption a thouſand two hundred & foure ſcore, being the eight yeare of king Edward the firſt: which yeare of Chriſt a thouſand two hundred and foure ſcore, ſome doo falſlie make to fall in the tenth, ſome in the eleuenth yeare of the ſaid Edward the firſt, which contrarietie hath onelie riſen by the default of the tranſcriber. But moſt certeine it is that he was treaſuror in the ninth, eleuenth, and part of the twelfe of the ſaid king Edward the firſt. This man going to Rome for his his conſecration, brought from thenſe certeine workemen and rich purphyrie ſtones, whereof and by whom he made that rare pauement (conteining a diſcourſe of the whole world) which is at this daie moſt beautifull, and to be ſeene at Weſtminſter before the communion table: a thing of that ſingularitie, curiouſneſſe, and rareneſſe, that England hath not the like againe, in which pauement are circularie written in letters of braſſe theſe ten verſes following:

Anno Domini 1268 Henricus tertius vrbs Romæ Odoricus cæmentator & abbas Richardus de Ware fecerunt id pauimentum.

Si lector poſita prudenter cuncta reuoluat,
Hic finem primi mobilis inueniet.
Sepes trina canes, & equos, homines ſuperaddas,
Ceruos, & coruos, aquilas, immania cete,
Mundum quódq; ſequens præeuntis triplicat annos,
Sphericus archetypū, globum hic monſtrat microcoſmum.
Chriſti milleno, bis centeno, duodeno,
Cum ſexageno, ſubductis quatuor anno,
Tertius Henricus, rex, vrbs, Odoricus & abbas
Hos compegere purphyreos lapides.

The full explanation of which verſes ſhall be at large ſet downe in the whole diſcourſe of this abbats life, in my large booke of the liues of the lord treaſurors. Which abbat with thoſe workemen and thoſe ſtones did alſo frame the ſhrine of Edward the confeſſor with theſe verſes, carued out of ſtone and alſo gilded ſet about the ſame ſhrine or monument:

Anno milleno Domini, cum ſeptuageno,
Et bis centeno, cum completo quaſi deno,
Hoc opus eſt factum, quod Petrus duxit in actum,
Romanus ciuis. Homo, cauſam noſcere ſi vis,
Rex fuit Henricus ſancti præſentis amicus.

This abbat died the ſecond daie of December, in the yeare of our redemption a thouſand two hundred foure ſcore and three, being the twelfe yeare of king Edward the firſt; after that he had gouerned the monaſterie three and twentie yeares and more, and was buried there at Weſtminſter, in the foreſaid plaine pauement of purphyrie on the north ſide neere vnto the tombe (as is yet well to be ſeene) of Odomer or Aimer de Valence earle of Penbroke, on which graue is ingrauen this breefe epitaph heere inſuing:

Abbas Richardus de Wara qui requieſcit
Hic portat lapides, quos hic portauit ab vrbe.

Walter Wenlocke.

Walter Wenlocke abbat of Weſtminſter, whom Matthew Weſtminſter calleth William de Wenloke, was made abbat of Weſtminſter after the death of Richard de Ware, & was treaſuror to king Edward the firſt, as hath the regiſter of the liues of the abbats of Weſtminſter, and other records that I haue ſeene. Which office it ſeemeth that he had, meane betweene the twelfe and the fourteenth yeare of the ſaid king Edward the firſt, as I ſuppoſe. This man after that he had beene abbat ſix and twentie yeares lacking ſix daies, died the fiue and twentith of December on the Chriſtmas daie at night, in his manour of Pireford in Glocecerſhire, in the firſt yeare of Edward the ſonne of Edward (which was Edward the ſecond) being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred and ſeuen, and was buried in the church of Weſtminſter, beſides the high altar then ſtanding without the ſouth doore of ſaint Edwards ſhrine before the preſbiterie there, vnder a plaine pauement and a marble ſtone decentlie adorned with this epitaph to his high commendation:

Abbas Walterus iacet hic ſub marmore tectus,
Non fuit auſterus, ſed mitis, famine rectus.

Biſhop of Couentrie.

A biſhop of Couentrie (and Lichfield) was treaſuror of England in the fourteenth yeere of king Edward the firſt, being the yeare of our redemption 1286, in whoſe place in the ſame yeare came John Kirkbie.

John Kirkbie biſhop of Elie.

John Kirkbie deane of Winburne and archdeacon of Couentrie, & treaſuror to king Edward the firſt, was on the ſeuenth calends of Auguſt in the yeare of our Lord 1286, being the fourteenth yeare of the ſaid Edward (then at Paris) made biſhop of Elie, whome Leland (the refiner of all names doth in his cōment vpon his ſong of the ſwan in the word Winchelſega thus terme; Iohannes Cherchebius epiſcopus Anguillarinus regi à theſauris. This man was treſuror in the ſixteenth, ſeuenteenth, & part of the eighteenth of Edward the firſt, in which yeare (as it ſeemeth) being part of the yeare of Chriſt 1290 this biſhop died, the ſeuenth calends of Aprill, after that he had beene biſhop three yeares ſome moneths and ſome daies, and was buried by Walepoole biſhop of Norwich in the church of Elie, on the north part of the queere before the altar of ſaint John Baptiſt

William de Marchia.

William de Marchia or Gulielmus Martius was treaſuror in Eaſter terme, in the eighteenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the firſt, in which office he continued about fiue yeares, & was remoued from that place on the 23 yeare of the ſaid king Edward the firſt, and Peter of Leiceſter baron of the excheker, with the two chamberleins executed all functions of that office vntill a new treaſuror was made. This William de Marchia was made biſhop of Bath and Welles, in the yeare of Chriſt 1293, being the 22 yeare of king Edward the third, in which ſee he remained almoſt ten yeares, and died in the yeare of our Lord 1302, being about the 32 yeare of the ſaid king Edward the firſt, and was buried in the church of Welles in the wall, betweene the doore of the cloiſter and the altar of ſaint Martine, at whoſe tombe in time paſt (as the nature of that credulous age did haſtilie beleeue) were manie miracles done; as ſome haue left in memorie to the following poſteritie.

Walter Langhſtone biſhop of Lichfield.

Walter Langhſtone biſhop of Lichfield and Couentrie was made treaſuror after William de Marchia, in the 23 yeare of king Edward the firſt, in which office he continued (as I gather) during the life of king Edward the firſt, which fell in the 35 yeare of his reigne, being the yeere of our redemption 1307, and was then remoued and impriſoned in the tower with two men onelie by Edward the ſecond then comming to the crowne, bicauſe the ſaid Walter Langhſtone had cauſed king Edward the firſt to impriſon, and as ſome haue to baniſh this new king Edward the ſecond for breaking downe the parkes of the ſaid biſhop Walter Langhſtone. During the time that this Peter de Willebie was vnder treaſuror or lieutenant of the treaſuror, for the words be Locum tenens theſaurarij, in the thirtith, one and thirtith, two and thirtith of Edward the firſt, this Walter was made biſhop of Couentrie and Lichfield, in the yeare of our redemption 1295, being the three and twentith yeare of king Edward the firſt, and the ſame yeare that he was made treaſuror. He died about the yeare of our redemption 1321, being about the fourteenth yeare of king Edward the ſecond, to which biſhop the lord Cobham now liuing his heire, as being deſcended from Margaret the ſiſter and heire of John Peuerell the coſine and heire to this Walter Langhſtone, which Margaret was maried to ſir William de la Poole of Aſbie knight, frō whom the lord Cobham is iſſued. And here ſith I haue before made mention of the death of Edward the firſt, although it be ſomewhat impertinent to the treaſurors; yet for that I do not remember that the ſame verſes are ſet down in any of our late Engliſh chronicles, & for that I would haue a perpetuall memorie of them, I will here deliuer ſuch epitaphicall verſes as I haue found touching king Edward the firſt:

Dum viguit (rex) & valuit tua magna poteſtas,
Fraus latuit, pax magna fuit, regnauit honeſtas,
Scotos Edwardus, dum vixit, ſuppeditauit,
Tenuit, afflixit, depreſſit, dilaniauit.

Walter Re

Walter Reinolds ſcholemaſter to Edw. 2. biſhop of nolds biſhop of worceſter.

of Worceſter, and after of Canturburie, and chancellor of England, was aduanced to the place of the lord treaſuror of England, in the 1. Edw. 2. being the yeare of Chriſt 1307, after which in the yeare of our Lord 1308, he was made biſhop of Worceſter, he continued in the office of treaſuror vntill ſome part of the fourth yeare of the ſaid Edward the ſecond, at that time came in his place Iohn Sandall, who was lieutenant vnto the ſaid Walter in place of the treaſuror, as appeareth by manie writs directed vnto him by the name of Iohn Sandall Locum tenenti W. epiſcopi Wigorniæ. Of him is more ſpoken in the chancellors of England. But here I cannot paſſe ouer ſomeboth ſkilfull in antiquitie, & perſons of no ſmall name by reaſon of their office, whereof the one in print, and the other in a booke of the nobilitie of England ſince the conqueſt vnprinted, doo make Hugh Spenſer the elder treaſuror of England, which as yet I cannot find to be true, for that I doubt that king Edw. 2. louing him ſo entierlie would euer after remooue him, & for that the full ſucceſſion of treaſurors before ſet downe, being true and taken out of ancient and moſt certeine records, will not afford him anie place among them. But leauing that matter to others who can better defend the ſame, I will deſcend to the other treaſurors.

Hugh Spenſer the elder.

Iohn de Sandall.

Iohn de Sandall being clerke, Scutifer regis, chancellor of the excheker, and chancellor of England, hauing béene before vnder treaſuror or deputie for the high treaſuror, came now in the fourth yeare of Edward the ſecond to be made chiefe treaſuror, & entered into that office in Eaſter terme about the beginning of the ſaid fourth yeare of Edward the ſecond. But in the yere following, which was the fift of Edward the ſecond, he gaue place to another. He was choſen biſhop of Wincheſter in the ninth yeare of Edward the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption 1316. Of whome thus writeth Anonymus M.S. Obierunt epiſcopus Winton & Eli viri ſacra profeſſione inſigniti, quorum primo ſucceſſit Iohannes de Sandall cancellarius Angliæ vir cunctis affabilis & neceſſarius communitati. Secundo ſucceſſit Iohannes de Hothum ſcaccar. regis, vir ſiquidem ſcientiæ penitus ignarus, qui ſtatim epiſcopatus aſcenſo culmine, ad honorum pariter & officij theſaurarij rex ipſum in ſui fauorem ſublimauit. Of which Iohn Sandall, and alſo of Iohn Hothume, ſhall be more ſaid hereafter.

walter Norwich.

Walter Norwich, knight, treaſuror in the fift yeare of Edward the ſecond, and afterward in Eaſter tearme in the eight yeare of king Edward the ſecond, did on the third daie of October in the ſaid eight yeare of king Edward the ſecond receiue the office of the treaſurorſhip, and on the ſame daie tooke a corporall oth before the barons and chamberleins of the excheker, to behaue himſelfe well and faithfullie in the ſame office, which he had receiued of king Edward the ſecond; by his letters dated at Yorke the ſix and twentith daie of September, in the eight yeare of the ſaid king Edward the ſecond, which he kept not long at that time.

Iohn Sandall.

Iohn Sandall was the ſecond time lord treaſuror, in the ſix and ſeuenth yeare of king Edward the ſecond. This man being biſhop of Wincheſter, was treaſuror. Of him ſée more in the chancellors of England.

walter de Norwich.

Walter de Norwich being treaſuror as before in the eight yeare of king Edward the ſecond, did not long inioy the ſame, but as I ſuppoſe gaue place to Iohn Drokenſford.

Iohn Drokenſford.

Iohn de Drokenſford, the fourtéenth biſhop of Bath & Welles, had (as I haue read) the great ſeale deliuered vnto him, and was alſo treaſuror of England. But bicauſe I find not as yet in what yeare, although it were in the time of king Edward the ſecond, I cannot ſet downe the certeintie. Of whome thus writeth the regiſter of the biſhops of Bath. Iohannes Drokensford theſaurarius 14, Bathon epiſcopus poſt Walterum Haſelſhawes, ſucceſſit in epiſcopatum Bathon, annis 19, iſte epiſcopatum pluribus ædificijs inſigniuit, francheſias per reges epiſcopatui conceſſas non ſolùm literatoriè renouauit ſed etiam ampliauit. Et quo ad ditationem & exaltationem parentelæ ſuæ ferè fuit æqualis prædeceſſori ſuo Roberto Bornell. Et Welliæ ſepelitur ante altare ſancti Iohannis Baptiſtæ.

Iohn Hothum biſhop of Elie.

Iohn Hothum Biſhop of Elie (as is before noted out of one anonymall chronicle) obteined the place and honour of treaſurorſhip, in the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the ſecond, which he did not long inioy. For in the Michaelmas tearme in the twelfe yere of king Edward the ſecond, came William Walwaine. Of this Iohn Hothum is mention made in the diſcourſe of the chancellors hereafter.

william Walwaine

William Walwaine treaſuror of England in the twelfe yeare of king Edward the ſecond, being about the yeare of our redemption 1318, was (as it ſhould ſéeme) for his negligence and vnworthines of the place moſt worthilie remooued at the parlement at Yorke, in ſuch ſort that he poſſeſſed not that place (as I coniecture) aboue halfe a yere. For in the ſame twelfe yeare came the biſhop of Wincheſter.

Iohn Stratford biſhop of wincheſter.

Iohn Stratford biſhop of Wincheſter, vpon the remoouing of Walwaine, was in the ſame twelfe yeare of king Edward the ſecond admitted into the office of the treaſurorſhip, vntill the king ſhould otherwiſe determine. Which biſhop found not in the treaſurie aboue nine & twentie pounds ſeuentéene ſhillings and eight pence, which might well be the cauſe of the diſplacing of the ſaid Walwaine, who had ouer prodigallie diſperſed the kings treaſure.

walter Stapleton biſhop of Exceſter.

Walter Stapleton biſhop of Exceſter was treaſuror in the thirtéenth yeare of king Edward the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption 1319, in which I ſuppoſe he continued vntill the fiftéenth yeare of the ſaid king, being about the yere of Chriſt 1321. Of this man dooth more follow.

walter Norwich.

Walter Norwich knight was the third time made treaſuror, which place he inioied in the fiftéenth yeare of king Edward the ſecond, being the yéere of our redemption 1321, or there abouts. Walſingham ſaith that in the ſecond of Edward the third obijt William de Norwich.

Roger Northborow or Norberie.

Roger Northborow Scutifer or kéeper of the ſeale, being taken by the Scots at the battell of Banockeſburne about the ſeuenth yeare of Edward the ſecond, in the yeare of our redemption 1313, was alſo clearke of the wardrobe, and treaſuror in the ſixtéenth of king Edward the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption 1322. Of whom thus writeth one anonymall chronicle M.S. Anno Domini 1321 obijt Walterus de Langtone epiſcopus Ceſtren. cui ſucceſſit in epiſcopatus honore per viã impreſſionis & ambitionis Rogerus de Northburgh, clericus, de regis garderobia, ſibi regis in cunctis fauentibus auxilio & voluntate. I haue read of one Godfreie de Northburgh biſhop of Cheſter that died in the thrée and thirtith of king Edward the third, being the yere of Chriſt 1359, which perhaps ſhould be this Roger Northborow, Godfreie being by the tranſcriber placed in ſtéed of Roger. But I will not at this time define anie certeintie thereof, although I find an other note of one Roger Northborow conſecrated biſhop of Couentrie and Lichfield, in the yeare of Chriſt 1321, who ſat in that ſée eight and thirtie years, which eight and thirtie yeares added to the yeare of Chriſt, in which this Roger was made biſhop, doo make vp the number of the yeare of Chriſt 1359, in which it is ſaid that Godfreie Northborow died.

walter Stapleton biſhop of Exceſter.

Walter Stapleton biſhop of Exceſter, the ſecond time treaſuror in the eightéenth yeare of king Edward the ſecond, & before, was remooued in Eaſter tearme in the ſame yeare. In which Eaſter tearme was William biſhop of Yorke alſo made treaſuror, as is proued by the pell of Exitus, that terme being thus intituled, De termino Paſchæ anno 18 Ed. 2. tam tempore W. epiſcopi Exon. quàm W. archiepiſcopi Eborum. This Walter being elected to the biſhoprike of Exceſter, in the yeare of our redemption 1307, did ſit in that place twentie yeares, and was beheaded at the comming into England of quéene Iſabell to depoſe Edward the ſecond, in the twentith yere of the ſaid king Edward the ſecond, in the yéere of our redemption 1326. The cauſe of whoſe beheading was, for that he had procured the baniſhment of the ſaid quéene Iſabell, and of hir ſonne prince Edward.

William Melton.

William Melton archbiſhop of Yorke made lord treaſuror in Eaſter terme, in the eightéenth yéere of Edward the ſecond, kept the ſame office vntill the depoſition of himſelfe from that place, & of his maiſter from his kingdome, in the twentith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Edward the ſecond, and then gaue place to Iohn Stratford.

Iohn Stratford.

Iohn Stratford biſhop of Wincheſter was the ſecond time made treaſuror of England, in the twentith yeare of the depoſed king Edward, after the death of Walter Stapleton. This Iohn the fouretéenth daie of Nouember, in the ſaid twentith yeare of Edward the ſecond, comming into the eſcheker, brought thither the kings patent, or open writ, or commandement, vnder the ſeale of Edward the kings eldeſt ſon, to witnes his election and creation to that place of treaſuror: the tenor of which writ I haue thought good to ſet downe, becauſe it was done by the ſon in the fathers name, and vnder the teſte of the ſon, the father yet being king in ſhew; but the ſon indéed as gouernor of the realme: which title he inioied, vntill that he moſt vnnaturallie by the malice of his mother, the ambition of himſelfe, and the flatterie of his followers had depoſed his father. The tenor of which writ was in theſe words, as followeth.

EDwardus rex Angliæ, & dominus Hiberniæ, baronibus & camerarijs ſuis de ſcaccario ſuo ſalutem. Quiòm pro eo quòd venerabilis pater W. archiepiſcopus Eborum nuper theſaurarius ſcaccarij prædicti, circa diuerſa negotia in partibus Borealibus eſt occupatus, quominùs intendere poſsit ad ea quæ ad officium illud in dicto ſcaccario pertinent exercenda: conſtituerimus venerabilem patrem Iohannem Wintonienſem epiſcopum, tenentem locum theſaurarij ſcaccarij prædicti, quouſque de officio illo aliter duximus ordinandum. Percipiendo in eodem officio (dum illud ſic tenuerit) feodum conſuetum prout in literis noſtris patentibus præfato epiſcopo inde confectis pleniùs continetur. Vobis mandamus, quòd ipſum epiſcopum ad officium admittatis, & ei in his quæ ad officium prædictum pertineant intendatis in forma prædicta. Teſte Edwardo filio noſtro primogenito cuſtode regni noſtri. Apud Hereford ſexto die Nouembris, anno regni noſtri viceſimo.

Adam Carleton.

Adam Carleton, or de Orleton borne in Herefordſhire, being Decretorum doctor, was made biſhop of Hereford by the pope at Auinion in the yéere one thouſand thrée hundred and ſeauentéene, about the tenth or eleuenth yéere of the reigne of Edward the ſecond, being he that made the ſermon for the depoſition of king Edward the ſecond, and wrote the amphibologicall epiſtle for the death of the king, conteining theſe words, Regem occidere nolite timere bonum eſt, which hath by a comma or point made at Timere one ſenſe, and by a comma made at Nolite another ſenſe. Which Adam was made lord treaſuror in the firſt yéere of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred twentie and ſix, in which office he continued not long. For in the Eaſter terme of the ſaid king came Henrie biſhop of Lincolne. This man was made biſhop of Wincheſter in the yéere one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie and fiue, being the ninth yéere of king Edward the third: in which ſeat he ſate twelue yeares. The death of which Adam (who gaue Henningfield parſonage to the church of Hereford) ſir Thomas de la More doth moſt plentifullie ſet forth.

Henrie Burwaſh or Burgeſſe biſhop of Lincolne.

Henrie Burwaſh biſhop of Lincolne was lord treaſuror in Eaſter terme, in the firſt yéere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred twentie and ſeauen, in which office he continued vntill the ſecond yéere of Edward the third, and was afterward remoued.

Thomas biſhop of Hereford.

Thomas biſhop of Hereford inioied the honorable place of the lord treaſuror, in the third yeare of king Edward the third, being the yéere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred twentie and nine: but in the yéere following another came in place.

Robert Wodhouſe.

Robert Wodhouſe poſſeſſed the roome of the high treaſuror of England, in the fourth yéere of the reigne of the ſaid yong king Edward the third, being the yéere that the word became fleſh one thouſand thrée hundred and thirtie, and was alſo treaſuror ſome part of Michaelmaſſe terme, in the fift yéere of king Edward the third, who in the yéere following did giue place vnto another.

William Melton.

William archbiſhop of Yorke was againe treaſuror of England, in the fift yéere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie and one, and inioied that place ſome part of Michaelmaſſe terme in the ſaid yéere, after whome came the biſhop of Norwich.

W. biſhop of Norwich.

W. biſhop of Norwich was made treaſuror in Michaelmas terme in the ſaid fift yéere of the reigne of king Edward the third: in which terme there had béene thrée lord treaſurors ſucceſſiuelie (a thing ſeldome or neuer heard, nor I thinke likelie againe euer to be) which office this biſhop kept all Michaelmaſſe terme, in the ſixt yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie and two, and ſomewhat more in the end, yet yéelding that honor to another.

Robert le Aileſtone.

Robert le Aileſtone, being lord treaſuror in the ſeuenth yéere of the reigne of Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie and thrée, continued in the ſame office vntill the tenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie ſix, which was about thrée yeares, the ſame being a longer time than anie other had poſſeſſed that place, ſince the beginning of the reigne of the ſaid king Edward the third.

Henrie Burwaſh biſhop of Lincolne.

Henrie Burwaſh biſhop of Lincolne was againe treaſuror the tenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie and ſix, in which yéere (as hath Scala chronicorum) the king holding his parlement at London, was aduiſed by his councell to proſecute his title to the crowne of France. Wherevpon king Edward ſent ambaſſadors to the duke of Bauiere emperor (which had married the other ſiſter to the earle of Henalt, as king Edward the third had maried one) for ſuertie of aliance, and to reteine noble men about him with no ſmall charge, which ambaſſadors were Henrie Burgwaſh biſhop of Lincolne, and the earles William Montacute of Sarum, and William Clinton of Huntington, who returned to the parlement at London with their anſwer well liked. Of this man ſée more in the chancellors, being yet after his ambaſſage treaſuror in ſome part of the eleuenth yéere of Edward the third.

Richard de Burie biſhop of Durham.

Richard de Burie biſhop of Durham did inioie the honor of lord treaſuror, in the eleuenth yéere of the the reigne of king Edward the third: he was a man of great grauitie, and much eſteemed of the nobilitie and gentlemen of the north. Of this man is more ſpoken in the chancellors of England.

William de la Zouch.

William de la Zouch borne of the noble houſe of the lord Zouch, was treaſuror of England, in the twelfe yeere of king Edward the third, in the yeere of our redemption one thouſand three hundred thirtie and eight; he being biſhop of Yorke was vicegerent to the king in the north parts, in the twentith yeere of the reigne of the ſaid Edward the third, and in the yeere of our redemption one thouſand three hundred fortie and ſix, at what time he tooke Dauid Bruce king of Scots. This man went to Rome, and after a long contention betweene him and William Kelſleie, Kilſbie, or Kelſeie (for all theſe different names are found in authors) touching the archbiſhoprike of Yorke, he was after two yeares thus ſpent conſecrated biſhop of Yorke by pope Clement the ſixt. After which this William in the eleuenth yeare of his biſhoprike, being long troubled with a greeuous diſeaſe, began the worke of a chappell on the ſouth ſide adioining to the church of ſaint Peters in Yorke, where he purpoſed to be buried: but died before it was finiſhed, and lieth interred in the ſaid church before the altar of ſaint Edward the confeſſor.

Richard Sadington knight.

Sir Richard Sadington knight was treaſuror in the fourteenth yeere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeere of our redemption one thouſand three hundred & fortie. There was one Robert Sadington liuing about this time, of whom is more mention in the chancellors of England: but as yet I well know not whether they were both one man or no; ſith authors maie miſplace Robert for Richard, as they haue often doone.

Robert Northborow biſhop of Couentrie.

Robert Northborow, being at that time (as I iudge) biſhop of Couentrie, was treaſuror of England, in the fourteenth yeere of the reigne of Edward the third, being the yeere of our Lord one thouſand three hundred and fortie, in which yeere he was remooued, whom with the chancellor the king meant afterward (as after ſhall appeare) to haue ſent into Flanders as pledges for monie that the king owght there. After whom I ſuppoſe that Sadington came in place, although I haue a little miſplaced him at this time, following the fanſies of other men more than mine owne.

Biſhop of Cheſter.

A biſhop of Cheſter was lord treaſuror of England in the fifteenth yeere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being about the yeere that the word became fleſh, one thouſand three hundred fortie and one, in which office he did not long continue.

Robert Perning.

Robert Perning or Pernicke was lord treaſuror in the Eaſter terme, in the yeere of our redemption one thouſand three hundred fortie and one, being the fifteenth yeere of king Edward the third, in which yeere alſo he was made chancellor, and ſo continued both offices a while, vntill in the ſixteenth yeere of the reigne of king Edward the third, as I gather by all circumſtances of times, records, and hiſtories: who in the ſeuenteenth yeere of the reigne of the ſaid king Edward the third, being the yeere of our redemption one thouſand three hundred fortie and three (as appeareth by the bookes of the law) being chancellor, deliuered a record with his hands into the court of the kings bench. Of this man more ſhall be ſet downe hereafter in my diſcourſe of the chancellors.

Roger Northborow biſhop of Couentrie.

Roger Northborow (as I take it) being then biſhop of Couentrie, did honorablie poſſeſſe the place of the lord treſuror of England, in the ſixteenth yeere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeere of our redemption one thouſand three hundred fortie and two. Of whome thus writeth Matthew Parker in the life of Iohn Stratford archbiſhop of Canturburie: Ibi (meaning at the tower) *concilium initum eſt, tandémque definitũ, vt archiepiſcopus & epiſcopus Ciceſtrenſis regni cancellarius & Couentrenſis theſaurarius, vnà cum alijs à ſatellitibus & lictoribus deprehenſi, ad publicam cuſtodiam rerum à ſe, abſente rege, geſtarum rationem reddituri ducerentur. Manè accedunt ſatellites Lamethiam, ſed * archiepiſcopus ei pridie deceſſerat: tum Londinum reuerſi Couentrenſem & Ciceſtrenſem epiſcopos cum alijs deſignatis capiunt, captos ad turrim deducunt, &c.*

* Iohn Stratford.

William de Cuſans.

William de Cuſans, being lord treaſuror in the ſeauenteenth yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand, three hundred, fortie and three, continued in the ſame office all Michaelmaſſe tearme, in the eighteenth yeare of the ſaid Edward the third, and the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred fortie and foure: and being a yeare more. Betweene whom & Thomas Henlee abbat of Weſtminſter was great contention about the iuriſdiction of the hoſpitall of ſaint Iames in the pariſh of ſaint Margaret in Weſtminſter, which hoſpitall is now a ſtatelie houſe belonging to the prince, and built by king Henrie the eight called the manor of ſaint Iames with a parke walled about with bricke.

William de Edington biſhop of Winchester.

William de Edington, lord chancellor and treaſuror of England, and biſhop of Wincheſter, was lord treaſuror in Eaſter terme the nineteenth yeare of Edward the third, being about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand, three hundred fortie and fiue, in which office he continued vntill the two and thirtith of the ſaid king, one thouſand three hundred fiftie and eight, being fourteene years, which was (as I thinke) as manie more years as anie one man did poſſeſſe that place, ſince the beginning of the reigne of king Edward the third, vntill the time of this Willam Edington. He was ſo ſurnamed of the place where hee was borne, being the towne of Edington in Wiltſhire: he was made biſhop of Wincheſter (as ſome haue) about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred fortie and ſeuen, being about the one and twentith yeare of king Edward the third. This man (choſen biſhop of Canturburie, but yet neuer biſhop) died (as hath Walſingham) in the fortith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred ſixtie and ſix. I haue read of a biſhop of Norwich that ſhould alſo be treaſuror in the foure and twentith of Edward the third, which muſt fall in the time that this Edington did continue that office: but how true it is, I leaue to others to conſider, vntill I haue in my large booke of the liues of the lord treaſurors diſſolued that, and all other doubts and contrarieties that are here touched, or by authors reported.

Iohn biſhop of Rocheſter.

Iohn biſhop of Rocheſter was lord treaſuror in the two and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, in the yeare of our redemption 1358, in which office he continued in the thirtie three and thirtie fourth yeere of Edward the third.

Simon Langham biſhop of Elie.

Simon Langham, being of the priorie of Weſtminſter, made abbat of that houſe, was ſhortlie after made lord treaſuror of England, which office he held in the fiue & thirtith and ſix and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, who being biſhop of London (as hath Matthew Parker) was in the yeare that the word of the father tooke on it the forme of a ſeruant, by due account 1361, being the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, by the pope made biſhop of Elie, where he ſat fiue yeares, and was after in the yeare of our redemption, one thouſand, three hundred, ſixtie and ſix, being the fortith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, choſen biſhop of Canturburie, and conſecrated in the yeare of our redemption 1367, as ſaith the ſame Matthew Parker. On which date of his conſecration he demanded homage of the erle Stafford of Thomas Roſſe, John Kirrell, Robert Brockill, & Raſe Sentleger, knights for their lands which they held of the ſée of Canturburie. Shortlie after which in the yere of our redemption one thouſand, thrée hundred, ſixtie and eight, being the two and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, he was made cardinall, & died at Auinere the two and twentith daie of Julie, about the yeare of our redemption, as ſaith one Anonymus M.S. 1376, being the fiftith yeare of king Edward the third, and was buried beſides Auinion, in a place which he had raiſed from the foundation: thrée yeares after which his bones were brought to Weſtminſter where at this daie he hath one honorable toome on the ſouth ſide of the ſhrine amongſt the kings, on whoſe toome the moonks of Weſtminſter did ſometime place this ſame epitaph in the remembrance of him:

Simon de Langham ſub petris his tumulatus,
Iſtius eccleſiæ monachus fuerat, prior, abbas,
Sede vacante fuit electus Londonienſis
Præſul & inſignis eligi, ſed poſtea primas
Totius regni, magnus regiſque miniſter:
Nam theſaurarius & cancellarius eius,
Ac cardinalis in Roma presbyter iſte,
Poſtque Præneſtinus eſt factus epiſcopus atque
Nuntius ex parte papæ, tranſmittitur iſtuc
Orbe dolente pater, quem nunc reuocare nequimus:
Magdalenæ feſto milleno ſeptuageno
Et ter centeno ſexto Chriſti ruit anno:
Hunc Deus abſoluat de cunctis quæ malè geſſit,
Et meritis matris ſibi cœlica gaudia donet.

Of this man I haue intreated in my diſcourſe of the cardinals pag. 1165. and in my collection of all the chancellors of England hereafter following.

John Barnet biſhop of Worceſter.

John Barnet made biſhop of Worceſter in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred ſixtie and two, being the ſix and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, was treaſuror of England in the ſeuen and thirtith yéere of Edward the third, in which office he continued, being treaſuror in Michaelmaſſe tearme in the eight & thirtith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Edward the third, which fell in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred ſixtie & foure, and ſo he continued in the thrée & fortith yéere of king Edward the third ſtill treaſuror. He was made biſhop of Bath in the yeare of our redemption 1363, in which biſhoprike he remained thrée yeares, and was by Vrbane the fift then biſhop of Rome tranſlated from Bath to Elie in the yeare of Chriſt 1866, being the fortith yéere of the reigne of king Edward the third, in which place he ſat ſix yeares: and being a verie old man, and hauing béene treaſuror about ſix yeares, he died at Hatfield the ſeuenth ides of June, in the yeare that God became man one thouſand thrée hundred ſeuentie and thrée, and the ſeuen and fortith yéere of the often named king Edward the third, he was buried in the church of Elie beſides the high altar on the ſouth part.

Richard de Cheſterfield.

I haue read and ſéene by manie noted that one named Richard de Cheſterfield was treaſuror to the king in the one and fortith yeare of king Edward the third, whome they will haue lord treaſuror: which by no poſſible meanes as farre as I can yet conceiue maie be true: bicauſe it appeareth by record that John biſhop of Elie (which was this Barnet if you marke the time of his tranſlating to Elie) was treaſuror in the ſame yeare: but it maie be that he was treaſuror of the chamber or houſhold to the ſaid king in the ſaid one and fortith yeare of his reigne.

Thomas de Brantington.

Thomas de Brantington, being treaſuror for the king in the parts of Guiſnes marches and Calis, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred ſixtie and ſeuen, being the one and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, was made biſhop of Exceſter by eſpeciall letters of the king in the yéere of our ſaluation one thouſand thrée hundred ſixtie and eight, being the thrée and fortith yeare of the ſaid Edward the third, and was lord treaſuror of England in the foure and fortith & fiue & fortith yéere of Edward the third: in which fiue and fortith yeare, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred ſeuentie and one, he was in a parlement at the petition of the lords remooued, at what time alſo there paſſed a law, that the chancellor, treaſuror, and clerke of the priuie ſeale, ſhuld no more be ſpirituall men: but that ſecular men ſhould haue thoſe offices.

Sir Richard Scroope lord of Bolton.

Sir Richard Scroope or Scrobs knight lord of Bolton and chancellor of England, was treaſuror of England in the ſix and fortith, ſeuen & fortith, & eight and fortith of Edward the third, and then gaue place to ſir Robert Aſhton knight. This Richard made out of the ground the caſtell of Bolton conſiſting of foure great ſtrong towers, and of other ſtatelie lodgings, which caſtell was erecting eightéene yeares, the charges whereof came yearelie vnto a thouſand marks, which was eightéene thouſand markes, or twelue thouſand pounds: the ounce of ſiluer being then but at twentie pence, which being now treble and at fiue ſhillings, dooth at this daie amount vnto ſix and thirtie thouſand pounds, which caſtell he finiſhed before Richard the ſecond died. He bought the heire generall of ſaint Quintine, that was honor of Hornelie caſtell in Richmontſhire, which heire he was content one Coniers a ſeruant of his ſhould marrie, and haue the preferrement of that ward; and ſo Hornelie caſtell came to the Conierſes, of which houſe the firſt lord was William Coniers, grandfather to him that died in the time of quéene Marie without heire male, whereby his inheritance came to his thrée daughters. Which William the firſt lord Coniers of that name did much coſt vpon Hornelie caſtell: being before but a meane thing. I haue read of this lord Scroope, that he had a ſonne called William, whereof we will ſpeake more hereafter, that was earle of Wilſhire, who being beheaded in his fathers life, left no iſſue behind him. After which the father ſuruiuing was made treaſuror to the king and died in honor, although he was not reſtored to his dignitie of chancellorſhip: but at what time he ſhould be the ſecond time treaſuror (after the death of his ſonne William) in the time of Henrie the fourth, I can not as yet certeinlie learne. But it maie be that he was againe treaſuror in the ninth yeare of Henrie the fourth; for that I find not by any former ſearch who then poſſeſſed that place. It ſéemeth that he had two wiues, the one the daughter of the lord Spenſer the other the daughter of Michaell de la Poole erle of Suffolke called Blanch. He had thrée ſons, for whom he bought of the king the thrée daughters and heires of Robert lord Tiptoſt, whereof the eldeſt daughter Margaret was married to Roger his ſecond ſonne, the ſecond daughter was married to William his eldeſt ſonne, the third daughter called Milleſcent was married to Stephan the third ſonne of the ſaid Richard.

Sir Robert Aſhton.

Sir Robert Aſhton knight, conſtable of Douer caſtell, was lord treaſuror in the fiftith and one and fiftith of king Edward the third in Michaelmaſſe tearme, which was the laſt Michaelmaſſe tearme wherein the king reigned, being about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred ſeuentie and ſix, of which name there was alſo one that was chiefe baron in the time of Edward the ſecond, as I haue read.

Henrie Wake biſhop of Worceſter.

Henrie Wake or Wakefield, being made biſhop of Worceſter in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred ſeucantie and fiue, being the fortie and ninth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, was made lord treaſuror of England in the yeare that the word of the father tooke fleſh in the wombe of the woman, one thouſand thrée hundred ſeuentie and ſix, in the one and fiftith yeare of king Edward the third, in which office he continued part of Eaſter tearme in the firſt yeare of king Richard the ſecond, being about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred ſeauentie and eight, he died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie and fiue, as ſaith Walſingham.

Thomas Brantington biſhop of Exceſter.

Thomas Brantington biſhop of Exceſter was made lord treaſuror of England towards the latter end of Eaſter tearme, in the firſt yeare of king Richard the ſecond, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred ſeauentie and eight, as I at this time account it: from which place he was ſhortlie remooued in the ſecond yeare of king Richard the ſecond.

Richard earle of Arundell.

Richard earle of Arundell and Surrie, made lord treaſuror of England in the ſecond yeare of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, whereof part fell in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred ſeauentie and eight, & part in the yéere one thouſand thrée hundred ſeauentie and nine, continued about one yeare in the ſame, and then gaue place to him which poſſeſſed the ſame office laſt before him, he married Eliſabeth the daughter of William de Bohune earle of Northampton & Hereford, by whome he had iſſue Thomas earle of Arundell, Ione married to William Beauchampe lord Aburgauennie, Eliſabeth married to Thomas lord Mowbraie, Margaret married to ſir Rowland Lenthall, and Alice married to John Charleton lord Powes: this Richard was beheaded in the one and twentith yeare of Richard the ſecond.

Thomas Brantington biſhop of Exceſter.

Thomas Brantington biſhop of Exceſter was the third time lord treaſuror of England, in the third yéere of the after depoſed king Richard the ſecond, & was remooued from his office in the fourth yéere of the ſaid Richard, in the yéere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and eightie, after the account of ſuch as begin the yéere on the fiue and twentith of March.

Robert Hales.

Robert Hales chiefe prior of the knights of the Rhodes, intituled by the name of the knights of S. Johns Jeruſalem in England, was lord treſuror of England in the fourth yéere of the reigne of Richard the ſecond, in which office he continued during his life: for ſhortlie after that he came into that place (which as I ſuppoſe he held Eaſter terme, and ſome moneths after) in the ſaid yéere of Richard the ſecond, in the yéere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and one (the rebelles hauing ſpoiled the hoſpitall or famous college of thoſe knights of ſaint Johns by Smithfield néere vnto London) amongeſt others did fetch this Robert Hales out of the tower of London (where the king then laie) and beheaded him on the tower hill.

Hugh lord Segraue.

Hugh Segraue knight, whome Walſingham calleth Regis ſeneſcallum the kings ſteward, was made lord treaſuror of England in the fift yeare of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, who continued in the ſaid office the ſixt, ſeauenth, eight, and ſome part of the Michaelmaſſe terme in the ninth yeare of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and fiue.

John Fortham biſhop of Durham.

John Fortham canon, being ſecretarie to the king, was made biſhop of Durham the nine and twentith of Maie, in the yéere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and one, being the fourth yeare of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, and was inthronized in September, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and two, being the ſixt yeare of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond. This man was made lord treaſuror in Michaelmaſſe terme the ninth yeare of king Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and fiue: and ſo continued part of the tenth yeare of king Richard the ſecond, vntill he was by parlement diſcharged. He was tranſlated from the biſhoprike of Durham to Elie by Boniface the pope the fift calends of October, as hath the booke of Durham, one thouſand thrée hundred eightie nine, being the twelfe yéere of the ſame Richard: but as ſaith the booke of Elie one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and eight, being the thirtéenth yeare of Richard the ſecond. Which both may be true, becauſe the one may haue relation to the yeare of his tranſlation, and the other to the yeare of his inthronization, both which manie times happened in ſeuerall yeares of manie other biſhops. He was biſhop of Elie ſeuen and thirtie years, thrée moneths, and foure daies, and died a verie old man the thirtéenth of December, in his manor of Dunham, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred twentie and fiue, falling in the fourth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt.

John biſhop of Hereford.

John Gilbert biſhop of Hereford was by parlement made lord treaſuror in the tenth yeare of king Richard the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and ſix, as I for this time take it, in which office he continued the eleuenth, and all Michaelmaſſe terme in the twelfe yéere of king Richard the ſecond, and the one and twentith of March following: after which he was againe remooued, and then he with twelue more were appointed by commiſſion to the gouernment of the whole realme vnder the king, of whome thus writeth one Anonymall chronicle M.S. Is fuit de ordine prædicatorū, vir qui plus lingua quàm fide regebat, which biſhop (as I ſuppoſe) was remooued to ſaint Dauids, after that he had béene thirtéene yeares biſhop of Hereford.

Thomas Brantington biſhop of Exceſter.

Thomas Brantington biſhop of Exceſter. I haue read that the biſhop of Exceſter was made treaſuror in the twelfe yeare of Richard the ſecond, vpon the remoouing of John Gilbert, which biſhop of Exceſter could not be Edmund Gifford, as ſome falſelie name him, for there is no ſuch man as I can find in the catalog of all the biſhops of Exceſter: neither was it Edmund Stafford, for he was not made biſhop of Exceſter vntill the twentith of June one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie and fiue, being the daie before king Richard the ſecond began the one and twentith yéere of his reigne, which is eight yéers after the time whereof we now intreat. Wherefore it muſt néeds be Thomas Brantington, for he being conſecrated biſhop of Exceſter the tenth of March, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred & ſeuentie, being the foure and fortith yeare of Edward the third, and gouerning that ſée foure and twentie years, till the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie and fiue, in which came Edmund Stafford kéeper of the priuie ſeale; it muſt néeds be that (the biſhop of Exceſter being treaſuror in the twelfe yeare of Richard the ſecond, falling in the yéere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and eight) it was this man Brantington, and that he was the fourth time made lord treaſuror of England, about the eightéenth yeare after that he was made biſhop of Exceſter, who died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie and fiue, as hath Ypodigma.

John Gilbert biſhop of ſaint Dauids in Wales.

John Gilbert biſhop of ſaint Dauids in Wales was lord treaſuror in the thirtéenth and fouretéenth yeares of the reigne of the depoſed king Richard the ſecond. Of whome, becauſe there is ſomewhat ſpoken before, we will intreat the leſſe of him in this place.

John Wal-tham biſhop of Saliſburie.

John Walſham, of whome I haue ſpoken more in my diſcourſe of the archbiſhops of Canturburie, in the life of William Courtneie was biſhop of Saliſburie, maiſter of the rolles in the ſixt yeare of Richard the ſecond, and kéeper of the priuie ſeale, after which he was treaſuror of England, in the fiftéenth, ſixtéenth, ſeauentéenth, and part of the eightéenth of Richard the ſecond, for he died in Michaelmas terme in the ſaid 18 yeare of Richard the ſecond, in the yere of Chriſt 1395, others ſaie 1394, of whome thus writeth Walſingham: Hoc anno (which was 1395) obijt Iohannes de Waltham epiſcopus Sarum & regni theſaurarius, qui tantùm regi complacuerit, vt etiam (multis licèt murmurantibus) apud monaſterium inter reges meruit ſepulturam.

Roger Wal-den biſhop of London.

Roger Walden ſometime ſecretarie to the king and treaſuror of the towne of Calis (in the twelfe yéere of Richard the ſecond) was made lord treaſuror in the eightéenth of the ſame king, about the yéere of our Lord 1365, in which office he continued the two and twentith of the ſaid Richard the ſecond. He was elected and made biſhop of Canturburie, but after reiected and depoſed, and therevpon was by pope Innocent the ſeuenth made biſhop of London on the tenth of December, in the yéere of Chriſt 1404, being the ſixt yéere of Henrie the fourth, in the which biſhoprike he continued about one yere, and died in the yéere 1406, being buried at ſaint Bartholomews priorie in Smithfield, who of a poore man (as ſaith Walſingham) was made lord treaſuror of England.

G. biſhop of ſaint Dauids in wales.

G. biſhop of S. Dauids was lord treaſuror of England in the two and twentith yere of Richard the ſecond, which biſhop I ſuppoſe to be Gute de Mone, whom the booke Ypodigma & Thomas Walſingham call biſhop of S. Dauids, and ſaie that he died in the yéere of our redemption 1407, writing in this ſort: Eodem anno Guido de Mone Meneuenſis epiſcopus præſentis lucis ſenſit eclipſim, qui dum vixit magnorum malorum cauſa fuit.

william Scroope earle of wilſhire.

William Scroope knight, vicechamberleine to Richard the ſecond was lord treaſuror, he bought of William Montacute earle of Saliſburie the Ile of Man, with the crowne thereof. He was one of thoſe to whom king Richard the ſecond let the kingdom to farme, he was lord treaſuror of England in the 21 of Richard the ſecond, and was after created earle of Wilſhire, in the ſaid 21 yere of the ſame Richard the ſecond, in the yéere of Chriſt 1397. He was after beheded at Briſtow in the 23 and laſt yéere of the then depoſed king Richard. Of which William Scroope and others thus writeth that worthie poet ſir Iohn Gower in his hiſtorie of Richard the ſecond, commonlie taken as part of his worke intituled Vox clamantis.

*Henrie Bolingbroke cõming into England and depoſing Richard the ſecond.

Dux probus audaci vultu, cum plebe ſequaci*

Sir John Northberie.

Sir John Northberie made lord treaſuror in the firſt yeare of king Henrie the fourth, being the yeare that God tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant, a thouſand thrée hundred nintie and nine, and continued in the ſame in the third yeare of Henrie the fourth, in which yeare he was alſo kéeper of the priuie garderobe in the tower.

Henrie Bowet.

Henrie Bowet made biſhop of Bath, about the yeare of our redemption 1401, being alſo about the ſecond yeare of Henrie the fourth, in which biſhoprike he continued eight yeares, and was after at the kings inſtance in the yéere of Chriſt a thouſand foure hundred and ſeuen, about the eight yeare of Henrie the fourth remoued to Yorke. This man was lord treaſuror of England in the fourth yeare of king Henrie the fourth, in the yeare of our redemption 1403, in which place he continued not aboue a yéere, if ſo long.

William lord Roſſe.

William lord Roſſe, the ſonne of Thomas lord Roſſe, did poſſeſſe the honorable place of the lord treaſuror of England, in the fift yeare of king Henrie the fourth, being about the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand foure hundred and foure, and ſhortlie after gaue place to the lord Furniuall. He married Margaret daughter of Fitzallen lord Matrauars, he had iſſue Thomas lord Roſſe ſlaine in France, in the yeare one thouſand foure hundred twentie and one, about the ninth yeare of Henrie the fift, and manie other children.

Thomas lord Furniuall.

Thomas lord Furniuall kept the place and office of the lord treaſuror of England, the ſixt, ſeuenth, and ſome part of the eight yeare of king Henrie the fourth, as in Michaelmaſſe tearme of the ſame eight yeare, falling in the yeare of our redemption, one thouſand foure hundred and ſix, after which this lord Furniuall (who had the cuſtodie of the caſtell and honour of Wigmoore, being in the kings hands by reaſon of the wardſhip and minoritie of Edmund Mortimer earle of March) was (as it ſéemeth) remoued from the treaſurorſhip, in whoſe roome ſucceeded the biſhop of London. To theſe lord Furniuals did Furniuals inne of Holborne ſometime apperteine as their manſion houſe, being now an inne of chancerie for yoong ſtudents of the law and atturneies, and belonging vnto Lincolns inne in Chancerie lane.

Nicholas Bubwith biſhop of London.

Nicholas Bubwith made biſhop of London in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and ſix: being the eight yéere of Henrie the fourth, muſt be that biſhop of London (as farre as I can yet conceiue) who was lord treaſuror of England in Michaelmas tearme in the ſaid eight yeare of Henrie the fourth: which office it ſéemeth that he held not long, for in Eaſter terme after in the ſame eight yeare, the office of the treſuror remained in the kings hands, and the accompts of the ſame terme go vnder the ſame title of being in the kings hands.

Sir Richard Scroope lord Scroope of Bolton.

Sir Richard Scroope lord of Bolton (wherof is ſo much ſpoken before) was as I ſuppoſe the ſecond time treaſuror of England in this ninth yeare of Henrie the fourth: whereunto I am induced by this reaſon; that firſt the king would not kéepe that office ſo long in his hands as almoſt amounted vnto two yeares, but that he would beſtow the ſame vpon ſome other: ſecondlie, for that I read that this Richard Scroope father to William Scroope earle of Wilſhire beheaded (by this Henrie the fourth before he came to the crowne) at Briſtow (in the laſt yeare of Richard the ſecond, and in the firſt of this kings reigne) was after the death of the ſaid William made treaſuror of England, and ſo died in honour: thirdlie for that I cannot ſée how he might be treaſuror in anie yeare ſince the death of the ſaid William, vntill this ninth yeare of Henrie the fourth: and laſtlie, for that I cannot in anie record or other author find anie other man mentioned to ſupplie that place in this yeare: for which cauſes I haue attempted to beſtow him here, and that rightlie, for anie thing that I can yet learne.

Sir John Tiptoſt knight.

Sir John Tiptoſt or Tibetot knight, did poſſeſſe the place and office of the lord treaſurorſhip of England in Michelmas terme, in the tenth yeare of king

Henrie the fourth, being in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and eight.

Henrie lord Scrope.

Henrie lord Scrope of Maſham and of Flaxfléet, was made lord treaſuror of England, in the eleuenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the fourth, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and ten, as hath Walſingham. In which office he continued vntill the death of king Henrie the fourth, which happened in the fouretéenth yeare of the ſame king, and in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred & twelue, after the account of England: but one thouſand foure hundred and thirtéene after the account of ſuch as doo begin the yeare at Ianuarie. He rebelled againſt king Henrie the fift, and was beheaded at Southhampton in the third yeare of K. Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and fiftéene the laſt of Iulie. Of which Henrie ſo conſpiring againſt Henrie the fift, I find theſe verſes in a written booke of parchement, intituled Extractum breue de chronica Thomæ Helmham, prior Lenton de tempore regis Henrici quinti. In which verſes by the capitall letters are ſet downe the names of the principall conſpirators, & the yeare of our Lord wherin the ſame was doone, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and thirtéene: the leſſer Romane capitall letters in the third verſe ſeruing for the yéere of Chriſt, and for the name Zorc deriued of this word COR in the fourth verſe, & the Engliſh capitall letters onelie ſeruing for the names of the perſons in this ſort couched togither for the common capacitie:

Thomas earle of Arundell.

Thomas Fitz Allen earle of Arundell and Surreie was aduanced to the honorable office of the lord treaſurorſhip of England, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and thirtéene, being the firſt yeare of the reigne of the moſt victorious prince king Henrie the fift, in which office it ſéemeth that he continued the firſt, ſecond, and third of Henrie the fift. He in An. Dom. 1405, being the ſeuenth of Henrie the fourth, on the next daie of the feaſt of S. Katharine, maried Beatrice the baſtard daughter of the king of Portingale, by whom he had no iſſue, hauing his ſiſters his heires, and died in the yeare 1415, being the third yeare of Henrie the fift, and was buried in the college at Arundell.

Sir Roger Lech knight.

Sir Roger Lech (whom ſome call but not rightlie as I ſuppoſe ſir Philip Lech being brother vnto the ſaid ſir Roger) was treaſuror of England, in Michaelmas and Eaſter terme in the fourth yeare of king Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and ſixtéene. He was at the ſiege of Rone with this king Henrie, in the ſixt yeare of his reigne, being alſo treaſuror for the warres in that voiage.

Henrie lord Fitz Hugh.

Henrie lord Fitz Hugh was aduanced to the office of the lord treſurorſhip of England, in the fift yeare of Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred & ſeuentéene, in which office he continued (as I gather) vntill the death of the ſaid king Henrie the fift, which happened in Auguſt, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred twentie and two.

Iohn Stafford.

Iohn Stafford clerke was made lord treaſuror of England in the firſt yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare that the word became fleſh 1422, in which office he continued in Michaelmaſſe terme, and fourth of the ſaid king Henrie the ſixt, falling in the yeare of Chriſt 1425, he was choſen biſhop of Bath, in the third yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, in the yeare 1424, he was chancellor of England, and remoued to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, of whome is mention made hereafter in the diſcourſe of the chancellors of England, and touching whome I will for this time onelie ſet downe here what Matthew Parker writeth of him in the life of Henrie Chicheleie archbiſhop of Canturburie. Archiepiſcopus (ſaith he) in the yeare of our redemption 1424, Cantuarienſis 12 Octob. clerum in eccleſia Paulina conuocauit, in ea Henricus Beaufort Winton epiſcopus regni cancellarius, & Iohannes Stafford Bathonienſis electus epiſcopus regni theſaurarius, ad bellum Gallicum opē à cler. petiuit, & interpoſita paucorum dierum deliberatione, Wilhelmus Lyndwod officialis curiæ Cantuariēſis de arcubus, hoc reſponſum ab inferiori cleri ſynodo acceptum epiſcopis declarauit: non eſſe penes cleri procuratores poteſtatem ſubſidium concedendi. Nam cùm in dicta ſynodo in ſingulis diœceſibus conſtituti eſſent, clerus his ſolutionibus conſentiendi licentiam expreſſè ademit: quia tantis tributis diu pendendis ad magnam inopiam & egeſtatem deuenit. Itaque cancellarius à ſuperiori ſynodo ad inferiorem tranſiens, longa & diſerta oratione, ac regis iam minoris neceſſitate, ac de inſtanti in Gallia bello egit, ac nequicquam ſuaſit.

Walter lord Hungerford.

Walter lord Hungerford knight of the garter, the ſonne of ſir Thomas Hungerford knight, was made lord treaſuror of England in the fourth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of Chriſt 1425, in which office he continued about ſix yeares, vntill ſome part of Michaelmas terme in the tenth yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, falling in the yeare that the ſonne of God tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant, one thouſand foure hundred thirtie and one. He was alſo one of the councell to the ſaid king, of whome is mention made by Matthew Parker in the life of Henrie Chicheleie archbiſhop of Canturburie, in theſe words: Proximo anno (which was about the yeare of our Lord 1425) ſynodus ſub eodem archiepiſcopo, 15 Aprilis inchoata eſt. Qua Iohanne Kempo Eboracenſi archiepiſcopo & Waltero Hungerfordo milite, regijs conciliarijs (illo cancellario hoc theſaurario regni) regis nomine poſtulantibus regi decimam conceſſit. Ac eiſdem his petentibus, triennio poſt in recenti ſynodo media decima regi à clero data eſt. This lord treaſuror maried Katharine the daughter and heire of Thomas Peuerell knight, by whome he had iſſue Walter lord Hungerford of Hatchberie knight of the garter that died without iſſue, ſir Robert lord Hungerford of Hatchberie, Edmund Hungerford knight that died without iſſue, Margaret maried to ſir Walter Rodneie knight, and Eliſabeth maried to Philip Courtneie knight: which Robert lord Hungerford and Margaret his wife, Iohn Cheineie of Pim eſquier, Iohn Meruine eſquier and others did (by the kings licence granted vnto them in the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth) build the hoſpitall of Hatchberie in Wilſhire.

Iohn lord Scrope.

Iohn lord Scrope of Vrſall and Maſham, made lord treaſuror in the tenth yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of our redemption 1431, in which office he continued vntill ſome part of the twelfe yéere of the ſaid king, as I for this time doo gather. Of whom thus writeth Matthew Parker in the life of Henrie Chichelie archbiſhop of Canturburie, touching a ſynod holden in the yeare of our Lord 1430, at what time, of the clergie he ſaith that Iohannes nes Stafford epiſcopus Bathonienſis cancellarius, & D. Scrope theſaurarius regni, nec non Wilhelmus Lyndwood, cuſtos priuati ſigilli, pro rege ſubſidium poſtularunt, & mediam decimam tandem ægrè impetrarunt.

Raſe lord Cromwell.

Raſe lord Cromwell, the ſon of Raſe Cromwell lord of Taterſhall, poſſeſſed the place of the lord treaſurorſhip of England, in Eaſter terme in the twelfe yeare of the after depoſed K. Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of Chriſt 1434, & ſo continued in that office about ten years, falling (as I ſuppoſe) in the yeare of our redemption 1444. This man being knight was created lord Cromwell by the ſaid king Henrie the ſixt, and was lineallie deſcended of one of the heires of Robert lord Taterſhall, that maried one of the daughters & heires of William Dalbinie earle of Arundell. Sir Raſe Butler lord Sudleie.

Sir Raſe Butler knight of the garter, lord Sudleie (deſcended from John lord Sudleie, and William Butler baron of Wem, which maried Jone daughter and heire to John Sudleie lord Sudleie) did poſſeſſe the honourable place of the lord treaſurorſhip of England the ſeuenth of Julie, in the two and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred fortie and foure, which office he kept abont thrée yeares: for in the fiue and twentith yeare of the ſaid king, was the biſhop of Carleill lord treaſuror. This Raſe lord Sudleie builded the caſtell of Sudleie, in the time of king Henrie the ſixt, and of Edward the fourth, who in the time of the ſaid Edward the fourth was committed to priſon by the king; firſt ſending for him to come to his preſence. Whereupon he going to the king, and reſting on an hill, from whence he did behold Sudleie caſtell, ſaid: It is thou, it is thou Sudleie caſtell and not I which am the traitor. After which comming to king Edward the fourth, he reſigned the ſaid Sudleie caſtell into the kings hands. Which caſtell came after to Jaſper duke of Bedford, and is now in the yeare 1585 in the poſſeſſion of Giles a Bridges lord Shandois. This Raſe being made baron in the twentith yeare of Henrie the ſixt, maried Eliſabeth the daughter of ſir John Northberie, by whome he had iſſue Thomas his ſon that died without iſſue, leauing his two ſiſters to be his heires, whereof the eldeſt daughter called Eliſabeth, was maried to ſir John Northberie, whoſe heire generall was maried to John Halwell of Deuonſhire, who had iſſue Jone his daughter and heire maried to Edward lord Braie, of whom the lord Cobham now liuing is deſcended. The other ſiſter maried to ſir Hamond, of whome is deſcended the worthie gentleman Thomas Wotton of Bacton Maleherbe in Kent eſquier now liuing. The which Raſe lord Butler of Sudleie was Vexillifer, and high butler of England, and ſteward in houſe to king Henrie the ſixt.

James Fi lord Sa and Sele.

James Fines created at Burie baron of Sale and of Sele, on the third of March in the fiue and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of our redemption, according to the Engliſh account 1446, was coneſtable of Douer caſtell and lord treaſuror of England, in the eight and twentith yeare of the ſaid king Henrie the ſixt, and was from thence remoued (as ſome haue) in the nine and twentith yere of the ſaid king, & was by the rebels of Kent Jacke Cade and his felowes taken out of the tower to the Guildhall, where he was arreigned before the maior and other the kings iuſtices, who deſiring to be tried by his péeres, was by the rebels forceablie taken from the officers, and beheaded at the ſtandard in Cheape. The maner whereof ſhall be more fullie ſet downe hereafter in my large booke of the liues of the lord treaſurors. Which his beheading ſome do attribute to the eight and twentith yeare of the ſaid Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of our redemption 1450. He had iſſue ſir William Fines knight, and one daughter maried to ſir William Cromer knight, ſhiriffe of Kent, beheaded at that time alſo with his father in law. Of which Cromer is James Cromer of Kent now liuing deſcended.

James Butler, the ſonne of James earle of Ormond, being earle of Wilſhire and Ormond, poſſeſſed the office of the lord treaſuror of England in Eaſter tearme the thrée and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, falling in the yeare of our redemption 1455. Of whome is more ſpoken hereafter.

Henrie vicount Bourchier.

Henrie vicount Bourchier, borne of the noble houſe of the Bourchiers, the ſonne of William Bourchier earle of Ewe in Normandie, was lord treaſuror of England in the thrée and fortith yeare of the reigne of the depoſed king Henrie the ſixt, in which office he did not long remaine.

John Talbot earle of Shre

John Talbot earle of Shrewesburie, the ſonne of John Talbot the firſt earle of Shrewsburie of that name, poſſeſſed the place of the treaſurorſhip of England in the fiue and thirtith and ſix and thirtith yeares of king Henrie the ſixt, and then gaue place to the earle of Wilſhire. This earle was ſlaine at the battell of Northampton, in the eight & thirtith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of our ſaluation 1460. He maried Eliſabeth the daughter of James Butler earle of Ormond, and had iſſue, John earle of Shrewesburie, James, Gilbert, Chriſtopher, and George; Anne maried to ſir Henrie Vernon, & Margaret: this man was buried in the priorie of Workeſop.

James earle of Wilſhire.

James Butler, ſonne to James the fourth of that name earle of Ormond, was the ſecond time made lord treaſuror of England, about the 37 yere of king Henrie the ſixt, in which office he continued (as I ſuppoſe) in the eight and thirtith yeare of the ſaid king. This man in the ſaid eight and thirtith yeare of the king conueied himſelfe awaie out of England into Dutchland (for feare of the nobilitie, as the duke of Yorke and others that rebelled againſt the king) ſending backe his ſouldiers into England, which he had before aſſembled vpon the ſea: but after he returned into England, and was againe put to flight at Mortimers croſſe by Edward earle of March after king by the name of king Edward the fourth. He was made earle of Ormond in the nine and thirtith yeare and laſt yeare of king Henrie the ſixt. He maried Eleanor the daughter of Edmund duke of Summerſet, and died without iſſue, being beheaded at Newcaſtell in the yeare one thouſand foure hundred ſixtie one, in the firſt yeare of Edward the fourth.

Henrie vicount Bourchier.

Henrie vicount Bourchier was lord treaſuror of England the ſecond time, in the nine and thirtith and laſt yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred & ſixtie. Who vpon the depoſition of the ſaid king Henrie the ſixt by Edward the fourth, was alſo remooued from his office.

Thomas lord Bourchier.

Thomas Bourchier, made lord treaſuror of England in the firſt yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred ſixtie and one, continued not long in that office, but gaue place to Iohn earle of Worceſter.

Iohn earle of Worceſter.

Iohn Tiptoft earle of Worceſter, the ſecond time poſſeſſed the place of the lord treaſuror of England, in the ſecond and third yeare of king Edward the fourth. Of whom is more ſpoken before by me in my treatiſe of the coneſtables of England pag. 869.

Edmund lord Greie of Ruthine after erle of Kent.

Edmund lord Greie of Ruthine, the ſonne of Iohn lord Greie of Ruthine, did inioy the office of the lord treaſurorſhip of England, in the fourth yeare of the noble prince king Edward the fourth, being the yere of our redemption 1464. This man ſecretlie in hart forſaking the part of king Henrie the ſixt, for iniuries receiued at the ſame king Henries hands, aided the ſaid Edward the fourth, and was the chiefe meanes whereby he atteined the crowne. In Michaelmas tearme in the ſaid fourth yeare of the king, there was a ſergeants feaſt held in Holborne in the biſhop of Elies houſe, to which the maior and aldermen repaired, being bidden thither. But when the maior looked to be ſet to kéepe the ſtate in the hall (forgetting that he was out of his owne liberties, for the biſhops palace was an exempt place) as it had béene vſed (ſaith Iohn Stow) in all places of the citie & liberties of the ſame, out of the kings preſence: the lord Greie of Ruthine then treaſuror of England vnk[illegible]ne to the ſergeants, and (againſt their wils as th[illegible] not ſaid) was placed in the higheſt roome. Whereupon the maior, aldermen, and commons departed. This Edmund doth Matthew Parker, in the life of Thomas Bourchier archbiſhop of Canturburie, make to be treaſuror in the third yeare of Edward the fourth, being the yeare of Chriſt 1463: which may well inough ſtand with the former, being treaſuror to Iohn earle of Worceſter in the ſaid third yeare of the king. For vpon the remoouing of the ſaid earle in the third yeare of Edward the fourth, came this lord Greie in place. The words of which Matthew Parker (with a note of the yeare of Chriſt 1463 in the margent) are in this order. Edwardus rex, duobus iam annis fœliciter geſto regno, parliamentum Weſtmonaſterij tenuit, quo etiã tempore archiepiſcopus (which was Thomas Bourchier the brother of Henrie Bourchier earle of Eſſex) & clerus in ſynodo conuenerunt. In hac ſynodo Iohannes comes Wigorniæ, Henricus comes Eſſexiæ, D. Edmundus Grey theſaurarius Angliæ, D. Humfridus Cromewell, D. Wenlocke, D. Iohannes prior ſancti Iohannis, & Robertus Stillington legum doctor cuſtos priuati ſigilli, regis conciliarij, allatis literis regijs petierunt a clero decerni regi ad Scotos repellendos ſubſidium. Quod quidem gratiſsimis omnium animis tam munifico regi conceſſum eſt, qui ſuperiori anno eccleſiæ immunitates atque iura iniquis iudiciorum calumnijs (vti in Iohanne Stafford antea diximus) conuulſa & labefactata diplomate regio reſtaurauit.

Beſides which, thus writeth Iohn Whethamſted, that learned abbat of ſaint Albons, of this lord Greie, declaring in what authoritie he was at firſt, in the daies of Henrie the ſixt, and then in the reigne of Edward the fourth. His words be theſe. Anno 36 H. 6. venerunt tres viri monachi de cœnobio Cluniacenſi, quibus ad audiendum eorũ nuntium miſſi ſunt epiſcopus Dunelmenſis cuſtos priuati ſigilli, dominus Edmundus Greie de Ruthine, & ſecretarius regis, quibus iſti viri dixerunt eorum aduentum eſſe ob tria. Primò ad aperiendum quomodo reges Angliæ & præcipuè Henricus ſecundus fuerunt tam magni benefactores ad eorum eccleſiam, vt potiùs pro nunc dicatur earum patronus ac præcipuus fundator. Secundò venerunt ad petendum poſſeſſionem & confirmationem bonorum illorum, quæ dicti progenitores eis contulerant, & per tempus non paucum iamdudum à manibus eorum detenta & diſtracta erant. Tertiò ad impetrandum liberam licentiam ad ingrediendum ſingula loca religioſa ab eorum cœnobio dependentia, & quæ per nobiles progenitores regis poſita fuerũt ſub eorum regimine. Sed nihil hîc eis gratũ fuit actum, ita vt triſtes diſcederent. Out of the which words of Whethamſted maie other things be gathered, beſides the doings of the lord Greie: as that the kings of England, and ſpeciallie Henrie the ſecond, haue béene great benefactors and founders of the Charterhouſe monks: with manie mo matters conteined in the ſame, which I referre to the wiſe and learned reader, which made me the willinger to ſet downe his words ſo largelie.

Moreouer, the ſame Whethamſted, continuing the hiſtorie of Henrie the ſixt, writeth of the battell of Northampton, wherin was this lord Greie, in this ſort. In prælio Northamptonenſi Edmundus Grey dominus Ruthine corpore licèt præſens (euen as the lord Stanleie was in the battell fought betwixt Richard the third & Henrie erle of Richmond, after king by the name of Henrie the ſeuenth) in campo domini regis Henrici ſexti ſteterat, cor tamen eius non erat rectum in eo, neq; omninò fidelis habitus aut inuentus fuit. Nam venientibus turmis dictis ad foſſam circumuallationis, & ipſam nõ multùm promptè propter eleuationem verticis in parte vlteriore aſcendere valentibus, occurrit ipſis dominus cum ſuis copijs obuiàm, porrigendóq; ipſis dextram traxit eos per manus in campum Martium, iuxta votum ſuum. Thus much Whethamſted of Edmund Greie lord Ruthine, who was made earle of Kent in the fift yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1464.

This Edmund Greie being lord Haſtings, Weiſford, and Ruthine (before he had the honour of this earledome) did by his déed of indenture dated the 18 of Nouember, in the fiue and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, falling in the yeare of our redemption 1446, giue to Iohn Pinchbecke prior of Duffield in Northamptonſhire in almeſſe, during the life of the ſaid prior, his field called Challocke, belonging to the manour of Challocke, to kéepe the obits of ſir Iohn Greie, father to the ſaid ſir Edmund, and of dame Cuſtance the widow of the earle marſhall, and daughter of Iohn Holland duke of Exceſter and erle of Huntington, mother to the ſaid ſir Edmund, with maſſe, &c: and ſuch other collects as the ſaid Edmund ſhould deliuer vnto the ſaid prior. Out of this houſe of the Greies haue iſſued manie noble houſes, and thoſe of great antiquitie, whereof at this daie there yet remaineth two honourable houſes: the one being Henrie Greie earle of Kent now liuing, a man of ſingular eſtimation in the countrie of Bedford where he now liueth, as well for the nobilitie of his race, being deſcended of this Edmund Greie lord treaſuror of England, for the good gouernment and carriage of himſelfe, and for the orderlie and wiſe managing of the affaires of that countrie, deſeruing no leſſe honourable place in the commonwealth, than the honour of his race, and worthineſſe of his behauiour do well merit.

The lord Greie of wilton.

The other houſe at this daie in honour, is the lord Greie of Wilton knight of the garter, and ſomtime deputie of Ireland, a man of no leſſe merit for his ſeruice abrode in the feats of armes, than is the other Greie for his ſeruice at home in the affairs of peace. But I will not ſaie all that I thinke and know of them both, leaſt ſome more maliciouſlie than trulie blemiſh me with the note of flatterie. For I proteſt I am ſo farre eſtranged from that, as I being not at all knowne to the one, and but ſlenderlie to the other, and neuer benefited by anie of them both, there is no cauſe why I ſhould vſe anie flatterie: and yet ſuch force hath vertue, as it will ſhine euen in deſpite of malice. But againe to the matter. There haue out of this houſe of the Greies, beſides manie noble houſes, iſſued one duke of Suffolke, two marqueſſes of Dorſet, and fiue earles of Kent.

The ſeuerall houſes of the Greies.

Againe I thinke it not impertinent for the continuance of antiquities, and of deſerts of honour, to mention how manie ſeuerall houſes there haue bin of the nobilitie of theſe Greis, and in what time they liued. Firſt there was Reignold Greie lord Greie of Codnor, in the time of king Stephan: the ſecond was Reignold lord Greie of Rotherfield, in the time of Richard the ſecond: the third John Greie earle of Tankeruile in Normandie, in the time of Henrie the fift: the fourth this Edmund Greie lord Ruthine earle of Kent, and treaſuror of England in the time of king Edward the fourth: the fift houſe Thomas Greie marqueſſe Dorſet, in the time of king Edward the fourth: the ſixt Edward Greie lord Liſle in the time of king Edward the fourth: the ſeuenth Edward Greie lord Powes, in the time of king Edward the fourth: the eight Henrie Greie duke of Suffolffe, in the time of Edward the ſixt. So that there were at one time, in one kings daies, which was the time of Edward the fourth, ſix noble men liuing of the name of Greies, which were the marqueſſe Dorſet, the earle of Kent, the lord Liſle, the lord Powes, the lord Greie of Wilton, and the lord Greie of Rotherfield.

The Greies right honourable.

Wherefore to draw to an end of this lord treaſuror, who hath occaſioned me to be more liberall in treating of him and the Greies, than of any lord treaſuror or noble name beſides (for manie priuat reaſons which I reſerue to my ſelfe) I will yet ſpeake more liberallie of him and the Greies in my large booke of the liues of the lord treaſurors of England, and knit vp this Edmund Greie lord treaſuror with the marieng of his wife Katharine, the daughter of Henrie Perſie earle of Northumberland, by whome he had iſſue George Greie earle of Kent; Eliſabeth, maried to Robert baron of Greieſtocke; and Anne maried to John lord Greie of Wilton.

Sir walter Blunt knight

Sir Walter Blunt knight, who was the firſt lord Montioie, poſſeſſed the place of the lord treaſurorſhip of England, in the fift yeare of king Edward the fourth, which fell in the yeare that the word of the father tooke fleſh in the wombe of the virgine 1465. Of this man is mention made in the booke of the law called Long Quinto of Edward the fourth. He maried the daughter of one Dirham, and had iſſue, William, John, and James.

Sir Richard wooduile.

Sir Richard Wooduile knight, chamberleine to the king, and conſtable of England, was made baron on the ninth of Maie in the ſecond yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of Chriſt 1424, and was after created earle Riuers in the fift yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1465, who thus aduanced was after lord treaſuror in the ſixt, ſeuenth, & eight of Edward the fourth. In which eight yeare of Edward the fourth, Thomas Cooke late maior of London, was accuſed of treaſon and arreigned for the ſame. Who after that he had béene manie times purged thereof, was yet at laſt found giltie, and by this lord Riuers then lord treaſuror ſo handled, as that he could not be deliuered vntill he had paied eight thouſand pounds to the king, and eight hundred to the quéene. This lord treaſuror maried Jaquet the widow of John duke of Bedford, daughter to Peter of Lucenburgh earle of S. Paule, by whom he had iſſue Richard earle Riuers, Antonie lord Scales in the right of his wife, Edward Wooduile knight ſlaine at the battell of S. Albine in Britaine in the third yeare of Henrie the ſeuenth: Lionell biſhop of Saliſburie, Margaret maried to Thomas erle of Arundell, Margaret maried to William Herbert erle of Huntington, Anne firſt maried to William Burcher erle of Eſſex and after to George Greie erle of Kent, Jaquet maried to John lord Strange, Eliſabeth maried to ſir John Greie yonger ſonne to the lord Greie of Ruthine, and after the death of the ſaid ſir John Greie to king Edward the fourth: and Katharine maried to Henrie duke of Buckingham. Beſides all which I haue read of one John, which was ſonne to this earle Riuers, which John maried the old ducheſſe of Norfolke, & was beheaded with his father: the truth whereof I leaue to further triall. This Richard erle Riuers the lord treaſuror in the ninth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1469, was by Robert Hiltard, who named himſelfe Robert of Rideſdale, taken in the forreſt of Dene as ſome haue, others ſaie at Grafton, and from thence brought to Northampton, where he was beheaded.

John Longſtrother.

John Longſtrother, prior of ſaint Johns Jeruſalem in England, poſſeſſed the place of the lord treaſuror of the realme, in the ninth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and nine, for in the ſame yeare he gaue place to the biſhop of Elie.

William Greie biſhop of Elie.

William Greie biſhop of Elie, was after the tranſlation of Thomas Burcher from Elie to Canturburie aduanced to that ſee by Nicholas the fift then biſhop of Rome, who gaue it to the ſaid William being then procurator for king Henrie the ſixt at Rome, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and foure. This man was lord treaſuror in the ninth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare in which God became man one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and nine, in which office he continued (as I gather) vntill the eleuenth of king Edward the fourth, or thereabouts. This Greie was borne of the noble houſe of the lord Greies of Codnor, as ſaith Bale, and trauelled into Italie to atteine great learning, where he heard the noble clerke Guarinus Veronenſis read in Ferraria. He continued biſhop of Elie foure and twentie yéeres, eleuen moneths and two daies, departing this life at Dunham the fourth of Auguſt, in the yere that the word of the father tooke fleſh in the wombe of the virgine, one thouſand foure hundred ſeuentie and eight, as I haue red; and was buried at Elie betwéene two marble pillers, hauing beſtowed great ſummes of monie vpon the reparation of that famous belfrie of the church of Elie, and vpon other ornaments of the ſame church.

Henrie Bourcher.

Henrie Bourcher erle of Eſſex did the third time poſſeſſe the honorable place of the lord treaſuror of England, in the eleuenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, in which office he continued (as I gather) about twelue yeares, being all the reſt of the life of the ſaid Edward the fourth, who departed this world about the ninth daie of Aprill, in the yeare from the conception of the Meſchiah one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and thrée, which Bourchier being made earle of Eſſex in the firſt yeare of king Edward the fourth, in the yeare of Chriſt 1461, maried Eliſabeth the daughter of Richard de Coniſburgh earle of Cambridge the ſiſter of Richard duke of Yorke, by whome he had iſſue William lord Bourchier, Thomas, Iohn, Henrie, and Humfreie knights.

Sir Richard Wood.

Sir Richard Wood knight, whome ſome call ſir Iohn Wood, being before vnder treaſuror in the thrée and twentith yeare of king Edward the fourth, was in the ſame yeare of the ſame king made knight, about a moneth before the death of the ſaid king Edward the fourth. This man did poſſeſſe the place of the lord treaſuror of England (as I gather out of the record of Pellis exitus of that yeare) in the ſecond yeare of the reigne of the vnnaturall, bloudie, and vſurping tyrant king Richard the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1484, which office I ſuppoſe that he kept, vntill the ſaid Richard the third was ſlaine by Henrie earle of Richmond afterwards king of England, by the name of Henrie the 7. And here I thinke it not amiſſe before I go anie further (although it be ſomewhat out of order, ſith it is beſt to obſerue Decorum, and vnorderlie to treat of vnorderlie officers vnder ſuch an vnorderlie king as Richard the third was) to make report of ſir William Hopton knight, whome ſome will haue to be treaſuror in the firſt yeare of the reigne of the ſame king, in the yeare of Chriſt 1483, attending on him to his coronation. But trulie, ſauing the correction of better ſéene antiquaries than my ſelfe, I can not as yet receiue him into the catalog of the lord treaſurors of England, but rather ſuppoſe that he was treaſuror of the houſhold.

Sir william Hopton.

Sir Reinold Braie knight.

Sir Reinold Braie knight (the ſonne of Richard Braie phyſician as ſome haue noted to king Henrie the ſixt) being ſeruant to Margaret counteſſe of Richmond mother to Henrie the ſeuenth, was for the fidelitie to his ladie, & good ſeruice in furthering king Henrie the ſeuenth to the crowne, receiued into great fauour with the ſaid king, and made lord treaſuror of England, as appeareth by the record of Pellis exitus made vnder his name in the firſt yeare of the reigne of Henrie the ſeuenth, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand, foure hundred, eightie, and beſides which office he had manie other offices and honours, part whereof were, that he was treaſuror of the kings wars, that he was one of the executors to k. Henrie the ſeuenth, that he was made knight of the Bath at the coronation of the ſaid king, and created a banneret at Blacke heath field. He died the eightéenth yeare of the Salomon of England king Henrie the ſeuenth, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred & thrée, and was honorablie buried at Windſore.

Sir Iohn Dinham knight.

Sir Iohn Dinham knight (the ſonne of ſir Iohn Dinham knight) a faithfull ſeruant to the houſe of Yorke aſwell in aiding the duke of Yorke, as in ſeruing king Edward the fourth ſonne to the ſaid duke of Yorke; to whom the ſaid Edward the fourth, in the ſecond yeare of his reigne had giuen one annuitie of fortie pounds by yeare, did after the death of the ſaid king Edward the fourth, in the ſecond yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth, poſſeſſe the place of the lord treſuror of England, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and ſix, and ſo continued vntill in the ſixtéenth yéere of king Henrie the ſeuenth, and then gaue place to Thomas earle of Surreie, of which lord Dinham thus writeth Leland: Diminus Denham primus fuit fundator ſancti Nicholai aliàs Hortland. He was created lord Dinham in the firſt yeare of king Edward the fourth, ſhortlie after the coronation of the ſaid king, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and one, he died in the ſixtéenth yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred, and the thirtith of Ianuarie was brought to the Greie friers in London & there buried: he maried Eliſabeth the daughter of the lord Fitzwater, by whom he had iſſue George and Philip, and ſir Thomas Dinham his baſe ſonne that maried one of the daughters and heires of ſir Iohn Ormond, which Thomas was buried at Aſhrug thrée miles from Berkhamſted. Beſides which children this lord Dinham or Denham, for ſo I find both written in chronicles, had by his legitimat wife diuerſe daughters, which were Margaret maried to Nicholas baron of Carew, Ioane maried to the lord Zouch, Eliſabeth maried to the lord Fitz Warren, and Katharine maried to ſir Thomas Arundell of Cornewall knight.

Here I thinke it not amiſſe to ſaie ſomewhat of a note which I haue ſéene, that maketh Iohn Touchet lord Audleie treſuror, which note is this. Iohn Touchet lord Audleie treaſuror of England, died the ſix and twentith daie of December, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and ten, falling in the ſixt yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth, and had iſſue Iames lord Audelie beheaded the eight and twentith of Iune, in the yeare of Chriſt 1497, being the twelfe yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth, he maried the daughter of ſir Richard Dauell knight: thus much the note. But trulie for anie thing I can yet learne, I can not perceiue when this Iohn Touchet ſhould be treaſuror, and ſo cannot perceiue where he ſhould be placed in this catalog of the treaſurors of England. But as I will not receiue him into anie place of this ſucceſſion at this time; ſo I will not altogither reiect him, in hope that following time will informe me of the truth therein.

Thomas Howard erle of Surreie.

Thomas Howard the ſonne of Iohn lord Howard (created the firſt duke of Norffolke of that name in the time of Richard the third) was at the ſame time alſo created earle of Surreie. This man (after the ſlaughter of his father at Boſworth field, when the tyrant Richard the third was ſlaine by Henrie the ſeuenth) was after receiued into ſuch fauour with the ſaid king Henrie the ſeuenth, that he was aduanced to be lord treaſuror of England, in the ſixtéenth yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred, which place he continued all the life of the ſaid king Henrie the ſeuenth, who died in the foure and twentith yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred and nine. After which for the good ſeruice he vſed in the time of Henrie the ſeuenth, king Henrie the eight alſo permitted him to kéepe that office, which he poſſeſſed vntill the fiftéenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and thrée.

This man was created duke of Norffolke on Candelmaſſe daie, in the fiſt yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yéere of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred and thirtéene, at what time alſo his ſon Thomas Howard was made earle of Surreie. This duke was aduanced to that honour (in recompenſe of the death of the king of Scots, and for the good ſeruice that he did againſt that nation in the ſaid fiſt yeare of Henrie the eight) with an augmentation of his armes, to beare the armes of Scotland in the bend of the arms of Howard. Touching which victorie and death of the king of Scots Buchanan lib. 13. writeth to this effect, that the ſaid Thomas Howard (as a note of the conqueſt) gaue to his ſeruants his cogniſance (to weare on their left arme) being a white lion (the beaſt which he bare before as the proper enſigne of that houſe) ſtanding ouer a red lion (the peculiar note of the kingdome of Scotland) and tearing the ſame red lion with his pawes. This Thomas duke of Norffolke maried two wiues, his firſt wife was Eliſabeth the daughter of ſir Frederike Tilneie knight, by whom he had iſſue Thomas erle of Surreie after duke of Norffolke, Edward ſlaine at Bret admerall of England, & Edmund Howard, with Eliſabeth maried to Thomas Bulleine earle of Wilſhire, and Muriell married to John Greie vicount Liſle. His ſecond wife was Agnes daughter of ſir Philip Tilneie knight, by whome he had iſſue William lord Howard of Effingham, with manie others. This Thomas duke of Norffolke died in the ſixtéenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and foure, and was buried at Thetford in Norffolke.

Thomas Howard.

Thomas Howard (ſonne to the ſaid Thomas duke of Norffolke) being earle of Surreie, poſſeſſed the place of the lord treaſuror in the fiftéenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare that Chriſt tooke fleſh of the virgine Marie one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and thrée: the which office he continued in the eight and thirtith yeare of the ſaid king, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and ſix; in which yeare on the eight and twentith of Januarie, the ſaid king Henrie died (ſo that this duke and his father were lord treaſurors of England almoſt eight and fortie yeares.) But about ſome few daies more than a moneth before the death of the ſaid king, that is to ſaie, on the twelfe of December, this duke with his ſonne Henrie earle of Surreie were committed to the tower, the one by water the other by land. Shortlie after which the ſaid Henrie was beheaded at tower hill, the ninetéenth daie of Januarie: about nine daies before the death of the king. And the duke remained as condemned to perpetuall priſon, till the beginning of the reigne of quéene Marie, who then ſet him at libertie. He married for his firſt wife Anne the daughter of king Edward the fourth, but had no iſſue by hir: after whoſe death he married Eliſabeth daughter to Edward duke of Buckingham, by whome he had iſſue, Henrie earle of Surreie beheaded as before, Thomas vicount Bindon, and Marie married to Henrie Fitzroie duke of Richmont. He died about the beginning of the reigne of quéene Marie.

Edward Seimor.

Edward Seimor earle of Hertford was after the death of king Henrie the eight made lord treaſuror of England, in the firſt yeare of king Edward the ſixt: being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred fortie & ſix, in which yeare he was alſo made protector of England and duke of Summerſet: of whom thus writeth Matthew Parker, calling him Regni camerarium, in the life of Thomas Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie in theſe words page 397. In teſtamento (meaning king Henrie the eight) Edwardo principi minori nouem annis nato hæredi ſuo ſexdecim tutores, ex epiſcopis ſolos Thomam Cranmerum Cantuarienſem archiepiſcopum & Cutbertum Tonſtallum Dunelmenſem epiſcopum dedit. And a little after pag. 398. followeth: Verùm pluribus (vt diximus) ei minori (that was king Edward) a patre conſtitutis curatoribus, ne numero ſuo atque multitudine ad diſſentiones faciles eſſent & procliues vnus electus eſt, qui ex conſilijs reliquorum impuberis regis tutelam ſolus adminiſtraret. Is fuit Edwardus Seimerus comes Hertfordienſis, totius regni camerarius regíſque auunculus. Qui ſuſcepta tutela regis, totius regni atque dominiorum ſuorum protector & Somerſeti dux nuncupatus atque creatus eſt. This duke of Summerſet being treaſuror of England continued in the ſame office vntill his death (as I gather) more than foure years, and was beheaded in the fift yeare of king Edward the ſixt, being the yeare of our Lord, one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and one.

Sir William Paulet.

Sir William Paulet knight, marqueſſe of Wincheſter was made lord treaſuror vpon the death of the duke of Summerſet: in the fift yeare of king Edward the ſixt, and the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and one, which office he kept by the ſpace of twentie yeares and more: a longer time than euer anie other treaſuror had done before, except the two laſt dukes of Norffolke. This man being a man of extreme age (as atteining to the yeares of ninetie ſeuen) died lord treaſuror of England (the tenth of March, in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and one, being the fourtéenth yeare of the reigne of the famous quéene Eliſabeth) at his manor of Baſing. He in his life time did ſée the children of his childrens children growne to the number of one hundred and thrée, a rare bleſſing of God to men of his calling. He married Eliſabeth the daughter of ſir William Capell knight, by whome he had iſſue John marqueſſe of Wincheſter, Thomas, Chidiocke, and Giles; Alice married to Richard Stowell, Margaret married to ſir William Berkeleie, Margerie married to Richard Waller, and Eleanor married to ſir Richard Peckſhall.

Sir William Cecill.

Sir William Cecill knight of the garter and lord Burghleie, was aduanced to the honorable place of lord treaſuror of England on the thirtéenth daie of Julie, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand, fiue hundred, ſeauentie and two, being the fourtéenth yeare of the reigne of our gratious quéene Eliſabeth. This man was deſcended of the honorable familie of the Sitſylts of Wales, ſometime lords of Beauport in the daies of Henrie the firſt, as appeareth by this pedegrée here inſerted.

* In the time of the warres that king Edward the third made againſt Scotland, at a place called Halidon hill néere Barwike anno 6. of Edward the third, there aroſe a great variance and contention betwéene ſir William de Facknaham knight, on the one ſide approuant, & this ſir John Sitſylt knight, on the other ſide defendant, for an enſigne of armes, that is to ſaie; The field of ten barrets ſiluer and azure, ſupported of fiue ſcutcheons ſable charged with ſo manie lions of the firſt rampants incenſed geuls, which enſigne both the parties did claime as their right. But as both parties put themſelues to their force to mainteine their quarrell, and vaunted to mainteine the ſame by their bodies; it pleaſed the king that iuſtice ſhould be yéelded for triall of the quarrell, without ſhedding of bloud: and ſo the bearing of the enſigne was ſolemnelie adiudged to be the right of the ſaid ſir John Sitſylt, as heire of blood lineallie deſcended of the bodie of James Sitſylt, lord of Beauport ſlaine at the ſiege of Wallingford, as before is declared. The finall order and determination of which controuerſie is laid downe by John Boſwell gentleman, in his booke intituled The concords of Armorie, fol. 80. This ſir John Sitſylt had a charge of men at arms, for the cuſtodie of the marches to Scotland, in the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the third.

* Theſe pedegrées & deſcents I gathered faithfullie out of ſundrie ancient records and euidences, wherof the moſt part are confirmed with ſeales autentike therevnto appendent, manifeſtlie declaring the antiquitie and truth therof; which remaine at this preſent in the cuſtodie of the right honourable ſir William Cecill, knight of the noble order of the garter, lord Burghleie, and lord high treaſuror of England, who is lineallie deſcended from the laſt recited Richard Sitſylt, father to Dauid Cecill, grandfather to the ſaid ſir William Cecill now lord Burghleie. And at this daie William Sitſylt or Cecill eſquier cooſen german to the ſaid lord Burghleie, remooued by one degrée onelie, is poſſeſſed of the foreſaid houſe of Halterennes in Ewyas land as the heire male of the houſe of Sitſylts, and is deſcended of Philip Cecill, elder brother to the ſaid Dauid.

The deſcent of ſir William Cecill now lord treaſuror.

Fr. Thin.

This ſir William Cecill lord Burghleie, liuing at this inſtant in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand, fiue hundred, eightie and ſix, to the great ſupport of this commonwealth, dooth worthilie inioy the place of the lord treaſuror of England, of whome (for auoiding the note of flatterie) I may not ſaie that good which we the ſubiects of England doo féele by his meanes, and all the world dooth ſée in his rare and wiſe gouernment. And therefore leauing what may be ſaid of him for his honorable deſerts, from his countrie, his prince, and his countriemen, as well for rare gouernement at home, as for graue managing of the matter of ſtate abroad, I beſeech the almightie Lord to lengthen his yeares with perfect health and happie ſucceſſe of all his good deſires, to anſwer the worth of thoſe his honourable deſerts. Thus knitting vp this diſcourſe of the treaſurors, with no leſſe honorable perſon of the temporaltie in this our age, than I began the ſame diſcourſe with a rare perſon of the ſpiritualtie in that their age: this being knowne as ſingular in policie as the other was ſuppoſed to be in prelacie, I here ſet end to that which with much labour of bodie, trauell of mind, and charge of purſſe, I haue brought to this forme what ſo euer it be. Thus this much by Francis Thin touching the treaſurors of England.]

The earle of Northumberland beheaded.

The 22 of Auguſt Thomas Perſie earle of Northumberland late of Topcliſe, who had beene before attainted by parlement of high treaſon, as one of the principall conſpirators in the late rebellion, and now brought out of Scotland, whither he had fled, was beheaded at Yorke about two of the clocke in the afternoone, on a new ſcaffold ſet vp for that purpoſe in the market place. In this moneth of Auguſt ſir Thomas Smith, one of the queenes maieſties priuie councell, carefullie tendering the reformation of Ireland, ſent his ſon Thomas Smith eſquier thither with a certeine number of Engliſhmen to inhabit the Ards in Vlſter, after the maner of a colonie vſed by the Romans.

Engliſhmen ſent to Vlſter in Ireland.

Anno Reg. 15

A ſtrange ſtar appeared; the bigneſſe thereof, and of what continuance.

The eighteenth of Nouember in the morning was ſeene a ſtar northward verie bright and cleere, in the conſtellation of Caſſiopeia, at the backe of hir chaire, which with three cheefe fixed ſtars of the ſaid conſtellation made a geometricall figure loſengwiſe, of the learned men called Rhombus. This ſtarre in bignes at the firſt appeering ſeemed bigger than Iupiter, & not much leſſe than Venus when ſhe ſeemeth greateſt. Alſo the ſaid ſtarre neuer changing his place, was caried about with the dailie motion of heauen, as all fixed ſtarres commonlie are, and ſo continued (by little and little to the eie appearing leſſe) for the ſpace of almoſt ſixteene moneths: at what time it was ſo ſmall, that rather thought by exerciſes of oft vewing might imagine the place, than anie eie could iudge the preſence of the ſame. And one thing is herein cheefelie to be noted, that (by the ſkill and conſent of the beſt and moſt expert mathematicians, which obſerued the ſtate, propertie, and other circumſtances belonging to the ſame ſtarre) it was found to haue beene in place celeſtiall far aboue the moone, otherwiſe than euer anie comet hath beene ſeene, or naturallie can appeere. Therefore it is ſuppoſed that the ſignification therof is directed purpoſelie and ſpeciallie to ſome matter, not naturall, but celeſtiall, or rather ſuperceleſtiall, ſo ſtrange, as from the beginning of the world neuer was the like.

Earle of Darbie deceaſed.

The foure and twentith of Nouember Edward earle of Darbie, lord Stanleie, & Strange, of Knocking, lord and gouernor of the Iles of Man, knight of the noble order of the garter, and one of the queens maieſties priuie councell deceaſed at his houſe called Latham in Lancaſhire. His life and death deſeruing commendation, and crauing memorie to be imitated, was ſuch as followeth. His fidelitie vnto two kings and two queenes in dangerous times and great rebellions, in which time, and alwaies as cauſe ſerued, he was lieutenant of Lancaſhire and Cheſhire, and latelie offered ten thouſand men vnto the queenes maieſtie of his owne charge for the ſuppreſſion of the laſt rebellion. His godlie diſpoſition to his tenants, neuer forcing anie ſeruice at their hands, but due paiment of their rent. His liberalitie to ſtrangers, and ſuch as ſhewed themſelues gratefull to him. His famous houſekeeping, and eleuen ſcore in checkroll, neuer diſcontinuing the ſpace of twelue yeares. His feeding eſpeciallie of aged perſons twiſe a daie three ſcore and od; beſides all commers thriſe a weeke appointed for his dealing daies; and euerie good fridaie theſe fiue and thirtie yeares one with another two thouſand ſeauen hundred, with meat, drinke, monie, and monie worth. There was neuer gentleman or other that waited in his ſeruice, but had allowance from him, to haue as well wages as otherwiſe for horſſe and man. His yeerlie portion for the expenſes of his houſe foure thouſand pounds. His cunning in ſetting bones diſiointed or broken, his ſurgerie and deſire to helpe the poore, his deliuerie of the George and ſeale to the lord Strange, with exhortation that he might keepe it ſo vnſpotted in fidelitie to his prince as he had, and his ioie that he died in the queenes fauour. His ioifull parting this world, his taking leaue of all his ſeruants by ſhaking of hands, & his remembrance to the laſt daie.

The life and death of the foreſaid earle of Darbie.

Great froſt and a ſharpe winter.

This yeere a great and ſharpe froſt almoſt continuallie laſted, from before the feaſt of All ſaints, till after the feaſt of the Epiphanie of our Lord, with ſomtime great and deepe ſnowes, and ſometime raines, which freeſed as faſt as the ſame fell to the ground: wherethrough at Wrotham in Kent, and manie other places, the armes and boughs of trees being ouercharged with iſe, brake off, and fell from the ſtockes of the ſame trees. Alſo the wind continued north and eaſt, till after the Aſcenſion daie, with ſharpe froſts and ſnowes, whereby followed a late ſpring.

Lord priuie ſeale deceaſed.

Earle of Worceſter ſent into France.

The twelfe of Ianuarie William lord Howard, baron of Effingham, lord priuie ſeale, knight of the noble order of the garter, and one of the priuie councell deceaſed at Hampton court. The eighteenth of Ianuarie William lord Sommerſet earle of Worceſter began his iourneie towards France, to the chriſtening of the kings daughter there in ſteed of the queenes maieſtie of England, who ſent with him a font of gold for that purpoſe, weieng three hundred and ſix and twentie ounces. The ſaid earle with manie of his companie were robbed vpon the ſea by pirats of much of their baggage, and three or foure of their men ſlaine. In France he and his traine were honorablie receiued. At the chriſtening he gaue the child to name Eliſabeth. They returned into England the ſeauen and twentith of Februarie.

Earle of Worceſter robbed on the ſea.

The narrow ſeas ſcowred.

In the moneth of Februarie, thorough ſundrie heinous complaints brought to the queenes maieſtie and hir councell of pirats that kept the narrow ſeas, dooing manie robberies, as alſo the robbing of the earle of Worceſter (as is aforeſaid) hir highneſſe, by the aduiſe of hir honourable councell, tooke order with the lord admerall of England, that he ſhould ſend to the ſeas ſhips, and men to ſcowre the narrow ſeas, & to apprehend ſo manie pirats ſhips as might be met with. And for the better dooing thereof, it pleaſed hir maieſtie to ſend one of hir owne ſhips, named the Swallow to be the admerall, vnder the charge of William Holſtocke of London eſquier, comptrollor of hir highneſſe ſhips, who had with him the Gillian, the barke Garet, and the barke of Yarmouth, and three hundred and three ſcore able mariners, gunners, and ſouldiors in the ſaid three ſhips, and one barke which ſcowred the narrow ſeas, from the north foreland, as farre weſtward as Falmouth in Cornewall, and tooke twentie ſhips and barks of Pirats on the weſt ſeas.

ſundrie nations, to wit, Engliſh, French, and Flemmings (but all pirats) and in faſhion of warre. He apprehended in thoſe ſhips and barks to the number of nine hundred men of all nations, and ſent them to ward to Sandwich, Douer, Wight, and Porteſmouth (whereof thrée of them that robbed the earle of Worceſter were ſhortlie after executed at Wight.) Alſo the ſaid William Holſtocke did reſcue and take from the aboue ſaid pirats ſhips, fiftéene other merchants ſhips laden with merchandize, that were their priſes, being of ſundrie nations, and ſet at libertie the ſaid fiftéene merchants ſhips and goods: which doone, he returned to Porteſmouth, and there ended his voiage in March.

Pirats executed.

A man hanged in ſaint Georges field.

The earle of Kent deceaſſed.

The fourth of March, a man was hanged in chains in ſaint Georges field beyond Southworke of London, for murthering the gailor of Horſham in the ſame field. The ſeuentéenth of March deceaſſed Reinold Greie of Ruthin, earle of Kent, at Herneſeie, and was buried at ſaint Giles without Creplegate. About the ſame time died Edmund lord Shandois. The fiue and twentith of March being wedneſdaie in Eaſter wéeke, and the feaſt of the Annuntiation of our ladie, George Browne cruellie murthered two honeſt men néere to Shooters hill in Kent, the ons of them was a wealthie merchant of London named George Sanders, the other John Beane of Woolwich, which murther was committed in manner as followeth. On tueſdaie in Eaſter wéeke (the foure and twentith of March) the ſaid George Browne receiuing ſecret intelligence by letter from miſtreſſe Anne Drurie, that maſter Sanders ſhould lodge the ſame night at the houſe of one maſter Barnes in Woolwich, and from thenſe go on foot to ſaint Marie Craie; the next morning he laie in wait for him by the waie, a little from Shooters hill, and there ſlue both him & John Beane ſeruant to maſter Barnes. But John Beane hauing ten or eleuen wounds, & being left for dead, by Gods prouidence did reuiue againe: and créeping awaie on all foure, was found by an old man and his maiden, and conueied vnto Woolwich, where he gaue euident marks of the murtherer.

George Sanders murthered at Shooters hill.

A diſcourſe of the murther practiſed and committed.

Roger Clement aliàs tru[illegible] Roger.

Immediatlie vpon the déed dooing, Browne ſent miſtreſſe Drurie word thereof by Roger Clement (among them called truſtie Roger) he himſelfe repaired forthwith to the court at Gréenewich, & anon after him came thither the report of the murther alſo. Then departed he thenſe vnto London, and came to the houſe of miſtreſſe Drurie, where though he ſpake not perſonallie with hir, after conference had with hir ſeruant truſtie Roger, ſhe prouided him twentie pounds that ſame daie, for the which ſhe laid certeine plate of hir owne, & of miſtreſſe Sanders to gage. On the next morning being thurſdaie (hauing intelligence that Browne was ſought for) they ſent him ſix pounds more by the ſame Roger, warning him to ſhift for himſelfe by flight, which thing he foreſlowed not to doo. Neuertheleſſe, the lords of the quéens maieſties councell cauſed ſo ſpéedie and narrow ſearch to be made for him, that vpon the eight and twentith of the ſame moneth he was apprehended in a mans houſe of his owne name at Rocheſter and being brought backe againe to the court, was examined by the councell: vnto whome he confeſſed the déed (as you haue heard) and that he had oftentimes before pretended and ſought to doo the ſame, by the inſtigation of the ſaid miſtreſſe Drurie, who had promiſed to make a marriage betwéene him and miſtreſſe Sanders (whome he ſéemed to loue exceſſiuelie) neuertheleſſe he proteſted (though vntrulie) that miſtreſſe Sanders was not priuie nor conſenting thereunto.

Browne the murtherer releued with monie.

He confeſſeth his offenſe vpon his examination.

Upon his confeſſion he was arreigned at the Kings bench in Weſtminſter hall the eightéenth of Aprill, where he acknowledged himſelfe guiltie, and was condemned as principall of the murther, according to which ſentence he was executed in Smithfield, on mondaie the twentith of Aprill: at which time alſo vntrulie (as ſhe hir ſelfe confeſſed afterward) he laboured by all meanes to cléere miſtreſſe Sanders of committing euill of hir bodie with him, and then flong himſelfe beſides the ladder. He was after hanged vp in chains néere vnto the place where he had doone the fact. In the meane time miſtreſſe Drurie and hir man being examined, as well by their owne confeſſions, as by falling out of the matter, and alſo by Brownes appeachment thought culpable, were committed to ward. And after miſtreſſe Sanders being deliuered of child, and churched (for at the time of hir huſbands death ſhe looked preſentlie to lie downe) was vpon miſtreſſe Druries mans confeſſion, and other great likelihoods, likewiſe committed to the tower, and on wedneſdaie the ſixt of Maie ſhe was arreigned with miſtreſſe Drurie at the Guildhall.

George Browne hanged in Smithfield, and afterward in chains on Shooters hill.

The effect of their indictment was, that they by a letter written had béene procurers of the ſaid murther: & knowing the murther doone, had by monie & otherwiſe reléeued the murtherer: whereunto they pleaded not giltie. Howbeit they were both condemned as acceſſaries to maſter Sanders death, and executed in Smithfield the thirtéenth of Maie, being wedneſdaie in Whitſunwéeke, at which time they both confeſſed themſelues guiltie of the fact. Truſtie Roger miſtreſſe Druries man was arreigned on fridaie the eight of Maie, & being there condemned as acceſſarie, was executed with his miſtreſſe at the time and place aforeſaid. Not long after, Anthonie Browne brother to the fornamed George Browne, was for notable felonies conueied from Newgate to Yorke, and there hanged.

Anne Sanders, Anne Drurie, and truſtie Roger hanged in Smithfield.

Anthonie Browne hanged at Yorke.

The tenth of Aprill ſeauen pirats which among others had béene taken on the north ſeas, were lead from Southworke to Wapping, and fiue of them were there hanged: the other two had their pardon at the gallowes. The ſeauentéenth of Aprill a chandelers wife without Alderſgate of London, who had practiſed hir huſbands death by poiſoning and otherwiſe, was ſet on the pillorie in Cheape, with thrée other women, who had béene of hir counſell: two of them were with hir there whipped.

The ſeauenth of June, betwéene the houres of one and two of the clocke in the after noone, a great tempeſt of haile and raine happened at Toceſter in Northamptonſhire, wherethrough ſix houſes in that towne were borne downe, and fouretéene more ſore periſhed with the waters which roſe of that tempeſt. The hailſtones were ſquare, & ſix inches about. One child was there drowned, and manie ſhéepe with other cattell, which when the water was fallen, manie of them were lieng on the high hedges, where the waters had left them. The ſixtéenth of June, Thomas Woodhouſe, a prieſt of Lincolnſhire, who had laine long priſoner in the Fléet, was arreigned in the Guildhall of London, and there condemned of high treaſon, who had iudgement to be hanged and quartered, and was executed at Tiburne the ninetéenth of June.

The ſixtéenth of Auguſt, Walter earle of Eſſex, accompanied with the lord Rich, and diuerſe other gentlemen, imbarked themſelues in ſeuerall ſhips at Leirpoole, and the wind ſitting verie well, tooke their voiage towards Ireland. Sir Brian Makephelin had preied the countrie, and taken awaie what was to be carried or driuen, but on the firſt of September he came to Knockfergus, to the earle of Eſſex, and there made his ſubmiſſion: the number of kine were eſtéemed thirtie thouſand, beſides ſhéepe and ſwine.

After him Ferdorough Macgillaſticke the blind Scots ſonne, Roze, Oge, Macwilline did the like: and diuerſe other ſent their meſſengers to the earle, to ſignifie that they were at his lordſhips diſpoſition as the baron of Dongarrow, Condenell, Odonell, and the capteine of Kilulto. The earle of Eſſex hauing the countrie of Claniboie and other, the quéens maieſtie of England directed hir letters to the lord deputie of Ireland, willing him to make by commiſſion the earle of Eſſex capteine generall of the Iriſh nation in the prouince of Vlſter, and to diuide the countrie wone, Claniboie, and elſe where, &c. The eleuenth of October, Peter Burchet gentleman of the middle temple, with his dagger ſuddenlie aſſalted, cruellie wounded, and meant to haue murthered a ſeruiceable gentleman named Iohn Hawkins eſquier, as he with ſir William Winter, and an other gentleman rode towards Weſtminſter, in the high ſtréet neare to the Strand, beyond the Temple-barre of London: for which fact the ſaid Burchet being apprehended and commited to the tower, was afterward examined concerning the fact. Who anſwered that he tooke the ſaid maiſter Hawkins for an other gentleman: and being further examined, he was found to hold certeine erronious opinions, for the which he was ſent to the Lollards tower. From thence being called into the conſiſtorie of Paules church, before the right reuerend father Edwine biſhop of London, and others, & by them examined, he ſtood in his opinions, till the ſentence of death as an heretike was readie to haue béene pronounced againſt him on the fourth of Nouember: but through the earneſt perſuaſions of diuerſe learned men, who tooke great paines in that matter, he renounced, forſwore, and abiured his opinions for erronious & damnable, promiſing neuer to returne to them, and alſo willinglie to doo and performe all ſuch penance as the biſhop his ordinarie ſhould inioine him.

Peter Burchet found to be an heretike.

Peter Burchet abiured his hereſie, & ſubmitted himſelfe to doo penance.

The ninth of Nouember, the ſaid Peter Burchet was remoued from the Lollards tower, to the tower of London, where on the next morrow about noone, whileſt one that had kept him companie was gone downe, and locked the doore after him, leauing an other with him called Hugh Longworth, who ſtood at the window reading in the bible, the ſaid Burchet walking vp and downe in the chamber, tooke a billets end out of the fire, and knocked the ſaid Longworth on the head, and left not till he had ſtriken him ſtarke dead: for the which on the next morow he was arreigned & condemned at Weſtminſter, and then returned to Summerſet houſe, where he remained that night: and on the next morrow being the twelfe of Nouember, he was brought to the gibet, where (after his right hand being ſtriken off, and nailed to the gibbet) he was hanged nigh the place where hée wounded maſter Hawkins. This yeare about Lammas, wheat was ſold at London for thrée ſhillings the buſhell: but ſhortlie after it was raiſed to foure ſhillings, fiue ſhillings, ſix ſhillings: & before Chriſtmas to a noble, and ſeuen ſhillings, which ſo continued long after: béefe was ſold for twentie pence, and two and twentie pence the ſtone, and all other fleſh and white meats at an exceſſiue price, all kind of ſalt fiſh verie deare, as fiue herings two pence, &c: yet great plentie of freſh fiſh, and oft times the ſame verie cheape: peaſe at foure ſhillings the buſhell, otemeale at foure ſhillings eight pence: baie ſalt at thrée ſhillings the buſhell, &c. The ninth of Iulie at ſix of the clocke at night, in the Ile of Thanet beſids Ramesgate, in the pariſh of ſaint Peter vnder the cliffe, a monſtrous fiſh or whale of the ſea did ſhoot himſelfe on ſhore, where for want of water, beating himſelfe on the ſands, he died about ſix of the clocke on the next morning, before which time he roared, and was heard more than a mile on the land. The length of this fiſh was twentie two yards, the nether iaw twelue foot the opening: one of his eies, being taken out of his head, was more than ſix horſſe in a cart could draw, a man ſtood vpright in the place from whence the eie was taken. The thickneſſe from the backe whereon he laie, to the top of his bellie (which was vpward) was foure[illegible]ne foot, his taile of the ſame breadth: betweene his eies twelue foot, thrée men ſtood vpright in his mouth, ſome of the ribs were ſix foot long, his tong was fiftéene foot long, his liuer two cart lode, into his noſetrils anie man might haue crept: the oile being boiled out of the head was *parmaſitie, the oile of his bodie was whitiſh and ſwéet of taſt. The ſeuenth of Auguſt, a ſolemne obſequie was kept in ſaint Paules church at London for Charles the ninth king of France, who deceaſſed on the twentie day of Maie laſt before paſſed.

Alſo their ſeuerall examinations and confeſſions were there openlie read by the preacher, and afterwards publiſhed in print for the further poſteritie hereafter to beware of the like deceiuers.

long time could not be remembred, wherethrough the chanels of the citie ſuddenlie riſing, ran with ſuch a forceable courſe towards the common ſewes, that a lad about the age of eightéene yeares, minding to haue lept ouer the chanell néere vnto Dowgate, was borne ouer with the ſtreame, and by the ſame caried from the conduit there towards the Thames, with ſuch a ſwiftneſſe, that no man with ſtaues or otherwiſe could ſtay him, till he came againſt a cart whéele that ſtood in the watergate, afore which he was drowned and ſtarke dead.

No maiors feaſt at the Guildhall.

This yeare the maior of London went by water to Weſtminſter, and there tooke his oth, as hath béene accuſtomed: he kept no feaſt at the Guildhall, although great prouiſion had béene made for that purpoſe, but dined at his owne houſe with his brethren the aldermen: the companies dined at their ſeuerall halles. This was doone by the ſpeciall appointment of the quéenes maieſties councell, to auoid infection of the plague, like to haue increaſed by comming togither of ſuch a multitude. This wéeke from the two and twentith, vnto the eight and twentith of October, deceaſed in the citie and liberties, conteining an hundred and eight pariſhes, of all diſeaſes, one hundred thréeſcore & ſix, of the which number thréeſcore and fiue were accounted to die of the plague.

Tearme adiourned.

Michaelmas tearme, which had béene adiourned by proclamation, began at Weſtminſter on the firſt of Nouember. The ſame firſt day in the morning, there happened two great tides at London, in the riuer of Thames, the firſt by courſe, the other within one houre following, which ouerflowed the marſhes, with manie vaults and cellars neare adioining.

Two tides in one houre.

Fierie impreſſions maruellous.

The fourtéenth of Nouember being ſundaie, about midnight following, diuerſe ſtrange impreſſions of fire and ſmoke were ſéene in the aire to procéed forth of a blacke cloud in the north toward the ſouth, which ſo continued till the next morning that it was daie light. The next night following, the heauens from all parts did ſéeme to burne maruellous raginglie, & ouer our heads the flames from the horizon round about riſing did méet, and there double and roll one in another, as if it had béene in a cleare fornace.

Tempeſtuous winds out of the ſouth.

The eightéenth daie at night blew verie ſtormie & tempeſtuous winds out of the ſouth, as hath not béene knowne the like out of that quarter, eſpeciallie after midnight, till the next morning that it was daie light. Theſe are to be receiued as tokens of Gods wrath readie bent againſt the world for ſinne now abounding, and alſo of his great mercie, who dooth onlie thus but to ſhew vs the rod wherwith we dailie deſerue to be beaten.

Baie ſalt deere.

This yeare at London after harueſt, the price of wheate began by little and little to fall, from ſeuen ſhillings to thrée ſhillings the buſhell, at which price it ſtaied (little or nothing riſing or falling) all the yeare after: but baie ſalt was raiſed from thrée ſhillings to foure ſhillings, fiue ſhillings, and ſix ſhillings the buſhell, the like whereof had neuer béene ſéene or heard within this realme.

Flies in Februarie the number ſtrange.

The 24 day of Februarie, being the feaſt of ſaint Matthie, on which daie the faire was kept at Teukeſburie, a ſtrange thing happened there. For after a floud which was not great, but ſuch as therby the medows néere adioining were couered with water, in the after noone there came downe the riuer of Seuerne great numbers of flies & béetels, ſuch as in ſummer euenings vſe to ſtrike men in the face, in great heapes, a foot thicke aboue the water, ſo that to credible mens iudgement there were ſéene within a paire of buts length of thoſe flies aboue a hundred quarters. The mils thereabouts were dammed vp with them for the ſpace of foure daies after, and then were clenſed by digging them out with ſhouels: from whence they came is yet vnknowne: but the daie was cold and a hard froſt.

An earthquake in ſundrie places of England, and what effects it wrought.

The ſix and twentith of Februarie, betwéene foure and ſix of the clocke in the after noone, great earthquakes happened in the cities of Yorke, Worceſter, Gloceſter, Briſtow, Hereford, and in the countries about, which cauſed the people to runne out of their houſes: for feare they ſhould haue fallen on their heads. In Teukeſburie, Bredon, and other places, the diſhes fell from the cupboords, and the bookes in mens ſtudies from the ſhelues. In Norton chappell, the people being on their knées at euening praier, the ground moouing, cauſed them to run awaie in great feare that the dead bodies would haue riſen, or the chappell to haue fallen: part of Ruthen caſtell fell downe with certeine bricke chimneies in gentlemens houſes. The bell in the ſhire hall at Denbigh was alſo cauſed to toll twiſe, by ſhaking of the hall, &c.

Anabaptiſts bare fagots at Pauls croſſe.

On Eaſter daie, which was the third of Aprill, about nine of the clocke in the forenoone, was diſcloſed a congregation of anabaptiſts, Duchmen, in a houſe without the bars of Aldgate at London, wherof ſeauen and twentie were taken and ſent to priſon: and foure of them bearing fagots recanted at Paules croſſe, on the fiftéenth daie of Maie in forme as followeth.

The forme of recantation openlie made by the ſaid anabaptiſts.

Whereas I. I. T. R. H. being ſeduced by the diuell the ſpirit of error, and by falſe teachers his miniſters, haue fallen into certeine moſt deteſtable and damnable hereſies, namelie:

The anabaptiſts hereſies

1. That Chriſt tooke not fleſh of the ſubſtance of the bleſſed virgine Marie:
2. That infants of the faithfull ought not to be baptiſed:
3. That a chriſtian man may not be a magiſtrat or beare the ſword or office of authoritie:
4. That it is not lawfull for a chriſtian to take an oth:

Now by the grace of God, and through conference with good and learned miniſters of Chriſt his church, I doo vnderſtand and acknowlege the ſame to be moſt damnable and deteſtable hereſies, and doo aſke God here before his church mercie for my ſaid former errors, and doo forſake them, recant, and renounce them, and abiure them from the botome of my heart, profeſſing that I certeinlie beléeue:

Recanted.

1. That Chriſt tooke fleſh of the ſubſtance of the bleſſed virgine Marie:
2. That infants of the faithfull ought to be baptiſed:
3. That a chriſtian man may be a magiſtrat, or beare the ſword or office of authoritie:
4. That it is lawfull for a chriſtian man to take an oth.

And further I confeſſe, that the whole doctrine and religion eſtabliſhed and publiſhed in this realme of England, as alſo that which is receiued and preached in the Dutch church here in this citie, is ſound, true, and according to the word of God: wherunto in all things I ſubmit my ſelfe, and will moſt gladlie be a member of the ſaid Dutch church, from henſeforth vtterlie abandoning and forſaking all and euerie anabaptiſticall error. This is my faith now, in the which I doo purpoſe and truſt to ſtand firme and ſtedfaſt to the end. And that I may ſo doo, I beſéech you all to praie with me, and for me, to God the heauenlie father, in the name of his ſonne our ſauiour Ieſus Chriſt. The like recantation was made by them afterwards in the Dutch church.

Io. St. 1182. Matthew Parker a lerned antiquarie, and what monuments of his loue to learning he left behind him.

¶This reuerend father examined throughlie the Engliſh tranſlation of the holie bibles, wherein he partlie vſed the helpe of his brethren biſhops, and other doctors, and cauſed the ſame to be newlie printed in the largeſt volume, for the due furniture of manie churches then wanting. Alſo making diligent ſearch for the antiquities of the Britons, and Engliſh Saxons, to the end thoſe monuments might be carefullie kept, he cauſed them to be well bound and trimlie couered: and ſuch whereof he knew verie few examples to be extant (among the which was Matthew Paris, Matthew Florilegus, and Thomas Walſingham) he cauſed to be printed. The famous palace of his ſée at Canturburie, by long continuance decaied & conſumed with fire, he renewed, builded, and fullie reſtored with the charges of more than fourtéene hundred pounds. Anabaptiſts baniſhed.

The 21 of Maie being Whitſun éeuen, one man and ten women anabaptiſts Dutch, were in the conſiſtorie of Paules condemned to be burned in Smithfield: but after great pains taken with them, onlie one woman was conuerted, the other were baniſhed the land. On the firſt of Iune the nine women being led by the ſhiriffs officers, and the man alſo tied to a cart & whipped, were all conueied from Newgate to the waters ſide, where they were ſhipped awaie neuer to returne againe. The twelfe of Iune ſtood at Paules croſſe fiue perſons Engliſhmen of the ſect termed the familie of loue, who there confeſſed themſelues vtterlie to deteſt as well the author of that ſect H. Anabaptiſts burned in Smithfield.

Thunder and haile, whereof inſued great hurt.

The two and twentith of Iulie two Dutchmen anabaptiſts were burned in Smithfield, who died in great horror with roring and crieng. The thirtith of Iulie in the afternoone was a great tempeſt of lightening and thunder, wherethrough both men and beaſts in diuerſe places were ſtriken dead. Alſo at that time fell great abundance of haile, whereof the ſtones in manie places were found to be ſix or ſeuen inches about. The fourth of September being ſundaie about ſeuen of the clocke in the morning a certeine glaſſe houſe, which ſometime had béene the croſſed friers hall néere to the tower of London burſt out on a terrible fire: wherevnto the lord maior, aldermen and ſhiriffes with all expedition repaired, and practiſed there all means poſſible, by water buckets, hookes, and otherwiſe to haue quenched it. All which notwithſtanding, whereas the ſame houſe in a ſmall time before had conſumed great quantitie of wood by making of fine drinking glaſſes; now it ſelfe hauing within it néere fortie thouſand billets of wood was all conſumed to the ſtone walles, which walles greatlie defended the fire from ſpreading further, and dooing anie more harme.

The glaſſe houſe burned.

A woman brought a bed of foure children at one burthen.

The ſix and twentith of September, a pulters wife in the pariſh of Chriſts church within Newgate of London was deliuered & brought to bed of foure children at one burthen, all females or maiden children, which were chriſtened by the names of Eliſabeth, Marie, Margaret, and Dorothie: and the ſame daie moneth the mother was buried, but all the foure children liuing, and in good liking, were borne to church after hir. ¶On Michaelmas éeuen at night the like impreſſions of fire and ſmoke were ſéene in the aire to flaſh out of the northeaſt, north and northweſt, as had béene on the fiue and twentith of Nouember laſt before paſſed.

The tenth of October manie French, and ſome Engliſhmen, but all pirats of the ſeas, were arreigned ner at the admeraltie court in Southworke, where to the number of two and twentie were condemned, and had ſentence of death pronounced againſt them. The maior of London went by water to Weſtminſter, and there tooke his oth as hath béene accuſtomed: he kept no feaſt at the Guildhall, but dined at his owne houſe with his brethren the aldermen and others. The companies dined at their ſeuerall halles, &c. This was doone as in the yéere laſt before paſſed, to auoid the infection of the plague, which might haue increaſed by comming togither of greater numbers of people. That wéeke, from the two and twentith vnto the eight and twentith of October, deceaſed in the citie and liberties of all diſeaſes one hundred thirtie and two, of the which number ſix and thirtie were accounted to die of the plague. The next wéeke following ending the third of Nouember (thanks be giuen to God therefore) there deceaſed of all diſeaſes but one hundred and ten, and of them of the plague but ſix and twentie.

To the number of two and twentie pirats condemned and iudged to die.

¶ The eleuenth of Februarie Anne Aueries, widow, forſwearing hir ſelfe for a little monie that ſhe ſhould haue paid for ſix pounds of tow at a ſhop in Woodſtréet of London, fell immediatlie downe ſpéechleſſe, caſting vp at hir mouth in great aboundance, & with horrible ſtinke, the ſame matter which by natures courſe ſhould haue béene voided downewards, till ſhe died. A terrible example of Gods iuſt iudgement vpon ſuch as make no conſcience of ſwearing againſt their brother. The fiftéenth of Februarie, Edmund Grindale ſomtime biſhop of London, late archbiſhop of Yorke, was in the chapterhouſe of S. Paules church at London elected archbiſhop of Canturburie. The fift of March in the night through a great flaw of wind then in the northeaſt, a tilt bote with about the number of one and thirtie perſons, men and women, comming from Graueſend toward London, were all drowned; one boie excepted. The thirtith of Maie Thomas Gréene goldſmith was drawen from Newgate of London to Tiburne, and there hanged, headed, and quartered, for clipping of coine both gold and ſiluer.

The fiftéenth of Iune Martine Frobiſher being furniſhed of aduenturors, with two ſmall barkes & one pinneſſe departed from Blackeſwall, vpon his voiage for the diſcouerie of a paſſage to Cataia by the northweſt ſeas. Vpon the firſt of Iulie he had ſight (as he iudged) of Fréeland, but durſt not approch the ſame, by reaſon of the great yce that laie alongſt the coaſt. Not far from thenſe he loſt his pinneſſe and one of his barkes, who miſtruſting the danger of tempeſts returned home, with report that their generall Martine Frobiſher was caſt awaie: which worthie capteine notwithſtanding continued his courſe northweſt, beyond anie man that hath heretofore diſcouered, and the twentith of Iulie had ſight of a high land, which he named Quéene Eliſabeths foreland; and after that another foreland with a great paſſage, diuiding (as it were) the two maine lands aſunder: this place he named Frobiſhers ſtreits. After he had paſſed ſixtie leagues further, he went aſhoare, found the ſame to be inhabited with ſauage people, caught one of them into his barke, and returning, arriued in England in the moneth of Auguſt following. One of his companie brought from thenſe a péece of a blacke ſtone, much like to a ſeacole in colour, which being brought to certeine goldfiners in London, to make a ſaie thereof, found it to hold gold, and that verie richlie for the quantitie.

The nintéenth of Iulie a woman was burnt at Tunbridge in Kent for poiſoning of hir huſband: and two daies before a man, named Oxleie, was hanged at Maidſtone for being acceſſarie to the ſame fact. The tenth of Auguſt a rare péece of worke and almoſt incredible, was brought to paſſe by an Engliſhman borne in the citie of London named Peter Bales, who by his induſtrie and practiſe of his pen, contriued and writ within the compaſſe of a penie in Latine, the Lords praier, the créed, the ten commandements, a praier to God, a praier for the quéene, his poſie, his name, the daie of the moneth, the yeare of our Lord, and the reigne of the quéene. And on the ſeuentéenth of Auguſt next following at Hampton court he preſented the ſame to the quéens maieſtie in the head of a ring of gold, couered with a chriſtall, and preſented therewith an excellent ſpectacle by him deuiſed for the eaſier reading thereof: wherewith hir maieſtie read all that was written therein with great admiration, and commended the ſame to the lords of the councell, and the ambaſſadors, and did weare the ſame manie times vpon hir finger.]

Anno Reg.18.

1576

This yeare, by reaſon of the troubles in the low countries, the Engliſh merchants ſuſteined great loſſes diuers waies. For the men of warre that kept the ſeas, aduowing themſelues to be reteined with the prince of Orenge, vnder colour to ſerch for their aduerſaries goods, oftentimes borded the Engliſh ſhips as they met with them on the ſeas, ſmallie to the profit of them to whome the ſame ſhips and goods apperteined. Some they ſtaied and tooke awaie with them. And at length there was a generall reſtraint made by the prince of Orenge, that no Engliſh ſhips ſhould paſſe to or fro the towne of Antwerpe by the riuer of Scheld, ſuch being arreſted and deteined at Fliſhing as were comming downe that riuer, and other likewiſe that were bound vp the ſame time towards Antwerpe.

Engliſh merchants ſuſteine great loſſe by ſea, and whye

The Engliſh merchants, féeling themſelues thus moleſted and damnified at ſundrie ſeaſons, exhibited their complaints to the quéenes maieſties councell, who accordinglie dealt from time to time with the prince of Orenge and his deputies for redreſſe, but ſpeciallie now vpon this generall reſtreint. And although great difficultie appeared in the matter, aſwell for contenting of the aduenturors of Fliſhing, as for that there had béene foure ſhips belonging to the prince arreſted and ſtaied at Falmouth: at length yet ſuch Engliſh ſhips as were kept and holden at Fliſhing were releaſed and ſent home; but not till two of the Engliſh merchants aduenturors* men of good calling and eſtimation (hauing firſt as hath bin ſaid made a certeine maner of proteſt) were faine to enter into bond for the loane of a ſumme of monie, and were therewith kept at Fliſhing till the contract in that behalfe might be performed. Wherevpon the quéenes maieſtie, miſliking that hir ſubiects ſhould be thus hardlie dealt with, armed and ſet forth certeine of hir ſhips, which going to the ſeas to ſée that hir ſubiects might trauerſe the ſame in ſafetie, tooke diuerſe of the Fliſhingers veſſels, and brought them into the Engliſh ſtreames. The Fliſhingers herewith on the other part tooke and arreſted other of the Engliſh ſhips, ſo that the troubles ſéemed rather to increaſe than to be in any wiſe appeaſed: although afterwards by ſending to and fro, the matter was taken vp, and ſuch order had as was thought to ſtand verie well for the ſuertie, commoditie, and good liking of the Engliſh merchants.

The Engliſh merchants complaine to the quéene of their wrongs.

These foure ſhips were ſtaied for ſatiſfaction of one Simons ſhip, out of the which a Fliſhinger had taken certeine tuns of Canarie wines.

* Martin Caltrop & william Godard.

The troubles increaſe.

But in the meane time, and before this could be brought to paſſe, through a diſordered mutinie which chanced among the Spaniſh ſouldiers, it ſo fell out, that the ſtates of thoſe low countries agréed with the prince of Orenge, and ſet themſelues wholie againſt the Spaniards. Wherevpon the yoong count de Egmont, the marqueſſe de Hauerie entered the towne of Antwerpe, with a power of ſouldiers for the States, and meant to haue kept that towne againſt

This was the fourth of Nouember, 9500 one with another ſlain, drowned and burned.

the Spaniards that held the caſtell. But they doubting to be incloſed & ſhut vp by ſome ſiege, got more of their fellowes to them, entred the towne by force, & ſpitefullie killing no ſmall number of people, ſacked the towne, and put aſwell the townesmen as others that were merchants reſident there to their ranſoms. Amongſt other our Engliſhmen eſcaped not altogither frée, ſo as diuerſe were ſpoiled of that they had, and the whole number put to their ranſome; although vpon the ſending ouer of doctor Wilſon hir maieſties ambaſſador, ſo much of the ranſome as remained vnpaid was promiſed to be remitted.

A concluſion of peace betwéene the parties before diuided.

Thus were our merchants euill intreated on each hand, by reaſon of thoſe ciuill tumults in the low countries, aſwell this yeare as in the former yeares paſt, and ſmall hope would be of better ſucceſſe there, if ſome end ſhould not be had of that ciuill diſſention, which hath ſo long continued betwixt the king of Spaine and his ſubiects in thoſe countries, not onelie to the hinderance of themſelues, but alſo of others that haue to trade among them, ſpeciallie for traffike ſake and intercourſe of merchandize. But at length they haue compounded their controuerſies, and are growen to a full agréement and perfect concluſion of peace, which God grant may take place ſo effectuallie, as may turne to the quietneſſe and publike commoditie not onlie of thoſe countries but of their neighbors, whereby merchants and paſſengers may in ſuertie paſſe to and fro without diſturbance, ſo as no occaſion be giuen of breach of leagues and amities betwixt princes and countries, but that the ſame may be mainteined to Gods glorie, and the ſuertie of the chriſtian commonwealth.

Walter Deuereux earle of Eſſex departeth this life.

In this yeare the right honorable Walter Deuereux earle of Eſſex and Eu, earle marſhall of Ireland, vicount Hereford and Bourcher, lord Ferrers of Chartlie, Bourcher & Louaine, knight of the moſt noble order of the garter, fell ſicke of a looſeneſſe of his bodie the one and twentith of Auguſt being fridaie, and for the ſpace of two and twentie daies togither he was ſo grieuouſlie tormented therwith, that finallie on ſaturdaie the two & twentith of September he departed out of this tranſitorie life, paſſing from hence to the ioies of heauen, as by his godlie end all that were about him gaue teſtimonie. The loſſe of this noble man was greatlie béemoned, aſwell by the Engliſh as Iriſh, for the noble courage, vertuous qualities, and tender zeale to the aduancement of the commonwealth which appéered in him.

Abr. Fl. ex concione funebri, vt patet in contextu.

¶ So that it were a fowle fault in the higheſt degrée, not to laie vp ſome commemoration of ſo worthie and well deſeruing a gentleman, both of prince and people, in perpetuall records: which I will doo by Gods grace none otherwiſe than I am lead by ſuch matter, yea memorable matter, as I find in a funerall ſermon, made by the reuerend father in God Richard biſhop of ſaint Dauis, at the buriall of this right honorable earle of Eſſex, in the pariſh church of Caermerthin in Wales, where the ſaid biſhop taking for his text theſe words of S. Iohn, in the 14 of the reuelation, Audiui vocem de cælo, dicentem: Beati mortui, &c. I heard a voice from heauen, ſaieng: Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord, &c. After he had diſcourſed vpon the text as the ſpirit of God gaue him vtterance, he deſcended at laſt to a particular treatiſe tending wholie to the praiſe of this right noble man: ſaieng in ſort as followeth.

The place of the erls birth: what loſſe all Englād hath of him.

Behold the heauie hand of God for our ſins, vpon all the whole countrie in the death of this noble man, which is not onelie a meſſenger of Gods wrath towards this towne and countrie (wherein he was borne) but alſo in verie déed a great loſſe to the whole realme. And although this countrie, who ſhall miſſe ſo noble and ſo worthie a ruler and magiſtrate, that bore them ſo great affection, ſo readie to benefit all, and hurt none, and for the high calling he was of ſo able to pleaſure and to doo good: although I ſaie this countrie by the death of this noble earle is moſt earneſtlie & effectuallie cited to appéere before the Lord, and to fall to a reckoning: yet doo I beléeue that the quéenes maieſtie, hir highneſſe councell, and all the nobilitie of the realme may hereby receiue admonition, and cauſe of further circumſpection and aduigilancie. For ſuch valiant and couragious noble men are the bulworks and walles of defenſe of the whole realme. They ſaie the realme is walled about, bicauſe it is inuironed with the ſea: but I hold rather with their iudgements, that make the fidelitie and true harts of the ſubiects, and eſpeciallie of ſuch of the nobilitie that haue made themſelues (by Gods eſpeciall grace) expert to gouerne and rule vnder hir maieſtie, aſwell in warre as peace, the ſtrong towers of defenſe both of hir maieſtie and hir highneſſe realme.

What noble men are the wals of the realme.

The praiſe of the earle by ſundrie conſiderations.

This noble earle was one of theſe number: for I beléeue there is no prince in the world, that had a more faithfull noble ſubiect, than hir maieſtie had of him in his time. And for the notable valiantneſſe, experience, and vertues that were in him, I am perſuaded that hir maieſtie (if he had liued) might haue vſed his ſeruice to be a terrour to all enimies, forren or domeſticall. And now that I may ſpeake ſomewhat of his great nobilitie, his excellent, vertuous, and worthie qualities: firſt I thinke I may ſaie thus much in a generalitie, that it was eaſie for a man of any iudgement, that ſhould behold his countenance and behauiour, to find in him nobilitie, maieſtie and honor, planted by the eſpeciall gift of God, euen from his mothers wombe. When I conſider the nature of nobilitie with the cauſes efficient and finall, it ſéemeth vnto me that nobilitie may be compared vnto a riuer or a floud, which in the originall iſſueth out of foure principall wels, and all the foure riſe out from the compaſſe of one hill. The welles of nobilitie are prudence, fortitude, iuſtice, and temperance: the hill whence they ſpring is the feare of God, or true religion.

Compariſon of true nobilitie vnto a riuer or floud, &c.

Panor. lib. 20. de rebus geſtis Alphonſi.

Although this worthie earle by progenie was of noble bloud, whoſe anceſtors were of great honour, which of it ſelfe, if a man degenerat not too far from his forefathers, deſerueth honorable acceptation in this world: yet was he not therewith ſatiſfied, as it may appéere by his ſtudie and trauell in his life time: for he ſéemed to be of that iudgement that Alphonſus king of Aragon (of whome we read in ſtories) was of. When a certeine man tooke in hand to ſet out the laud and praiſe of his nobilitie, he ſtood much in recitall that he was a king, a kings ſonne, a kings nephue, a kings brother, and ſuch like titles. The king interrupting his tale anſwered, that he neuer eſtéemed much of that kind of glorie: and that it was the praiſe and commendation of his anceſtors, who by vertue and worthie qualities had deſerued ſuch high callings and honour, and not of him: and that his praiſe ſtood not in that which might fall vnto him by teſtament, but in the imitation and performing of the noble acts, proweſſe, and valiantneſſe of his forefathers. This noble earle likewiſe, not anſwered to his expectation in that he was a noble man by bloud and inheritance, gaue himſelfe wholie all the daies of his life to purchaſe and win the nobilitie, that ſpringeth immediatlie from the verie originall founteins of the ſame, as partlie I will put you in remembrance of. We will begin with prudence, which may be thus defined.

The diſpoſition of the earle to inlarge and augment his nobilitie.

Prudence a noble vertue wherewith this erle was indued.

Prudence is a power or facultie of the mind giuen of God, whereby man is made wiſe, prouident and circumſpect, and whereby man atteineth knowledge, cunning, and expertneſſe in all matters that the children of men haue to deale with in this world. This noble erle was of great wiſedome, deepe iudgement, graue conſideration, and ſo bleſſed with vnderſtanding, experience, and manifold vertues and gifts of God, that he was right worthie to ſerue hir maieſtie in princelie and weightie affaires, both in warre and peace. He was of ſuch prudent and excellent diſcretion that he had a ſpeciall grace to interteine all ſtates of men, ſuperiour, equall, and inferiour, with ſuch comelineſſe and decencie, that for ciuilitie, humanitie, maners, and honorable behauior, he was a paterne and an example for nobilitie to imitate and to follow. In his youth he beſtowed not the time in vanitie, idleneſſe, or voluptuouſneſſe; but in atchiuing and winning of ſuch ſciences, properties and vertues, which might beautifie and increaſe his nobilitie, and preuailed therin ſo effectuallie, that he became excellent in all kinds of knowledge and qualities, meet, commendable, or neceſſarie for a man of honour. Concerning diuine matters, I haue in my time conferred with his lordſhip, and therefore can ſaie ſomewhat therein: and amongſt others, one thing is notable, which in conference I receiued at his mouth. He affirmed this in effect, that there was nothing in the world that could blemiſh and abaſe the horoicall nature of nobilitie ſo much, as to haue the eies of vnderſtanding ſo cloſed and ſhut vp, that a man in honour ſhould not be able to diſcerne betwixt true religion, and the hypocriticall falſe religion; betwixt the right worſhipping of God, & idolatrie; betwixt the traditions of men and Gods word: but remaine ſubiect to lies and ſuperſtition, and to call bad good, and good bad: and concluded that to be free from this ſeruile ſtate, was a neceſſarie point of true nobilitie.

How he beſtowed his youthfull yeares.

The biſhops report of him vpon his own knowledge.

He therefore in his time had diligentlie trauelled in the ſcriptures, and ſo furniſhed himſelfe with principles of chriſtian religion, that he was able readilie to diſcerne ſermons and diſputations, and to find out who had veritie on their ſide: and alſo probablie to ſpeake with authoritie of ſcripture in matters of controuerſie. His vnderſtanding by the eſpeciall worke of the holie ghoſt was ſo illumined, that he claue & drew to true chriſtian religion, as the adamant ſtone cleaueth and draweth to ſteele. His lordſhip therefore furthered and fauoured all preachers of Gods word, ſo that whoſoeuer will iudge of the ſucceſſe of Chriſts religion by humane reaſon, muſt confeſſe that the goſpell hath loſt a mightie protector, and an earneſt defender. But God in ſetting out of his word, vſeth to worke beſide the expectation of man, and beyond the reach of reaſon. I haue yet further to ſpeake of his lordſhip, that I beleeue there be verie few noble men in England, more readie and expert in chronicles, hiſtories, genealogies, and pedegrees of noble men, and noble houſes, not onlie within the realme, but alſo in forren realmes, than this noble earle was in his time. He excelled in deſcribing and blaſing of armes, and in all ſkill perteining thereto: and to be ſhort, his vnderſtanding and capacitie was ſo liuelie and effectuall, that it reached to all kind of matters that a perfect nobleman ſhall haue to deale withall in this world.

The erle perfect in the ſcriptures and matters of religion.

He was a fauourer of preachers.

His expertneſſe in chronicles, hiſtories, &c.

Fortitude is another founteine from whenſe nobilitie floweth, of Cicero In Tuſculanis quæſtionibus thus defined: Eſt affectio animi qua grauia patiendo legibus obtẽperatur: It is an affection of the mind whereby to ſatiſfie the lawes, a man is content to ſuffer hardneſſe; he meaneth mans lawes, and not Gods law. It ſeemeth therefore that it may be thus more euidentlie and fullie defined: Fortitude is an affection of the mind, wherby a man is made hardie and couragious to ſuffer difficulties and dangers, auoiding on the one ſide raſhneſſe, & expelling on the other ſide feare, to performe that which Gods law and honeſtie preſcribeth and commandeth. Although by this definition we find, that the effect of fortitude reſteth much in baniſhing of feare of bodilie hurts: yet doth it agree verie well with the feare of God. Iethro therefore counſelling Moſes to chooſe men to gouerne vnder him, ſaith; Proſpice viros fortes, timentes Deum; Seeke out men indued with fortitude, fearing God, &c. Whereby we perceiue, that fortitude and the feare of God varie not, but are linked togither. Deepe was the floud of nobilitie that this valiant earle had fetched out of this founteine. For in this togither with the well of prudence, he found that excellent knowledge of chiualrie, the cunning to lead an armie, to guide and to rule ſoldiors, that experience of ſtratagems & warlike policies, that notable magnanimitie and inuincible courage, whereby he indured and ouercame ſo manie dangers and perils, for the which he is renowmed in England and Ireland, and ſhall neuer be forgotten. He was by nature the ſonne of Mars; and by practiſing feats of war and exerciſe aforehand he had made himſelfe in manner a perfect warrior, afore that euer he came to the wars; and was for prowesſe, magnanimitie, and high corage to be compared to the old Romane capteins, that be ſo much in ſtories commended. This fortitude is no leſſe neceſſarie for nobilitie in time of peace than in time of war. For it belongeth vnto them to miniſter iuſtice betwixt partie and partie, without reſpect of perſons, which cannot be performed without the aſſiſtance of this vertue. I haue good cauſe to thinke of this noble earle, that there was no ſubiect in England, that could feare or corrupt him from executing of iuſtice. He was to the proud and arrogant a lion, and to the meeke and humble a lambe, neither is there anie contrarietie in this: for true nobilitie diſcerneth a due and conuenient time and place to vſe both the one and the other.

Fortitude a noble vertue wherewith th.earle was indued.

Exod.28,21

The earles chiualrie, martiall knowledge and prowesſe aduanced.

Fortitude needfull both in time of peace and warre.

Iuſtice is the third well of nobilitie, it is a conſtant and a perpetuall will to giue euerie man his owne. This is a diuine vertue, pretious, and commendable in all men, and eſpeciallie in the nobilitie, who by reaſon of authoritie may doo iniurie without remedie for the ſame. We ſee by experience that great is the number of them that would oppreſſe, if they had authoritie: we ſee alſo the iniuries that are doone dailie by them that haue colour of authoritie, be it neuer ſo ſimple. But examine the life of this earle who will, and I beleeue there is no man liuing that can iuſtlie complaine of anie iniurie or wrong doone by him. I once in my time heard him not a litle offended with one of his men that was complained vpon; ſaieng that his ſeruant could doo him no greater diſhonor, than by pretenſe of his authoritie to doo anie poore man wrong. Iob in the time of his authoritie & wealth, was commended to be a iuſt & a righteous man. And in the explication of part of that iuſtice Iob hath theſe words, Fui oculus cæco, via pedum claudo, &c: I was the eies to the blind, and I was the feet to the lame, I was a father to the poore, and when I knew not the cauſe I ſought it out diligentlie, I brake the chawes of the vnrighteous man, and plucked the preie out of his teeth. Here we find that whoſoeuer will doo iuſtice, muſt not onelie doo no wrong, but muſt alſo with all his might, ſuccour and comfort the helpleſſe and oppreſſed. In this part of iuſtice there was neuer noble man more forward than this good earle. He was the comfortable refuge of all ſuch as were in aduerſitie, or oppreſſed by power.

Iuſtice a noble vertue, wherwith this erle was indued.

The biſhop reporteth of the earles iuſtice vpon his owne knowledge.

The paterne of a good earle indeed.

Of Titus Veſpaſianus emperor of Rome we read, that he anſwered one of his freends, admoniſhing him to hold his hands, and not to make his liberalitie and gentleneſſe common to all men, ſaieng; that it becommeth not a prince to let anie man part from him with a heauie hart. This worthie erle was of like mind: for he was ſo full of humanitie and compaſſion, that he would be loth to let anie diſtreſſed part from him without ſome comfort and eaſe. Inſomuch that in him (if euer in anie man) this adage, Homo homini Deus, A man a god to man, was as truelie performed, as in tyrants the contrarie adage, that is, Homo homini lupus, A man a woolfe to man. Wee read in chronicles of emperors, kings, & noble men, which for their bountifulneſſe, gentleneſſe, affabilitie, and goodneſſe, deſerued ſome honorable addition to their names; as amongſt the emperors Antoninus pius, Anthonie the vertuous; amongſt the Britiſh kings, Elidorus pius, Elidor the godlie; and amongſt noble men, in the time of king Richard the ſecond, ſir Thomas Montacute the good earle of Saliſburie; and in the time of king Henrie the ſixt, ſir Thomas Beuchampe the good earle of Warwike. This noble earle for the verie like qualities hath trulie deſerued to be called, the good earle, the vertuous earle, and the valiant earle of Eſſex.

Temperance, a noble vertue wherewith this erle was indued.

The biſhops report of the earle vpon his owne knowledge.

Eccleſ.7.9.

Luke 6.45.

The earle could not awaie with ſwearing, chafing, nor anie diſordered dealing, &c.

Temperance is the founteine of nobilitie; it is a vertue whereby a man obſerueth a moderation, & a reaſonable meane in the vſe of all things perteining to bodie & mind: it is the mother of all other vertues, without which, the reſt are blemiſhed and diſgraced. In the Dutch chronicles that tell of the liues of emperors, the firſt qualitie that is noted, is temperat, or not temperat, as an argument of the reſt of his life and doings: for he is thought vnworthie to rule others that can not rule himſelfe. This noble earle had a ſpeciall grace, and an excellent gift of God in obſeruation of this vertue, whether you reſpect diet, or the ſuppreſſion of all vicious affections. I haue diuerſe times noted in him, when vnderſtanding was brought vnto him of ſome Thraſonicall contumelious word, ſpoken by ſome glorious inferior aduerſarie againſt him, he would neuer be ſtirred to anie perturbation of mind thereby, but with graue wiſedome and magnanimitie contemne it and ſmile, deriding the vanitie and waiwardneſſe of that cankered ſtomach that vomited ſuch ſowre rotten infection: for he did effectuallie conſider that it became no better a noble hart to take in & receiue wranglings, brallings, chafings, and anger, than it is conuenient to dawbe a golden piller with mire and claie. Salomon was of that mind, and therefore ſaith; Be not thou haſtie to be angrie, for anger reſteth in the boſome of fooles. I haue had occaſion by that I noted in his lordſhip to call to remembrance this ſaieng of Chriſt; A good man out of the good treſure of his hart bringeth forth good things: & the euill man out of the euill treaſure of his hart bringeth forth euill things. For though occaſion were miniſtred, yet ſhould you neuer heare him vtter anie opprobrious words, no not againſt his aduerſarie, ſo pure & immaculate did he ſtudie to preſerue the nobilitie of his mind. There be ſome that count themſelues worthie honor & eſtimation, when they teare God in péeces with chafing and horrible oths: which this noble earle deteſted and abhorred, as a matter not onelie vndecent, but alſo repugnant to the nature of true nobilitie, attributing due reuerence to the name of the Lord, & thereby prouing the founteins of his nobilitie to ſpring out of the hill of the feare of God.

The diſpoſition and deuotion of this earle in the time of his ſickeneſſe.

Numb.21.9.

The heauenlie contemplation of this earle drawing to his end.

But what was his religion, what faith God had bleſſed him withall, what godlie diſpoſition he was of, and how abundantlie God had inriched him with his holie ſpirit; the confeſſion of his faith, his ſpéeches, naie rather his ſermons in his ſickeneſſe afore his death ſhall teſtifie for euer. For I receiued by the relation of ſuch as are worthie credit, and were preſent about him, although not all, yet manie of his learned godlie ſaiengs at that time. Concerning his ſaluation, he repoſed his affiance and ſure truſt in the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt. He forgaue all the world, and by inuincible faith apprehended, laied hold, and imbraſed remiſſion of his ſinnes, in the merits of the ſacrifice of Chriſts bodie offered vpon the croſſe for the ſinnes of the world. Trentals, maſſes, diriges, pardons, and ſuch other papiſticall trifles he vtterlie contemned, as wicked and blaſphemous againſt the death and paſſion of Chriſt. He fared like the children of Iſraell in the wilderneſſe, which when they were ſtinged with ſerpents euen to death: yet when they lookt vp to the braſen ſerpent, they were made whole, ſafe, and ſound. So this noble earle grieued with the remembrance of his former vnthankefull life (as he iudged) immediatlie directed the eies of his mind to the paſſion of Chriſt, and forthwith felt ſuch health of ſoule, that he was filled with ioie in the holie Ghoſt, and all his delight was in meditation of the ioie of the world to come, and the fruition of the preſence of God for euer: inſomuch that fiue or ſix daies before he died, he ſhewed himſelfe more like an angell from heauen, than a man compaſſed with fleſh and bloud.

A wonderfull gift of the holie Ghoſt and moſt worthie to be chronicled.

How his ſeruants were affected at his laſt ſpéeches.

Who they be that die in the Lord.

My lord the archbiſhop of Dublin (as I was informed) could mooue him in no queſtion or article perteining to ſaluation, that he was not readie in, and learnedlie, and godlie reſolued: yea, and made ſuch anſwers in all things, that my lord of Dublin had them in great admiration, and affirmed that his ſpéeches at that time ſhould ſerue him for ſermons as long as he liued. How trulie he relinquiſhed the vanities of this world, and how effectuallie he thirſted after the ioies of the life to come, his godlie admonitions miniſtred vnto ſuch as viſited him, and his heauenlie leſſons & exhortations to his ſeruants, ſhall teſtifie for euer: for they were ſuch that his ſeruants report they ſhall neuer forget, and ſuch as they ſhall be the better for whileſt they liue. Thus haue I brieflie and partlie declared vnto you, both the life and death of this worthie magiſtrate, to the end we ſhould conſider how ſeriouſlie God doth call vs to a reckoning by the loſſe of ſuch a good magiſtrat. Now a word or two to ſhew who they be that die in the Lord, and then an end. They principallie are ſaid to die in the Lord, which ſuffer death vnder the beaſt, for confeſſion of Chriſts religion, for they properlie die in the Lords cauſe. Such are the martyrs, as well of the primitiue church vnder the cruell emperours, as the martyrs of all ages ſince vnder antichriſt of Rome. They alſo die in the Lord, which though they die not by the crueltie of the beaſt, yet they die in the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, and are therefore bleſſed.

A ſpéech concluſorie of the biſhop directed to the earle departed.

The earle eternallie bleſſed.

Of this number was this godlie earle, as I haue before declared. Wherfore I will conclude and direct my ſpéech for two or thrée words to this good earle. O noble earle of Eſſex, in thy time the pearle of nobilitie: the mirrour of vertue and worthie qualities: the child of chiualrie: the beautifull floure of England: the pretious iewell and comfort of Wales: the truſtie ſtaie of Ireland. Thy life was moſt honourable: thy worthineſſe incomparable: thy death pretious in the ſight of God: for thou diedſt in the Lord a right inheritour of the euerlaſting kingdome of heauen. Wherefore by authoritie of the heauenlie oracle that ſaint Iohn was commanded to write, thou art to be pronounced bleſſed for euer. Our ſins haue ſhortened thy life, ſo that we could inioie the ſame no longer. Thou haſt notwithſtanding bequeathed thy bodie to be buried amongſt vs here in Wales. Of verie dutie therefore O noble earle, thy toome ſhall be with vs in reuerence, eſtimation, and honor; the fame and name of thy nobilitie, valiantneſſe, vertue, and worthineſſe ſhall neuer be forgotten; but ſhall liue and be kept with vs in memorie from generation to generation while the world ſtandeth. Thus far the words of the biſhop vttered in a ſermon preached in the ears of no meane audience, either for reputation or number. Now then brieflie conſidering wherein true and perfect nobleneſſe conſiſteth, & that the heroicall vertues with their naturall vſe were moſt firmelie fixed in his heart, and practiſed by his hand: there is great reaſon to mooue euen his enimies (if it were poſſible for ſo good a gentleman to haue anie) to confeſſe in him moſt abſolute nobilitie; and that this epitaph alluding to his right honorable enſignes, is deſeruedlie to be recorded; being an abſtract of that notable epitaph intituled Epitapium genealogicum in obitum illuſtriſſimi Gualteri comitis Eſſexiæ,& Euiæ,& comitis mariſchalli regni Hiberniæ, viececomitis Hereford & Bourghcher, domini Ferrers de Chartleie Bourgcher & Louein, & prænobilis ordinis garterij militis, qui obijt Dublinij 21. This epitaph with the ſaid earles whole genealogie or pedegrée compriſed in heroicall verſe, and ioined with the funerall ſermon, was preſented to the right honourable lord Robert now earle of Eſſex and Ew, vicount of Hereford and Bourchier, lord Ferrers of Chartleie Bourchier & Louaine, at ſuch time as he was the quéenes maieſties ward; with an epiſtle of the preſenter: which bicauſe it is a veine of godlie deuiſe, & tending to a verie honorable purpoſe, deſerueth here to be placed, anſwering the preſident heretofore ſet out in print, as followeth.

The epiſtle of E. W. prefixed before the genealogicall epitaph, and funerall ſermon publiſhed at the interring of the right honourable the lord Walter earle of Eſſex, &c.

My lord, your abſence latelie from the funerals of my lord your father, was lamented by ſuch in Wales as would gladlie haue beheld the liuelie image of him in you; and if the tenderneſſe of your yeares (vnméet for ſo tedious and ſo vnreaſonable trauell) had not by neceſſitie diſappointed their hope, then ſhould the lamentable ſpéech of the graue and reuerend father, the biſhop of ſaint Dauies (expreſſed with abundance of dolour & tears) haue left in you a déepe impreſſion of griefe for the intollerable loſſe of ſo honourable a parent. But it maie be iudged that God hath turned your abſence to your more benefit; ſith the importunacie of ſuch as loue & honour you, and who couet to haue your fathers vertues deſcend with his inheritance, hath obteined the publiſhing of that learned ſermon: wherin you maie at good leaſure view in the iuſt report of his life & death the paterne & forme of true nobilitie.

The death of the earle much lamented.

The heroicall deſcription of true nobilitie.

The heroicall deſcription that the biſhop maketh of nobilitie, comparing it vnto a mounteine, from which foure famous riuers muſt iſſue (the mounteine true religion, the riuers, prudence, iuſtice, fortitude, and temperance) is a rule to you: firſt to follow your father in truth of religion, then to be as he was, wiſe, iuſt, valiant, and temperat. The naturall and vnforced courteſie & affabilitie that was in your father, and that excellent mixture of diſpoſition and aptneſſe, both for warre and peace, doth promiſe to the world a ſingular perfection in you hereafter. For as your grandfather (who died in his yoong yeares) did make ſhew of much more honour than was in the noble vicount his father: and this our earle by famous actions did altogither eclipſe the vertuous hope conceiued of your grandfather: ſo conſidering that God in nature continueth as it were the race by outward ſhew of good parts in you, and that you haue more aduantage of education, both by the place where you liue, and by the honour and wiſedome of your patrons than your grandfather or father had; we can not but hope of a further degrée of excellencie in you to ouerſhine the goodneſſe both of your father and grandfather.

A perſuaſorie reaſon to mooue the yoong earle now liuing to an excellent imitation of his anceſtors.

Some people there be that can hardlie diſcerne betwéene honour & profit, that doo ouermuch thinke of the diſaduantage offered you by the earle your father, in diminiſhing ſome part of his patrimonie in his forren ſeruices; and will wiſh you perhaps with a contrarie courſe to deſerue more of your heire, and worſe of the world. But as I wiſh in you a liberall frugalitie vnder this rule and proteſtation, that nothing can be profitable that is not honeſt: ſo to deſerue well (as your father did) of your ſoueraigne and countrie in matters apperteining to hir maieſties obedience, rather throw the helue after the hatchet, and leaue your ruines to be repared by your prince, than anie thing to degenerat from honourable liberalitie. And as in attempting great things, it is good to be circumſpect, and with iudgment wiſelie to foreſée the end before you begin: ſo hauing entered into anie honourable attempt that maie be iuſtlie grounded vpon reaſon, follow the ſame with ſuch inuincible conſtancie in all extremities as your father did, for ſo ſhall you iuſtlie deſerue like teſtimonie as hir maieſtie gaue to him in hir gratious letters: namelie, that he was a rare iewell of hir realme, and an ornament of hir nobilitie.

Notable counſell to the earle to deſerue well of his ſoueraigne and countrie.

The quéenes teſtimonie of the earle.

True religion and wiſedome (vpon whome iuſtice dependeth) doo procéed from God by grace, and therefore by inuocation, praier, and ſtudie to be obteined: but the other vertues, as fortitude, temperance, courteſie, affabilitie, liberalitie and conſtancie, be peculiar to your houſe, deſcending by nature, and graffed as it were in your principles. So that to degenerat into the lothſome contraries of theſe, & in ſtéed of the habit of vertue, to diſguiſe your ſelfe with vice, ſhall be harder to you, and more impoſſible for the contrarietie of your nature, than to atteine in good things to the perfection of excellencie. And to the end that Vertues naturallie incident to the erle by courſe of deſcent.

To what end the epitaph genealogicall was added to the funerall ſermon.

you may know what you are by birth and blond, and that you ſhould not by ignorance or lacke of knowledge of your ſelfe, doo anie thing vnworthie the noble houſes from whenſe you are deſcended: a wellwiller of yours hath ioined to this ſermon (amongſt other epitaphs conteining your fathers due praiſes) his ſtatelie deſcent in well digeſted Latine verſes: not to puffe you vp with anie ſwelling vanities, but to giue you a reaſon how you beare your armour and badges of honour, and to remember you what errour you enter into, if you ſhould blemiſh the vertues of your noble anceſtours, or to doo anie thing (as I ſaid) vnworthie your birth and calling.

The old earls counſell at his death to the yoong earle now aliue touching the ſhortneſſe of life.

Laſtlie my lord, haue alwaies before your eies the feare of God, and the counſell of the earle your father at his death: namelie, that you ſhould euer be mindfull of the moment of time, aſſigned both to your father and grandfather, the eldeſt hauing atteined but to ſix and thirtie yeares, to the end that vpon conſideration of the ſhort courſe of life that you in nature are to looke for, you might ſo imploie your tender yeares in vertuous ſtudies and exerciſes, as you might in the prime of your youth become a man well accompliſhed to ſerue hir maieſtie and your countrie, as well in warre as peace: wherevnto he commanded you to bend all your indeuours, & with thoſe conditions heaped his bleſſings vpon you. I praie therefore that God will increaſe thoſe conditionall bleſſings, and the cauſes of them in you, to the end that hir maieſtie may thinke of you hereafter as of a true ſeruant and humble ſubiect, one of the pillers of hir eſtate, hir maieſties kinſman by manie aliances, and the ſonne of a moſt noble father.

Your L. at commandement E.W.

Thus much concerning the two earles, the father departed, and the ſonne ſuruiuing, of whoſe procéeding in the ſteps of his father, there is no doubt but within few yeares the world ſhall haue iuſt cauſe (as there is preſent hope) to beare witneſſe: whome in all his attempts we will leaue to ſuch fortunat ſucceſſe, as God the giuer thereof ſhall vouchſafe to prouide and afford.]

A proclamation for the frée traffike of marchants as before, &c.

The tenth of Nouember a proclamation was publiſhed for the frée traffike of merchants to be reſtored as had béen accuſtomed in times paſt betwixt the kingdoms and countries of the quéenes maieſtie of England and the king of Portingall, which traffike had béen diſcontinued by reſon of certeine ſtaies and arreſts made of diuerſe ſubiects on both parts, with their goods & ſhips. But now it was accorded in name of both their maieſties, that all maner of both their ſubiects of what kingdome or countrie ſo euer they be, from the fiftéenth of the ſaid moneth, might vſe the like mutuall traffike for merchandizes, and in the ſame places: that is to ſaie, hir maieſties ſubiects in the kingdomes of Portingale & Algarbia, and in the Iles of Medera and Azore: and likewiſe the ſubiects of the king of Portingale in England and Ireland, as they were lawfullie accuſtomed before the ſaid arreſts. This reſtitution of the ſaid traffike to remaine from the ſaid fiftéenth date of Nouember in this yeare one thouſand, fiue hundred, ſeauentie and ſix, during the ſpace of thrée yeares next inſuing. At the end of which terme, if by the ſaid princes in the meane time it be not otherwiſe prouided for continuance of the ſaid traffike to indure perpetuallie, no new arreſts ſhall be made of anie things brought into the kingdoms and Iles aforeſaid, of either of the ſaid princes during the time of the ſaid thrée yeares. It was further agréed by the ſaid princes for the more ſure preſeruation of the amitie and friendſhip betwixt them, their ſaid realmes and ſubiects, that neither of them ſhall receiue anie pirat or rouer into anie of the ports or créeks of either of their realmes, dominions, and countries, which may or ſhall haue committed anie piraſie or robberie vpon either of their ſubiects, nor ſhall ſhew anie fauour, giue anie aid or ſuccor, or ſuffer anie to be giuen directlie or indirectlie to the ſaid rouers or pirats. Neither ſhall they during the time of the ſaid amitie, in either of their kingdoms, or anie place of their dominions, fauour, interteine, receiue or reteine, nor ſuffer to be fauoured, interteined, receiued, or reteined by anie of their ſubiects, anie rebels, traitors, or fugitiues, ſubiects to either of them.

Thus farre haue I continued this collection of the Engliſh hiſtories, noting breefelie in theſe later yeares, ſuch things as I find in the abridgement of Richard Grafton, and in the ſummarie of Iohn Stow, increaſed ſomewhat (as may appeare) in places with ſuch helpes as haue come to my hand; humblie beſeeching the reader to accept the ſame in good part, and to pardon me where I haue not ſatiſfied his expectation: ſith heerein I muſt confeſſe, I haue nothing contented my ſelfe, but yet at the requeſt of others haue doone what I could & not what I would, for want of conference with ſuch as might haue furniſhed me with more large inſtructions, ſuch as had beene neceſſarie for the purpoſe.

THE CHRONICLES OF England, from the yeare of our Lord 1576, where Raphaell Holinſhed left;

ſupplied and continued to this preſent

yeare 1586: by Iohn Stow, and others.

A Diſciple of Socrates, by name Ariſtippus, a man ſuerlie of a verie ſharpe iudgement and pleaſant wit, when he was demanded what profit he tooke by the ſtudie of wiſedome, made this anſwer: Forſooth this profit, that with all ſorts of men I can frankelie and boldlie ſpeake. Which anſwer might well be of that mans making; bicauſe he bare a mind indifferentlie free, as well from hope as feare: for he ſerued no man, nor yet flattered anie perſon, nor otherwiſe behaued himſelfe than his hart gaue him. Of the ſame mind it were to be wiſhed that all ſtorie-writers were: for then ſhould Chronicles approch next in truth to the ſacred and inuiolable ſcripture, and their vſe not onelie growe more common, but alſo of greater account. And right good reaſon whie. For therein is conteined the rich and pretious treaſure of time, the wiſeſt counſellor vnder the cope of heauen. And that ſaw Thales the philoſopher well inough, who being aſked what of all was the eldeſt? anſwered, God: what of all the faireſt? the world: what of all the greateſt? place: what of all the ſwifteſt? the mind: what of all the ſtrongeſt? neceſſitie: and what of all the wiſeſt? time. Time in Greeke is called χρόνος, whereof the word Chronicles ariſeth, termed τὰ χρονικὰ, that is, obſeruations of time: ſo that if nothing in wiſedome dooth excell time, then who can but wax wiſe by reading and peruſing the obſeruations of time, which are meerelie & ſimplie Chronicles? Chroniclers therefore deſerue a reuerence of dutie, whome time hath called and culled out as it were by the hand, to vſe their miniſterie and ſeruice for the diſpoſing and diſtributing of the riches of his wiſedome to all ages, that ſucceſſors may be taught by their predeceſſors, wit by their follie, fealtie by their diſloialtie, obedience by their rebellion, vnitie and peace by their diſſention, plainneſſe by their doubleneſſe, ſobrietie by their vntemperance, courteſie by their churliſhneſſe, pitie by their vncharitableneſſe; finallie all goodneſſe by their badneſſe; for the which (as we may ſee by a ſea of examples in this booke) ſith they were greeuouſlie puniſhed, it is our gaine by their ſmart to be admoniſhed.

For ſurelie heerein ſtandeth a ſpeciall vſe of chronicles, that whileſt ſome offending againſt the lawes of God, of nature, and of nations, doo draw vnto themſelues deſerued vengeance: others by loue allured, or by feare inforced, ſeeing their rufull fals, and auoiding the meanes, may happilie eſcape the paine. This frute hitherto hath this hiſtorie of chronicles affoorded, no leſſe heereafter by the continuation following is like to be performed; beſides manifold matters of recreation, policie, aduentures, chiualrie, &c: abundantlie miniſtred; and all vnder the golden reigne of bleſſed queene Eliſabeth, the ſweet floure of amiable virginitie:

Cui vitam, ſtudiúmqne Deus, regnique coronam
Perpetuet, beet, & tranquillo proſperet vſu:
Pôſtque hanc exactam vitam, ſtudium atque coronam,
Cœleſti vita, ſtudio, diademate donet.

I. Stow.

In vnnaturall brother murthereth his naturall brother, but the vnnaturall brother was hanged as he well deſerued.

The tenth day of Nouember, in the citie of Worceſter, a cruell & vnnaturall brother (as an other Cain) murdered his owne naturall & louing brother, firſt ſmiting his braines out of his head with an ax, and after cutting his throte to make him ſure, and then buried him vnder the hearth of a chimneie, thinking thereby (though wrongfullie) quietlie to haue inioied his brothers goods long before in his poſſeſſion: but not long after this ſecret murder comming to light, the murderer was rewarded according to his deſerts, and to the terror of ſuch vnnaturall murdering brethren. The ſeuenteenth of March, through a ſtrange tempeſt which hapned in the North, neere to a towne called Richmond, not onelie cotages, trées, barnes and haieſtakes, but alſo the moſt part of the church called Patrike Brumton was ouerthrowen, with moſt ſtrange ſights in the aire, both fearefull and terrible.

Tower on Londō bridge taken downe.

In the moneth of Aprill, the decaied ſtone houſe called the tower vpon London bridge was begun to be taken downe, and the heads of traitors that were wont there on poles to be fixed, were remoued thenſe, and ſet on the gate at the bridge foot toward Southworke. The ſeuentéenth daie of Maie, Richard Robinſon goldſmith was drawne from the tower of London to Tiburne, and there hanged for clipping of gold. The one and thirtith daie of Maie, Martin Frobiſher with one ſhip and two barks furniſhed for that purpoſe, ſailed from Harwich in Eſſex towards Cataia by the northweſt ſeas, and entered the ſtreicts beyond quéene Elizabeths foreland, about thirtie leagues, where he went on ſhore, and finding ſtore of the blacke ſtone, which the goldfiners had ſaid to hold gold, and therefore called the ſame Gold ore, he fraught his ſhip & barke, caught a man, a woman, and a child of that countrie, and then on the foure and twentith of Auguſt returning from thenſe, arriued at Milford hauen in Wales on the twentith of September next following.

Strange ſickeneſſe at Oxford.

The fourth, fift, and ſixt daie of Iulie, the aſſiſes being holden at Oxford, there was arreigned and condemned one Rowland Ienkes, for his ſeditious tong, at which time there aroſe amidſt the people ſuch a dampe that almoſt all were ſmouldered, verie few eſcaping that were not taken at that inſtant: the iurors died preſentlie, ſhortlie after died ſir Robert Bell lord chiefe baron, ſir Robert de Olie, ſir William Babington, maſter Wineman, maſter de Olie high ſhiriffe, maſter Dauers, maſter Harecombe, maſter Kirle, maſter Phetipace, maſter Gréenewood, maſter Foſter, maſter Naſh, ſergeant Baram, maſter Stephans, &c. There died in the towne of Oxford thrée hundred perſons, and ſickened there, but died in other places two hundred and od, from the ſixt of Iulie to the twelfe of Auguſt, after which daie died not one of that ſickeneſſe, for one of them infected not an other, nor anie one woman or child died thereof.

Ab.Fl. ex relatu W. B. impreſſ. 1577.

¶ Of this ſickeneſſe there paſſed a report in print, publiſhed vnder the name of W. B. who (as he ſaith himſelfe) was preſent with ſir William Babington, and therefore was able, and did (as he thought good) ſet downe the certeintie of that heauie accident, for the ſatiſfaction of ſuch friends of his as deſired to know the vndoubted truth. And the ſame W. B. ſetting downe the opinion, that diuerſe conceiued of this venemous maladie, ſaith that ſome ſuppoſed it to be of two ſorts; howbeit (ſaith he) it is not ſo. For thoſe that bled till they died, ſtroue ſo much with their ſickeneſſe, that the bloud iſſued out at their vents: but yet had perfect memorie, euen to the yéelding of their breath, as was verie well perceiued by ſir William Babington, who neuer ceaſed to call vpon God in his great agonie, &c. Tempeſt in Suffolke.

On ſundaie the fourth of Auguſt, betwéene the houres of nine and ten of the clocke in the forenone, whileſt the miniſter was reading of the ſecond leſſon in the pariſh church of Bliborough a towne in Suffolke, a ſtrange and terrible tempeſt of lightening and thunder ſtrake thorough the wall of the ſame church into the ground almoſt a yard déepe, draue downe all the people on that ſide aboue twentie perſons, then renting the wall vp to the reueſtre, cleft the doore, and returning to the ſtéeple, rent the timber, brake the chimes, & fled toward Bongie a towne ſix miles off. The people that were ſtriken downe were found groueling more than halfe an houre after, whereof one man more than fortie yeares and a boie of fiftéene yeares old were found ſtarke dead:

the other were ſcorched. The ſame or the like flaſh of lightening and cracks of thunder rent the pariſh church of Bongis, nine miles from Norwich, wrong in ſunder the wiers and whéeles of the clocks, ſlue two men which ſat in the belfreie, when the other were at the proceſſion or ſuffrages, and ſcorched an other which hardlie eſcaped. The tower on London bridge being taken downe, and a new foundation drawne, ſir Iohn Langleie lord maior of the citie of London laid the firſt ſtone on the eight and twentith daie of Auguſt, in the preſence of the ſhiriffes of London & the two bridgemaſters, which new tower was finiſhed in the moneth of September, Anno 1579.

The tower on London bridge new builded.

Anno Reg. 20.

Cutbert Maine executed.

The thirtith daie of Nouember, Cutbert Maine was drawne, hanged, and quartered at Lanceſton in Cornewall for preferring Romane power. The ſeuentéenth of Ianuarie, one Simon Penbroke dwelling in ſaint Georges pariſh in Southworke, being a figureflinger, and vehementlie ſuſpected to be a coniurer, by commandement of the ordinarie iudge for thoſe parties, appeared in the pariſh church of ſaint Sauiors in Southworke, at a court holden there. Which Simon being buſied in interteining a proctor, and hauing monie in his hand, leaned his head vpon a pew wherein the proctor ſtood: which after he had done a certeine ſpace, the proctor began to lift vp his head to ſée what he ailed, and found him departing out of life, and ſtreightwaie the ſaid Simon fell downe, ratling a little in the throte, and neuer ſpake word after. This was done euen as the iudge came into the church, who ſaid it was the iuſt iudgement of God towards thoſe that vſed ſorcerie, and a great example to admoniſh other to feare the iuſtice of God. After, his clothes being opened, there were found about him fiue diueliſh bookes of coniuration, and moſt abhominable practiſes, with a picture of tin of a man, hauing thrée dice in his hand with this poeſie: Chance dice fortunatlie; & diuerſe papers of ſuch like matters, as he had dealt in for men, ſuch men I meane as are mentioned in Leuiticus the twentith chapter and ſixt verſe: If anie ſoule turne himſelfe after ſuch as worke with ſpirits, and after ſoothſaiers, to go a whoring after them (ſaith the Lord) I will put my face againſt that ſoule, and will cut him off from among my people.

An example of ſorcerers, and ſuch as ſéeme to worke wonders to deceiue men of their monie.

Nelſon and Sherewood executed.

The third daie of Februarie, Iohn Nelſon for denieng the quéenes ſupremaſie, and ſuch other traitorous words againſt hir maieſtie, was drawne from Newgate to Tiburne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered. And on the ſeuenth of the ſame moneth of Februarie, Thomas Sherewin was likewiſe drawne from the tower of London to Tiburne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered for the like offenſe. The fiue and twentith of Februarie, Iohn de Loy a Frenchman, and fiue Engliſh gentlemen, was conueied from the tower of London towards Norwich, there to be arreigned and executed for coining of monie counterfeit. And on the ninth of March, ſeuen pirats were hanged at Wapping in the ouze beſide London.

Counterfetters of coine executed.

Pirats hanged.

1578

Frobiſhers third voiage.

The ladie Margaret counteſſe of Lennox deceaſed on the tenth of March, at hir houſe in the pariſh of Hackneie beſides London, and was buried at Weſtminſter on the third of Aprill. The one and thirtith and laſt of Maie, Martine Frobiſher with fifteene ſaile of good ſhips, manned, vittelled, and otherwiſe well appointed, departed from Harwich in Eſſex on his third voiage towards Cataia. And on the one and thirtith and laſt daie of Iulie, after manie attempts, and ſundrie times being put backe by Ilands of ice in the ſtreicts, he recouered his long wiſhed port, and came to anchor in the Ilands, newlie by hir maieſtie named Meta incognita, where (as in the yeare before) they fraught their ſhips with the like ſtone or gold ore out of the mines; and then on the laſt of Auguſt returning thenſe, arriued ſafelie in England about the firſt of October.

Anno Reg. 21.

The receiuing of Caſimere.

The two and twentith of Ianuarie being thurſdaie, about ſeuen of the clocke at night, Iohn Caſſimere countie palatine of Rhene, duke of Bauare, landing at the tower of London, was there by diuerſe noble men and others honourablie receiued, and conueied by creſſet light and torchlight to ſir Thomas Greſhams houſe in Biſhops gate ſtréet, where he was receiued with ſounding of trumpets, drums, fifes, and other inſtruments of muſicke, and there both lodged and feaſted till ſundaie next, that he was by the nobilitie fetched and conueied to the court at Weſtminſter, where after he had talked with hir maieſtie, he returned vnto Summerſets houſe at the ſtrand, and was there lodged. In the wéeke following he hunted at Hampton court. On ſundaie the firſt of Februarie he beheld a valiant iuſting and running at the tilt at Weſtminſter. On the next morrow in the ſame place he ſaw them fight at barriers with ſwords on horſſe backe. On tueſdaie he dined with the lord maior of London; on wedneſdaie with the dutcheſſe of Suffolke, at hir houſe called the Barbican in Red croſſe ſtréet; on thurſdaie at the Stillard, &c. On ſundaie the eight of Februarie, the quéene made him knight of the garter, by deliuering to him the collar, & putting the garter on his leg at White hall. And on the fourtéenth of Februarie, he departed from London to Rocheſter homewards, with great rewards giuen to him by the quéenes maieſtie, the nobilitie, men of honour, the lord maior of London, and other citizens of that citie.

Déepe ſnow.

The ſame moneth of Februarie; to wit, on the fourth daie, and in the night next following, fell ſuch abundance of ſnow, that on the ſift daie in the morning, the ſame ſnow was found in London to lie two foot déepe in the ſhalloweſt, and otherwiſe being driuen by the wind, verie boiſterous in the northeaſt on banks one ell or a yard & a halfe déepe. In the which drifts of ſnow, farre déeper in the countrie, manie cattell, and ſome men and women were ouerwhelmed and loſt. It ſnowed till the eight daie of that moneth, and friſed till the tenth, and then followed a thaw with continuall raine a long time after, which cauſed ſuch high waters, and great flouds, that the mariſhes and low grounds being drowned for the time, and the water of the Thames roſe ſo high into Weſtminſter hall, that after the fall thereof, ſome fiſhes were found to remaine in the ſaid hall.

Great land waters.

A murtherer hanged on Mile end gréene.

The ſeuentéenth of Februarie, an Iriſhman for murdering of a man in a garden of Stepenheth pariſh, was hanged in chaines on the common called Mile end gréene. This common was ſometimes, yea in the memorie of men yet liuing, a large mile long (from White chappell to Stepenheth church) and therefore called Mile end greene, but now at this preſent, by grédie (and as ſéemeth to me vnlawfull) incloſures, and building of houſes, notwithſtanding hir maieſties proclamation to the contrarie, it remaineth ſcarſe halfe a mile in length. The twentith daie of Februarie deceaſed ſir Nicholas Bacon, lord kéeper of the great ſeale of England, who was honourablie buried vnder a ſumptuous monument or toome (by him in his life time erected) in S. Pauls church of London, on the ninth daie of March. This ſir Nicholas Bacon in his life time gaue for ſix ſcholers, to be found in Bennets college in Cambridge, to each of them thrée pounds ſix ſhillings and eight pence the yeare for euer.

Lord kéeper deceaſed.

¶The ſaid ſir Nicholas Bacons toome aforeſaid, bearing

Ab.Fl.collect ex epitaph dicti prænobilis.

ing certeine repreſentations of his wiues and children in imagerie worke, is adorned with a notable epitaph, wherein is pithilie deſcribed the meanes whereby he grew to be noble, as alſo immortall. The ſame being conteined in theſe verſes following, and iuſtifiable by the verie epitaph, whereof this is a true tranſcription, & great pitie but it ſhuld be perpetuall.

On the ſouth ſide theſe verſes.

Great ſnow in the moneth of Aprill.

This yeare in the moneth of Aprill, to wit on the foure and twentith daie, fell ſuch a ſnow betwéene the hours of foure of the clocke in the morning, & nine of the clocke before noone of the ſame daie, that in London the ſame ſnow was found to lie one foot déepe. The 25 daie of Aprill, ſir Thomas Bromleie knight was made lord chancellor of England.

Sir Thomas Bromleie lord chancellor.

The chancellors of England, collected out of ſundrie ancient hiſtories.

The collection of Francis Thin.

THe creation of this ſir Thomas Bromleie lord chancellor, hath occaſioned me to treate of the chancellors of England, a matter which I haue béene the willinger to ſet downe, becauſe I would miniſter cauſe to others (who haue long wanted of their cunning in this matter) to impart to the world ſome of their great knowledge herein, to the benefit of their countrie. But ſince I doubt that they will not: accept this in good part till that come. And as I may, & perhaps doo (in this) ſomewhat more largelie (than in the iudgement of others ſhall ſéeme anſwerable to the moſt receiued opinion, touching the chancellors) treat of the antiquitie of them; ſo yet I haue no mind to erre, or to leade anie other into error. Wherefore, if things be not in perfection vpon this firſt rough hewing (as nothing is at the firſt ſo exquiſit, as time doth not after amend it) yet diſdaine it not, ſith this may giue more light than before was knowen. And I determine God willing, either to amend, or to confeſſe and auoid in the large deſcription of their liues, whatſoeuer imperfections haue now diſtilled out of my pen, either for miſtaking or miſplacing of name, perſon, or time; and ſo to the matter.

It hath béene ſome queſtion amongſt the beſt antiquaries of our age, that there were neuer anie chancellors in England, before the comming of Edward the confeſſor out of Normandie, whome they ſuppoſe to haue brought the ſame officer with him from thenſe into this realme. But ſith I am with manie reaſons and ancient authorities led to beleue the contrarie; I will imbrace the contrarie opinion therevnto, and hold in this diſcourſe (as the order thereof ſhall prooue) that there were chancellors before ſaint Edwards time; for the confirmation thereof and for the authoritie of them; for the etymologie and originall of the name, and for the continuance of their office, thou ſhalt find an ample diſcourſe in my booke purpoſelie written of the liues of the chancellors, whervnto I wholie refer thée: who I hope ſhall within theſe few yeares be partaker thereof, and in the meane time giue thée this taſt of the age and names of the chancellors, and vicechancellors, and ſuch keepers of the great ſeale, as ſerued in place of chancellors. For euerie one that was kéeper of the great ſeale, was not intituled chancellor, no more than euerie chancellor was intituled the keeper of the great ſeale. But becauſe the one did ſerue in the vacancie of the other (ſo that after a certeine ſort, the kéeper of the great ſeale was vicechancellor, and poſſeſſed the place, though not the name of a chancellor; as in our age, ſir Nicholas Bacon did: we therefore haue ſet downe the names of the one and the other, as they followed in ſucceſſion of time, after this manner.

Turketill.

Turketill chancellor to Ethelbald, who began his reigne about the yeare of Chriſt 718, which Turketill gaue ſix manours to the abbeie of Croiland, as I haue ſéene noted.

Saint Swithin.

Saint Swithin biſhop of Wincheſter was chancellor, and chiefe of councell to the great monarch king Egbert, though ſome attribute him to Edgar, which Egbert began his reigne about the yeare of Chriſt 802.

Wlſinus.

Wlſinus, chancellor to king Athelſtan, who began his reigne in the yeare of our redemption nine hundred and foure and twentie.

Adulphus.

Adulphus, chancellor to king Edgar, who began his reigne in the yeare that the world became fleſh, nine hundred fiftie and nine: of this man ſpeaketh Hugo Petro Burgenſis; and Leland calleth this Adulph Cancellarium & archigrammateum: chancellor or chiefe ſecretarie.

Hiſt. Elienſ. lib. 2. written in the time of K. Stephan.

Alſius or Aelſius the ſecond abbat of Elie, chancellor to king Etheldred, who began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt nine hundred ſeuentie and eight, this man, being by Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter, conſecrated abbat at the appointment of the ſaid king Ethelred or Egelred, and being then abbat of Elie, when Ethelred gaue forth his commandement that the abbat of Elie ſhould then, and for euer, be chancellor; I doubt not to place him here amongſt the chancellors: the proofe of which matter I haue here verbatim ſet downe, out of the ſecond booke of the hiſtorie of Elie. Statuit (which was Ethelred) atque conceſſit quatenus eccleſiam de Eli, ex tunc & ſemper in regis curia cancellarij ageret dignitatem, quod etiam alijs ſancti videlicet Auguſtini & Gleſconiæ eccleſijs conſtituit, vt abbates iſtorum cœnobiorum viciſſim adſignatis ſuccedendo temporibus annum trifariè diuiderent, cum ſanctuarijs & cæteris ornamentis miniſtrando: &c.

Leofricus.

Leofricus Bathonicus chancellor to Edward the confeſſor, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fortie and fiue, and ſome yeares before: this man was biſhop of Cridington in Cornewall, which ſée was after tranſlated to Exceſter.

Wlſinus.

Wlſinus, or Wulſinus chancellor to Edward the confeſſor, in the latter end of the ſaid yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fortie and fiue, being the third yeare of his reigne; this man cannot be he which ſome would haue to be Wlſinus the abbat of Weſtminſter. For that Wulſinus died one and fortie yeares before this Wulſinus the chancellor; ſith that Wulſinus was made abbat of Weſtminſter, about the yeare nine hundred fiftie and eight, and died in the yeare one thouſand and foure; being biſhop of Shireburne. Yet I will not at this time iudiciallie reſolue, although I ſuppoſe it true, whether this Wlſinus the chancellor, and Wulſinus the biſhop of Lichfield, witneſſe to a déed, wherein Edward the confeſſor granted certeine liberties to Leofwine, abbat of the abbeie of Couentrie, built by Leofrike erle of Mercia, be all one man or no. Againe, there is an other man which was abbat of ſaint Albons called Wulſinus, which for affinitie to the name of this man I thought onelie to touch in this place.

Reſenbaldus.

Reſenbaldus, or Rembaldus, for I take them both by manie and ancient authorities to be all one man, was chancellor to Edward the confeſſor, and ſeale bearer, witneſſe amongeſt others, to manie déeds which I haue ſéene of the confeſſors; ſome dated in the yeare one thouſand thrée ſcore and ſix, and ſome otherwiſe. He was buried at Cirenceſter, or Creſter.

Mauricius.

Mauricius chancellor to William the Conqueror in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée ſcore and ſeuen, being the firſt and part of the ſecond yere of William the Conqueror.

Oſmundus.

Oſmundus, after biſhop of Sarum, chancellor to William the Conqueror, in the yere one thouſand thrée ſcore and ſeauen, and after in the yere one thouſand thrée ſcore and fiftéene, about the ninth yeare of the kings reigne.

Arfaſtus.

Arfaſtus biſhop of Helmane, who tranſlated his ſée from Helmane to Tetford, was chancellor to William the Conqueror, in the yéere of Chriſt one thouſand thrée ſcore and eight, being in the ſecond and third yere of the Conqueror, and alſo in the yere one thouſand ſeuentie and ſeuen, being about the tenth yeare of William Conqueror.

Hirmanus.

Hirmanus that was firſt made biſhop of Suring or Wilton, and tranſlated his ſée from Wilton to Shirburne, & from thenſe to Sarum; he is that Hirmanus which I ſuppoſe was chancellor to William the Conqueror, and called Hirmannus, and that wrote the life and miracles of ſaint Edmund king of the Eaſtangles.

William Welſon.

William Welſon borne of a noble houſe, chapleine and chancellor to William the Conqueror (as hath Robertus Montenſis) ſuccéeded Arfaſtus in the biſhoprike of Tetford, to whom by the gift of William Rufus ſuccéeded in that ſée Herbertus Loſinga abbat of Ramſeie, which tranſlated the biſhops ſée to Norwich; of which Loſinga were (as hath Matthew Weſtminſter) theſe verſes here ſet downe compiled:

Surgit in eccleſia monſtrum genitore Loſinga,
Simonidum ſecta, canonum virtute reſecta,
Petre nimis tardas, nam Simon ad ardua tentat,
Si præſens eſſes, non Simon ad alta volaret,
Proh dolor eccleſiæ nummis venduntur & ære,
Filius eſt præſul, pater abbas, Simon vterque.
Quid non ſperemus, ſi nummos poſſideamus?
Omnia nummus habet, quid vult facit, addit & aufert,
Res nimis iniuſta, nummus ſit præſul & abbas.

William Gifford.

William Gifford biſhop of Wincheſter was chancellor in the time of the Conqueror, and of William Rufus, & of Henrie, who made him biſhop of Wincheſter in the yeare one thouſand and one hundred, and was conſecrated in the yéere of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred and ſeuen: though it ſéemeth that Robert Bluet came in place of this William Gifford, remoued about the fourth of the ſame Rufus from his office of chancellorſhip, as I ſuppoſe will be well proued, but after placed againe in that office. Of the death of this William is much contrarietie, for Matthew Weſtminſter placed it thrée ſeuerall yéeres, the eight and twentith and nine and twentith yeare of Henrie the firſt, and againe in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred fortie and two, being the ſeuenth yeare of king Stephan.

Robert Bluet.

Robert Bluet, Bloet, or Bloſcit made chancellor in the yéere of Chriſt one thouſand and ninetie, being the fourth yeare of William Rufus, he was made biſhop of Lincolne in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand ninetie and two: but as it appéereth to me by ſome authoritie that I haue ſéene, he did execute that office being biſhop of Lincolne: he died at Woodſtocke in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred twentie and thrée, being about the thrée and twentith yere of the reigne of Henrie the firſt, whoſe epitaph Henrie Huntington reciteth in this manner:

Pontificùm Robertus honor, quem fama ſuperſtes
Perpetuare dabit, nec obiturus obit:
Hic humilis, diues (res mira) potens, pius vltor,
Compatiens, mitis, quùm pateretur erat,
Noluit eſſe ſuis dominus, ſtuduit pater eſſe,
Semper in aduerſis murus & arma ſuis:
In decima Iani mendacis ſomnia mundi
Liquit, & euigilans vera per henne vidit.

Ranulphus.

Ranulphus in the time of William Rufus, which might be that man which was after chancellor in the time of Henrie the firſt.

Waldricus.

Waldricus chancellor to Henrie the firſt, about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred and thrée, being the third yeare of his reigne.

Herbertus.

Herbertus chancellor in the fourth yeare of Henrie the firſt, in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand one hundred and foure (as appeareth by an anonymall pamphlet in written hand) of whome I am not yet reſolued whether this were Herbertus Loſinga biſhop of Norwich or no.

Roger.

Roger biſhop of Saliſburie, whome Henrie the firſt called a méet chapleine to ſerue ſouldiors, was chancellor to king Henrie the firſt, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred and one, being the firſt yéere of king Henrie the firſt, and in the yéere one thouſand one hundred and ſeuen, about the ſeuenth yeare of the ſaid Henrie the firſt, being choſen biſhop in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred and two, and conſecrated in the yeare one thouſand one hundred and ſeuen.

Galfridus.

Galfridus Rufus biſhop of Durham, witneſſe to a déed wherein Henrie the firſt confirmed to the priorie of Chriſts church a péece of ground without Aldgate called Knighton guild, in the preſence of Geffrie chancellor, Geffrie Clinton, and William Clinton: he was alſo chancellor in the two and twentith yéere of Henrie the firſt, and ſo vntill the thrée and thirtith yeare of the reigne of Henrie the firſt, and then was made biſhop of Durham, which Geffrie died about the yere of our redemption one thouſand one hundred fortie and one.

Ranulphus.

Ranulphus, called by Matthew Weſtminſter Arnulphus, chancellor to Henrie the firſt, and Richard the chapleine, kéeper of the great ſeale, being at one time. This Ranulph was chancellor in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred and ſixtéene, being the ſixtéenth of king Henrie the firſt, in which office I ſuppoſe that he continued, vntill the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred twentie and thrée, being the thrée and twentith of the ſaid Henrie, in which yeare this chancellor (for ſo is he then called) fell from his horſſe and brake his necke on a hill not far from Dunſtable, where the king kept his Chriſtmaſſe.

Reginald.

Reginald chancellor to king Henrie the firſt, as Leland hath ſet him downe, writing in this ſort in his notes of Montacute abbeie: Reginaldus cancellarius, ſo named (béelike) of his office, he was a man of gret fame about king Henrie the firſt: he fell to religion, and was prior of Montacute, and inlarged it with great buildings and poſſeſſions, &c.

Roger.

Roger biſhop of Saliſburie againe chancellor in the latter end of the reigne of king Henrie the firſt, and in the beginning of king Stephan, in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred thirtie and ſix, which Henrie the firſt died in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred thirtie and fiue, being the fiue and thirtith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Henrie. This Roger died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred thirtie and nine, being about the fourth yeare of king Stephan.

Godfreie.

Godfreie chancellor to Henrie the firſt (as I gather out of Matthew Parker in the life of William Corbell or Corbzis) the ſix and thirtith archbiſhop of

Canturbu

Canturburie, to which dignitie this William was aduanced in the thrée and twentith yeare of Henrie the firſt, being the yeare of Chriſt 1123, of which Godfreie the ſaid Matthew further writeth in this ſort, ſpeaking of the ſaid William the archbiſhop returned from Rome with the pall: Deinde Alexandrum Lincolnienſem epiſcopum Cantuariæ, Godefredum regni cancellarium Bathonienſem epiſcopum Londini conſecrauit. Concerning which Godfreie we will ſpeake more hereafter in the liues of the chancellors, onelie at this time ſetting downe that this Godefredus was the quéenes chapleine, and could not be that Galfridus before named, which was biſhop of Durham; for this Godefredus died ſix yeares before that Galfridus, for this biſhop of Bath died in the yeare of our Lord 1135, being the laſt of king Henrie Beauclerke, and the firſt of king Stephan; & that biſhop of Durham died in the yeare of our Lord 1141, being about the ſixt yeare of the ſaid king Stephan; and this Godfreie was the ſecond biſhop of Bath and Wels after the vniting of thoſe two cities to one biſhoprike by Iohn de Towres, the firſt biſhop of thoſe two places in the yeare of our Lord 1092, being about the fift yeare of William Rufus.

Alexander biſhop of Lincolne.

This was about the beginning of the fourth yéere of k. Stephan, being An. Do. 1138, but Mat. Paris giueth it to An. Dom. 1139: who ſaith, Collo filij eius qui cancellarius fuit laqueum appendens, &c. And Henrie Huntington agreeth wholie with W.Paruus.

Alexander biſhop of Lincolne (as may be after a ſort gathered out of Wilhelmus Paruus lib.1.cap.6.) being couſine or nephue to Roger biſhop of Saliſburie was chancellor: the words of which W.Paruus be theſe: Eidem (that was to king Stephan) quoque ſublimato in regem, ſe (that was Roger biſhop of Saliſburie) talem exhibuit, vt obſequiorum gratia præclaram apud illum habere fiduciam videretur. Tantis ille beneficijs ingratus, & in ipſum epiſcopum (cuius opera nunquam epiſcopalia fuere) vltor diuinitus ordinatus, eundem tanquam exigui hominem momenti primo carcerati cuſtodia, poſtmodum etiam cibi inopia, & nepoti eius (qui cancellarius fuerat regis) intentato ſupplicio ita coarctauit, vt duo illa præclara caſtella (which were the caſtels of Wiſe otherwiſe called de Deuiſes, and the caſtell of Shirburne) in quibus theſauri eius erant repoſiti reſignaret. Thus much Wilhelmus Newburgenſis, the truth whereof I leaue to other to conſider, ſith the words of thoſe authors may be diuerſlie expounded, either that this Alexander was chancellor, or his ſonne, or elſe the ſonne of Roger biſhop of Saliſburie. But be it any or none of them, as the truth ſhall hereafter be made plaine, yet bicauſe I haue mentioned Alexander in this place, I thinke it not amiſſe to ſet downe ſuch verſes as Henrie Huntington hath recited of this Alexander, which are:

Splendor Alexandri, non tam reniteſcit honore,
Quàm per eum reniteſcit honor, flos námque virorum,
Dando tenere putans theſauros cogit honoris,
Et gratis dare feſtinans ne danda rogentur,
Quod non dum dederit non dum ſe credit habere
Oh decus! oh morum directio! quo veniente,
Certa fides, hilaris clementia, cauta poteſtas,
Lene iugum, doctrina placens, correctio dulcis,
Libertáſque decens, venere pudórque facetus.
Lincoliæ gens magna prius, nec maxima ſemper,
Talis & iſte diu ſit nobis tutor honoris.

Robert.

Robert chancellor of England in the time of king Stephan, but I find not in what yeare, bicauſe the charter is without date, neither can I learne what he was, bicauſe I know not his ſurname.

Philip.

Philip chancellor to king Stephan, about the fourth yeare of his reigne, being about the yeare of our Lord 1139, witneſſe to manie déedes which king Stephan made to the monks of Elie, and to Nigellus the biſhop of that ſée.

Reinold.

Reinold abbat of Walden, whome I haue ſéene in one anonymall briefe written chronicle to be termed chancellor: but in what time he liued, or what other name he had I doo not yet know, but by the courſe of the hiſtorie much about this time.

Iohn.

Iohn chancellor of England in the time of king Henrie the ſecond, but what he was or in what yeare of king Henrie he liued I doo not know, and therefore leaue it to him that both can and ought to giue life to theſe perſons whom he impriſoneth in the eaſt caſtell of London; not doubting but in time he will doo his countrie good, and correct other men; though now he be ſo ſtreict laced, as that he will not procure anie furtherance of other mens trauels.

Thomas Becket.

Thomas Becket made chancellor as ſome write in the firſt yéere of the reigne of king Henrie the ſecond, others ſaie in the fourth yeare: but the beſt authors agrée that he gaue ouer the ſeale in the yeare of Chriſt 1162, being the eight yeare of the victorious prince the ſaid Henrie the ſecond againſt the will of the prince, he died in the yeare of our redemption 1170, as theſe verſes doo proue, being ſuch as the curioſitie of that ſuperſtitious age would permit:

Pro Chriſto, ſponſa Chriſti, ſub tempore Chriſti,
* In templo Chriſti, verus amator obit,
Anno mileno, centeno, ſeptuageno,
Anglorum primas corruit enſe Thomas.
Quis moritur? præſul: cur? pro grege: qualiter? enſe:
Quando? natali: quis locus? ara Dei.

* Chriſtes church in Canturburie.

Rafe Warneuile.

Rafe Warneuile archdeacon of Rone and treaſuror of the church of Yorke, was made chancellor about the yeare that the word became fleſh 1173, being about the eightéenth yeare of king Henrie the ſecond: of this man ſpeaketh Matthew Paris and Matthew Weſtminſter.

Walterus de Conſtantijs.

Walterus de Conſtantijs archdeacon of Oxford after biſhop of Lincolne, in the yéere of our redemption 1182, from whenſe he was aduanced in the yeare 1184, being the one and thirtith yéere of king Henrie the ſecond vnto the archbiſhoprike of Rone, of this man is more ſpoken in my diſcourſe of the protectors of England pag. 1069.)

Geffreie.

Geffreie the baſtard ſonne to king Henrie the ſecond, after that he had ſurrendered the biſhoprike of Lincolne, whereof he was neuer conſecrat biſhop, but kept the place and receiued the reuenues, was made chancellor much about the ſix and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſecond, being the yeare of Chriſt 1180: yet be there ſome that ſaie he reſigned the biſhoprike in the ſeuen and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſecond, in the yeare of Chriſt 1181. The difference whereof groweth (as I ſuppoſe) for that ſome accompt the beginning of the yeare of our Lord from the firſt of Ianuarie, as all other nations of Europe doo; ſome from the birth of Chriſt, as we in England did long time ſince the conqueſt; and ſome from the fiue and twentith of March, on which it is ſuppoſed that the world began firſt to be created: which laſt accompt we in England (and the Scots as hath Leſleus) doo kéepe togither with them of Genos or Gene in Italie, contrarie to the order of all other nations. The begining of which maner of accompt amongſt vs I cannot as yet certeinlie learne: but I ſuppoſe it began much about the time of king Edward the third, for all the former hiſtoriographers begin the yeare from the birth of Chriſt.

William Longchamp.

William Longchampe the proud biſhop of Elie, legat of England for the biſhop of Rome, chiefe iuſtice of the ſouth and weſt parts of England, and deputie of that part of the realme, when Richard the firſt went to the warres of the holie land, was made chancellor in the ſaid firſt of king Richard, being the yeare of our redemption 1189: of the ſumptuous feaſt of whoſe inthronization thus writeth Ferthulphus (or Ferculphus) by the waie of compariſon:

Præuiſis alijs, Elienſia feſta videre,
Eſt quaſi præuiſa nocte videre diem.

He died in the yéere of Chriſt 1197, going to Rome, in the abbeie of Pinnie, being of the charterhouſe order.

der. About which time in the firſt yeare of Richard the firſt, there was a vicechancellor called Malus Catulus.

Euſtachius.

Euſtachius deane of Saliſburie, was chancellor of England, being elected biſhop of Elie the third ides of Auguſt, in the yeare that the word became fleſh 1196, being the ninth yeare of king Richard the firſt, of whome thus writeth Matthew Parker, in the life of Hubert archbiſhop of Canturburie, contrarie to that which others affirme, writing that Euſtachius ſucceeded William Lonchampe in the office of chancellor, and in the biſhoprike of Elie. The words of Matthew Parker in the life of Hubert be theſe: Hubertus depoſito magiſtratu ciuili, eccleſiæ curæ totus vacabat, conſecrauitque poſtea Robertum de Salopesbi epiſcopum Banchorenſem, & Euſtachium qui in cancellarij munere ei ſucceſſit Elienſem epiſcopum, Weſtmonaſterij debita accepta ab vtróque ſubiectionis profeſſione.

Hubert walter or walter Hubert.

Hubert Walter or Walter Hubert, for ſuch a tranſmutation of the name is vſed by authors, being firſt biſhop of Saliſburie and then archbiſhop of Canturburie, was made chancellor ſhortlie after the coronation of king John, which was in the yeare that the virgine brought forth Chriſt 1199, at what time a certeine noble man ſaid vnto him in ſcorne, I haue often ſeene of a chancellor made a biſhop, but I neuer before ſaw an archbiſhop made a chancellor.

Simon.

Simon or rather Hugh, of which is more herafter, archdeacon of Welles in the firſt yeare of king John (after as I ſuppoſe that Hubert had left the office being ſo diſgraced & abaſed as he thought) was witneſſe to a deed, in which king John granted to the citizens of Yorke a guildhall, hanſe, and other liberties, as I haue ſeene noted in the copie of the ſame charter, for which cauſe I haue heere ſet it downe as an other man, although in truth I am fullie reſolued that this Simon and the Hugh following were all one perſon, leauing it yet for euerie mans iudgement.

Hugh de welles.

Hugh de Welles archdeacon of Welles, witneſſe to the deed in which king John, in the firt yeare of his reigne confirmed to the monaſterie of Weſtminſter, Giſtſlep or Iſlep in Oxfordſhire, in which houſe Edward the confeſſor was borne, he was made biſhop of Lincolne about the tenth yeare of king Johns reigne, in the yeare of our Lord 1209, and died in the yeare of our Lord 1235.

walter Braie.
Gray.

Walter Braie choſen biſhop of Cheſter, in the yeare of our Lord 1210, was biſhop of Worceſter and after biſhop of Yorke, a man of extreame age, was made chancellor in the ſeuenth yeare of king John as one anonymall chronicle ſaith, to hold that office during his life. Others ſaie that he was made chancellor in the yeare of Chriſt 1209, being the tenth yeare of king John after Hugh de Welles. But I ſuppoſe he ſurrendred that patent to hold it during his life, when he came to be biſhop of Yorke. Of this man is more ſpoken in my treatiſe of the protectors of England, fol. 1069.

Richard de Mariſcho.

Richard de Mariſcho, whom Matthew Paris termeth Tholenarius, as it were tolegatherer or treaſuror if you liſt, being archdeacon of Northumberland, was chancellor in the fourth yeare of king John, as appeareth by a deed that I haue ſeene: and further he was made chancellor in the 15 yeare of king John, in which office he cõtinued to the 17 yeare of the ſaid king, and as ſome doo write during king Johns life, and died about the calends of Maie in the yeare of our redemption 1226, in the tenth yeare of the long reigne of king Henrie the third, as ſome haue. But the booke of Durham ſaith, that he was made biſhop of that ſée by Gwado the legat, and conſecrated by Walter Braie biſhop of Yorke, in the yeare of our redemption 1214, being about the ſixteenth yeare of king John, and died ſuddenlie at Peterborow the firſt daie of Maie, in the yeare of Chriſt 1226, being the tenth yeare of king Henrie the third, after that he had béene biſhop of Durham nine yeares, of whom a moonke of Durham made this epitaph in formall deuiſe as you ſee following:

Culmina qui cupi   laudes pompáſque ſiti
Eſt ſedata ſi   ſime penſare veli
Qui populos regi   memoret ſuper omnia ſi
tis   tis
Quod mors immi   non parcit honore poti
Vobis præpoſi   ſimilis fueram bene ſci
Quod ſum vos eri   ad me currendo veni

And here ſith I am entered into the ſurname of Mariſchus, I will ſet downe what I found ingrauen on the wall of the doore of the chapter houſe of the monaſterie of Bath (almoſt defaced with the wether) written in Gréeke ſaxon characters. ✠ Hic iacet Alexander de Alueto, & Ernluerga vxor eius, & Fulco de Alueto filius eorum: & Lucia de Mariſcis filia eorũ, & Iordanus de Mariſcis filius eiuſdem Luciæ, & Wilhelmus de Mariſcis filius eiuſdem Iordani. Which name of the Mariſhes, Marſhes, or Moores, if it like them to expound it, as I doubt not but manie will quiddle thervpon, was as great a name in Ireland as it was in England.

Rafe Neuill biſhop of Chicheſter.

Rafe Neuill was confirmed (as it ſéemeth) chancellor by the whole conſent of the nobilitie, in the yeare that the word became fleſh 1226, being about the tenth yeare of king Henrie the third, after which he was made biſhop of Chicheſter in the eleuenth yeare of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1227, or as hath Matthew Weſtm. he was made biſhop of Chicheſter in the yeare of Chriſt 1223, being before chancellor. After which the king in the two and twentith yeare of his reigne, offended with Neuill, tooke from him the great ſeale, & deliuered it to Gefreie of the temple, as hath Matthew Paris, and to John de Lexinton: although that the ſaid Neuill remained ſtill chancellor, and receiued the profits thereof, to whom the king would after haue regiuen the ſeale in the yeare of Chriſt 1239, being the thrée and twentith yeare of the ſaid king Henrie, but Neuill would not receiue it. This man died in the yeare of Chriſt 1243, being the ſeuen and twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, at his palace at London not far from the new temple.

Geffreie the Templer.

Geffreie the Templer & John de Lexinton were made keepers of the great ſeale. But ſhortlie after this Geffreie had the ſeale taken from him, bicauſe he grew in miſlike of the nobilitie in continuall prouoking them to anger.

Hugh Pateſhall chanon of Paules.

Hugh Pateſhall chanon of Paules is by Matthew Paris fol. 656, called chancellor in the thrée and twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, which I much doubt to be true. Of this man ſhall be more ſaid in the treaſurors of England.

Simon the Norman.

Simon the Norman keeper of the great ſeale in the thrée & twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1229: he had the ſeale ſhortlie after taken from him, and was baniſhed the court, bicauſe he would not ſeale the patent, wherby Thomas earle of Flanders might take foure pence for cuſtome of euerie ſacke of wooll that came out of England into Flanders. This Simon died in the yeare of Chriſt 1249, being the thrée and thirtith of king Henrie the third.

Richard Graſſe abbat of Eueſham.

Richard Graſſe or Groſſus abbat of Eueſham (the ſaid Simon expelled) had the keeping of the great ſeale in the thrée and twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, he kept the ſeale thrée yeares, and being choſen biſhop of Cheſter, he reſigned the ſame in the yeare of Chriſt 1242, being the ſix & twentith yeare of king Henrie the third: he died (being wiſe & learned in the canon and ciuill law) in the ſame yeare in Gaſcoine, in a citie called in Latine Riola or Regula, where he was buried.

John de Lexinton.

John de Lexinton was againe made keeper of the ſeale in the ſix and twentith péere of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1242, to execute that office, Raſe Neuill being in life and ſtill chancellor, but in the kings diſgrace, ſhortlie after which this Neuill died. This John Lexinton died 1257, being the 41 yeare of Henrie the third.

Ranulfe Briton.

Ranulfe Briton (as I read) is ſaid to be chancellor and treaſuror of the chamber, about the ſeuen and twentith yeare of Henrie the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1242. I ſuppoſe that he onelie had the keeping of the great ſeale as the reſt had before him, during the life of Raſe Neuill, and ſo I leaue him to the iudgement of others, ſith Matthew Paris continuallie nameth him treaſuror and once chancellor, who ſoddenlie died after dinner beholding plaiers at diſe, in the yeare of Chriſt 1246, being the thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third: of whom thus writeth the ſaid Matthew Paris in his greater hiſtorie fol. 954. Ranulphus Brito quondam domino familiariſsimus regi & reginæ (multis poſthabitis nobilibus) & eiuſdem cancellarius ſpecialis, quum poſt menſalem refectionem aleatores certatim inſpexiſſet colludentes, lætalis apoplexiæ inexpectato vulnere corruit ſugillatus.

Syluester de Euerſden.

Syluester de Euerſden receiued the great ſeale the nine and twentith yeare of Henrie the third, being the yeare that the ſon of God became fleſh one thouſand two hundred fortie and ſix: he was vicechancellor & conſecrated biſhop of Carleill (being a man moſt cunning in the cuſtome of the chancerie) in the yeare of Chriſt 1247, being the one and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third.

John Manſell.

John Manſell treaſuror of Yorke, parſon of Maidſtone in Kent, and parſon of Wigan, chancellor of Paules, maſter or ruler of Beuerleie, chiefe iuſtice of England, one of the priuie councell to Henrie the third, his chapleine, ambaſſador into Spaine, and a worthie ſouldier, croſſed to go to Jeruſalem, who at one feaſt had two kings, two quéenes, and I know not how manie noble men, and whoſe ſpirituall liuings were about foure thouſand marks of [illegible]ie reuenues (as I haue gathered) he was at the [illegible] instance of the king made keeper of the great ſeale as vicechancellor (for Matthew Paris ſaith, Cuſtodiam ſigilli regij accepit cancellarij vices acturus & officium) about the one & thirtith of king Henrie the third, in the yeare that God tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant 1247, he built a houſe of regular canons at Romneie two miles from the ſea. To this man king Henrie the third, in the thirtith yeare of his reigne, did grant that his towne of Wigan ſhould be a burrow.

John de Lexinton.

John de Lexinton, being after chiefe iuſtice of the foreſt from the riuer of Trent ſouthward, was againe keeper of the great ſeale, vntill ſome part of the two and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, in the yeare of Chriſt 1248.

John Manſell.

John Manſell againe keeper of the great ſeale, who at Woodſtocke in the two and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the third, did receiue the great ſeale of the ſaid John Lexinton, which he kept (as I ſuppoſe and that with ſome good proofe) vntill the thrée & thirtith yeare of the ſaid king, being the yeare of our redemption 1248. Of which John Manſell thus writeth an old anonymall chronicle concerning the barons warres: Sed & Iohannes Manſell multarum in Anglia eccleſiarum rector ſeu potiùs incubator, redditüum quoque quorum non erat numerus poſſeſſor magni[illegible], ita quòd ditior eo clericus non videbatur in orbe epiſcopali, puta dignitate minimè inſignitus, metu baronum aufugit & latenter vltra mari de turri London, in qua rex Angliæ & regina ſua tunc temporis tenuerunt ſe. Quem quum Henricus filius regis Alemaniæ fugientem inſequeretur, & ipſe capitur quum applicuiſſet Bononiæ à magiſtro Gerando de Fenes procuratore vt putabatur reginæ, &c.

Radulphus de Diceto.

Radulphus de Diceto was chancellor (as I read & ſuppoſe) much about this time: but for certeintie I refer the ſame to the large booke of their liues, where he ſhall not faile to haue his right time and place.

William of Kilkennie.

William of Kilkennie, being a modeſt, wiſe, and faithfull man, learned in the canon and ciuill lawes, was made keeper of the great ſeale, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and fiftie, being the foure & thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third. He was elected to the biſhoprike of Elie, as ſaith the hiſtorie of Elie, the eighteenth kalends of September, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie & fiue, being about the nine and thirtith yere of Henrie the third. But others ſaie that he being then vicechancellor, was elected biſhop of Elie in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred fiftie and foure, being the eight and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, after that he had faithfullie and to his great commendation vſed and borne the great ſeale, he was cõſecrated to that biſhoprike in the yere of Chriſt 1255, and died in the yere 1256 being about the one and fortith yeare of king Henrie the third, whoſe heart was buried at Elie.

Henrie de Wingham.

Henrie de Wingham was made chancellor in the nine and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, and continued in the one and fortith and two and fortith yeare of Henrie the third, in which yeare (as ſome haue) and in the 43 of Henrie the third (as others haue.) He was choſen biſhop of Wincheſter, vpon condition that he ſhould giue place to Athelmer halfe brother to king Henrie the third, & ſon to Hugh Brune earle of March, and of Eleanor king Henrie the thirds mother, being baniſhed by the barons, if that he ſhould againe returne into England, and then leaue the biſhoprike of Wincheſter vnto him, which he did vpon the comming againe of the ſaid Athelmer into England, and for that cauſe was after choſen biſhop of London, being choſen thereto in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie and nine, being the thrée and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the third, and ſtill chancellor, and is buried in Paules on the ſouth ſide of the quier (next to Euſtachius biſhop of London) in a monument of marble, with this inſcription on the wall to tell who it was: Hîc iacet Henricus de Wingham quondam epiſcopus huius eccleſiæ, qui multa bona contulit miniſtris eccleſiæ ſancti Pauli.

Walter Merton.

Walter Merton chancellor in the foure and fortith yere of king Henrie the third, being the yeare 1260.

Nicholas of Elie.

Nicholas of Elie made chancellor by the barons, in the ſaid yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred and ſixtie, and Walter Merton diſplaced. But king Henrie the third, diſdaining to haue officers appointed him by his ſubiects, did in the moneth of October following, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and ſixtie, or rather one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and one, depriue the ſaid Nicholas, and replaced the ſaid Walter Merton.

Walter Merton the ſecond time.

Walter Merton biſhop of Rocheſter the ſecond time made chancellor as before appeareth.

John de Cheſill.

John de Cheſill archdeacon of London and treaſuror of England, was made keeper of the great ſeale, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and foure, being the eight and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third. This man was conſecrated biſhop of London in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie & foure, the third kalends of Maie, as hath Matthew Weſtminſter: he died in the yeare that the word of the father became fleſh one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie and nine, the fourth ides of Februarie, in the ſeuenth yeare of the ſcourge of the Scots and Welſhmen.

Vita Thomæ Cantelupi.

Thomas de Cantelupe, borne of the noble houſe of the lords Cantelupes (the ſon of William Cantelupe and Milleſent, which as ſaith Leland drew hir originall from the counteſſes of Yorke) being archdeacon of Stafford, was doctor and after biſhop of Hereford in the yeare one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie and ſix, and before that made chancellor, after the feaſt of ſaint Peters chaire, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred ſixtie & fiue, being the nine and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third. He died beyond the ſeas comming from the court of Rome, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie and eight, being the ſixt yeare of the reigne of king Edward the firſt, or more trulie (as others haue) in the yeare one thouſand two hundred eightie & thrée, being the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the firſt, whoſe bones were brought to Hereford.

walter Gifford biſhop of Bath.

Walter Gifford biſhop of Bath and Welles, whome manie doo call William, did inioy the ſtate of the chancellor, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred ſixtie & ſix, being the fiftith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third: he was tranſlated from Bath to Yorke, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie and nine, being the nine and fortith yeare of the ſame Henrie the third, and died the ſeuenth kalends of Maie in the twelfe yeare of his biſhoprike, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie & ſeuen, being the ſixt yeare of king Edward the firſt, or (as hath Nicholas Triuet) in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie and nine, being the ſeuenth yeare of king Edward the firſt.

Geffreie Gifford.

Geffreie Gifford was chancellor alſo in the one and fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and ſeuen. This man was biſhop of Worceſter about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ninetie and nine, where he ſat foure and thirtie yeares, foure moneths, and foure daies, and died in the yeare one thouſand thrée hundred and foure, being about the two and thirtith yeare of king Edward the firſt.

Iohn de Cheſill.

Iohn de Cheſill was the ſecond time honoured with the place of the chancellor, in the yeare that the word became fleſh one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and eight, being the thrée and fiftith yeare in which king Henrie the third of that name did hold the ſcepter of England.

Richard de Middleton.

Richard de Middleton, ſo ſurnamed of the place where he was borne, was aduanced to the office of the chancellorſhip, in the ſaid thrée and fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, in the moneth of Iulie, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and eight, and was alſo (as appeareth by a charter which I haue ſéene) witneſſe to the ſame déed, in the foure and fiftith yeare of the ſaid king Henrie, who (as farre as I can gather) died in Auguſt, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie and one, being the ſix and fiftith yeare of the long gouernment of king Henrie the third. There was a writer of England that wrote many volums of this name liuing at this time, whom I doubt not (for anie thing that I can yet learne) to be the ſame man which was chancellor.

Iohn de Kirbie.

Iohn de Kirbie, after the death of Richard Middleton, was made kéeper of the great ſeale in the ſaid ſix and fiftith yere of king Henrie the third. Whether this were the ſame Iohn Kirkbie, which after was biſhop of Elie, and treaſuror of England, I haue not as yet to determine, although I rather hold the affirmatiue than the contrarie.

walter Merton.

Walter Merton the third time made chancellor of England, in the yéere of our Lord one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie and thrée, being the firſt yeare of the reigne of that famous prince king Edward the firſt of that name: he was biſhop of Rocheſter, and built Merton college in Oxford, and died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ſeauentie and eight, being the ſixt yeare of the reigne of king Edward the firſt.

Robert B nell.

Robert Burnell the eleuenth biſhop of Bath and Wels (after the vniting of thoſe two ſées in one by Iohn de Toures in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand ninetie and two) was made biſhop of Bath in the yeare of our Lord (as ſaith Euerſden) one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie & foure, and choſen archbiſhop of Canturburie in the yeare one thouſand two hundred ſeuentie and eight, but reiected by the pope: he was chancellor in the ſecond yeare of the ſaid Edward the firſt, in which place it ſéemeth that he long continued: of whom thus writeth an anonymall chronicle; Dominus Edmundus comes Cornubiæ fundauit nouum ſtudium ordinis Ciſtercienſis apud Oxonias, & monachos de Thame primò ibidem introduxit, & dedit eis prima donatione manerium de Erdington, & fecit dedicare locum abbatiæ tertij idus Decembris: per dominum Robertum Burnell epiſcopum Bathon & Welles, cancellarium regis, & poſuit fundamentum nouæ eccleſiæ eodem die Northoſneiæ. This biſhop was requiſred with the ſon of Edward the firſt, and Gilbert de Clare earle of Gloceſter, in the time of Edward the firſt, to be deliuered for pledges for Lheweline prince of Wales for his ſafe returne, if he came to the parlement, whereunto he was ſummoned by the ſaid king Edward. In the time of this chancellor the court of chancerie was kept at Briſtow. This man died in the yéere of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ninetie and thrée, being the one and twentith yere of the reigne of king Edward the third.

Iohn de Langhton.

Iohn de Langhton made chancellor of England in the yéere of our Lord one thouſand two hundred ninetie and thrée, being the one and twentith yeare of the ſcourger of the Scots, king Edward the firſt, in which office he remained vntill the thirtith of the ſaid king, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and two. He was made biſhop of Chicheſter about the ſix and twentith [illegible] ther the ſeauen and twentith yeare of king Ed[illegible]d the firſt, being the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred ninetie and eight, or rather one thouſand two hundred ninetie and nine: and in the ſaid yeare one thouſand two hundred ninetie and nine he was before choſen biſhop of Elie, but reiected by the pope, who made him archdeacon of Canturburie: from which Langhton this Edward did take the great ſeale in the thirtith yeare before ſaid, and deliuered it to Iohn Drokenſford.

Matthew Parker.

Iohn Drokenſford.

Iohn Drokenſford kéeper of the wardrobe was made kéeper of the great ſeale in the thirtith yere, as before, in which office he continued from about the fiftéenth daie of Auguſt vntill Michaelmas.

william de Greinfield.

William de Greinfield, deane of Chicheſter, and canon of Yorke, was aduanced to the place of the chancellor, in the yeare that God became man one thouſand thrée hundred and two, being about the thirtith yeare of the ſaid king Edward the firſt, which office was giuen vnto him at ſaint Radigunds (as ſaith Anonymus M.S. He was after choſen biſhop of Yorke, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and thrée: who in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred and eight buried the bodie of the ſaid king Edward the firſt at Weſtminſter, though that king died in the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand thrée hundred and ſeauen. This biſhop died about the yere of our ſaluation one thouſand thrée hundred and fiftéene (being about the ſixt yeare of king Edward the ſecond) at Cawood, after that he had béene biſhop nine yeares, eleuen moneths, and two daies, and was buried in ſaint Nicholas porch of Yorke, receiuing his conſecration at Rome in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and fiue (after that he had béene there two yéeres) of pope Clement. This Greinfield was a man verie eloquent and pithie in counſell.

William de Hamelton.

William de Hamelton, deane of Yorke, was created chancellor of England, in the yeare that the virgine brought forth the ſonne of God one thouſand thrée hundred and fiue, being the thrée and thirtith yeare of that noble prince king Edward the firſt. This William ſurrendred his borrowed life in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred and ſeuen, being about the fiue and thirtith yeare of the ſaid king, at the abbeie of Fontneſſe in Yorkſhire, being a man that well deſerued of the commonwealth.

Ralfe Baldocke.

Ralfe de Baldocke choſen biſhop of London, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and thrée, was confirmed at Citneſhall by Robert of Winchelſeie biſhop of Canturburie, and conſecrated at Lions by Peter of Spaine biſhop of Alba, the third calends of Februarie, in the yere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and fiue. He was made lord chancellor of England, after the death of the ſaid William Hamelton in the ſaid fiue & thirtith yere of king Edward the firſt, and receiued the great ſeale in the Rogation wéeke following, being ſome foure or fiue wéekes after that he was aduanced to that office at the excheker. Shortlie after which died king Edward the firſt; for which cauſe the ſaid Baldocke ſent the great ſeale to king Edward the ſecond then at Carleill, by reaſon of his fathers death. John Langhton biſhop of Chicheſter againe made lord chancellor of England, in the yeare that the word of the father tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant one thouſand thrée hundred and ſeauen, being the firſt yeare of king Edward of Carnaruan, in which office it ſéemeth that he continued, vntill the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred and ten, being the third yeare of the reigne of the after depoſed king Edward the ſecond.

William Melton.

William Melton, hauing two others ioined with him, had the great ſeale deliuered vnto them for a certeine time, to execute all ſuch things as were to be done therewith during the kings pleaſure. This man was a canon of Yorke, prouoſt of Beuerleie, treaſuror of England, and archbiſhop of Yorke, as ſaith Anonymus M.S. He was conſecrated biſhop of Yorke at Rome, where he tarried two yeares for the ſame: he was a man neuer wearied with trauell. He firſt of all the biſhops of Yorke (after a long controuerſie betwéene the deane and canons of Yorke) viſited the chapter by due order: he was wiſe, rich, ſeuere in correction, gentle, familiar, and humble: he finiſhed the weſt part of the church of ſaint Peters in Yorke with thrée hundred pounds, he was archbiſhop of Yorke two and twentie yeares, fiue or ſix moneths, and two daies: he died at Cawood on ſaint Georges éuen, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and thirtie, and was buried in the minſter of Yorke néere to the font.

Walter Reinolds.

Walter Reinolds biſhop of Worceſter, treaſuror of England and archbiſhop of Canturburie, was made keeper of the great ſeale, and chancellor of England on the ſixt of Julie one thouſand thrée hundred and ten, in the ſaid yeare of our Lord God one thouſand thrée hundred and ten, being the ſaid third yeare of that king Edward, whome his ſonne Edward the third depoſed from his kingdome. Of this man & all other chancellors, which were archbiſhops of Canturburie, ſhall be ſomewhat more ſaid at another time, in the order and placing of the biſhops of that ſée; which caution I haue here ſet downe, bicauſe I would once for all make repetition thereof in one place, and not ſeuerallie in manie places, vnder the ſeuerall names of euerie chancellor that was inueſted with that metropolitan honor of Canturburie.

John de Sandall.

John de Sandall clerke, biſhop of Wincheſter, & treaſuror, was at Yorke made chancellor of England, in the yeare that the virgin Marie was deliuered of the firſt begotten ſon one thouſand thrée hundred and fouretéene, being the eight yeare of king Edward the ſecond, in which place he continued two yeares and more; ſome part thereof being after that he was biſhop of Wincheſter (as I gather) and then deliuered backe the ſeale at Weſtminſter, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and ſeuentéene, being the eleauenth yeare of the ſaid king Edward the ſecond. Of this man is more ſpoken in the treaſurors of England.

John Hotham.

John Hotham biſhop of Elie was created lord chancellor of England in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and ſeauentéene, being the eleauenth yeare of king Edward the ſecond, in which office he continued vntill the yeare of our Lord God 1319, being the thirtéenth yeare of the laſt before named king Edward. During whoſe gouernment of the ſée of Elie, in the yeare one thouſand thrée hundred fortie and one, the ſtéeple of the chaire fell downe, which made ſuch terrible noiſe and ſhaking of the ground that it was ſuppoſed to haue béene an earthquake. He died of the palſeie in the yere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie and ſix, being the tenth yeare of that king Edward the third that firſt wrote himſelfe king of both realmes, England and France.

John Salmon biſhop of Norwich.

John Salmon biſhop of Norwich was aduanced to be chancellor, in the yeare that God tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant, one thouſand thrée hundred and ninetéene, being the thirtéenth yeare of that king Edward the ſecond, againſt whome the nobles rebelled for the miſdemeanor of Piers de Gaueſtone (the Gaſcoine) earle of Cornewall. In this yeare one thouſand thrée hundred and ninetéene (as ſaith one anonymall chronicler M.S.) was William Airemine kéeper of the ſeale vicechancellor taken priſoner by the Scots. The words of the which author for the more certeintie thereof we haue here ſet downe, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and ninetéene. _Epiſcopus Eborum, epiſcopus Eliæ theſaurarius, abbas beatæ Mariæ Eborum, abbas de Selbie, decanus Eborum dominus Willielmus Arymenee vicecancellarius Angliæ, ac dominus Iohannes* Dabeham cum 8000 fermè hominum, tam equitum quàm peditum & ciuibus properanter * ciuitatem egredientes, quoddam flumen * Swale nuncupatum ſparſis cuneis tranſeuntes, & indiſpoſitis ſeu potiùs confuſis ordinibus cum aduerſarijs congreſſi ſunt. Robert Baldocke.

Robert Baldocke archdeacon of Middleſex, a man euillie beloued, and whom the old Engliſh chronicle calleth a falſe péeld prieſt, was made chancellor of England in the ſeauentéenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the ſecond, at the caſtell of Pike-ring in Yorkeſhire, he was after made biſhop of Norwich, and did his fealtie for reſtitution of his temporalties in the nineteenth yeare of the ſaid king Edward the ſecond at Woodſtocke in Oxfordſhire, he was apprehended in the 20 yeare of Edward the ſecond, being the yeere of our Lord 1326, or (as others haue) one thouſand thrée hundred & fiue and twentie, & firſt committed to the cuſtodie of Adam Carleton or de Orleton biſhop of Hereford, & after was put in the priſon of the Newgate in London, in which twentith yeare of the ſaid Edward the ſecond the great ſeale was againe deliuered to William Airemée, who I ſuppoſe was then alſo made biſhop of Norwich, and this Baldocke depoſed from that ſée, of which Baldocke thus writeth a Polychronicon of Durham: Robertus de Baldocke cancellarius An. 1325 captus cum Hugonibus de deſpenſers, quia clericus fuit & ſacerdos in noua porta Londiniarum, poni fecit Edwardus princeps & Iſabella mater eius, vbi pro nimia miſeria mortuus fuit infra breue.

William Airemee kéeper of the ſeale.

John Hotham biſhop of Elie.

John Hotham biſhop of Elie the ſecond time was at Weſtminſter made chancellor of England, in the yeare that the word became fleſh 1326, being the firſt yeare of the reigne of that king which firſt intituled himſelfe king of England and France: but he continued not long in the ſame office, for he was remoued in the ſecond yeare of the ſaid king, being the yeare of our redemption, one thouſand thrée hundred twentie and eight. He was elected biſhop in the yéere of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and ſixtéene, in which place he ruled twentie yeares, and died in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and ſix and thirtie of the palſeie at Summerſham, being buried in the church of Elie vnder a goodlie monument of ſtone, with the image of a biſhop carued out of alabaſter vpon his toome.

Henrie Cliffe maſter of the rolles.

Henrie Cliffe maſter of the rolles had the charge and kéeping of the great ſeale of England, in the ſaid yeare of Chriſt 1328, being the ſecond yeare of king Edward the third, and was the kings chancellor alſo.

Henrie Burghwaſh biſhop of Lincolne.

Henrie de Burgh, Burghwaſh, or Burgeſſe, nephue vnto ſir Bartholomew Badiſmere baron of Léeds in Kent, hauing béene treaſuror of England, inioied the honor of the chancellor in the ſecond yéere of king Edward the third, being the yeare that the ſonne of God tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant 1328, and was made chancellor at Northampton, which office he did not long inioie. Here bicauſe I haue a little mentioned ſir Bartholomew Badeſmere, I will ſaie ſomwhat more of him, which is, that being orator for the king in diuers weightie affairs, he ſpent in thoſe buſineſſes 15000 pounds of the kings monie, and yet produced little or nothing to effect in the kings cauſes, except the procuring of this Henrie Burghwaſh to the biſhoprike of Lincolne, who was buried in the eaſt end towards the north of the church of Lincolne, at whoſe féet was alſo buried Robert his brother a knight of great fame in the warres, in which church is alſo buried Bartholomew ſonne to the ſaid Robert. They founded a grammar ſchoole, and fiue prieſts, & fiue poore ſcholars in Lincolne.

John Stratford.

John Stratford biſhop of Wincheſter, and after of Canturburie, and ſometime treaſuror of England, was made chancellor of the realme, in the yéere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and thirtie, being the fourth yeare of the ſaid king Edward the third, who being ſent in the ſixt yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred two and thirtie, ambaſſador beyond the ſeas about the affaires of the king & kingdome, did not (like cardinall Woolſeie the chancellor in the daies of K. Henrie the eight) preſumptuouſlie carrie the great ſeale with him beyond the ſeas, but left the ſame in his abſence with others, who both could and would anſwer the well or euill vſing thereof whileſt he was in France. This man continued in the office vntill the eight yeare of Edward the third.

Richard de Burie or Richard de Angeruile.

Richard de Burie, otherwiſe called Richard de Angeruile (being borne in a litle village beſide ſaint Edmundſburie, commonlie called the Berrie abbeie, was ſo ſurnamed Burie of that place) had to his father ſir Richard Angeruile knight. This man being firſt kept at ſchoole by his vncle ſir John Wilobie prieſt, was afterward treaſuror of England, chancellor and biſhop of Durham: to which place of chancellorſhip he was aduanced in the yeare that the ſecond perſon in trinitie was brought into the world 1334, being the eight yeare of that king of England which firſt quartered the armes of England and France. Which office he receiued by the kings gift at Weſtminſter, in which yeare he was inthronized (being firſt conſecrated biſhop in the yere of Chriſt 1333) in the biſhoprike of Durham by William Cowton prior of Durham: he kept the ſée 11 years two moneths and 12 daies, & died in the yeare 1345, & was buried in the ſouth angle of the church of Durham.

John Stratford archbiſhop of Canturburie.

John Stratford the ſecond time lord chancellor, being now archbiſhop of Canturburie, was inſtalled therein at Yorke in the yeare of Chriſt 1335, being the ninth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third.

Robert de Stratford.

Robert de Stratford or Strafford (as ſome haue written, but as I thinke corruptlie) being archdeacon of Canturburie (which office was firſt ordeined by Anſelme archbiſhop of the ſaid citie of Canturburie) was made chancellor of England on the foure and twentith daie of March (being the éeue of the annuntiation of the virgin Marie) at Weſtminſter, in the yeare that the word of the father tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant 1336, being the eleuenth yeare of the gouernement of king Edward the third. He was after made biſhop of Chicheſter, deſiring to be remoued from that office of chancellorſhip, which was granted vnto him: wherevpon he ſurrendered vp the ſeale to the ſaid king Edward the third in the twelfe yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption 1338.

Richard de Bintworth biſhop of London.

Richard de Bintworth choſen biſhop of London, and confirmed by John Stratford archbiſhop of Canturburie at Oteford in the tenth kalends of June 1338, was at Waltham aduanced to the honour of lord chancellor in the moneth of Julie, in the ſaid yeare of Chriſt 1338, being the twelfe yeare of that king which firſt ordeined the knights of the order of the garter.

John Stratford archbiſhop of Canturburie.

John Stratford the third time lord chancellor of England, in which office he did not now long continue.

Robert biſhop of Chicheſter.

Robert biſhop of Chicheſter, being the foreſaid Robert Stratford, was againe made lord chancellor of England, in the yere of our redemption 1340, being the fourtéenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, who was put out of that office, and ſhould with the treaſuror of England haue bene ſent into France for a pledge for the paiment of certeine ſummes of monie.

Robert de Bourchier.

Robert de Bourchier, borne of the honourable houſe of the lord Bourchiers, was in the towre of London made lord chancellor of England in December, in the ſaid fouretéenth yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1340, though ſome ſaie he was made chancellor in the fiftéenth yeare of the ſaid king.

Robert Perning iuſtice at the law.

Robert Perning, Pernicke, or Pernwicke, alſo treaſuror of England, was made chancellor of England, land in the yeare that the virgine brought forth the the Meſſiah 1341, being the fifteenth yeare of king Edward the third. He died in the yeare 1343, being the ſeuenteenth yeare of the foreſaid king Edward the third. This man was a ſergeant in the third yeare of Edward the third, when he began to plead as a ſergeant, in which he continued vntill about the eleuenth yeare of Edward the third, and was after that iuſtice, treaſuror, and chancellor, and did in the common place, being chancellor, ſit and argue amongſt the iuſtices, as appeareth in the law bookes of thoſe yeares of Edward the third, of whom is laſt mention made in the ſeuenteenth yeare of Edward the third, where he is named chancellor.

Robert de Saddington.

Robert de Saddington knight, was inueſted with the dignitie of lord chancellor after the death of Perning in the yeare of Chriſt 1343, and the ſeuenteenth yeare of the often mentioned king Edward the third. There was alſo one ſir Richard Saddington knight treaſuror of England, of whome I haue ſpoken in my diſcourſe of the lord treaſurors.

John Offord or Vfford.

John Offord or Vfford, deane of Lincolne, was made chancellor of England, in the yeare of our redemption 1345, being the nineteenth yeare of king Edward the third. He was elected to be biſhop of Canturburie, and ſo was inſtalled, but neuer receiued the pall. He died in the moneth of Maie, in the yeare of Chriſt 1349, being the three and twentith yeare of the reigne of that victorious king Edward, which neuer receiued greater honour than that he was father vnto Edward ſurnamed the Blacke prince the flower of chiualrie, and worthie conquerour of the French dominions.

John Thorſbie.

John Thorſbie biſhop of Worceſter, archbiſhop of Yorke and cardinall, was inſtalled in the ſeat of the lord chancellor, in the yeare that God became man, one thouſand three hundred fortie and nine, being the three and twentith yeare of that king Edward the third, ſo often before recited, who at his great ſute was diſcharged of the office of chancellor, by deliuerie of the great ſeale in Nouember, in the thirtith yeare of the ſaid king, being the yeare of Chri[illegible]e thouſand three hundred fiftie and ſix, after tha[illegible]d kept that place by the ſpace almoſt of ſeau[illegible]. He in the tenth yeare of his biſhoprike in the [illegible] calends of Auguſt, began the frame of the qu[illegible]f S. Peters church in Yorke, & laid the firſt ſt[illegible]ereof, to which he gaue a hundred pounds. He [illegible]t Thorpe, and was buried at Yorke in the yere of Chriſt 1363, or as other haue 1373, after that he had beene archbiſhop one and twentie yeares, and one and twentie daies.

William de Edington.

William de Edington, biſhop of Wincheſter, lord treaſuror of England, was made chancellor of this realme in Nouember in the ſaid yeare of Chriſt 1356, and the thirtith yeare of the reigne of that king Edward, which at Sauoie in England kept king John of France his priſoner. See more of him in the treaſurors of England.

Simon Langham.

Simon Langham, abbat of Weſtminſter, biſhop of Elie, archbiſhop of Canturburie, and lord treaſuror of England, was made lord chancellor in Februarie, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred ſixtie and three, being the ſeauen and thirtith yeare of the gouernment of king Edward the third, and was chancellor in the fortith yere of the reigne of that king: being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred ſixtie and three. Of this Simon were theſe verſes made, when he was remoued from Elie to the biſhoprike of Canturburie:

Exultent cœli quia Simon tranſit ab Eli,
Cuius in aduentum flent in Kent millia centum.

Of whome alſo, bicauſe he richlie indowed the abbeie of Weſtminſter with great gifts, of ſingular coſt & value, a certeine monke compiled theſe verſes:

Res es de Langham tua Simon ſunt data quondam, Octingentena librarum millia dena.

Of this man is more ſpoken in the former diſcourſe or treatiſe of the lord treaſurors of England.

William de Wikeham.

William de Wikeham, ſo called of the place of his birth, was by ſurname from his parents called Perot, and Long, whome Leland maketh treaſuror of England, which by anie poſſible meanes cannot be ſo for anie thing that I can yet learne. This man being biſhop of Wincheſter, and aduanced to that place in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred ſixtie and ſeuen, in the one and fortith yeare of the reigne of Edward the third, in which place he ſat ſeauen and thirtie yeares, was ſometime keeper of the priuie ſeale, and made alſo chancellor of England, in the yeare that the virgine brought forth the firſt begotten ſonne one thouſand three hundred ſixtie and ſeauen, being the one and fortith yeare of the gouernement of the foreſaid Edward the third, in which office he remained about foure yeares; and (in March in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred ſeauentie and one, being the fiue and fortith of king Edward the third) did deliuer vp the great ſeale to the king at Weſtminſter. He was buried in the bodie of Wincheſter church, which he new built with the other places about it: of whome were theſe verſes compoſed for the building of his colleges, the one at Oxenford and the other at Wincheſter:

Hunc docet eſſe pium fundatio collegiorum
Oxoniæ primum ſtat Wintoniæque ſecundum.

Robert Thorpe.

Robert Thorpe knight, being before iuſtice of the law in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred and ſeauentie, was after at Weſtminſter aduanced to the chancellorſhip, in March, the fiue & fortith yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption (as is before ſaid) one thouſand three hundred ſeauentie and one, who going home to his owne houſe, left the great ſeale with foure of the gardians or maiſters of the chancerie, wherof the one was called Walter Powre, to keepe and vſe as need required.

Sir John Kniuet.

Sir John Kniuet or Kniuell (as ſome books haue by the tranſcriber corrupted) was made chancellor of England in Julie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred ſeauentie and two, being the ſix and fortith yeare of king Edward the third, in which office he continued (as I for this time do gather) vntill the fiftith yeare of the ſaid king Edward, in which yeare (as heere at hand appeareth) came in place of the biſhop of S. Dauids.

Adam de Houghton.

Adam de Houghton, biſhop of Meneuia or of Saint Dauids in Wales, was aduanced to the office of lord chancellor in the yeare of our redemption 1376, being the fiftith yeare of king Edward the third, who in the one and fiftith yeare of the ſaid king, was with the earle of Saliſburie, and the biſhop of Hereford, ſent ambaſſador beyond the ſeas. ¶ And here I thinke it not amiſſe to ſet downe the originall of the rolles in chancerie lane in this ſort.

Henrie the third did build a houſe for the Jewes conuerted to the faith of Chriſt, which houſe is at this daie (& hath beene long before this time) appointed for the keeping of the kings rolles and records, being now called and knowne by the name of the rolles in chancerie lane beſides Lincolns inne. In which houſe the maiſter of the rolles (for the time being) hath a goodlie and ſtatelie lodging. In which alſo there is a faire chappell, called the chappell of the rolles, being a place commonlie appointed wherein men accuſtom to paie monie vpon contracts. Wherin alſo is buried John Yong, ſometime maiſter of the rols and doctor of both laws, on the left ſide in his doctors weed; and maiſter Allington vnder a ſtatelie tombe of white marble, iet, and other rich ſtone, on the right ſide of the ſaid chappell, the epitaphs of both which perſons are héereafter recited: beſides which in this chappell are the ancient records of all inrolments, confirmations of the prince, & of other ſutes in the chancerie kept in cheſts and preſſes, built on each ſide about the middle part of the chappell, beneath the chaire or place of ſeruice. At the weſt end whereof (on certeine appointed daies therefore) the maiſter of the rols doth in the afternoones ſit in a place formed and railed in, after the manner of the courts of Weſtminſter, to heare and determine matters depending in the chancerie: which maiſter of the rolles now liuing is ſir Gilbert Gerrard knight, ſometime generall atturneie to the noble princeſſe quéene Eliſabeth. And here before I leaue this chappell, I thinke it not amiſſe to ſet downe the epitaphs of the two perſons before named there buried, with theſe words.

But after the death of this king Edward, the ſaid William Burſtall maiſter of the rolles (belike not ſuppoſing this to be a ſufficient grant) procured this houſe by act of parlement, in the firſt yeare of king Richard the ſecond, to be more ſtronglie eſtabliſhed, to the vſe of the maſter of the rolles for the time. After which Iohn de Waltham, maſter of the rolles, after biſhop of Saliſburie and treaſuror of England, procured K. Richard the ſecond in the 6 yeare of his reigne, by his letters patents to confirme the ſaid houſe to the ſaid Waltham and his ſucceſſors maſters of the rolles. And whereas by the patent of Edward the third, the maſter of the rolles was appointed and inſtalled in that houſe by the chancellor, it is to be noted, that the ſame manner of induction and inſtalment continued as long as the maſter of the rolles were of the clergie, as I haue ſéene ſet downe by others, and as the preſidents of thoſe inſtalments and the writs themſelues extant of record doo well proue.

Sir Richard Scrope.

Sir Richard Scrope knight lord of Bolton, hauing béene lord treaſuror in the time of the deceaſed king Edward the third, was now in October about the latter end of the yeare 1378, or the beginning of the yeare 1379, being the ſecond yeare of the [illegible] depoſed king Richard the ſecond, made lord chan[illegible], and had the great ſeale deliuered vnto him, [illegible] in the third yeare of the ſaid king at a parlement did ſurrender vp his office. Of this man is more ſet downe in the diſcourſe of the treaſurors.

[illegible]n [illegible]dburie.

Simon Sudburie, ſo ſurnamed of the place of his birth, but by deſcent called Tibold the ſonne of Nicholas Tibold, deſcended of a gentlemanlie race dwelling at Sudburie in Suffolke. This Simon was archbiſhop of Canturburie, and made chancellor about the yeare of Chriſt 1380, in the third yeare of Richard the ſecond, and was by the rebels beheaded at the tower of London, in the fourth yeare of the diſquieted gouernment of that vnfortunat, but valiant king Richard the ſecond; after whom in the fift yeare of the ſaid king Richard, was R. B. of London, whereof I haue ſéene and taken a note: which biſhop was (as I coniecture & haue ſome authoritie to proue) Robert Braibroke which followeth, & was made chancellor againe after ſir Richard Scrope.

Sir Richard Scrope lord Scrope of Bolton.

Sir Richard Scrope knight lord of Bolton, made chancellor againe about the latter end of Nouember, by the lords of the parlement (as I take it) in the fift yeare of the reigne of king Richard laſt mentioned, and was the yeare following, being about the yeare of our Lord 1383 againe depoſed from his office, and the king receiuing the great ſeale, kept it a certeine time, and therewith ſealed ſuch grants and writings as it pleaſed him, and in the end deliuered the ſame to Robert Braibroke. Of this man ſée more in the treaſurors before.

Robert Braibroke biſhop of London.

Robert Braibroke biſhop of London made lord chancellor in September following the moneth of Iulie, when ſir Richard Scrope was depoſed, was aduanced to that dignitie on ſaint Matthews éeue, in the firt yeare of the reigne of the ſaid king Richard the ſecond, in which he continued not longer than the March following, as hath Anonymus M. S. he was conſecrated biſhop of London the fift of Ianuarie 1381, he died the ſeuentéenth of Auguſt in the yeare 1404, being the fift yeare of king Henrie the fourth.

Michaell de la Poole earle of Suffolke.

Michaell de la Poole, or at Poole (as hath Thomas Walſingham) was made chancellor in the moneth of March, in the firt yeare of the ſaid king Richard the ſecond, and was made earle of Suffolke in the ninth yeare of the ſaid king, being after depoſed from his office of chancellorſhip at his owne and earneſt requeſt in the tenth yeare of the ſaid king. This man hauing fled the realme, for that he was purſued by the nobilitie, died at Paris in the thirtéenth yeare of the ſaid Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption 1389, of whom that worthie poet ſir Iohn Gower, liuing at that time, in his booke intituled Vox clamantis, compoſed theſe verſes;

Eſt comes elatus, fallax, cupidus, ſceleratus,
Fraudes per mille ſtat cancellarius ille,
Hic proceres odit, & eorum nomina rodit
Morſibus à tergo, fit tandem profugus ergo:
*Sic Deus in cœlis mala * de puteo Michaelis*
Acriter expurgat ne plùs comes ille reſurgat.

* Michael de puteaco, or of the Poole.

Thomas Arundell biſhop of Elie.

Thomas Arundell, of the noble houſe of the earles of Arundell, was firſt biſhop of Elie, and then of Yorke, and laſtlie of Canturburie, he was made lord chancellor of England in the tenth yeare of the reigne of the vnfortunat king Richard the ſecond, being about the yeare of our redemption 1386, in which office he remained about two yeares, as farre as my ſearch will giue leaue to vnderſtand.

William Wickham.

William Wickham was againe made lord chancellor of England, in the twelfe yeare of the ſaid king Richard the ſecond, but was in the end remoued from thenſe in September, in the fiftéenth yeare of the troubleſome gouernement of the ſaid king Richard.

Thomas Arundell.

Thomas Arundell aforeſaid was the ſecond time created lord chancellor of England (in the ſaid fiftéenth yeare of king Richard the ſecond) in place of William Wickham, in which office he remained about fiue yeares, and was depoſed and baniſhed the realme in the twentith yeare of the ſaid king Richard.

Iohn Serle maſter of the rols.

Iohn Scarle, Scirlée, or Serle, maiſter of the rolles, of the chancerie, and kéeper of the great ſeale: he was chancellor, or in place of the chancellor, in the firſt yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the fourth, being the yeare in which the ſonne of God deſcending from the boſome of his father, tooke fleſh in the wombe of his mother, one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie and nine.

Edmund Stafford.

Edmund Stafford kéeper of the priuie ſeale, biſhop of Exceſter, and ſometime biſhop of Rocheſter, and laſtlie biſhop of Yorke, kéeper of the priuie ſeale, and borne of the noble houſe of the Staffords, was made lord chancellor of England about the moneth of March, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand and foure hundred, being about the ſecond yere of the vſurping king Henrie the fourth, in which office he continued vntill the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred and thrée, being the fourth yeare of the ſaid king Henrie the fourth. He being kéeper of the priuie ſeale was made biſhop of Exceſter the twentith of Iune, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie & fiue, being the daie before king Richard the ſecond began the one and twentith yeare of his reigne. He was conſecrated at Lambeth, and kept the ſée of Exceſter thrée and twentie yeares. He increaſed two fellowſhips in Stapletons inne in Oxford, reformed the ſtatutes of the houſe, and called it Exceſter college: he died the fourth of September, in the ſeuenth yeare of king Henrie the fift, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and ninetéene. About the making of this Stafford chancellor (as farre as my memorie ſerueth) Ypodigma is much deceiued, if I haue not for want of the booke miſtaken his iudgement.

Henrie Beauford.

Henrie Beauford, the ſonne of Iohn of Gaunt by Katharine Swineford, made biſhop of Lincolne in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie and eight (as hath Ypodigma) was aduanced to the dignitie of chancellor in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred & thrée, being the fourth yeare of king Henrie the fourth his elder brother, by the daughter of the earle of Hereford, in which office he was in the fift yeare of king Henrie the fourth, and ſixt of the ſame king (as our chronicles dóo remember.) He was made biſhop of Wincheſter in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and foure, being the fift yeare of Henrie the fourth.

Thomas Langleie biſhop of Durham.

Thomas Langleie prieſt, and biſhop of Durham, was at Weſtminſter made chancellor, in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand foure hundred and fiue, being the ſixt yeare of the reigne of the ſaid king Henrie the fourth, in which office he continued (as farre as I know) vntill he was made biſhop of Durham, which was on the ſeuenth of Maie, being the ſeuenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie laſt before named, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and ſix. He was biſhop one and thirtie yeares, and died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred thirtie and ſeuen, being the ſixtéenth yeare of king Henrie the ſixt. Sée more following.

Thomas Fitzalen.

Thomas Fitzalen, brother to Richard earle of Arundell, being returned out of exile with Henrie of Bollingbroke duke of Hereford and Lancaſter, and after king of England by the name of Henrie the fourth, was the third time being biſhop of Canturburie, made lord chancellor of England, the ninth yeare of the ſaid king Henrie the fourth, and continued therein about two years, being remooued from that place about September, in the eleuenth yeare of the reigne of the ſaid king, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and ten.

Thomas Beauford.

Thomas Beauford knight, the ſonne of Iohn of Gaunt ſon to king Edward the third, & brother to king Henrie the fourth, was made lord chancellor in the eleuenth yere of the ſaid king Henrie the fourth, being the yeare that the ſonne of God tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant one thouſand foure hundred and ten, in which office he remained not full thrée yeares, but left the ſame office togither with his life, as I ſuppoſe, in the thirtéenth yeare of the ſame king, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and twelue.

Iohn wakering clearke.

Iohn Wakering clearke, maiſter of the rolles, was made kéeper of the great ſeale, when Thomas Beauford left the office of chancellor, which ſeale hée kept about the ſpace of a moneth. For in Ianuarie after that he receiued the ſeale, there was a chancellor created.

Thomas Arundell archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Thomas Fitzalen or Arundell, archbiſhop of Canturburie, was the fourth time inueſted with the chancellorſhip, in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand foure hundred and twelue, being the thirtéenth yeare of king Henrie the fourth, in which office hée continued during the life of the ſaid king Henrie the fourth, who died in the fourtéenth yeare of his kingdome, and in the yere of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred and thirtéene.

Henrie Beauford biſhop of Wincheſter.

Henrie Beauford biſhop of Wincheſter, and after cardinall in the time of Henrie the ſixt, being vncle to king Henrie the fift then reigning, was the ſecond time made chancellor, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and thirtéene, being the firſt yeare of the fift king Henrie, in which place he remained vntill the fift yeare of the ſaid king Henrie, being the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred and ſeuentéene.

Thomas Langleie biſhop of Durham.

Thomas Langleie biſhop of Durham was the ſecond time made lord chancellor of England, in the ſaid yere of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and ſeuentéene, being the fift yeare of that worthie conqueror king Henrie the fift, which office he receiued at Southwicke, and continued in that honour (as farre as I can learne) by the ſpace of ſix yeares or more, whereof fiue yeares were fullie ended in the life and death of the ſaid Henrie the fift, and the ſixt yeare ended in the laſt of the firſt or beginning of the ſecond yeare of king Henrie the ſixt.

Henrie Beauford biſhop of Wincheſter.

Henrie Beauford biſhop of Wincheſter before named, was the third time made lord chancellor of England, in the ſecond yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, being about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred twentie and thrée, or one thouſand foure hundrep twentie and foure. For the ſecond yeare of that king fell part in the one and part in the other of the ſaid yeares of our Lord, in which office he continued about foure yeares, vntill he was made cardinall, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred twentie and ſix.

Iohn Kempe biſhop of London.

Iohn Kempe, biſhop of London, was made lord chancellor of England in the fourth yere of that king Henrie, who in his yoongeſt yeares was crowned firſt king of England, and then king of France in Paris; in which office he remained (as I ſuppoſe) about ſix yeares.

Iohn Stafford biſhop of Bath.

Iohn Stafford deane of S. Martins & of Welles, prebend of Milton in Lincolne church, biſhop of Bath and Welles, lord chancellor and treaſuror of England, and biſhop of Canturburie, was made lord chancellor of England in the moneth of F[illegible]rie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure [illegible]dred thirtie & one, falling in the tenth yeare of k[illegible] Henrie the ſixt: he remained in that office [illegible] Iohn Kempe was againe made lord chancellor, which was about the eight and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt. And here I think it not vnméet to remember that ſome haue noted William Wanfléet that was biſhop of Wincheſter, and chancellor of Oxford, to be chancellor of England, when he built Magdalen college in Oxford, in the fiue and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt: which poſſiblie cannot be, ſith this Iohn Stafford held that office from the tenth of Henrie the ſixt, vntill the eight & twentith of the ſame king, which was eightéene yeares: during which time they place this Wanfléet to bée chancellor of England. Which error (I ſuppoſe) they haue commited, in that they finding him chancellor at the time of the building of his college, in the ſaid fiue and twentith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, haue taken him to be chancellor of England, when he was then but chancellor of Oxford: although in déed afterward he was chancellor of England, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of the ſaid king, as after ſhall appeare.

fol. 69

Iohn Kempe biſhop of Yorke.

Iohn Kempe biſhop of Yorke and cardinall, was the ſecond time made lord chancellor in the eight and twentith of king Henrie the ſixt, being about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and fiftie, in which office he died, being biſhop of Canturburie, in the yeare of our redemption (as ſaith Matthew Parker, one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and thrée, being the two & thirtith yeare of the reigne of the ſimple king Henrie the ſixt. This man was firſt biſhop of Rocheſter, next of Chiceſter, thirdlie of London, then of Yorke, where he ſat eight and twentie yeares, and laſtlie he was archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Richard Neuill earle of Saliſburie.

Richard Neuill earle of Saliſburie, the ſonne of Rafe Neuill earle of Weſtmerland, and father to the valiant Richard Neuill earle of Warwike, was after the death of John Kempe by parlement made lord chancellor in the two & thirtith yeare of K. Henrie the ſixt: though others make it to be in the thrée & thirtith yeare of the ſame king, in which place he continued not long. For in the yeare following an other was ſubſtituted, and he remoued.

Thomas Bourchier biſhop of Elie.

Thomas Bourchier (brother to Henrie Bourchier earle of Eſſex) biſhop of Elie, and biſhop of Canturburie, was made chancellor in the thrée & thirtith yeare of the gouernement of king Henrie the ſixt, in which he remained much about two yeares. In whoſe time, as ſaith Matthew Parker, about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and one, was the art of printing inuented at the citie of Argentorat in Germanie. About the which matter, and eſpeciallie for the exact & certeine time thereof, manie writers although their count about one time doo diſagrée: yet at the inuention of that worthie thing were theſe verſes compoſed in the commendation of the ſame moſt excellent art.

In vita Thomæ Bourcheri epiſco. Cantuar.

O fœlix noſtris memoranda impreſſio tectis,
Inuentore nitet vtraque lingua tuo.
Deſierat quaſi totum quod fundis in orbe,
Nunc paruo doctus quilibet eſſe poteſt.
Omnes te homines igitur nunc laudibus ornent,
Te duce quando ars hæc mira reperta fuit.

William Patan, or Paten alias William Wanfled.

William Patan or Paten, borne of a gentlemanlie familie, being commonlie called William Wanfled of the place of his birth, and being prouoſt of Eaton, and biſhop of Wincheſter, was lord chancellor in the fiue and thirtith, ſix and thirtith, and the ſeuen and thirtith yeare of the vnfortunat king Henrie the ſixt, as haue the records of the excheker. By which appeareth the error of thoſe, as I haue before noted, that miſtaking the fiue and twentith of king Henrie the ſixt, in which time he was but chancellor of Oxford; for the fiue and thirtith of the ſaid king, in which he was chancellor of England.

George Neuill archbiſhop of Yorke.

George Neuill (the ſonne of Richard Neuill earle of Saliſburie, and brother to Richard Neuill earle of Warwike) being made biſhop of Exceſter, came to that ſée in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and fiue; in which ſée he continued ten yeares, and was remoued to Yorke in the yeare that God became man one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and fiue, he was made lord chancellor in the eight & thirtith yeare of the reigne of the after depoſed K. Henrie the ſixt, in which office he remained about eight yeares, & then was remoued in the ſeuenth yeare of the worthie K. Edward the fourth, being the yeare that the word became fleſh one thouſand foure hundred thréeſcore & ſeuen. He was a great friend to ſaint Albons, & procured Edward the fourth in the fourth yeare of his reigne to giue & confirme to John Whethamſted, abbat of ſaint Albons, the priorie of Penbroke. This biſhop Neuill did after in the thirtéenth yeare of king Edward the fourth grow in ſuch diſgrace with the king, that he was ſpoiled at one time of twentie thouſand pounds, as in his life ſhall be more at large declared. To this man did Hugh Weine giue the manour of Hener Cobham, and Hener Brokas in Kent, in the fourth yeare of king Edward the fourth. He died at Blithlaw comming from Yorke, being almoſt fortie yeares old, and was buried at Yorke. And héere I thinke it not amiſſe, to note the miſtaking of time of ſuch hiſtoriographers as haue ſet downe, that Edward the fourth did, in the fourth yeare of his reigne, take the chancellorſhip from the biſhop of Exceſter (brother to the earle of Warwike, which muſt néeds be this George Neuill) & gaue the ſame to the biſhop of Bath. For by that which I haue ſéene, this Neuill liued vntill the ſeuenth yeare of Edward the fourth, and that for this time I ſuppoſe to be the trueſt.

Robert Kirkham maiſter of the rolles.

Robert Kirkeham maiſter of the rolles was made lord kéeper of the great ſeale (vpon the remouing of George Neuill) in the moneth of Julie in the ſaid yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and ſeuen, being the ſeuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth.

Robert Stillington doctor of the lawes.

Robert Stillington doctor of the lawes, kéeper of the priuie ſeale in the third yeare of Edward the fourth, biſhop of Bath & Wels, being made chancellor in the ſeuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, did ſtill ſo contiuue (as I gather) vntill the thirtéenth yeare of the ſaid king.

Henrie Bourchier earle of Eſſex.

Henrie Bourchier earle of Eſſex, and firſt aduanced to that title of honor by Edward the fourth, came in place of the laſt chancellor, about the fourtéenth yeare (as ſome vntrulie haue noted) of Edward the fourth. But in my poore opinion, the ſame was in the thirtéenth yeare of the ſaid Edward the fouth: in which place he remained not much more than one Trinitie terme. For in the ſaid thirtéenth yeare, about the moneth of Auguſt, was Booth lord chancellor of England.

Laurence Booth biſhop of Durham.

Laurence Booth ſometime maiſter of Penbroke hall biſhop of Durham, and after of Yorke, was made lord chancellor about Auguſt or rather before, betwéene that and Trinitie terme (after Henrie Bourchier) in the ſaid thirtéenth yeare of the valiant king Edward the fourth, after his redemption of the kingdome of England. This biſhop (being brother to William Booth ſometime biſhop of Yorke) did build the biſhop of Yorks houſe at Baterſeie, which manour he before bought of Nicholas Stanleie, whome Leland the minſer and refiner of all Engliſh names dooth moſt curiouſlie in Latine call Nicholaum Stenelegium. He continued in the ſée of Yorks thrée yeares & nine moneths, and died at Southwell in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and foure ſcore, being the twentith yeare of king Edward the fourth.

Thomas Scot alias Rotheram.

Thomas Scot ſurnamed Rotheram, becauſe of the towne of Rotheram in Yorkeſhire where he was borne and bred vp, was biſhop of Rocheſter, and then of Linclolne, where he ſat nine yeares, and after that was biſhop of Yorke: whereinto he inſtalled firſt at Yorke, and then at Ripon, being prouoſt of Beuerleie, he was made chancellor of England in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred ſeuentie and foure, being the fourtéenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth. This biſhop, in the fiftéenth yeare of the ſaid king, went ouer the ſea (as I haue ſéene noted) with the ſaid Edward the fourth, when he went to haue an interuiew with the French king: of which méeting monſieur de Argentine by name Philip Comineus (beſides our Engliſh chronicles) dooth make mention, as a perſon that bare a part in that pageant.

John Alcot biſhop of Rocheſter.

John Alcot biſhop of Rocheſter was made chancellor, during the abſence of king Edward, as I haue found recorded.

Thomas Rotheram.

Thomas Rotheram, being before lord kéeper of the priuie ſeale, was after his returne out of France the ſecond time made lord chancellor, about the time in which the ſaid king had gotten Berwike from the Scots, being about the twentith yeare of the ſaid Edward the fourth. For the free gaining of the towne was not much before his death; in which office this Rotheram continued all the life of king Edward the fourth, & in the time of the little or no reigne at all of the guiltleſſe murthered yong prince king Edward the fift; vntill it was aſcribed to him for ouermuch lightneſſe, that he had deliuered in the beginning of the rebellious gouernement of the protectorſhip of the bloudie and vnnaturall Richard duke of Gloceſter the ſeale to the queene, to whome it did not apperteine, and from whome he receiued it not. He founded a college at Rotheram, dedicated it to the name of Jeſus, & indowed it with great poſſeſſions & ornaments, and annexed therto the churches of Langthton and Almanburie.

John Ruſſell biſhop of Lincolne.
